

6
GE

— ANATOMICAL
— SECTION
—

ALLEN COUNTY PUBLIC LIBRARY

3 1833 01742 7649

THE FRIEND.

A

RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL

VOLUME LXXXVII.

PHILADELPHIA:
PRINTED BY WILLIAM H. PILE'S SONS

1914.

INDEX.

- "A sane Fourth," 9.
 A Pioneer Missionary's Hunt for a World, 9.
 Address to graduating class at Cheyney Institute for colored youth, 1913, 37, 38.
 A lay sermon, 43.
 Animals. Anecdotes concerning.
 Dogs seeking shelter from cold, 45.
 The Love of a Dog, 45.
 "Miner"—a horse—from the coal mines, 56.
 Giving a blind horse a drink, 57.
 American Bison to-day, 130.
 Story of a Call, 189.
 Dog. The Instrumentality of a, 282.
 Anecdote of a Horse, 310.
 Horse and Gun-Drops, 355.
 Where Horses are unknown, 380.
- Anointing. The true, 105.
 Adjustment, 129, 130.
 As others see us, 187, 188.
 American Bible Society and the tariff, 188.
 Amusement. The Question of, 295.
 Anecdote of Earl Camden, 296.
 Aimwell School, 412.
 American Nile. The, 440.
 Asiatics. Fair Play for, 415.
 Atlantic. Patrolling the, 471.
 Australia. Defence Act, 567.
- Articles by
 Jos. Elkinton, 6, 26, 27, 33, 69, 70, 106, 138, 139, 141, 177, 178, 189, 190, 341, 350, 377, 427, 428, 536, 569, 581, 615.
 William C. Allen, 15, 116, 117, 128, 150, 161, 162, 174, 183, 184, 196, 197, 210, 220, 221, 224, 235, 242, 243, 255, 256, 313, 547, 516, 517.
 David Holloway, 31.
 Signed F. T. R., 42.
 Joseph E. Meyers, 53.
 Max L. Reich, 63, 112, 113, 140, 141, 184, 185, 331, 436, 496.
 Walter Byron Nelson, 70.
 Nathan P. Stanley, 75.
 Walter W. Haviland, 76.
 Cyrus Cooper, 79.
 G. R. Rogers, 81.
 John B. Wood, 98.
 Herbert Welsh, 100, 114, 122, 123, 134, 155, 151, 152.
 Edward Spencer, 101.
 Charles B. Bienen Morris, 103.
 Joshua P. Smith, 105.
 Stanley R. Yarnall, 125, 126, 137, 138, 148, 149, 150, 160, 161.
 Wm. Anthony Aery, 126.
 Lloyd Badgerston, 129, 130, 387.
 Francis R. Taylor, 152.
 Charles Watt Thomson, 163.
 Alfred Lowry, Jr., 173, 174, 175, 176.
 Agnes L. Tierney, 218, 219.
 C. Leslie Pennell, 225.
 Walter L. Moore, 233, 423, 424.
 Charles Francis Saunders, 244.
 Theodore Stratton, 257.
 George Vaux, 302.
 Job S. Gidley, 328.
 Edith Stratton, 351.
 Joseph S. Middleton, 389, 400.
 John S. Keeling, 398, 399.
 Margaret M. Cary, 401.
 Thomas Davison, 413, 422, 423, 435.
 H. F. Brown, 450.
 Edith Sharpless, 558, 570, 578.
 Emma Cadbury, Jr., 580, 583.
 J. H. Edgerton, 608.
 Emily Forsythe, 617, 618.
- Atlantic. Of Interest on Both Sides of the, 582.
 American Letters, 591.
 Anthropology. Dr. Maria Montessori's Psychological, 619.
- Birthing Membership. Letter of Daniel Wheeler on, 20.
- Boy. A, with "No Chance," 22.
 The joy of manly contest, 68.
 He'll do, 93.
 A Boy's Reading and the Future Man, 118.
 Dimity Funct. Ambulation; afterward, 164.
 What I expect of the, of fourteen, 188.
 How Grant earned his calf, 189.
 "Billy Bother," a, with "too good" a mother, 199.
 A, with a Purge, 307, 308.
 Ineaccuracy of a, 344.
 Billie and Bessie Ryan, 390.
 A Who Knew How, 403.
 Joy finds a Home, 414.
 One Boy's Ambition, 414.
- Book Notices, etc. Under the sky in California, 28.
 Robert Barclay, 30.
 John Greenleaf Whittier, His life and work, 42.
 "The Quakers in England and America," 34, 46.
 Memories of John Bright, 50.
 Works of Wm. Penn, a new edition to be, 57.
 Social Service, its place in the Society of Friends, 62.
 Memorial of John H. Dillingham, 71.
 Margaret Fox, 133.
 "The arrest of George Fox at Armscot Meeting House in the year 1673," 166.
 "University and Historical Addresses," by James Bryce, 194.
 "By-Products of Missions," by Isaac Taylor Headland, 194.
 "A History of England," 222.
 A Wayfarer's Faith, 232.
 Two Text Books, by Harriet, 534.
 Religion in Social Action, 570.
 "Christ and War," 583.
 "The Woman, His Life and Our Time," 626.
- Bible. Mark Twain on the, 45.
 Bright, John. Memories of, 50.
 Blight-killed Chestnut of use, 68.
 Brockbank, Richard B. Extracts from diaries and letters of, 88, 89, 90, 98, 99, 110, 111, 123, 124, 136, 137, 146, 147, 158, 159, 172, 173, 182, 183, 195, 196, 209, 210, 220, 221, 230, 231.
- Birds. Martin's Summer Home, 104.
 Mocking-bird's song, 292.
 Incident of Homing Pigeon, 344.
 Boys feeding, in winter, 426.
 A Plea for the, 427.
 A Bird Book, 524, 524.
 Kaiser as protector of, 542.
- Bibles. Distribution in China, 105.
 Brooks, Bishop. Anecdote of, 130.
 Bible Societies. Work of Three Great, 159, 159.
 Barnegat. A Reminiscence of, 233.
 Bidwell, John, 269.
 "By one I lay ought to die," 291.
 Brunna Hospital. The, 314, 315.
 Burbank's Message to Boys, 331.
 Battleships for Canada, 340.
 Brotherhood. The Spirit of, 351.
 Book Committee. The, 374.
 British Museum. A Visit to the, 403.
 Brain. How to keep Memory of, 439, 440.
 Bell, Albert Henry, 470.
- Correspondence, 10, 46, 57, 82, 106, 131, 142, 154, 201, 202, 214, 238, 250, 298, 310, 322, 334, 346, 370, 406, 417, 429, 442, 453, 465, 477, 490, 573, 597.
 Cigarettes. Smoking and business, 21.
 Character Study, 544.
 Christianity. The inwardness of, 63.
 Concord Quarterly Meeting. Change in time of holding, 70.
 Child, 153.
- Childhood and Youth. The prayers of, 163.
 Comfortable People, 161.
 Children of the Revival, 181, 185.
 Call to Service, 304.
 Christianity an Experience, 332.
 Career. An Honorable and Useful, 338.
 Costly Commn, 341.
 Cousins, Susan, 359.
 Christian Armor, 374, 362.
 Capen, Samuel B., 471.
 Cathedral Silence, 565.
 Capper's, Mary. Experience in rejecting Wines, 545.
- Cheyney Institute for Colored Youth. Address to Graduating Class, 1913, 37, 38, 39.
 Summer School, 56.
 Training School for Teachers. First Paragraph of Principal's Report to Managers, 42.
 New Principal, L. P. Hill, 56.
 "Annual Report, 1912-13," 222, 223, 224.
 Announcement—Change of Principals, 230.
 Meeting of Managers, 12/16/1913, 312.
 The Cheyney opportunity, 567.
- Children's Gathering, Concord Quarterly Meeting, 365.
 Conscience and its limitations, 611.
- Deaths. Susan B. Carey, 12; Susan Worstell, 12; Ahimaz Kendall, 24; Phoebe Hurton, 24; Phoebe P. Stokes, 24; John Pardee, 36; Susanna Dyer, 36; Melba Dewey, 36; Lewis Stokes, 36; Emily Coe, 48; Esther Nowlin Stokes, 60; Mary B. Lupton, 60; Sarah A. Gilbert, 60; Mary Coates, 71; Almer Hall, 84; Rachel W. Stratton, 95; George E. Beck, 95; Marie S. Masters, 108; George Keeley, 120; Nathan Whitney, 120; Martha T. Shoemaker, 120; Ezra H. Endore, 122; Mary W. Roberts, 132; William Kennard, 132; Harriet H. Middleton, 156; Elnueta Mott, 147; Mary Kite, 197; Julia Tow, 215; Catharine A. Stanton, 227; Sarah F. Wilbur, 275; Jane H. Smedley, 299; Torborg H. Rosdale, 299; Anna M. Votaw, 299; Matilda W. Warner, 353; Jesse K. Livezey, 355; Asenath H. Ellis, 355; Walter Barker, 365; Ezra C. Bell, 345; Ellen J. Hays, 359; Joel Bean, 359; Hannah J. G. Thomas, 359; Jessie M. Bundy, 359; Joseph G. Evans, 359; Eliza Ann Fogg, 359; Naomi B. Dewees, 359; Thomas E. Parke, M. D., 371; Anna P. Moon, 371; Deborah P. Sharpless, 383; Elizabeth H. Johnson, 385; Abram Wilson, 385; Jane Dyer, 395; Jesse W. Warner, 395; Mary Anna Bailey, 395; Elizabeth Bartram Evans, 395; Rebecca S. Woolman, 395; Elizabeth A. Edgerton, 407; Harriet S. Stanley, 419; Harvy H. Haight, 419; Lucinda Lake, 419; Louisa B. Snipes, 419; Ann E. Compton, 431; Charles Gamble, 431; Edward H. Foster, 431; Anna Dixon, 439; Henry E. Warner, 539; Stuart Wood, 443; Joseph B. Steatwood, 454; Caroline Blackburn, 466; Caroline Calbury Brown, 466; Knud Meltvett, 478; Susan R. Worthington, 478; Sarah R. Howell, 491; Mary Ann Embree, 491; Elizabeth Kirkbride Carlie, 502; Joseph B. Kester, 526; Elizabeth B. Taylor, 526; Henry E. Warner, 539; Orlando R. Fowler, 538; James J. O'Lea, 550; Frances Fuller Kennedy, 559; Abigailia Cowgill, 559; Rhoda M. Engle, 562; Rebecca Panscoast, 562; Samuel R. Jacob, 574; Thomas Sharpless, 574; Elizabeth Pearsall Smith, 574; Sidney Pennell, 574; Hannah J. Reed, 580; Clara Davenport White, 581; Ellen S. Horton, 581; Frank L. Barton, 598; R. Arma Hewlings, 598; Micajah Cox, 598; Edward Tammall, 598; Abner Woolman, 622.
 Duty First, Ambulance Afterward, 164.
 Deceiving Doubtful Practises, 185.

- Darning the Weak Places, 235.
Donklovers in British Columbia, 341, 350.
Davies, Richard, 488.
Discipline. The Spirit of the, 558, 570, 578.
Doors, Open and Shut (For the Westown Girls), 594.
Diversions, 604.
Dowsbury. Clippings from the Life of William, 617, 618.
Editorial. Old Foes and New Foes, 1; An old friend with a new face, 2; Another plea for our schools, 13; Reformation thru regeneration, 25; Intercivitation, 37; Selections from the diary and correspondence of Joseph S. Elkinton, 1830-1905, 49; Social Service, its place in the Society of Friends, 61; Leaving things, 73; Friends and the Scriptures, 52; Importance of meetings for worship, 97; The unimportance of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, 109, 110; The motor side of the Queries, 121; Margaret Fox, 133; Ohio Yearly Meeting (Conservative), 145, 146; A Three-fold Aspect of Education, 157, 158; An Outsider's Testimony, 169, 170; A Living Remnant, 181; The Representative Meeting, 193; Are we growing better, 205; Interested—Concerned, 217; Why strength through Conference? 229; A note from the London Epistle, 241; Why Worship Together? 253; "Duty by Deputy," 265; The One Essential of Service, 277; Edwin P. Sellow, 289; Visitation Committees, 301; 1914, 313; The Book Committee, 325; Queries and Answers, 337; A Reason for the Hope, 347; The "Friend" Among Friends, 351; "The Friend" Among Friends, 357; A Present-day Message, 385; The Arch Street Project, 397; "Primitive and Improved Christianity," 409; Mid-week Meetings, 421; Unity in Diversity, 433; Race Prejudice, 445; "The Prayer Life," 457; A Methodist's Appreciation, 469; Supporting The Friends, 481; The Yearly Meeting—Anticipation, 493; Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, 505; The Yearly Meeting, 517; Some Significant Points in the Yearly Meeting, 529; Preparation for Service, 541; Waiting and Praying, 553; Military Pomp and Glory, 565; Maintaining a Balance, 577; In Essentials Unity, 589; Believest Thou? 601; The New Volume, 613.
Efficiency as affected by the drink habit, 29.
Enemy, Who is the? 86.
Estates, Three and three teachers, 87.
English Quarterly Meeting. An, 183, 184.
Essay by Indian, on using cigars, 186.
English hotels, 210.
England. Social Common-places about, 231, 235.
Liberation. A firm view of, 237.
Elders. An open letter to all, who are, 267.
"Education, the Religious Conception of," Abstract of Address on, 278, 279.
Eldership from the point of view of the ministry, 312.
Eternity. The Call of, 592.
Friends' Asylum. One hundredth anniversary of, 7.
Letter from Bedford Pierce on the Centenary of, 8.
Annual Meeting of, in Japan, 9, 10.
Canada Yearly Meeting (Conservative) 10, 23.
The occurrence of Monthly Meetings, etc., 12, 21, 21.
Prison as a road to success, 19.
Birthright membership, letter by Daniel Wheeler, 29.
London Yearly Meeting statistics, 22.
Establishment of Ohio Yearly Meeting (Barnesville), 22, 61.
Feeding Flocks. The Oil and the Wine, 29.
To ask lay taking "Quaker" oil trademarks, 40.
Need for care in personal references in "The Friends," 39.
Presentation in Massachusetts recalled, 13.
Imprisonment of a Friend in Australia, 35, 16.
Meeting in Paris, 16.
John Woolman, Quaker, 51.
Thoughts on the plow, 53.
The testimonies of, 54.
The message of Quakers, 65, 66.
Friends' Tract Association, London, 91.
Friends. The effect of Divine Grace illustrated, 101.
Anecdote of Samuel Morris, 104.
Fine imposed under "Australian Defence Acts," 79.
Our proper standard of simplicity, 91.
Sarah Lyman Grubb's testimony, 92.
Ohio Yearly Meeting, Change of time, 94.
William Penn's testimony concerning George Fox, 101.
Public meeting at Burlington, 130.
Repairs to old graveyard at Cahn Meeting-house, 142.
Appointed meeting at Concordville, 142.
Ohio Yearly Meeting, 153, 154.
Representative meeting (Ninth Month), 151.
Tea Meeting at Abington, 166.
The pearl that confronts us, 170.
As others see us, 187, 188.
Friends' Boarding-school near Barnesville, Ohio, 201.
The principles of Quakerism, etc., 211, 212.
Advice issued by Ulster Quarterly Meeting, held at Lurgan, Ireland, Ninth Month 22, 1913, 214.
A fresh testimony to Stephen Grellet, 218.
Percis Earl Hallcock, a brief account, 218.
Shall we open our meeting-houses? 221, 222.
A youthful minister (Jonathan Burzyant), 225.
Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting, 237.
Abington Quarterly Meeting, 238, 553.
Col. Beginnings of Haddonfield Monthly Meeting of Friends, 246, 247, 248.
A Quaker Select General, 249.
Concord Quarterly Meeting, 249, 465, 554.
"A regiment of Quakers," 261.
Little Falls of Gunpowder Meeting, 261.
Conference at Fourth and Arch Streets, Twelfth Month 5th, 1913, 262, 285.
Western Quarterly Meeting, 273.
Representative Meeting, 273.
Northern District Monthly Meeting to be dissolved, 284.
Burlington and Bucks Quarterly Meeting, 284.
Appointed meeting at Harrisburg, 284.
Early declaration of the faith of, 293, 304.
Chester Monthly Meeting, N. J., 309.
Germantown Tea Meeting, 310.
Meeting of Representative Meeting, 315.
Address to Members of Phila. Yearly Meeting by Representative Meeting, 316.
Haverford School, 321.
Harrisburg Meeting, 322.
North Carolina Yearly Meeting, Extracts from minutes of, 361.
The Book Committee, 374.
Situation of Society of Friends in the city, 376, 377.
Stony Brook Meeting, near Princeton N. J., 380, 400.
A Quaker meeting in a cathedral, 117.
Cahn Quarterly Meeting, 123, 124, 556.
Germantown Friends' Library, 137.
Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting, 158, 159.
Burlington and Bucks Quarterly Meeting, 160, 591.
From Haddonfield, N. J., 186.
Minute granted Wm. B. Harvey to join Wm. C. Allen in Gospel journey in foreign lands, 501.
Minutes of Yearly Meeting of M. and E., liberating Wm. C. Allen for Gospel labor in foreign lands and minute for Wm. B. Harvey as companion, 518.
Appointed Meeting at Stony Brook, 581, 591.
The Conclusion of North Meeting, 603.
Annual Meeting at Greenwich, 605.
Dublin Yearly Meeting, 566.
New England Yearly Meeting. Letter of, to Friends in China, 611.
Friendly Items, 31, 31, 35, 16, 70, 91.
Friendly News, 9, 22, 33, 46, 57, 70, 82, 91, 106.
U.S. 139, 143, 153, 151, 165, 178, 202, 211, 226, 227, 249, 294, 273, 281, 296, 308, 309, 321, 322, 341, 356, 368.
Friends' Library. Additions to, 12, 132, 155, 191, 227, 230, 251, 275, 287, 311, 335, 371, 383, 393, 419, 443, 454, 490, 502, 526, 530, 586, 611.
Fraternalism detrimental to best purposes of College training, An essay, 15, 16.
Frees. The other side of, 32.
Faith. A confession of, by J. P. Morgan, 43.
Five important renderings of verses as adopted by the American Revision Committee, A. D., 1900, 63.
Forgiveness. On, 76.
Fox, George. William Penn's testimony concerning, 101.
Forestry in Pennsylvania, E.S., 129.
Fox, George, and the consciousness of sin, 140.
Falseness of the present day, 146.
Forest Notes, 198.
Feast in the Upper Room. The, 258, 259, 266, 279, 280.
Four examples of transcendence importance, 292.
France. Friends in, 318.
"From My Youth Up," Incident related in, 329.
Father's contribution to the business, 340.
Florida notes, 377.
Fireproofing cotton, 387.
Father's Helpful Influence. Testimony of a son to his, 389.
Farmer's Handicaps, 147.
Friends' School Spelling. Old-Fashioned Spelling Book at, 512.
Notes, 525, 549, 597, 609.
Friends' Associated Indian Committee, 568.
Friends' Select School Reunion, 580.
Friends' Historical Extension to Burlington, N. J., 592.
Gathered Notes, 10, 34, 178.
God. Danger of seeking the praise of man, more than the glory of, 14.
The nest of, 81.
Grace. The effect of Divine, illustrated, 101.
"Governor, Stop Papa Drinking," 93.
Glenn Mills School. Reference to, 147.
Government Maps. Increase in price of, 162.
Good Roads. Federal co-operation for, 212.
"Good Samaritan of Death Valley," 213.
Grellet. A fresh testimony to Stephen, 218.
Germantown Friends' School. Annual Report of, 395.
Germantown Friends' School. Notes on, 609.
Germantown and Gwynedd Meetings. An Historical Sketch of, 327.
Good Roads, 353.
Germantown Friends' School, 110.
Hindo Jugglers, 9.
He'll do, 93.
Hodgkin. Reference to Dr. Thomas, 116.
Herd Things First, 118.
League Day Celebration in Tokyo, 151.
House of Lords. In the, 171.
Hallcock, Percis Earl, 218, 219.
Haddonfield Celebration. The, 221.
Holland Sights. Some, 242, 243.
Haddonfield Monthly Meeting of Friends, Colonial Beginnings of, 216, 247, 248.
Holmes, Sarah A., 248.
Hague. At the, 255, 256.
Hadden. Incidents in the life of Elizabeth, 293, 294.
Hooton's, John. Manuscript Book of Discipline. Extracts from, 351, 361, 365, 375, 376.
Home. The, and the School, 449.
A Little Journey, 451.
He that dwelleth in the Secret Place, 460.
Haight, Harvey H. Some glimpses of the life of, 463.
Hospital. The Smallest, in the World, 524.
Hodgins, Thomas, 511.
Historical Gleanings, 565.
Interference. Efficiency as affected by the drink habit, 28.
India. A Newcomer's Impressions of, 165.
Imprisonment of a Friend in Australia, 16.
I am a Stranger on the Earth, 302.
Italy and Co-sustenance, 386.
Inconspicuous. The Quality of being, 388.
Indians of New York State. The Quaker Mission among the, 457, 458, 473, 474, 482, 497, 508.
Indian Story. An Army, 163.
"I will not leave you desolate," 560.

- Ireland. The situation in, 579.
Incident. Au, 616.
- Japan. Peace work in, 76.
Hague Day Celebration in Tokyo, 151.
Girls' Schools in, 254, 255.
Notes from, 317.
A Letter from, 402.
The situation in, 415.
- Jesus. Enthusiasm for, 112, 113.
- Jordan's, Richard. Advice to a Young Minister, 332.
- Joy out of Grief, 339.
- Joseph and Elizabeth, 111, 125, 126, 429.
- James. The Capital on the, 545, 546.
- Killed by a Worm, 55.
- Kingdoms. A tale of three, that were, 80.
- Kansas Yearly Meeting, 249.
"Knowing Christ," 398, 399.
Knowing better than "Frosting," 146.
Koran? What's the, 620.
- Letter of Gilbert Bowles. Extract from, 10.
of Stephen Hbbhouse, reprint of, 11.
of Minnie P. Bowles, 46.
of Joseph G. Alexander, 47.
of Wm. W. Cadbury, quotation from, 57. of John B. Garrett, 201. of Joseph J. Neave, 58, 202.
of Jonathan E. Rhoads, 238.
of Max L. Reich, 417.
of Wm. W. Cadbury, 581.
Extract from, describing Holland Visit, 602.
- London Yearly Meeting. Statistics of, 22.
Life. The Cross-bearing, 31.
Life. Anecdote of Professor Joseph, 45.
Leading up the bars, 69.
London. Annual, 463.
Lafayette. The humanity of, 177.
"Lord, that our eyes may be opened," 186.
Lamb. The, and The Beast, 331.
"Lone Wandering, but not Lost," 344
Lucinda Lake, 415.
Light. The Inward, 436.
Laureates and Bridges, 498.
London General Epistle, 529.
Livingstone. The Autobiography of David, 213.
Lottches. A Testimony Against, 570.
London Yearly Meeting. From, 606.
- Morris, Samuel. Extracts from the journal of, 4, 5, 17, 18, 51, 52, 74, 75, 115, 116.
Membership, Birthright. Daniel Wheeler on, 20.
Ministry. The case of the, 62.
Milkly content. The joy of, 68.
Market Milk. Plans to reduce bacteria in, 130.
Massachusetts. Notes from, 189, 190.
Machine without Thread, 225.
Master. A Youthful, 225.
Minter, Robert, 236.
Moral Diseases, 243.
Money. The Sacrament of, 256.
Munich Romanists. Among, 269.
Mushy. The, 265.
John Martin's House and the Forrest Trust, 302.
Mushy World. Facts from the, 306.
Ministry. A True Gospel, 328.
Militarism. The Waste of, 416.
Moorestown, N. J. The Revocation of the liquor licenses in, 450.
Media Reading Circle. The Meetings of, 472.
Ministry. Consideration of the, 493-495.
Marriages. Samuel Bell and Grace Bronley Allen, 12.
Albert Lindley Pemberton and Louisa M. Hampton, 48.
James P. Ramsey and Isabella B. Lawson, 120.
Moses Robert Brinton and Helen H. Moore, 159.
J. C. J. Thomasson and Sina Althea Thomas, 179.
J. Collins Bartlett and M. Elizabeth Seaton-geord, 227.
William P. Taber and Sara D. Meigs, 598.
Murray Gordon Brooks and Elizabeth Cape Wistar, 275.
Charles H. Standing and Emma O. Henderson, 347.
Helen Norton Snedley and Albert Lang Baily, Jr., 514.
- Marriages. Verlin L. Pemberton and Sara M. Hinshaw, 528.
Robert Lovett and Caroline Blackburn, 574.
- Meetings. Times of holding Monthly and Quarterly, 21, 36, 147, 59, 71, 81, 85, 107, 108, 119, 132, 143, 156, 167, 191, 203, 215, 227, 239, 251, 263, 275, 287, 299, 347, 359, 371, 395, 407, 419, 431, 443, 454, 466, 478, 491, 528.
Change in time of place of holding Newton, summer discontinuance, 12.
Concord Quarterly, 70.
Consent of Ministers and Elders, 227.
Abington Monthly, 227.
- Meetings Appointed.
Abington Meeting House, Pa., 111.
Friends' Meeting House, Norrisstown, Pa., 157.
M. Laurel (Evesham), N. J., 156.
Arney's Mount (Lower Springfield), N. J., 17, 27.
Limerick, Penna., 167, 215, 275, 324, 371, 478, 526, 586.
Goshen Meeting House, Pa., 191.
Greenwich, N. J., 191, 550, 586.
Upper Springfield, N. J., 227.
Mt. Holly, N. J., 239.
Arney's Mount, N. J., 239.
Cherryford, Pa., 239.
Tuckerton, N. J., 251.
Barnegat, N. J., 251.
Upper Springfield, N. J., 262, 562.
Woodbury, N. J., 275.
At Westtown School, 287.
Mt. Holly, N. J., 299.
Wilmington, Del., 431.
Marlton, N. J., 538.
Cherry, Pa., 538.
York Mills, Pa., 561.
Yearly, Conservative (Fall, 1913), 118.
Medford, N. J., 586.
Salem, N. J., 622.
- Mohock International Arbitration Conference. The Twentieth, 589.
"Meeting Thoughts," 608.
- Notes from New York State, 6, 26, 27, 28.
New Zealand and Australia, Imprisonments and Persecutions, 33, 46, 58.
Negro. The, and the Public Record, 78, 79.
"New Friend." The, with an old face, 79.
Norway. Thoughts suggested by a vacation trip to, 125, 126.
An afternoon in the Romsdal, 137, 138.
Farm life in, as a summer tourist sees it, 141, 149, 150.
A rainy day on a Norwegian Fjord, 160, 161.
Negro Freedom. Fifty years of, 126, 127.
Neave, Joseph James, 270.
New Year's Eve. (A Dream), 314.
New York to England, 128.
New Building at 302-4 Arch St., Phila. Report of Committee on, 296, 297, 298.
News Items, 381, 391, 401, 116, 428, 141, 451, 463, 476, 484, 500, 513, 525, 536, 548, 561, 572, 584, 596, 609, 620.
Nineteen-fourteen, 313.
New Holidays. Cannibals of, 127.
Nightingale. The Latest Life of Florence, 148.
Notes from Abroad, 536, 569, 581.
North Meeting. The Conclusion of, 605.
- Ohio Yearly Meeting. History of, established, 1813, 22, 64, 65.
Change of time in holding, 94.
Meetings of, 153, 154.
One Hundred years ago, 197.
Impressions of a visitor to, 326.
Of the Ship, 150, 151.
Ohio Conventions in New England, 257.
Opportunity, 272.
Ohio to Olney. A Pilgrimage from 462.
Overcoming. Our too Militant Idea of, 541.
"Olney Current," Editorial in, Fourth Month, 1914, 557.
- Poetry—Original. The Awe of the Woods, 246;
Elizabeth Hutton, 246; Companionship, 316;
California, 311; I, A. C. Hays, Peace, 534;
"I listen for the Coming of His Feet," 557.
- Poetry Selected. "The Cup of Peace," 1.
"The Father's Care," 8; "Faith, Nob! Memento Me Esse, Nihil Avsumo," 19; My God, 21; Best of All, 22; Be Still and Sleep, 28; Prayer, 29; Brother, 32; The Return, 33; "The Father's Blessing," 40; "The March of Reformation," 55; The Boy from Town, 56; "Two men went out to pray," 61; In the Cross of Christ I Glory, 67; In a thunder shower, 68; The last saying, 69; Heaven's Trolls-lars, 70; Because, 77; Some truly little imps, 80; The Master's Voice, 87; Urner John, 93; When thou passed through the waters, 94; Resting in God, 100; The snaker messages, 109; Faith, 111; The Miracle, 117; The Hidden Life, 128; Mother's Motto, 129; "The Kingdom of God," 133; In sickness, 136; The Fortunate Isles, 143; "I Might be 'Bin Waur,'" 139; Which and Why? 140; "I heard the voice of Jesus say," 148; Launch out, 150; A cloud lay eroded in the setting sun, 153; The Sheep of the Flock, 160; Weakness and Strength, 170; The habit of doing without, 176; The Fellowship of Suffering, 183; The Service of the Lord, 185; The Master Sculptor, 186; An Overworked Elocutionist, 188; If Men would just be kind, 199; The Four Leaf Clover, 215; The Altruist, 231; This I did for Thee, 234; The Mother's Lesson, 245; "O Love That Will Not Let Me Go," 241; He Will Not Fail Thee, 258; A New Method, Section, 267; Marguerite Sorani, 281; Whom Have I in the Heaven but Thee, 302; Ahn Ben Adhem, 327; Just for To-day, 349; Christ Within, 351; What Just One Word May Do, 353; Leader and Melissa, 380; The Valley where the Heart-rose Grows, 402; The Brave Field Mouse, 403; Christ's Kingdom, 412; Passing Under the Rod, 413; Hymn, 422; In Memoriam (Jed Bean), 425; "I Thank Thee, O Lord," 436; When I Have Time, 475; Some-time, 483; The Elvish, 483; Now The Laborer's Task is Over, 486; Only Trust Me, 507; The Way of the Cross, 512; Willie's Will, 559; The Colors of the Seasons, 571; Flood Tide on the Mar-Is, 578; Jesus the Carpenter, 581; My Heart is but a Lonely Inn, 594.
- Parker, Theodore, meeting with tortoise, 8.
Penn, William. Proclamation of, with comment, 10.
Prison as a Road to success, 19.
Plain Dress. Thoughts on the, 53.
Prayer. Answered, 55.
The Power of, 320.
An Answer to, 568.
- Pocono Notes, 33, 69, 70, 106, 111, 112, 177, 178.
Pennington, Isaac. Extract from, 86.
Peace versus War, 29.
Work in Japan, 76.
and Arbitration, 152.
Hague Day Celebration in Tokyo, 151.
What is? 159.
Peacemaker, 161.
Friends' Peace Association. An Appeal for Funds for, 201.
Notice. Address by Isaac Sharpless, 227.
Encouragement of the Peace Workers, 516.
Effort for, on Pacific Coast, 557.
The True Dynamic, 434.
In New Zealand. Boys who stand for, 590.
Progress of the Peace-Movement, 516, 517.
- Panacea. The latest, 170.
Peril. The, that confronts us, 170.
Parents' Age, The, 171.
Public Health Activities. Some Beneficial Results in, 211, 212.
Purer Than Themselves, 219.
Preston Reading Room, 399.
People. The Awakening of a, 113, 422, 423, 435.
Prisons. The Work of Friends in Connection with, 416, 461.
Picture Makers and War Malors, 599.
Phila. Yearly Meeting. Address to Proprietors and Editors of Newspapers on behalf of, 531.
Phila.-Idpha Quarterly Meeting, 534.
Panama Canal Tolls. The Question of the, 531.
- Quakerism. The message of, 65, 66.
Quakerism. A Summary Among the 282, 283.
When Quakerism Was Young, 663, 662, 663.

INDEX.

Read best by stumbling, 30.
Reason, A. Why, 118.
Religion without Rites, 116.
Rounds. An afternoon in the, 137, 138.
Rondel. The Story of, 140, 141.
Right Stock, The, 164.
Raising the Standard, 217.
Religion above Education, 187.

Saving Young America, 3.
San Francisco to Salt Lake, 15.
Success, 81.
Simplicity. Our proper standard of, 91, 92.
Saved by Honest Leather, 104.
Salt Lake to Philadelphia, 116, 117.
Scriptures. Robert Barclay on the, 131.
Success. A Recipe for, 134.
Self-control, 164.
Scotchman, 196, 197.
Spirituality, 208.
Should we open our Meeting Houses? 221, 222.
Shelter. The, for Colored Orphans. Sale of, 583.
Syria. A Picnic in, 236.
"Shirkers." A morning with the, 271.
Santiago, Chile. Extracts of a letter written from, 284.
Science and Industry, 308.
Stanton, Catharine Ann, 317.
Sedley, Edwin P. Reference to decease of, 346, 367.
Society of Friends in the City. The present situation, and the outlook for the future, 376, 377.
Stony Brook Meeting, near Princeton, N. J., 280, 300.
Social Service. Over-emphasis of, 400.
South Carolina. Notes from, 127, 128.
Siam. How a Governor in, found Christ, 134.
Spiritual Abstinence, 496.
Progress, What is, 500.
Sotterened to read the Bible, 524.
Summary of events, 10, 11, 23, 34, 35, 47, 58, 59, 70, 71, 82, 83, 94, 95, 107, 119, 131, 142, 143, 155, 166, 178, 179, 190, 191, 203, 215, 226, 227, 238, 239, 251, 262, 263, 274, 275, 286, 298, 299, 310, 311, 323, 334, 346, 358, 370, 382, 391, 406, 418, 430, 442, 453, 465, 477, 490, 501, 513, 526, 538, 549, 562, 573, 585, 597, 610, 621.

Tobacco. Injurious effect of using, 9, 21, 186.
Trademarks. Friends to ask law taking Quaker off, 40.
Turkey. Relief Work in, 41.
They told their friends—Story about dogs, 45.
Treasure. A neglected, 66.
Take these things hence, 67.

Tunesassa's Needs, 70, 106.
Tract distribution, 75.
Thought to think about. Just a, 81.
Three Estates and Three Teachers, 87.
Time. The opportune, 98.
Trillium. The Story of a, 117.
Tokyo. Hague day Celebration in, 151.
Trouble. Three kinds of, 163.
Three thousand miles to take dinner, 173, 174, 175, 176.
Tunesassa Notes, 225, 280, 290, 392.
Letter to Committee in charge of school, from W. M. and M. A. E. Hall, 356.
Two Quaker Naturalists of the Eighteenth Century, 244, 245.
Truth. An Army Surgeon's Loyalty to, 320.
The Real News, 398.
To Teach or Not to Teach, 401.
Three Small Immigrants, 474, 475.
Tea Meeting. A Children's, 483, 491.
The Tract Association of Friends. From the Annual Report of, 499.
Thoughts, 512.
Trip. A Peace, 547.
Temperance Items, 41, 102, 197, 268, 329, 379, 438, 486, 535, 617.
Bryan, Wm. Jennings. Anecdote of, 44.
A Prohibition Measure, 44.
Less demand for Intoxicants, 44.
Constitutional Prohibition, 44.
State of Michigan on Intoxicants, 45.
"Governor, Stop Papa Drinking," 93.
News and Comments, 102.
A Million Dollars a year for two years, 403.
How it works, 177.
Successful Men Total Abstinents, 197.
A Seething Arrangement, 198.
Education makes an Alignment for Temperance, 198.
Storming the Entrenchments, 268, 269.
A sign of the New Times, 316.
Booze a Necessity, 329.
A Recent Convert to Prohibition, 330.
Burbank's Message to Boys, 331.
Action of Concord Quarterly Meeting on proposed Prohibition Amendment to the Federal Constitution, 406.
A Wholesome Example, 438.
A Changed Man, 438.
Base Ball and Abstinence, 438.
Total Abstinents Wm, 438.
Another Witness, 438.
Concord Quarterly Meeting's Minute on Proposed Federal Prohibition, 438.
Local Option, 535.
Pennsylvania's Fight Against the liquor traffic, 607.
Disgustingly Apparent, 197.

Visiting Friends—
Max L. Reich, of London, 57.
Views, A French soldier's, 87.
Victories, Spiritual, not won by discussion, 163.
Vegetarians increase, 333.
Vicious Habits, 536.

Wheeler, Daniel, On Birthright membership, Letter of, 20.
Worship, What is blighting, 21.
"Who hath believed," 27.
Workfulness in the Church, 69.
Window. The open, 77.
War and Self-defence, Joseph Hoag on, 77.
Waldensian Valley, A letter from the, 100, 101, 114, 122, 123, 131, 135, 151, 152.
Whale Shark. Some facts concerning, 103.
Where Language fails, 104.
What Westown has meant to me, 194.
Why the Leaves Change Color, 199.
"With You Always," 213.
World. Around the, 281.
Wisconsin Idea. The, 290.
Woolman, John. Copied from Journal of, 352.
Wheeler, William, 353, 366, 377, 388.
What just one word may do, 596.
Westown. The religious life of, 556.
Whittier School, 571.
War and other wickedness, 44.
and Self-defence, 77.
Who is the enemy, 86.
A French soldier's views, 87.
The latest panacea, 170.
Our testimony against, 200.
"Shirkers." A morning among the, 271.
Notes on, 507.
Picture Makers and war makers, 509.
Westown Notes, 142, 154, 166, 190, 201, 214, 226, 238, 250, 271, 285, 297, 322, 334, 345, 358, 369, 382, 394, 405, 420, 441, 464, 477, 489, 537, 549, 573, 597, 621.
Woman with the Sable Furs. The, 596.
"Will, Not My," 606, 621.

Younger Friends, 8, 21, 32, 45, 56, 68, 69, 80, 93, 101, 107, 129, 140, 141, 164, 176, 188, 189, 199, 213, 225, 235, 236, 260, 295, 307, 308, 319, 331, 344, 355, 368, 380, 390, 402, 411, 426, 433, 474, 482, 510, 511, 524, 536, 559, 571, 584, 595, 608.
Youthful adoration, 32.
Yearly Meeting sessions, synopsis of, 518, 524.
Yearly Meeting of 1914. Some observations on the, 532.
Yearly Meeting. Glimpses of Women's, 533.
Yearly Meeting. After thoughts, 559.
Yearly Meeting at Westery, 608.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, SEVENTH MONTH 3, 1913.

No. 1.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, (J. HENRY BARTLETT,
(DAVID H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to

EDWIN P. SELLEW or THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

OLD FOES AND NEW FACES.

The late revision of the Discipline of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting strengthened rather than relaxed its condemnation of certain immoral practices, as the "use of intoxicants, attendance at theatres, dances and operas." The revisers did not, perhaps, class these matters under the head of "immoral practices," but a late minute of Haverford Monthly Meeting gives them that name, and the phrasing of the Discipline doubtless justifies it. At all events, the fact is clear that a sweeping condemnation of them all represents a very recent sentiment in our Society and cannot be put aside as antiquated and obsolete.

So far as a safe judgment can be framed on reports to the Yearly Meeting since the new Discipline became effective, it does not appear that there has been any particular progress in the Society in eliminating these evils. There doubtless has been a quickened effort in many of our meetings to make reports as well as answers to Queries more accurate and more informing, and this may account in part for a seeming increase in theatre-going and in attendance at dances and operas. The situation in regard to the use of intoxicants has improved in some meetings, but "a compliance with social custom" is a shield behind which a very considerable number of delinquents is now somewhat obscurely reported.

The situation in regard to all these matters in the Society of Friends, is related in some measure at least to the general situation toward them in Society at large. It may help us with our specific problem to consider the more general view.

First, then, it may be said—and the observation is not without hope—that all these matters specifically condemned in the Discipline are in an increasing measure on the defensive. Behind any use of intoxicants there are great interests—great investments of money, great armies of employees. These interests have recognized the peril to their financial success of modern assaults upon them in the name of science and in the interests of citizenship. They must present a new front if they are to hold their own or to make progress. This new front we are calling a "new face," and it seems well to plead for a better understanding of what it embraces. In England of recent years there has been a great outlay of temperance effort, and statistically a very hopeful report can be made of the number of licenses extinguished. Within the past year a searching study in Great Britain of the growth of "social clubs" and of their relation to the drink habit has, however, disclosed a disheartening situation. A number of these clubs in excess of the number of extinguished licenses has been located, and reliable information is at hand to show that the amount of intoxicants consumed in the clubs exceeds the amount formerly consumed at the licensed bars. So the liquor interests gain both ways. They increase the sale of their poisons and they give an increased air of respectability to their business. This "air of respectability," this new "social face," has been for years recognized in Great Britain as the most winning capital of distillers and brewers. Through political power not a few of these have been exalted to the peerage. Sir Wilfred Lawson humorously referred to their advancement as "exaltation to the beerage." The circle of English aristocracy, however, is armor-proof against such sarcasm. Social recognition over there comes to those who have position, and those who have position have great influence. Unfortunately, echoes of this situation are not wanting in our own country. Evidence in a libel suit is published all over the land, and a certain nonchalant manner in testifying that one of our most prominent citizens has a "gentleman's cellar" is surely calculated to make a telling appeal throughout the wide circle of would-be aristocrats. An aristocracy of worth cannot be too closely on its guard against such influences. And this leads to the observation that "social compliance" mostly has at root a very false sense of aristocracy. In the final analysis it reduces to what the world calls snobbery. Social clubs doubtless have a strong side of merit. The liquor interest knows this full well. So it is an open question whether Friends have an opportunity to attack the liquor interest in a more vulnerable spot than in the Clubs. If all Friends now concerned in Clubs would combine to withdraw from them unless the "cellars" were ruled out, it would be an impressive testimony. No single Friend can do this without a very appreciable effect for good.

This "social face" has long been used also to give standing to dancing and theatre-going. They have been classed as accomplishments, and ignorance of them has seemed to close some doors of social opportunity. A greater diffusion of education has wrought a change in this situation. One now might easily feel greater embarrassment to confess ignorance of public affairs, or of economic interests, or even of archaeology than to step aside as unable to dance or to have no knowledge of the latest play. In the face of this competition, therefore, dancing and the stage have been obliged to put on a new face. For convenience and easy understanding we may call this an "educational face." In an article of this kind the development of such a new face cannot be treated in much detail nor argued to the end. In indicating briefly how the claims made for it do violence to the best educational theory, it will of course be important not to be too dogmatic.

First, then, as to dancing: the educational claim is that it insures physical development and a definite training in grace of manner and the forms of courtesy. Physical education has made great strides in twenty-five years. The Swedish system has had many modifications until now we hear of the American system. The Swedish principle, however, that right bodily development requires muscular movements to be given in pairs (we are avoiding the technical terms), or at least in such order as to maintain the balance in development, continues to be fundamental in all the systems. In dancing this principle is largely violated. The physical development of professional dancers is proverbially one-sided. Some parents, however, would take the risk of uneven physical development if they could secure grace of address for their children. They have so much felt the need of it themselves! This then introduces the whole subject of formal training in the art of behavior. The late Colonel Parker devoted the energy of his notable educational career to the correction of false tendencies in formal training in the school arts and in the arts of life. He was often declaiming against the "immorality" developed even in the art of reading. A moment's reflection makes his meaning clear. Who has not caught himself reading without getting the meaning? This experience is all too common with children who even may have acquired the art of reading quite perfectly. The purpose of education in any art that is supposed to have a mental content is defeated by the degree in which the art becomes mechanical. Mechanical or artificial manners therefore are very greatly to be deplored. Is the product of the dancing class in this line other than artificial? Do good manners really go with grace in making the courtesy? Or does the psychology of education have force in this domain too?

The educational claim for acting has of late been very greatly urged upon schools. The pageant seems to have made a really wide appeal. Those who know Susan Blow's exposition of the Froebelian philosophy will remember the emphasis that is put upon the necessity of getting beyond the symbol to the thought symbolized. Similarly, the psychologists generally point out the danger of becoming "eye-minded." If hyperboles may be allowed, one might say that the properly trained mind will see more with closed eyes than the eye-minded person ever sees. Question the frequenters of moving-picture shows or of dramatic performances to find how much their intelligence has been expanded. One sensation of seeing has followed another until the mental pictures are well befogged. The trained imagination may get diversion in shows. It must get training under the discipline of real study.

If violence as thus indicated is done to really fundamental educational principles by both dancing and the stage, there remains yet another very serious indictment of them which also has direct bearing against their claims for educational merit. A certain amount of normal excitement belongs to youth. The power of work in educational lines has no higher claim than the exhilaration or excitement of spirit which it brings. But education in reality quite as much as religion is dependent upon the restraint of excitement for its real success. Perhaps the case against excitement was never better stated than by Frederick W. Robertson. He must be classed with the largest and most liberal thinkers. "I am persuaded," he says, "there are few things morally so bad as excitement of the nerves in any way; nothing—to borrow a military word and use it in a military sense—nothing demoralizes so much as excitement. It destroys the tone of the heart; leaves an exhaustion which craves stimulus and utterly unfits for duty. High wrought feeling must end in wickedness; a life of excitement is inseparable from a life of vice. The opera, the stage, the ball-room, French literature and irregular life—what must they terminate in?" Would any claim that dancing and the stage (to be successful) must not be surcharged with excitement?

The negative side of these matters is not, however, the side of sanest appeal. Our ambitions in the Society of Friends are for the best socially, educationally. We are persuaded there is a better way to attain the best than these diversions offer. We are persuaded that those who make the freest use of these diversions recognize this better way. It is first of all the way of genuineness. It demands that our social gifts and even our manners shall have a rich content of knowledge and of sympathy with others. And, secondly, it must be a way of training and discipline. We have trusted too much in these matters to a right purpose. The soil must be good if we are to grow a good crop, but a fruitful tree must be cultivated and pruned. We plead for both cultivation and pruning. Infinite patience by parents and teachers—a Divine gift of such patience bestowed on children intelligently will give us a product in our Society without the sacrifice of our principles (or of our traditions, if you call them that)—a product, we say, of which there will be no possible cause of reproach or of shame.

J. H. B.

AN OLD FRIEND WITH A NEW FACE.

An editorial in the present issue reminds our readers that old foes may appear with new faces. This suggests that the first number of this new volume presents to Friends who receive it an old Friend with a new face. Some who read the editorial two weeks ago, in which proposed "Changes in THE FRIEND" were outlined, will see so little change that the new face will not impress them; and a sense of relief may be experienced by those whose fears of innovations had been aroused. These may find, in the faithful, yet kind, treatment of the subject of "Old Foes" that the attitude of our paper toward "sinful amusements" is unchanged; and it is believed that other articles in this number will indicate that the "new face" is not intended to hide or cover up any compromises with evil, nor any departures from those principles which are fundamental to original Quakerism.

Others may feel a measure of disappointment that the changes are not more pronounced as well as more numerous. They may have expected to see in this initial number full-grown specimens of each addition or improvement suggested in the editorial on that subject. They look for them, and find only a few of them here, and these in such size and manner as to reveal their infancy. These readers are asked to give us a little time both for adjustment and growth. Our ability to become a more perfect medium will in large measure depend upon our friends, as was more than hinted in the previous editorial. THE FRIEND desires to publish the news within our Society, but you, our readers, must furnish the larger part of it. Will not each one ask the question, "What can I do to help THE FRIEND to become this medium?" Some can write articles, others can furnish news items, others can secure for us the manuscript of interesting papers read at Friendly gatherings, and all can interest themselves in increasing the circulation of the paper by offering to receive and forward subscriptions for those Friends who are not taking it.

The Contributors were united in the adoption of one rule which some Friends may feel to be a deprivation, and reference to which was not made in the editorial announcing changes. This rule has reference to the notices of deaths. It was concluded that in future such notices should be restricted to the bare facts—name, place of residence, dates, membership and official relation to meetings. Friends are desired to furnish notices of deaths and marriages of our members promptly after such events occur. If the families immediately interested do not attend to this, we request interested Friends to suggest to them that it be done, and if necessary offer to assist in preparing such notice and to forward it to THE FRIEND.

E. P. S.

SAVING YOUNG AMERICA.*

CLARA J. HUMPH.

Crime cannot be prevented by punishment but only hindered by letting no child grow up a criminal. Until ten years ago all child offenders were tried in the regular criminal courts for the "crimes" they had committed. Those found guilty were sent away to jails with other convicts. In jail they learned from the older criminals tricks which they in turn taught their former comrades. Our criminal courts do not prevent, they foster crime. When this fact was recognized by many good people a spontaneous movement arose from several directions which resulted in our Juvenile Court system. This system provides a separate court for children, a separate place of detention and a means of returning the child to his home with a probation officer to look after him there.

The court for children, better known as the Juvenile Court, deals with three classes of children under sixteen years of age; the dependent or neglected, the truant and the delinquent. The cases come into this court either through the House of Detention, or on petition. A petition—and there were 506 in Philadelphia last year—can be filed by any respectable citizen stating that the child is neglected, dependent or delinquent, and that he is in need of the care and protection of the court. Children, when they are arrested, instead of going to the station houses are taken to the House of Detention, Twenty-third and Arch. There, a magistrate's court is held every morning, after which the child is either transferred to the Juvenile Court or discharged. The magistrate has no further power. As in Philadelphia, the Juvenile Court sits every [Second-day] morning, so in order to keep the child after his arrest and prior to his trial we have a House of Detention. In this way it is the temporary home of the child where he can be taught arithmetic, spelling and reading by a competent teacher and where his leisure time is taken up in various ways. But in all things the boys and girls must be kept separate. On [Second-day] morning at ten o'clock the children are taken to City Hall where they are tried before the Judge of the Juvenile Court.

The original idea of this court was to prevent the child from being treated as an adult criminal; to bring him into personal contact with the judge and to make him feel that the judge was there to protect and not to punish him. The child's name and picture are forbidden to be printed, so that his future welfare shall not be injured. The trial should not be formal and public, but personal and private. The child who must be brought into court should of course be made to know that he is facing the power of the state, but he should, at the same time, be made to feel that he is the object of its tender care and interest. The judge, on the bench, looking down upon the boy standing at the bar can never show the proper sympathetic spirit. Seated at a desk with the little one at his side he can reassure the boy, if necessary, by a friendly hand on his shoulder. The judge, while losing none of his judicial dignity, will gain immensely by the attitude of the lad toward him.

Unfortunately there still exist children's courts that are almost contrary in every detail to the thought underlying the movement which created them, that continue, in a word, to be mere criminal courts. During my visit to our own court here in Philadelphia—the judge, in his long judicial robe, sat high upon the bench with the child offender below him in the same position and attitude as the adult offender brought before the bar of justice. Every detail of the child's story is told in such a way as to make it the property of the room filled with men, women and children of all ages. The underlying principle for which the Juvenile Court workers have been striving is completely lost sight of in this formal trial of the child. Here, instead of having one judge preside over the Juvenile Court who is particularly interested in the welfare of children, there is a new judge each month and it is perfectly natural that he cannot do justice to his position in such a short time.

At the foundation of the Juvenile Court stands the probation officer. The court is the institution and the probation officer the agent. In Philadelphia there are twenty probation officers, two of whom are colored women, who have charge of all the colored children and two Hebrew women, who have charge of the Hebrew children. The agent must be a person of good character whose duty is "to investigate as may be required by the court, to be present in court in order to represent the interests of the child; to furnish information and assistance as the judge may require and to take such charge of any child before and after trial as may be directed by the court." It is obvious that the probation officer must fully understand the situation, for the success of the court depends upon the ability of the judge and the wisdom and fitness of its probation officers.

When the judge sends the child home on probation the probation officer having control of the district in which that child lives, must begin her work immediately. Her duties are often of the most delicate nature. Tact and sympathy as well as a full understanding of the difficulties that surround the child are most essential. It is the personal influence of the probation officer going into the child's home, studying the surroundings and, as far as possible, trying to remedy the bad conditions that are most important in the probation system. The length of time a child must stay on probation rests with the good judgment of the officer. Although no one above sixteen years of age can be brought into the Juvenile Court, often boys and girls are kept on probation until they are twenty-one. In Philadelphia, out of 600 put on probation last year, 600 were discharged and the remaining 300 had to be sent to the House of Refuge or some other institution of society. Probation is, in fact, the keynote of the Juvenile Court system.

Although the Juvenile Court is still crude and incomplete in its methods, let us bear in mind that this great institution is only ten years old. But the court must have the help and co-operation of good men and women to guide it in the right line so as to increase the great work which has already been done.

FREQUENT intercourse even with an earthly friend, if he be of a strong marked character, quickly makes itself seen in its influence upon us. We grow more and more like those with whom we associate, and especially if we admire and look up to them we unconsciously imitate them. It is no less so with our intercourse with God. The more time we spend in his presence, seeking his face and communing with Him in prayer, the more surely will godly graces and tempers spring up within us and bear fruit in our lives.—BISHOP WALSHAM HOW.

*Graduation Essay at Friends' Select School, Sixth Month 13, 1913.

Selected for "The Friend" by F. C. B.

THE CUP OF PRIDE.

Young Celestius, prince of Rome,
Driven by the Spirit, left his home—
Left lordly palaces and lands
To find a cavern in the sands.

For he had turned in terror when
Savonarola, crying to men,
And touched by Love's great anger, hurled
His judgment thunders on the world
Then fell the house of pride for him;
Then shined the path of Seraphim.

His shirt of hair, his holy book,
And one tall cup were all he took.
One earthen cup, whose lettering told
Of his princely race and their deeds of old
So cut by Elin's seven tall palms,
With sound of penitential psalms,
And aching knees and fastings long,
He strove to purge away the wrong
His deeds had heaped in those wild years
When he had sown the seed of tears.

But not alone with prayer and praise
Did Celestius build his days.
He led a life a little stream
To gloss the desert and the stony beam
He scooped each day the sandy hole
That held well-water as a bowl
To gladden the camels in their play
And hearten the camels on the way
He made the stream that was so lean
A winding path of trembling green,
Where vine-leaves lifted and white pease,
And barley for the wind to tease.

There at his lonely cavern door,
There on his hard but friendly floor,
Worn travelers stopped on the way to eat
Of dates and honey and wild goat's meat
Here camel-men and pilgrim band
Found comfort in a weary land,
As Celestius gave them ease
And washed their feet upon his knees
But he always brought with a secret pride
The earthen cup from its niche inside,
Thinking the guests might his story trace
And learn that he came of a lordly race,
And say, as they saw his feet unshod,
"How much he has given up for God!"

And yet in his prayers the hermit cried,
"Lord, have I purged away my pride?
Am I little and humble in thy sight,
And moving hourly toward the light?"
And God was listening to this, and glad,
Till at the end of a happy year,
He turned to the angel Arabod:
Go, for this child is very dear
Go to the sands, the soil he sows,
So came one night to the hermit's cave
A pilgrim with stony eyes and grave.

Quickly the hermit smoothed a seat,
Spoke of the travels he had and met,
Praising the great's milk, booming and cold
Into the short-horned cup of gold.
The goblet earthen with curious grace
To tell the glories of his race,
Their births, their deaths, their princely reigns,
Their daring deeds, their splendid pains.

Scarcely they talked of wine and grapes,
Yet spoke no word of the beautiful cup
But lay in the bush of the desert night
Where sleep on Celestius' hill,
There almost found the pilgrim a ray of light
And he rose, and took from the hermit's cell
The lordly goblet, heaved two well,
And bore it away in his camel pack,
And tided to an on the desert track.

But he sent on the hermit's soul a dream
That told the Turk he was a young beam
Bringing these words from the world's young men:
"You goblet, brother, I must do thee
As we take from a child's cup, by
Let go of the past, but do not hold it
Only your own, not model your life,
Only the men you are to be,
Count when the judgment seat is set!"

LAWIN MURKIN, in "Christianity," 1911.

EXTRACTS FROM THE JOURNAL OF SAMUEL MORRIS.

(Continued from page 206, Vol. 86.)

IN NEW ZEALAND.

Seventh Month 20, 1893.—CHRIST CHURCH.—We took a stroll through some of the streets, which are broad and well kept, laid out rectangularly, with an almost unbroken level for the site of the city. By sinking pipes of small bore to the depth of seventy feet, water readily rises to the surface, and from a depth of 120 feet, with a pipe of four inches diameter, there is obtained a strong flow that would rise four feet above the outlet. These larger pipes supply water for public purposes, and are used in case of fire, etc. The river Avon winds through the whole extent of the town, with a rapid current, though of no great depth.

2nd, First-day.—A company of seventeen gathered in our large parlor this morning, only three of these being women; Jonathan offered prayer for a blessing. A young man, Robert Grubb, who is still probably in membership with Friends, but an active member in the Salvation Army, read impressively part of the first chapter of 1 Peter, commenting, in an earnest but very reverent manner upon its exhortations to holiness, which he claimed is inseparable from the Christian life. I was led to refer to the occasion in which our Lord made Himself known to his disciples after the resurrection. How He found them sad and disconsolate, how He cheered them and left them with his blessing, and that He still makes his sweet presence known among his waiting followers, according to his promise.

We went to visit Charlotte Raine one, it appeared, is a granddaughter of the late Mary Dudley, and for whom she had a high regard. The poor woman is herself greatly afflicted by rheumatic gout, that has left her very helpless in walking, and but little use of her hands. She goes, however, with a wheeled chair, and can latterly do some knitting. We found her in a sweet, thankful frame, and she evidently has a good Christian experience.

In the evening called on Thomas Hudson and his wife, a singular case of our marriage rules as they stood in England fifty years ago. The wife was disowned for the "outgoing," and as a result joined the Congregationalists, while the husband, becoming thoroughly convinced of Friends' principles, desires to unite himself with our Society. He had spent some time in Philadelphia, when he attended Orange Street Meeting, remembered William and Elizabeth Evans, Jeremiah Hacker and others, making his home with Beulah Barton and her sisters. He seemed greatly pleased to talk over with me his reminiscences of his sojourn in my native city, and thus were revived freshly early associations and scenes long passed away.

20th. Another and more satisfactory visit to the Museum. Here is really a superior collection of Australasian specimens in various branches of natural science. The New Zealand department is especially interesting and valuable, containing a fine set of its birds, with fossil remains, and skeletons of the "Moai," which stood fully twelve feet in height, and belonged to the ostrich family. The department of ichthyology is also well represented, and the Maori room very interesting as illustrating a fair degree of progress in building, clothing, utensils and weapons of war and the chase.

Took tea with Joseph Peckover, and after an opportunity with him-off we had one with two brothers. The former of these young men had evidently imbibed skeptical views on several important points, but we may hope that the patient discussion of them this evening will prove profitable, our remark seeming to throw new light upon some of his difficulties.

21st, First-day. Called again on Prof. Grossman, since we were not able to accept his invitation to take tea with him to-morrow. He showed us through some of the School Buildings, which are plain but substantially furnished, and we had interesting conversations regarding education in New Zealand, and his own views as to young men entering upon the active duties of life. He seems deeply interested in their highest welfare and in love with his vocation, at the same time realizing the heavy responsibilities connected with it. We were glad to find him taking a hopeful view of the rising generation in New Zealand, believing as he does that the standard of morals is in advance of most of the Australian Colonies. He, however, admits and deprecates the undue love of amusement that prevails here, as elsewhere, and the lack which comes with it of that full appreciation of what life really is, and the duties we owe our Father in Heaven, and to our fellow-men. Jos. Harlock called on us, and we had an open opportunity with him. He seems a tender-spirited man. After tea the Friends, twelve in all, spent the evening at Henry Wardell's by way of a farewell meeting. We had some parting exhortations for them, and a savory Epistle addressed recently by Friends in Auckland to their brethren in Christ Church was read by Jos. Peckover. The whole occasion tended, as we felt, to our mutual comfort and profit.

Eighth Month 2nd.—The sea calm, fairly comfortable. Our course throughout had been at no great distance from the coast, and as Joseph Whitaker and I perambulated the upper deck before breakfast, we had bold mountain peaks, some of which were snow-capped, to our left, and shortly could discern in the dim distance on our right the highland of the North Island. The mountains, as a rule, were bare of vegetation, the peaks often sharp and angular, the sides seamed with deep gorges, while immense cavernous depths suggested the thought of volcanic craters that not very long since had ceased their activity. The waves were moderate, and we made good time, drawing up to the Wellington quay about 1 P. M.

T. Mason related a number of interesting anecdotes connected with his early life in New Zealand; among others, an occasion in which, after he had purchased from the Government the property on which he now lives, an old Maori was disposed to dispute his claim, and coming up to his house demanded that he should leave it forthwith. Not prepared to do this, T. M. planted himself across the doorway, and with extended arms forbade an entrance. Without a moment's hesitation the intruder, who was a man of huge proportions, quietly picked up T. M., and setting him down at a convenient distance, returned to the house, where on entering, he found Jane Mason, who, with a few plain words, dealt him a smart slap on the face. He immediately turned upon her with his tomahawk, which he held for a long while suspended, as if to cleave her skull. The chief and other leading men had now reached the scene, and were evidently considering the gravity of the case, when at a word from the chief, the assailant dropped his hand, and presently all left the house, applauding the courage of its mistress. No further question was raised as to the ownership of the property, and from that time forth, the intruder and his people showed their esteem by all manner of kindnesses to the rightful occupants.

6th.—We walked with Thos. Mason through his grounds, and were astonished at the variety of plants and trees collected from various regions, but seemingly well adapted to this climate and soil. The latter is evidently rich by nature and improved by judicious treatment.

We spent most of the P. M. with our friends here, and then returned to Wellington, in order to be at the meeting at the Primitive Methodist House at 6.30. This allowed no time for the usual evening meal, but we were glad to find that, owing to the unexpected absence of the regular pastor, an opening was made for us, and that the leading members of the congregation had expressed a wish we would conduct the services. For this we felt scarcely prepared, but requesting that one of their own members should open the meeting in their usual way, we felt free to address the people when a suitable opportunity occurred. Thus after the singing of several hymns, reading portions of Scripture, and prayer by one of their lay preachers, I spoke at some length and with much liberty concerning the love of our common Lord and Master which binds so sweetly together his disciples everywhere, and tends to unite them in his service, though it may be under different names and by varying methods. The lay brother in a fervent prayer asked for a lasting blessing upon what they had heard from the servants of the Lord this evening, and that we might know the abiding presence of the Most High during all the service that may yet be laid upon us. The meeting soon after closed, yet it was understood that the usual prayer meeting would be then held, and for this the brethren urged we should stay with them a little longer. I, not declining to do so might be misunderstood, and feeling united in spirit with many in whose company we had just been sharing, we remained, with perhaps fifteen others, for a somewhat closer communion. Several fervent petitions were made under a sense of solemnity that was very refreshing. The offering of one good woman savored much of the anointing, and then Jonathan knelt to ask for a blessing upon the Lord's children in Wellington, and that they might be strengthened to carry on his work as under his eye and in his fear; that a special blessing might rest on the handmaidens of the Lord, and that they might receive largely of his helping grace and guidance in doing faithfully their part, whether it be much or little.

8th.—We reached Jos. Beal's before dark and much of the evening was passed pleasantly in talking of the Maoris, their habits, customs and history so far as it is known; also their present condition and prospects. It seems that upon the termination of the war between the British troops and the aborigines in 1861-62, which resulted in the complete subjugation of the latter, the Government of New Zealand assigned land to the Maoris, either as tribes or individuals. The land thus allotted is inalienable, unless it can be proved to the satisfaction of a Government official that the Maori still would have in his possession at least twenty-five acres. This is supposed to be sufficient to keep a man and his family from want; but should he become a pauper, it is expected the tribe to which he belongs will care for him. As illustrating the Maori method of administering justice, Jos. Beal told of a worthless young fellow who became so dissipated that he left his wife unprotected for. The "Nappo" thereupon held a meeting, and agreed that they would take his wife from him, for "if he would not get her tea, and wood to cook with, he was not fit to have a wife."

10th.—We slung our bags upon our umbrellas, and with the wraps in our other hand, trudged bravely on toward the hamlet beyond. But the road was excellent, the air bracing, and the sun had scarcely set, so that it was barely dusk when we reached the door of Alfred Goldsberry, the village schoolmaster. The wife, a woman of five and thirty, with a noble bearing and kindly face, invited us to come in, for though her husband was away she knew he would be glad to see us. So we were ushered into the "Room" of the household, where the table was being spread, and the kettle singing on the hearth, while a troop of little ones were gathering for the evening meal. She said we must excuse their rather crowded condition, for with themselves and eight children and a small house, they had to do the best they could. We contentedly enjoyed the fireside, and watched with admiration the movements of the wise mother as she made ready the supper, kept the little fellows occupied in bringing wood or helping her set the table, quieted the three-year-old prattler, and, withal, had a pleasant word now and then for us. Alfred Goldsberry and his boys at length arrived, and thus four more were added to our company, with a room of not more than twelve by fifteen to hold us all. We at once were pleased by his manly, intelligent face, as he heartily welcomed us to their "cabin." "We could not tell the good it did them to see some of their own people once more, though he had been half afraid it would not be able to find them." It seems he and his wife had come from England six years ago, have had a school in Auckland, and another elsewhere, where they had been burned out, but the people there had shown them great kindness in replenishing their stock of clothing, of which they saved almost nothing, and they had come to their present home about three months since. The school here had been badly run down, through a very incompetent teacher, but is slowly recovering under its new management, the pupils now numbering about fifty, and the teaching giving general satisfaction. The eldest son, as a pupil teacher, is helping his father, and the other children, except the youngest, attend the school. The directors have promised to add two new rooms to their dwelling.

(To be continued.)

FOR "THE FRIEND."

NOTES FROM NEW YORK STATE.

I.

The interest expressed in our late Yearly Meeting concerning the Friends' Indian School at Tunesassa, N. Y., encouraged a visit to that Institution.

The ride from Philadelphia via the Lehigh Valley Railroad, along the Lehigh and north branch of the Susquehanna River, is one of the most interesting and picturesque in the Eastern States. Mauch Chunk and vicinity has been called the Switzerland of Pennsylvania, and a generation ago was frequented by tourists more than at the present time—because of the Switch-back (gravity) railroad—which made a delightful excursion over the top and sides of the mountains.

The view from Glen Summit, overlooking the Wyoming Valley from an elevation of 1400 feet, is very impressive, with Wilkes-Barre occupying a prominent place in the landscape. One can but recall the scenes of bloodshed enacted throughout this beautiful valley 135 years ago—when the Iroquois Indians came down upon the white settlers and practically exterminated them in 1778—after which General Sullivan retaliated by dealing a crushing blow upon the wigwams of the Six Nations in New York State. He built the road over Pocono Mountain (now the State Road) from Easton to Wilkes-Barre during the summer of 1779—a very difficult task, considering the character of the woods and swamps penetrated as well as the hostile attitude of the natives. Reinforced by detachments of militia, which joined him on the Susquehanna, he marched through southwestern New York somewhat as General Sherman marched through Georgia to the sea during the Civil War.

Why history has been written in blood, and a nation calling itself Christian permits such barbarities, is one of the painful evidences of the beast in man, and raises the query of David Starr Jordan: "Shall God not fill another universe with life we waste in wicked wantonness?"

"Down in yon sombre hollow Jackson fell,
His red hand raised in worship, to the last,
Auster, devoted, of his Duty sure,
For States make Duty of the wrath of man,
Imparting Righteousness to bowls abhorred,
Have bowls of man no cement save blood?
Are nations built on bones of mangled men?"

The path of Justice between man and man
Must lead through strife, but not through pools of blood,
The clash of will, but not the crush of men.

He roars like a lion, who snags his own teeth?
The culture gorges when the eagle strikes
And eviscerates the slaughter-dwells of the forest of man
How like a charm yawns our history!
Nothing enduring yet in wrath was done—
No noble deed in hatred, evermore.
The Master Builder works in solemnness;
A world which reeked with wars and reds again,
The Prince of Peace in justice overrules
Old Cain, as a trophy of war,
Its rest for glory, its mouth-holding lies,
Its rattling colors, and its rattling drums,
Its clappers' lament, and high calls,
Its heady wine of murder and ambition
That makes a slaughter seem a holiday,
That makes us cry the nation of the State
That holds its murder with a holy light
That makes our common Fate seem ever of Divine,
And thunders shouting, as the voice of God!"

The sunset over Cayuga Lake, as we journeyed from Ithaca to Union Springs on its east shore, brought to mind the Indian chiefs who held their council on the bank of these beautiful lakes. The site of an Indian village, admirably located with large grave mounds, was pointed out as we passed it. The Knights of Columbus have erected a granite monument on this site, where the first Christian house of worship in the State of New York was erected in 1656 by four Jesuit missionaries, who were the guests of the Cayuga chief, Sa-on-chio-gwa. The imagination could easily people all these hills and lakes with the red man, and Conrad Weiser's efforts at keeping the peace between the Indians and white men on the north, east and south of this section came vividly to mind. He came repeatedly from his home near the present city of Harrisburg, Penna., to persuade them from the warpath between 1730 and 1755.

Upon arrival at Union Springs, we received a warm welcome by Walter and Jessie Wood, who have charge of "The Oakwood Seminary," standing on a well-located site overlooking Cayuga Lake—situated somewhat as Cornell University at Ithaca. This school has more than a hundred years of history, as it was established at Five Partners, N. Y., in 1796. It was transferred to Union Springs in 1858, then the geographical center of New York Yearly Meeting. During the past fifty-five years of its history at Union Springs, some 5000 scholars have been in attendance and 330 graduated. Its effect upon the community and the Yearly Meeting has been very helpful, as the atmosphere of love and intelligent, spiritual purpose pervading the institution cannot fail to influence the youthful mind toward the higher life.

Our hospitable host and hostess took us to Poplar Ridge, through a beautiful country. Wells College for girls at Aurora was most attractive as we drove through its campus. Ex-President Cleveland's widow, recently married to one of its professors, was herself a graduate and is now a trustee of this college. At Sherwood we saw the Select School building where Hepzibah Hussey so ably conducted her school and the residence of the late beloved Persis Halleck was passed. Emily Howland, now over eighty, had kindly invited us to dine with her and we have seldom had a more inspiring repast, because of her active interest in the colored people of the South. She had recently returned from Tuskegee and other schools in Alabama. The practical help she has given them, combined with her good judgment, emphasized the New England type of mind and character which she possesses by inheritance. Generations of sterling good sense and religious character with industry and benevolence have produced a type not easily surpassed. The different types of very admirable people to be found in various sections of the Union make an exceedingly interesting study even within the limits of the Society of Friends.

At Buffalo, we were met by Wm. G. Justice, the present Comptroller, and were shown the beauty of that city, whose parks have been made very attractive. The Queen City of the Lakes has 400,000 inhabitants. Of these, 80,000 are Poles, who supply seventy per cent. of the criminal class, and 30,000 Italians, who make good citizens.

The ground upon which South Buffalo stands was bought from the Seneca Indians for two and one-half cents per acre, and if Friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting had joined with a missionary, Asher Wright, in an earnest and effective protest these Indians would have been deprived of all their lands in southwestern New York.

As we stood before the statue of Red Jacket, in Forest Lawn Cemetery, with eight of his braves buried at his feet, the inscription read: "Sa-go-ye-Uat-ha (he keeps his people awake) died at Buffalo Creek, January 20, 1810, aged seventy-eight years. When I am gone and my warnings are no longer heeded the craft and avarice of the white man will prevail. My heart fails me when I think of my people so soon to be scattered and forgotten."

TUNESSASSA, New York.

JOSEPH ELKINTON.

The human race is divided into two classes—those that go ahead and do something, and those that sit still and inquire why it was not done the other way.—HOLMES.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM.*

ALEXANDER C. WOOD.

The one hundredth anniversary of an institution which has been devoted to the relief of human suffering and to the restoring to health and usefulness of a large number of men and women who were mentally diseased, is an event worthy of note. Such an event Friends' Asylum is to-day celebrating. It may be of interest to consider what led to its establishment. As far as is known no hospital care was given to the afflicted in mind before the Christian era, but a hospital for the insane appears to have been opened in Jerusalem in A. D. 491. In the twelfth century a retreat was opened in Bagdad for the care of the insane. In 1547 The Bethlehem Hospital was established in London; this is the oldest hospital for the insane in England, or in all Europe. It originally was a monastery, and Henry the Eighth converted it into a hospital for the insane. Private asylums came into existence in 1700 through a demand for better care and more privacy for those of the upper classes, yet for more than a hundred years thereafter those considered insane were treated in the most brutal manner. In the year 1709, the Religious Society of Friends, at a monthly meeting held in Philadelphia, took steps looking toward the establishment of a hospital for the sick and insane. In 1751 this "concern" consummated in the founding of the Pennsylvania Hospital in Philadelphia, a portion of which was set aside for the care and treatment of persons "disordered in mind and deprived of their rational faculties." This movement on the part of Friends was nearly a hundred years in advance of that great movement by Tuke in England and Pinel in France for the better care of the insane in those countries. All of these philanthropic efforts had to combat ignorance and superstition as to the true nature of insanity, and as a consequence those mentally afflicted were chained in outhouses, placed in jails and almshouses and treated as outcasts.

In the early part of the nineteenth century the public mind was somewhat aroused to the suffering of those mentally afflicted and the necessity for more humane and rational treatment was realized. This necessity appealed perhaps more strongly to the philanthropic and humane feelings of the members of the Society of Friends than to most others; hence they took early steps to establish an institution for the care and treatment of those mentally deranged; thus the Friends' Asylum for the Insane took its beginning in 1811—a time when there was no other similar institution in this country. There being no precedent on which to work, no model by which to govern their action, we wonder more and more at the sagacity with which the founders planned and devised and looked into the future, establishing an institution where in very truth the insane might see that they were regarded as men and brethren. The general belief exists that to Thomas Scattergood belongs the inception of this asylum. For six years prior to 1800 he was traveling on a religious visit to Friends in Great Britain. During this time he visited "The Retreat," near York in England, and being much impressed with the humane care and treatment of the insane there, he, on his return home, inspired and interested Friends of Philadelphia, so that at the Yearly Meeting in 1811 a proposal was made to "make provision for such of our members as may be deprived of the use of their reason." A Committee appointed to consider the subject reported:—"Considering the peculiar circumstances of this afflicted class of our members, as well as the relief of their families and friends, they believed that the establishment proposed under the direction of such members of our Yearly Meeting as might be willing to contribute thereto might be beneficial;" in 1812 this report was adopted and a committee appointed to carry out the suggestion.

Owing to his death in 1814, Thomas Scattergood did not serve on the Board of Managers, but his descendants have been actively useful on the Board down to the present time.

*A paper read at the one hundredth anniversary, Sixth Month 4, 1913.

That Friends entered into this work from a sense of religious duty is shown by a minute made by one of the early Committees: "We would observe that in the prosecution of this important work if some difficulties should be presented, we hope they may not be permitted to discourage our efforts to overcome them, but recollecting that the design had its origin in religious motives, may we proceed in its accomplishment, humbly believing that a Gracious Providence, whose tender mercies are over all his works, will not suffer this beneficent purpose to fail," and again in 1823 we find a minute of the contributors as follows:—"Much tender feeling was manifested by the contributors for this deeply suffering part of the Society in the very liberal provision which has been made to promote their comfort and relief, and it was hoped that no pecuniary or other motives would prevent their benefiting therefrom, especially when it is considered that the object is the restoration of a Friend from the most afflicting of all the maladies to which human nature is subject." This Committee persevered and the Contributors' Association formed the title under which the organization was known and its property held.

The original building was completed and the house opened Fifth Month 15, 1817, when the Institution started on its useful mission. The desire quoted above, that the insane might see that they were regarded as men and brethren has, I believe, animated the managers from the start down to the present time, as it is our firm conviction that kindness and sympathy are largely helpful in restoring a troubled and disordered mind. A Committee of the managers visits the Institution weekly, going through the wards and other parts of the buildings, seeing the patients when suitable, consulting with the officers with the view of the general welfare of the patients and the whole establishment; these committees report monthly to the board, so that all its members are kept in close touch with its conditions and workings.

Originally the asylum was intended for the members of the Society of Friends only, but it soon became evident that a much larger field of usefulness was open to it, and in 1834 all sectarian restrictions were removed, and its doors were opened to all seeking the benefit of aid, so that now only a small percentage of the patients are in membership with Friends.

As the Asylum became extended and its property increased it seemed wise in order to better conduct its affairs that the association should be incorporated, which was done in Fourth Month, 1888, and Samuel Morris was selected as President. He served most acceptably in this capacity till his resignation, on account of advancing years, in 1902.

As one of the most important factors in the care and treatment of our patients is kindly, efficient nursing, a training school for nurses was organized in 1894. Although this involved some complication at first, the wisdom of the movement was soon made apparent in the higher standard of efficiency in the caretakers of the patients. The course of training covers two years and comprises "general nursing with special reference to the care of cases of nervous and mental disease." It is certain, says our Superintendent, Dr. Chase, that a better class of applicants is attracted to the field of insane nursing if a liberal training is assured them. From the physicians' viewpoint it is a most desirable step because of the efficiency of the actual care given the patient and also on account of the increased accuracy and scientific value of the reports prepared by a nurse trained to appreciate the significance of her observations. "Elmhurst," the nurses' home, was erected in 1896, and was the gift of several interested friends of the asylum; this handsome building, blending so perfectly in the general harmony of the entire establishment, is typical of the growth and enlargement which has been steadily going forward at Frankford. The green-houses, gymnasium, power plant, new kitchens, refrigerating plant, the acquisition of the beautiful Stanley Farm near Fox Chase, where a change of surroundings and the quiet of the open country are afforded convalescent patients, the growth and development of the dairy farm connected with this institution, and the last addition, the new hydrotherapeutic building, which speaks practically the last word in modern scientific development of nervous treatment. All these by their very enumeration illustrate the march of the institution into larger fields of development. Here then, is the answer to the pleading question which at the very beginning of the seventeenth century Shakespeare put into the mouth of that weird medieval king of Scotland, Macbeth, when turning to the physician at Dunsinane, he says, "Canst thou not minister to a mind diseased, pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow, raze out the written troubles of the brain, and with some sweet oblivious antidote cleanse the stuffed bosom of that perilous stuff which weighs upon the brain?" To-day pointing with pride, but also with thankfulness to this institution which a gracious Providence has so amply blessed we answer, "Yes, we believe we can."

A Letter on the Centenary of Friends' Asylum.

THE RETREAT, York, (Fifth Month) 27, 1913

DEAR DR. CHASE—

I write to express the good wishes of all at York Retreat on the occasion of the Centenary of the Friends' Asylum for the Insane in Philadelphia.

The interesting book you sent has enabled me to picture its buildings and surroundings, whilst the text provides a panoramic survey of its history. I congratulate you heartily on the splendid traditions, the beautiful premises, and the excellent modern equipment of your Institution. It is pleasing to see how the younger sister of the English Retreat has grown so remarkably in beauty, and the elder sister on this side rejoices at the way in which a reasonable antiquity is combined with youth and vigor.

One thing certain is, that in these days there is no standing still, and it is interesting to note that the development of the two institutions has been on parallel lines, and that many of the problems connected with the nursing of the insane have been met in the same spirit in both places. The progressive increase of personal comfort in asylums is noteworthy, and the external conditions of life have greatly altered. There is a danger that as institutions grow in size and complexity, and as the facilities for recreation and amusement multiply, and luxuries increase, the personal element which so conspicuously distinguished the administration of the Friends of a hundred years ago may be found to become relatively less important. It does us good to read of the labors of those who worked for these institutions at their inception, and they inspire us; for, though knowledge increases, it is doubtful whether there has been great advance in true fellow-feeling and sympathy, which mean so much in the treatment of the insane.

I wonder if it has occurred to you that it is not unlikely that American influence had much to do with the foundation of the Retreat in York. Twenty years before the meeting of Friends in York was held, at which William Tuke pleaded for the insane and proposed "a retired habitation" for members of the Society afflicted in mind, his son Henry Tuke, then a young man, had walked out of the city of York to meet on the road from London an American Friend travelling in the ministry. The expected visitor was John Woolman whose conscience would not allow him to travel by stage coach on account of the cruelty to horses and post-boys involved in this express mode of travelling. John Woolman came to York only to fall a victim to malpractice. He was devotedly nursed by the Tuke family, and in Father Tuke's account we have a touching record of his last hours, the same Father Tuke who afterwards gave the Retreat its name. It is not I think far-fetched to imagine that William and Henry Tuke were profoundly influenced by John Woolman whose spirit of loving kindness to all lived after his death in the hearts of the York Friends, and led them later on to take up the cause of the mentally afflicted in a way that became an example to the civilized world.

I hope your gathering will be a successful one and with regrets that I am unable to accept your kind invitation to be with you, I remain,

Your friend sincerely,

BEDFORD PIERCE.

P. S.—Just a word to correct a mistake that has slipped into your historical review. Samuel Tuke, the author of the History of the Retreat, was the son of Henry Tuke and the grandson of William Tuke, the founder of the Retreat. Since writing the above it has occurred to me that American influence in the foundation of the Retreat was also felt through Lindley Murray, the grammarian, also an American Friend, who gave William Tuke valuable assistance.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

THE FATHER'S CARE.

Selected by M. S.

In the trees the birds are singing,
In the mountains and the glens,
By the rivers and the brooks and by the sea;
But there's food for all the robins
And the tiny little wrens,
And there's bread in His hand for me.

All the meadows bloom with daisies
And with dandelions bold,
And the clover blossoms cover all the lea;
But there's clothing for the lilies
And the buttercups of gold,
And there's raiment in His hand for me.

And the clouds of trouble gather,
And the stormy wind is heard,
And the angry tempest rages wild and free;
But there's shelter for the sparrow
And the little humming-bird,
And there's safety in His arms for me.

And the world is full of children,
Oh, so many and so fair!
Like the sunbeams as they sparkle on the air!
But there's room for all the children
In the Father's tender care,
And there's room in His heart for me.

—Selected.

Selected by M. S.

THEODORE PARKER tells us "that when he was a boy four years old, still in petticoats, he saw a little spotted tortoise sunning himself in the shallow water at the root of a flaming rhodora. He lifted the stick in his hand to strike at the tortoise, as he had seen other boys out of sport kill squirrels and the like. But all at once, he says, something checked my little arm, and a voice within me said, clear and loud, 'It is wrong!' I held my uplifted stick in wonder at the new emotion, the consciousness of an involuntary but inward check upon my actions, till the tortoise and the rhodora both vanished from my sight. I hastened home and told the tale to my mother, and asked what was it that told me it was wrong? She wiped a tear from her eye with her apron, and, taking me in her arms, said, 'Some men call it conscience, but I prefer to call it the voice of God in the soul of man. If you listen and obey it, then it will speak clearer and clearer, and always guide you right; but if you turn a deaf ear or disobey, then it will fade out little by little, and leave you all in the dark and without a guide. Your life depends on heeding this little voice!'"

TO BOYS AND GIRLS.—Some of you have, no doubt, seen jugglers and conjurers at a country fair. The tricks they perform seem very wonderful, though probably, if we could peep a little behind the scenes they are not so wonderful as they seem. But it is certainly startling to see a live rabbit taken out of an old hat that you were sure, a moment before, had nothing in it.

Clever Jugglers.

The greatest jugglers are Hindoos, some of whom are astonishingly clever. A Hindoo juggler will put a little dog into a basket, fasten the basket up ever so tightly, and then take a sword and run it through the basket again and again. You hear the poor little animal squeal inside, and the sword comes out covered with blood. You are just about to pounce on the man, when he opens the basket and shows you that there is nothing in it, and at the same time the little dog alive, uninjured, and wagging his tail with delight, comes round a corner.

But all Hindoos are not so clever. It is said that Sir Hiram Maxim, the great inventor, was approached by one of these gentlemen not long ago. The juggler asked the inventor to lend him a watch. Now, Sir Hiram remembered the famous story of Robert Houdin, who, performing before the Pope, pounded to pieces in a mortar a valuable watch that the Pope gave him, rammed the fragments into a gun and fired them off at a rose-tree. On the tree the amazed company saw hanging the identical watch, or what seemed to be the identical watch. In reality it was an exact duplicate, which the clever conjurer had had made, and had hung there before beginning his trick.

Good at Smashing.

Remembering Houdin, then, the inventor handed over his watch, which was a costly affair. It was smashed, all right. The juggler managed that part of it splendidly; but alas! he was unable to restore it. It is still smashed, and no duplicate watch from a rose tree or any other mystifying source, came to take its place in the pocket of the chagrined owner.

The first lesson is: Don't trust a Hindoo juggler. The second lesson is: Don't trust a juggler of any sort, especially of the sort that juggles with character and conscience. The third lesson is: Don't trust anyone who intends to smash what is precious and promises to give you back something "just as good."

What, for example? Your innocence, or your faith, or your health, or your conscience. All these things are more precious than watches, even though they are gold-cased and jewel-covered; and you may be sure that he who juggles with them, and smashes them, cannot replace them.

There are plenty of things that ought to be smashed, but they are the bad and worthless things, and not the things that are good and pure.—The Christian Age.

Selected by M. S.

A PIONEER MISSIONARY'S HUNT FOR A WORD.—A missionary in Eastern Equatorial Africa tells this incident to illustrate the difficulty of reaching a people who have no written language: There was one word which it took me two and one-half years to get. It was in my thoughts by day and in my dreams by night, and I shall never forget the thrill of joy that came to me when the long search was rewarded. One night my people were seated around the campfire. I listened to their stories, and finally my head man, Kikuvu, told a story of a man who was attacked by a lion. But he did not say a word that I could construe to be the one I wanted. I was about to turn away when he turned to me and said: "Bwa-na-nu-ku-than-i-swa na Ki-ku-vi—"The master was saved by Ki-ku-vi." I immediately said to him, "Uk-uthan-ie Bwa-na?"—"You saved the master?" "Yes," said he. "Why," said I, "this is the word I have been wanting you to tell me all these days, because I wanted to tell you that Jesus, the Son of God died to—" He turned to me, his black face lighting up in the lurid blaze of the campfire, and said, "Master, I understand now! This is what you have been trying to tell us all these moons. Jesus died to save us."

FOOD FOR THOUGHT.—Our conversation turned to the use of tobacco when my guest remarked, "I know a young man who went to West Point, where the course is strict. He was quite brilliant, and passed all his examinations successfully until he came to mechanical drawing. In that he failed because his hand was unsteady from the use of cigarettes, and he was obliged to choose another career."

"My aunt," continued the speaker, "was made deathly sick by the smell of tobacco smoke; but her husband had smoked before she knew him, so she said nothing, only when he smoked on the front piazza she retired to the back porch, or if he smoked at the back, she went to the front of the house; it was simply impossible for her to stay where he was smoking. My uncle said that if he had to give up tobacco, or give up his wife, he preferred to give up tobacco and he gave it up. During his last illness he told me that he felt tobacco had to some extent paralyzed his mental powers, so that he had not been the man he might have been if he had never smoked."

"D— gave up tobacco years ago on account of his health. But he says that even now he sometimes feels as though he would give almost anything to be able to smoke a cigar after supper; he had no idea of the hold the habit had on him." "I suppose," added my friend reflectively after a moment's pause, "that it is very much like the drink habit in the power it gets over those who use it."—M. S.

WORK in every hour, paid or unpaid; see only that thou work, and thou canst not escape the reward. Whether thy work be fine or coarse, planting corn or writing epics, so only it be honest work, done to thine own approbation, it shall earn a reward to the senses as well as to the thought; no matter how often defeated, you are born to victory. The reward of a thing well done is to have done it.—EMERSON.

A SANE FOURTH.

"Independence Day" will have reaped its harvest of "limb and life" before this number of THE FRIEND is read by most of its subscribers. Our readers may be interested to know that while Philadelphia had a most unenviable record in that respect one year ago, the Director of the Department of Public Health and Charities of this city has at least put forth an effort to make a change this year. An official bulletin has been printed and circulated, a part of which follows:

"Philadelphia was the only city last year having more than one hundred injuries reported during the Fourth of July season. There were 127 persons reported injured here by accidents due directly to fireworks or other means of noise-making and display in the celebration of the Fourth. No other city had half as many injuries reported. New York City was second in the list, with 58 injuries reported, or one person injured for each 100,000 of population as compared with Philadelphia's rate of 7 persons per 100,000 of population. St. Louis was third in number of injuries, having had 48 reported, but was a close second to Philadelphia in rate, her rate being 6 per 100,000 of population as compared with Philadelphia's rate of 7. Chicago, which is tenth in the list, stood last among the largest cities, having had only 12 serious injuries reported, which gives a rate of .5 per 100,000 of population.

"Many of the non-fatal injuries reported from year to year are of a serious nature, and include the loss of eyesight, the loss of legs, arms, hands, one or more fingers, and other lifetime mutilations. Last year, as in previous years, the giant firecracker and the blank cartridge headed the list of causes of the most serious wounds and injuries.

"A great part of the responsibility for a safe and sane Fourth rests with parents and guardians. They should not allow their children to use pistols, blank cartridges, cannon crackers, or high explosives of any kind. The common cannon cracker comes next to the blank cartridge in causing serious and mutilating injuries, but even the smaller firecrackers and the fireworks which ordinarily are considered harmless, may set fire to the clothing and cause serious accidents, and children should be protected from their dangers."

FRIENDLY NEWS.

An event of importance to all our work was the Annual Meeting of Friends in Japan, held at I-shioka, Fourth Month 17-21. The attendance while not so good as in places where there are more Christians in the local community, was more representative than it has ever been before, especially on the part of men engaged in the active, busy affairs of life.

The opening meeting for worship was a time of preparation for the business meeting on the morning of the 18th, at which time reports of each local meeting and the various affiliated activities were presented.

At this meeting the annual letter from the Philadelphia Foreign Missionary Association was read, and as always, much appreciated. Such glimpses into the Christian world beyond their daily vision are always most helpful.

On the second evening, C. Kuffa gave a message on "The Mission of the Society of Friends Relative to the Future of Japan." Those who heard were deeply impressed by their responsibilities.

One of the best sessions was the conference on the "Development of Meetings"—applied locally, to the Society of Friends in Japan, and to the whole Christian work in Japan.—It was led by T. Nomura, a sugar merchant and bank manager in Toshihara. This man and his brother, one of the most reliable men in the Toshihara meeting, are both members of the Town Council. The need for the spirit of deep and earnest prayer, without which all other efforts will fail; the regular weekly meetings of Christians scattered all over the country, in small groups, should meet together in large centres at stated times, these to meet annually for fellowship with all Friends in Japan, was suggested by a man who has had little opportunity to know of "monthly meetings," "quarterly meetings," etc., and yet he described the system from his own sense of existing needs; activity of Christians engaged in the active work of life, mingling with non-Christian and passing on to them the message and spirit of Christ, were points discussed.

The large public meeting for non-Christians on Seventh-day evening was addressed by Dr. Nitobe. About 150 special invitations had been sent out to leading men of the town. About 400 people heard the message, many of them having to stand on the outside. All felt that the message was well-suited to the needs of the audience. Dr. Nitobe met for personal conference any who wished to come to his room the next morning from 8 to 10. Following this was the meeting for worship, which was a time of real worship in spirit and in truth. In this meeting Dr. Nitobe spoke more freely and positively of his own personal Christian experience than many had ever heard him speak before. He stayed till the afternoon meeting, leaving a parting message in which he said he would have many things to take with him from this Annual Meeting.

One of the interesting features of the Annual Meeting was the common life of those gathered, reminding many of the early days of the Christian Church. The I-shioka Christians had secured the use of a large-house which once had been used as a kind of hotel. They hired cooks, but all the rest of the work, cleaning, serving tables and everything, was done by the Christians of the place, setting an example that will bear much fruit.

FROM GILBERT BOWLES.

At the Annual Meeting of Friends of Japan, held in Fourth Month, in I-shioka, Ibaraki Ken, an old man was present, who seems to have been taught directly by the Spirit of God long before he heard of any Christian teaching. When C. Suzuki first went to I-shioka about sixteen years ago, he met the man and had some talk with him. When the man heard the teaching of the Gospel, he said: "That is just what I believe and am trying to live.—If that is Christianity, I am already a Christian." His reputation and life bore out the testimony of his lips. He was a man of wooden mortars in which rice is pounded to remove the hull. While other men might hurry their work and not be careful to use the best wood, he always was extremely careful to turn out the best work he possibly could, and at moderate prices. So different from other workmen was he, that all the country-side knew and spoke of it. Being both frugal and industrious, he has saved a few hundred dollars, and lends this to the poor of his village, a very unusual proceeding in Japan, where the poor have to pay exceedingly high rates of interest.

Through this old man, C. Suzuki made the acquaintance of a young man, who is now to be one of the prominent Christians in the village of Yozuri, a country village that C. Suzuki hopes will become before long a Christian village.

ANNUAL YEARLY MEETING.—Conference, which was held from the nineteenth to the twenty-fourth of last month, is verbally reported to have been attended by about the usual number of its own members, and by considerable numbers of those from other Yearly Meetings. Among the latter were Mary Ann, Wagon, and her son, Rebecca McKel and daughter from Spang (Quarterly Meeting, New York); Henry T. Outland, from North Carolina; J. Harvey Brien, son of the late Ohio Thomas L. Mott, and wife, of Iowa, temporarily residing with the friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting; Ed Chapman, of Iowa; and Thomas W. Fisher, of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

CORRESPONDENCE.

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY ANNUAL MEETING OF THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS IN JAPAN.—The Annual Meeting of the Society of Friends in Japan, assembled at Tshioka, Ibaraki Ken, April 19, 1913, places on record its conviction that the Alien Land Bill, now pending before the Legislature in California, would, if put into effect, greatly injure the cordial relations which have existed between Japan and America. It recognizes such legislation to be contrary to the will of God, whose help we now seek, expressing our belief in the possibility of a peaceable settlement of the issues involved.

We bespeak the earnest efforts of the American Peace Society, the members of the Society of Friends in California, the Friends' Foreign Missionary Association of Philadelphia, and the Executive Officials of the Central Office of the Society of Friends in America.

We request that copies of the above be sent to the Charge d'Affaires of the American Embassy in Tokyo, the Associated Press and to Japanese and foreign newspapers in Japan.

(The following is from the letter to Margaret W. Haines, forwarding the above action.)

It may seem to our American friends that we here are giving too much attention to this question, but feeling as we do that such discrimination against the Japanese as has been proposed would be a severe blow to the cordial relations hitherto existing between Japan and America, we feel bound to do everything we can to prevent such an unfortunate event.

When the question was before our Annual Meeting there was very little discussion, simply a time of prayer and quiet waiting, and the selection of a committee to prepare a resolution. This spirit of intercession was intensified by the fact that one of our members had just returned from a conference of missionaries and Japanese Christians called by Count Okuma at his own residence, at which the Count said feelingly that he felt the question was too difficult for statesmen and diplomatists, but that it could be solved by an earnest appeal to God for the power to act upon the minds and hearts of the people.

Notwithstanding occasional manifestations in large meetings and through the press of the tone of excitement and occasionally the word "war," all of the great leaders and the body of the people have exhibited remarkable calmness and self-control, and desire as sincerely as any of us a peaceful solution of the questions at issue.

Commending the matter to the prayerful attention of those to whom this message may come, I remain,

Very sincerely,

GILBERT BOWLES.

GATHERED NOTES.

I ASSERT that no man, however scholarly he may be, can, without the dominating power of the Holy Spirit, correctly interpret the Holy Scriptures in their entirety. There is good reason for this. It is seen in the fact that, as the Holy Spirit empowered the writers of the Bible to rightly do their work, so it is absolutely necessary that the same Spirit should govern and quicken one in interpreting what the Spirit has enabled godly men to write.

The Holy Spirit, far more than any man or class of men, knows the mind of God. He knows, as no human being does, the hidden meanings of the spiritual truths of the Bible. Therefore, it logically follows that no human being can correctly discern the spiritual contents of God's [Scriptures] unaided by the Spirit. Scholarship is a good thing. True Christian scholarship is a much better thing. A Christian scholar, depending more upon the wisdom of the Holy Spirit than he does upon his own scholarship, is the man who is best equipped and qualified to interpret the Bible.—C. H. WITHEKIND.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UPPER STATES.—A recent Philadelphia paper says: "Contamination of the city's water supply south of Allegheny Avenue, between Broad Street and the Delaware River, and south of Market Street, between the Schuylkill and Delaware Rivers, is believed to be the source of the recent abnormal increase of typhoid fever. Until the source of infection was definitely determined, Director Neff repeated yesterday his warning that all beer-holders should hold water used for domestic purposes. Tests to determine the purity of the water in the city mains showed that north of Allegheny Avenue the filtered supply from Torresdale was pure and up to standard."

Prof. Andrew J. Rider, treasurer of the New Jersey State Board of Agriculture, has issued an open letter to the public, urging co-operation of all citizens in the campaign to exterminate mosquitoes. Professor Rider calls upon council, the Board of Health and householders in general to facilitate the work of the commission. He urges householders to either get rid of all waste water in the vicinity of their homes or drop a small quantity of kerosene oil over the water.

A despatch from Harrisburg of the twenty-fifth says: "The Senate bill conferring authority upon the State Water Supply Commission over all dams and obstructions in streams of the State, except the tidal waters of the Delaware and its navigable tributaries, was approved by Governor Tener to-night, and hereafter no dam or wall can be erected without permission from the commission and its approval of the plans. The commission is authorized to supervise the construction and operation of all dams as well. This bill was drafted to overcome lack of authority to prevent such disasters as the breaking of the dam at Austin."

A despatch from Millers, Nev., says: "Excitement exists here and at Mina over the announcement that an important quicksilver strike has been made nine miles east of Mina. According to statements made by those who have been on the ground there is apparently millions of tons of material in sight. The ore is said to contain 12 1/2 per cent. in quicksilver, worth at that rate $200 per ton."

The following appeal has lately been addressed to authorities and school boards in Delaware: "We, the members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Kent County, Delaware, in executive session held in Felton, Delaware, do hereby put ourselves on record as protesting against the suggestive dances and immodest dress as seen among young people of this day. We also desire to commend the stand taken by the Federated Women's Clubs of Delaware and the faculty of Delaware College. We appeal to mothers and thoughtful women of our country to co-operate in the suppression of the same. We also ask the school boards of Kent County to elect teachers of clean habits and pure lives."

A despatch of the 25th from Washington says: "Secretary Bryan is pleased with responses he has received to the President's plan for the peace of the world. There is nothing nearer to his heart. Eighteen countries have informed him that the waiting plan he has proposed when differences arise between nations meets with their most sincere approval."

A bill regulating marriages in this State has been passed by the House and the Senate and now goes to the Governor. The bill prohibits the issuance of marriage licenses to persons afflicted with transmissible disease, and further says that no license to marry shall be issued where either of the contracting persons is under the influence of drugs or liquor, is an imbecile, epileptic, of unsound mind or under guardianship as a person of unsound mind, nor to any man who is or has been within five years an inmate of any county asylum or home for the indigent, unless it is shown that the cause of such condition has been removed and that the applicant is physically able to support a family.

A despatch from Washington says: "Hay and forage production has been greatly increased by the importation and adaptation of several plants, the cultivation of which has been experimented with and fostered by the United States Department of Agriculture through its Bureau of Plant Industry. Two of these are treated in two pamphlets entitled 'Sudan Grass, a New Drought-Resistant Hay Plant,' and 'Vetch Growing in the South Atlantic States.' In the semi-arid West, where no perennial grass has thus far been found suited to the conditions, Sudan grass promises to be valuable for hay. Vetch is grown on practically every type of soil in North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia and should come to occupy an important place in the agriculture of these States. It is a good hay, pasture and soil crop, and its more general growth will aid in the development of the livestock industry."

The flight of a pigeon from Rio Janeiro, Brazil, to this city is reported. The time occupied was about 16 days. It is said that on several occasions continental and American fanciers have shipped homing pigeons to distant points in Africa and South America, but no bird heretofore has been able to make its way through the equatorial regions on account of the extreme heat. The airline distance from Rio Janeiro to this city is about 4200 miles, nearly half of the distance being over water.

A despatch of the 26th from Saratoga, New York, says: "A plague of grasshoppers in the town of Wilton, six miles north of this village, has resulted in a loss to farmers of thousands of dollars. Several farmers within a section about four miles square report the loss of entire crops of hay, oats and vegetables. The devastation is so serious that an appeal is to be made to the State Department of Agriculture for assistance."

Governor Dunne, of Illinois, has signed the woman's suffrage bill. It will become law on Seventh Month 1, permitting the women of Illinois to vote for all statutory offices. Illinois is the first State east of the Mississippi River to give women the ballot.

Governor Tener to-day signed the bill to establish commission government in this State's third-class cities. Under this law 23 cities will go under commission government in the Twelfth Month. The new government in each city will be vested in a Council of five salaried Commissioners, one of whom shall be the Mayor. The Commissioners will be the heads of departments and will be elected biennially, the Mayors to be elected for four-year terms.

An amendment to the Constitution of the United States has lately been adopted by the requisite number of States, as follows: "The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration."

It is stated that the shipbuilders on the Delaware River in Philadelphia have enough work in view to keep them busy for several years. This condition is due in a large measure to the approaching completion of the Panama Canal, and the demand for new steamships that it is expected will be developed.

A recent despatch from Harrisburg says: "The Legislature sent 1147 bills to Governor Tener, of which 645 remain in his hands for action. The Governor has approved 383 bills and vetoed 75. Forty-four were recalled from him for amendment."

The State Department of Health has established 69 tetanus antitoxin stations throughout the State and all of these have received their supplies of antitoxin. In urging the prompt use of antitoxin to prevent lockjaw following an explosive or other wounds, Dr. Dixon says: "Do not consider any such wounds trivial, send for a physician at once." It is essential that the tetanus antitoxin be administered within 24 to 48 hours after the wound has been inflicted.

It is stated that there are twelve million farmers in the United States, and that a special bulletin issued by the Census Bureau last year showed that the value of the 1,006,571 farms and buildings in the United States was $6,330,236,951, with a debt of $1,726,172,851, the ratio of debt to value being 27.3 per cent. The ratio of debt to value was lowest in the States of New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

A despatch to the Public Ledger of this city says: "According to the official figures of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, agricultural products form but 18 per cent. of the domestic exports of the United States in the fiscal year 1913, against 51 per cent. in 1910, 62 per cent. in 1900, 75 per cent. in 1890, and 84 per cent. in 1880. This change in the percentage which agricultural products form of the total exports is due, not to an actual decrease in the value of that class of merchandise sent out of the country, but to the much larger increase in the value of manufactures exported."

A despatch from Washington says: "Wholesale prices of commodities in the United States last year were higher than at any time during the past thirty years, the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics announces. During the year wholesale prices advanced sharply, the most important feature being the marked increase in the great groups of farm products, food, fuel and lighting, and metals and implements. Food as a group increased 6.2 per cent., the most pronounced increase being in corn meal, 27.9 per cent., and canned tomatoes, 27.1 per cent. Farm products increased 5.7 per cent., the principal increase being in sheep, 24.4 per cent., and cattle, 29.4 per cent."

FOREIGN.—It is stated from London that President Woodrow Wilson has declined Russia's request for a renewal of the treaty of commerce except on the absolute conditions that American Jews are allowed to enter Russia freely.

Raymond Poincare, President of the French Republic, has lately been paying a visit to England and was received by King George V. with great display.

A despatch of the 23rd from Berne, Switzerland, says: "A conference of delegates from the Governments of the principal industrial countries of Europe will be held in this city on Ninth Month 15. The delegates will consider the drafting of an international agreement to prohibit the employment of girls and boys below specified ages and to fix a maximum ten-hour day for youthful workers within certain other ages."

A despatch of the 29th ult. from Rome says: "Great alarm prevails in Naples owing to the eruption of Mount Vesuvius, whose start coincided with the earthquake shocks in southern Italy yesterday. To-night streams of molten lava are flowing from the crater."

RECEIPTS.

Under reference specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying $2.00.

Fr. S. Frame, Phila.; Wm. Evans, N. J., $11 for himself, Wm. Carter, Chas. N. Brown, Alice H. Carter, Wm. T. Garnett and Daniel Oliver; Deborah D. Maris, Del.; Richard T. Cadbury, Pa.; J. Barclay Hilyard, N. J.; Rachel E. Bell, N. J.; J. B. Bettles, Ind.; O. E. Stackland, Iowa; Mary H. Ridgway, Ia.; John B. Garnett, Pa.; Henry Hall, Phila.; Esther K. Alsop, Pa., and for Elizabeth Marriott; George H. Omsby, Jr., Phila.; Clara Grimshaw, Pa.; T. Wistar Brown, Pa.; Wm. H. Gibbons, Pa.; L. C. Shoemaker, Pa.; Joseph S. Middleton, N. J., $4 for John R. Hendrickson and Nathan H. Middleton; Joshua S. Wills, N. J., $6 for himself, Jesse Sharpless and Allen R. Sharpless; Susan H. Sharpless, Pa., and for Edmond Jones; A. F. Huston, Pa., and for E. R. Calley; Geo. Wood, Phila.; Edwood Cooper, Phila.; Paul D. E. Maier, Phila.; Stephen W. Post, N. Y., and for Martha W. Post.

Remittances received after Third-day noon will not appear in the receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

During Seventh and Eighth Months of this year the meetings at Newton Meeting House, Camden, N. J., will be discontinued.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.—The following books have recently been added to the Library:
Baker—Winter Holiday in Portugal.
Carpenter—Samuel Carpenter and Descendants.
Castle—Hawaii.
Dugmore—Wild Life and the Camera.
Elkinton—Divine Library.
Lounsbury—Yale Book of Annals Verse.
During Seventh and Eighth Months, the Library will be closed, except on Fifth-day mornings, from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

LINDA A. MOORE,
Librarian.

MARRIED.—At Friends' Meeting-house, Twelfth Street, below Market, Philadelphia, on Sixth Month 26, 1913, SAMUEL BELL, of Waterford, Ireland, son of Henry and Anna Jane Bell, of the same place, and GRACE BROMLEY ALLEN, of Westtown, Pa., daughter of William C. and Elizabeth C. B. Allen, of San José, Santa Clara Co., California.

DIED.—Sixth Month 14, 1913, at "The Mount," near Baltimore, Md., SUSAN B. CAREY, wife of the late James Carey, in her ninety-second year. — at her home in Chesterfield, Ohio, SUSAN WORSTELL, a member of Chesterfield Monthly and Particular Meeting, Fifth Month 19, 1913, in her eighty-eighth year.

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 36 cents, or 1 cent a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should fill THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited. Subscribers patronizing our advertisers will assist THE FRIEND, especially by mentioning our paper in correspondence.

WANTED—A FRIEND, WHO HAS BUSINESS experience as a selector in selling different lines of goods, desires a position. C. Care of "The Friend."

W. B. WEAVER Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5th ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN
TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT
OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL
ACCOMMODATIONS FOR
FUNERALS.

BELL 'PHONE. ESTABLISHED 1880.

FROM BONDAGE TO FREEDOM, by Isabel Shipley, 2nd Edition
THE BEST TRAIT, by L. C. Wood, 2nd Edition
These two excellent promulgators of the Holy Spirit, wonderfully carried out and interestingly told. The latter to be read with care in every household, and from the pen of a literary writer. One copy set of four, one second-class, six copies for ten cents in postage stamps, or individual copies one for a dollar. All mailed to other addresses in U. S., Mexico and Cuba at desired rate, address to J. B. WOOD, 1251 PINE POINT PARK, CAMDEN, N. J.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Valued

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SONS

(Marcellus Balderston)

602 SPRING GARDEN ST. 518 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL PHONE PHILADELPHIA

It Pays To Prevent The Stopping Of Machines By Broken Belts.

You will find as a rule that that belt is most economical which causes fewest stops. For stops mean the stoppage of output, while fixed charges such as rent, interest, insurance, taxes, fuel and wages go on.

Our belts are made to cut down stops and give full output. The leather is carefully selected to secure uniformity of strength. It is lubricated to the center and finished to secure durability. It is thoroughly stretched, so that the belts require few take-ups.

The belts not only give efficient service, but show a low cost per year.

J. E. RHOADS & SONS

PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. Third St.

NEW YORK: 102 Beekman St.

CHICAGO: 322 W. Randolph St.

Factory & Tannery, Wilmington, Del.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST. PHILADELPHIA PA

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

Selling More Goods

IS NOT A HARD PROPOSITION IF YOU USE GOOD PRINTING.

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,

EDWARD T. BIDDLE,

1010 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

To any subscribers desiring to preserve their copies of THE FRIEND we can recommend the Big Ben Binder, made by Bigelow Binder Co., 198 Canal Street, New York. For one dollar they will deliver, about ten days after order is received, a binder, holding fifty-two numbers of THE FRIEND, with name of paper printed on outside. The binder may be used as a permanent or temporary way of preserving the papers. No one connected with THE FRIEND has any financial interest in their sale.

POCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and Those of like taste. Open all the year.

Elevation 1800 feet, commanding extensive mountain and valley scenery. Now is the time to visit the MANOR to enjoy the Rhododendron bloom. Address

J. W. Hurley, Manager,

POCONO MANOR, PA.

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Late Summer is now recognized as a desirable time for planting

Evergreens

Our illustrated catalogue, describing these & other Trees, Plants & Shrubs, mailed upon request.

The Wm. H. Moon Co.

GLENWOOD NURSERIES

Morrisville Bucks County, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA OFFICE, 21 S. Twelfth St.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, SEVENTH MONTH 10, 1913.

No. 2.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
{ DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to
EDWIN P. SELLEW or THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

ANOTHER PLEA FOR OUR SCHOOLS.

The multiplicity of laudable projects into which Friends have entered for the betterment of the community awakens serious concern on the part of many. The two matters that have been prominently on the minds of some of us in this connection of late are these: First, that we should most earnestly study our special aptitudes as a body and as individuals and exert our strength and influence where they will be most effective; and, secondly, that we should administer these more economically than we are now doing. It is for the elucidation of these two points that I want to use a little space in THE FRIEND at this time.

It is not unnatural that each of us should to some extent emphasize the importance of his own craft and calling, but divesting oneself as far as practicable of the personal equation, there must still be force to all of us in the thought that we, as a people, wherever we have had an influence in the past, have exerted this in measure far beyond our numbers in the avenues of education.

Our schools are not very numerous, neither are they very large, but none the less they have made an impress for good, and I believe are still doing so quite out of proportion to their size, and they have been and still are in the main the best channels we can occupy for impressing our views of life upon others.

We may be met at the outset with the query, What has our educational system done to maintain our membership in numbers, much less to add to it? And for rejoinder we would find satisfaction in the statement that it has done very largely for this very thing, far more indeed than any other one factor that we have put into the field, almost as much as all others combined. Our schools in Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, until within the past twenty-five years, have been quite strictly confined to our own children; we have taken no efforts to take others in with them, though we have been quite successful in making them attractive to others. Some twenty-five years ago our policy altered, and as often happens in such changes we may have stretched our tether to the fullest extent and a little beyond the limits of best propriety.

We are hardly even yet in the testing time. There must have been an element of stimulation and wholesome life that committee men and women experienced in those days of expansion when new plans were formulating and when things were much in the flux. I would plead that the present is a day to call forth no lower grade of leadership; things are taking shape and the mould once established will in large measure be the pattern for the next generation to follow. Questions of educational policy, most far-reaching in their effects and very vital to our interests, confront every committee in charge of a Friends' school to-day, and he who fails to see such in his appointment would seem to some of us to be short-sighted.

In the many "concerns" to claim our attention, let us not lose sight of any of the inherited obligations that have come to us. I would be the last to argue that age can ever be the criterion for their excellency, but I believe it to be an asset with which we do well to reckon. We need to see to it that our time, our purses, and our interest are not so far engrossed in newer projects, that there is only the shadow of substance left for the old ones. The past generation may have liberally endowed an institution and given it a splendid foundation and outlined an excellent plan for it; unless, however, it can receive the active management of the best men and women the community affords it cannot measure up with its past record, much less keep a place worthy of its history in the march of progress.

If there is something of intrinsic value in an average Friend's home that obtains there because it is a Friend's home, is there any better channel through which that influence can flow into wider circles than through that of our schools? There is probably something in our training, due to the special tenets of Christian doctrine and practice we profess, which yields a type of character that is more easily moulded through our schools than through other agencies; granted that the teachers are the essential factors of these schools, very close to them in importance and altogether essential for the continuance of the good work are the managers.

The other half of my text may take this form. It is natural to give our support to those causes which yield the most apparent returns. This is probably right in most matters of material concern, but in dealing with things less tangible, where we have to trust to results and base our prospects on the general doctrine that good results will follow rightly directed effort, we are prone to forget the foregoing philosophy and to adopt the old practice of demanding immediate results.

It is natural to lavish our substance on charities that count their recipients by the hundreds, rather than on those that concern directly but few. An educator in presenting his case before his board of managers expressed the doctrine tersely a few days since by saying, "I would rather send out ten young people from my institution who had received three years' training under five expert teachers, than I would one hundred boys and girls who had had a like period under the advantages of twenty good, but only second-rate instructors." There is no economy in the long run in spreading our influence and our resources over a larger space than they are really able to cover.

I do not know that we are doing so, but I am apprehensive from the signs of the times lest such may be the trend. There is a little more éclat attendant upon a new undertaking, that from its very newness attracts public interest and help, but it is extremely doubtful whether any greater skill is demanded in directing it into a proper course than in maintaining the old, and the fact that the old is with us, that it has done good service, and that ample service lies at its very doors justifies us in casting in our lot with it, though we may be in the second hundred of those who have stood sponsors for it and not one of the "original directors."

D. H. F.

Reprinted by request from "THE FRIEND," 1864.

ON THE DANGER OF SEEKING THE PRAISE OF MAN MORE THAN THE GLORY OF GOD.

How applicable are the words of our Saviour to the following remarkable relation: "Woe unto you when all men speak well of you." (Luke vi: 26.) It is taken from the Imperial Magazine, for Twelfth Month, 1810, and may be of use to every minister of the Gospel.

It is the substance of a remarkable dream related by R. Bowden, a clergy man of Darwin, who committed it to writing from the lips of the person to whom the dream happened on the evening of the thirteenth of Fifth Month, 1810.

The Dream.

"A popular minister of Evangelical principles, whose name, from the nature of the circumstances that occurred, it will be needless to conceal, being much fatigued at the conclusion of the afternoon service, retired to his apartment in order to take a little rest. He had not long reclined on his couch before he fell asleep and began to dream.

"He dreamed that on walking into his garden, he entered a bower that had been erected in it, where he sat down to read and meditate. While thus employed, he thought he heard some person enter the garden, and leaving the bower he hastened towards the spot where the sound seemed to come from, in order to discover who it was that had entered. He had not proceeded far before he saw a particular friend of his, a Gospel minister of considerable talent, who had rendered himself very popular by his zealous and unwearied exertions in the cause of Christ. On approaching his friend, he was surprised to find that his countenance was covered with a gloom, to which it had not been accustomed, and that it strongly indicated a violent agitation of mind, apparently arising from conscious remorse.

"After the usual salutation had passed, his friend asked the reason the time of day, to which he replied, 'twenty-five minutes past four.' On which his friend said, 'it is only one hour since I died, and now I am damned.' 'Dammed for what?' inquired the dreaming minister. 'It is not because I have not preached the Gospel, neither is it because I have not been rendered useful, for I have now many seals to my ministry, who can bear testimony to the truth as it is in Jesus, which they have received from my lips, but it is because I have been accumulating to myself the applause of men, more than the honor which cometh from above, and verily I have my reward.' Having uttered these expressions he hastily disappeared and was seen no more.

"The minister suddenly awaking with the contents of his dream deeply engraven on his memory, proceeded towards his chapel in order to conduct the evening service. On his way thither he was accosted by a friend, who enquired if he had heard of the severe loss the church had sustained in the death of that able minister. He replied 'no,' but being much affected at this intelligence, he enquired of him the day and the time of the day when his departure took place. To this his friend replied, 'this afternoon at twenty-five minutes past three o'clock.'

PROCLAMATION OF WILLIAM PENN, DATED SECOND MONTH 6, 1684.

"WILLIAM PENN, PROPRIETOR & GOVERNOR OF THE PENNA & TERRITORIES.

To my trusty & loving Frds.—Wm. Welch, John Simcock, & James Harrison.—Greeting.

Being credibly informed that a party of men, armed some with guns and others with axes, under the command, of Col. George Talbot have in a Riotous manner, invaded the Right of some of the inhabitants of New Castle County, under pretense from a Commission of Charles Calvert Proprietary of Maryland these are to empower you, or any two of you to raise ye Country, to grant commission to such as you shall so cause to raise ye Country, and likewise to charge & command both you & them by the Kings Authority derived to me By ye Assignment of James Duke of York & Albany, to take all due care & yet with all possible speed to keep & maintain & preserve peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, and to suppress all riotous & rebellious practices, & then to apprehend & imprison whom you shall so find therein yt they may be proceeded against according to law as also to secure all such persons, as refuse or neglect to assist you in this service & whom you have cause to believe may be unfaithful to ye governmt & for so doing, this shall be y^r sufficient warrant, given at Penns berry this 6th of ye 2nd mo. 84 being ye 30th year of ye Kings reign."

WM. PENN.

Extract from Fourteenth Proposition of Barclay's Apology concerning the Power of Civil Magistrates in Matters Purely Religious and Pertaining to the Conscience.

... All killing, banishing, fining, imprisoning, and other such things, which men are afflicted with, for the alone exercise of their conscience, or difference in worship or opinion, proceedeth from the spirit of Cain, the murderer, and is contrary to the truth; provided always, that no man, under the pretence of conscience, prejudice his neighbour in his life or estate; or do any thing destructive to, or inconsistent with human society; in which case the law is for the transgressor, and justice to be administered upon all, without respect of persons.

Extract from Epistle of Romans, Chapter 13, Verses 1 to 5, inclusive.

Let every soul be in subjection to the higher powers: for there is no power but of God; and the powers that be are ordained of God. Therefore he that resisteth the power, withstandeth the ordinance of God; and they that withstand shall receive to themselves judgment. For rulers are not a terror to the good work, but to the evil. And wouldest thou have no fear of the power? do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise from the same: for he is a minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain; for he is a minister of God, an avenger for wrath to him that doeth evil. Wherefore ye must needs be in subjection, not only because of the wrath, but also for conscience sake.

The foregoing proclamation of William Penn is taken from an early copy which was recently offered at public sale in Philadelphia. This writer has followed it with an extract from Barclay's Apology, and the two taken together give a fair illustration of the views of early Friends on the subject of non-resistance. An extract from the thirteenth chapter of Romans is also quoted to show the Scripture view as given by St. Paul.

The views of early Friends were always pronounced against all war. Concerning this there can be no controversy. So far as this writer is aware it has never been proved that they adopted the idea of absolute non-resistance, though it is undoubtedly true that some individuals in the Society have held such.

The declaration of Robert Barclay, quoted above from the Apology, makes it clear that that eminent man drew a disinction between war and protection for life, liberty and property, and if we are not to have that protection it must be manifest that anarchy will result. In our own country, partial anarchy already prevails as is shown by the trade union strikes and the dynamiting conspiracies organized by the same class. Civilization itself is threatened.

G. V.

For "THE FRIEND."

FROM SAN FRANCISCO TO SALT LAKE.

The beautiful Santa Clara Valley looked very fresh and fragrant that spring morning that I left it bound for the East. The early fog just concealed the distant mountains. For months we had had roses and blossoms around San José and pink and white bloom on the fruit trees for miles out in the valley. Now, with quick railroad travel, the scene was suddenly to shift and another sort of natural beauty was to be my experience.

At Oakland I changed over to the Pacific Western Railroad. I had often threatened to vary the monotony of the regulation Southern Pacific route by taking a new line. Both are magnificent as you cross the Sierras. It is hard to tell which is the better. Travel on the Western Pacific is easier because it is a new highway, not so well known, and consequently the trains are not crowded. My destination was Colorado Springs.

After reaching the foothills of the Sierras the train goes by a tumbled-appearing sort of country where the ground looks as if some giant had ploughed it up. For miles rocks and clay are turned over into a barren field. These are the old placer gold mines. The great hills have gone down before the hydraulic machinery in the ruthless search for gold.

Soon we ascend the Feather River cañon. It is a narrow gorge with endless twists and surprises and huge rocks and mountains on either side. Down it for a hundred miles or more rushes and tosses the Feather River. Why should a river have such a name? We cannot tell—anyway this stream is charming. There is enough of it to count for something in the memory. The plunges and whirl and foam enchant the eye, as the music caused by its restlessness comes into the car window above the roar of the train. Slowly we climb into the higher altitudes, where the air has new vigor and the great pine trees look benignly down on the lesser heights, until somber night closes the scene.

The following morning we awake to see the desert land. The noises caused by nearby reverberating rocks have ceased. We trundle along in quiet fashion over a level plain. Occasionally distant mountains glistening with snowy tops relieve the scene. But the dull scenery becomes very strange as we approach Salt Lake. The ground changes to white. Salt makes the surface of the earth look as if a snow storm had preceded us. At one place the conductor calls attention to the ruins of a house made out of great blocks of salt. You never before knew that salt was so plenty anywhere in the world. Then we cross the southern end of the Lake. The waves softly lap the sides of the road-bed. To the left the great pleasure grounds of the city folk are seen, where, in the interior of a continent, they can bathe and play as by the sea. Soon we glide into the fine union station of Salt Lake City.

The first thing that here impressed me was the sober dress of the women compared with the gayer feminine apparel on the streets of San Francisco. Men note such things more than the women suspect. Their verdict is not always in favor of the most ultra style. "You cannot gild gold." Charming womanhood shows best in simple array.

Salt Lake City is rapidly becoming a Gentile metropolis. Skyscrapers tower above the broad streets. The hum of machinery and the rap of innumerable hammers fill the air. But the Mormons were on the ground first, and the rapidly growing city is the centre of a political influence that extends into the adjacent states.

This new interior city is full of optimism. Like all other of its kind in America it throbs with almost extravagant hopes as to the future. For that matter almost every new cross-roads in the west, even amidst the most unpromising conditions, has big, big hopes. On my way across northern Nevada that morning, out in the driest part of the desert, many miles from any human habitation, where no sapling or twig or spear of grass was seen, where a single wagon road crossed the railroad and a single fence-post was all to indicate that men hoped to build anything, was an immense sign. As the traveller, snugly curled up in his Pullman seat, glanced out of the car window his amazed eyes here read in letters fully five feet long this seductive sign:

METROPOLIS

THE TOWN OF OPPORTUNITIES.

I call that optimism.

WM. C. ALLEN.

FRATERNITIES ARE DETRIMENTAL TO THE BEST PURPOSES OF COLLEGE TRAINING.*

OAKLEY H. VAN ALLEN.

At the outset of this discussion it will probably be best to give some definite idea of what the organization, known as a College Fraternity, originally was. It seems that the primary design of the fraternity was to afford a common and agreeable meeting ground for men to improve themselves by discussion and debate and mental intercourse. They never were organized to be simply good social clubs. To-day the literary exercises are often perfunctory performances, and the tolerant contempt for scholarship is often stronger within the fraternity than without. As a result, the pleasant, indolent years of congenial association leave a man without any fortifying experience of struggle or hardship. Youth is the best time for the human being to encounter hardship—when it forms his ambition and sets his purpose—but the whole tendency is to make college life socially pleasant and easy, and to use the fraternity for these ends.

In order that I might get information direct from the colleges themselves upon this subject, I wrote to four leading universities. I addressed the same questionnaire, comprised of three questions, to each. First.—What restrictions govern the membership to fraternities at your college? Second.—What is the influence of the fraternities socially? Third.—What is their influence in athletics? From the University of Pennsylvania I received the following reply:—

"DEAR SIR:

"There are no faculty restrictions governing membership here. A committee of the University faculty has jurisdiction over fraternities, with power to act in cases of misconduct or financial difficulties.

"I believe that the fraternities have a beneficial effect upon the social life of the University. The companionship of men of congenial tastes has a certain value, and the supervision of the older men over the inexperienced men is a distinct advantage. The fraternities frequently co-operate with one another in movements affecting the good of the social life of the student.

The fraternities have a certain influence on athletics, in encouraging their men to participate in the same.

Very truly yours,

J. C. WICKERSHAM CRAWFORD."

From Harvard, I received no reply.

From Cornell is this statement:

"MY DEAR SIR:

In reply to your letter, I beg to advise that so far as I am informed, there are no restrictions governing membership to fraternities as a class. The question of membership is governed, so far as I am informed, by questions which may be properly characterized as of a personal nature.

*A graduating exercise at Friends' Select School Commencement, Sixth Month 13, 1913.

"The fraternities add a great deal to the social life at Cornell. They are self-governed, and, on the whole, well governed. It is the opinion, I believe, of a majority of our officers that fraternities are not, comparatively speaking, injurious. The writer is inclined to believe that they are a mixture of good and bad, depending largely upon the personnel of the men who make up the several organizations.

"I cannot say that fraternities have had any effect upon athletics as such."

From Princeton I received the following brief note:

DEAR SIR:

I regret very much that I am unable, for certain reasons, to give you the information requested in your letter."

Now let us first take up the letter from Pennsylvania. In answer to the first question, are there any restrictions governing membership to fraternities? we learn that the University has given the fraternities great liberty. This fact serves the purpose of showing that the fraternities at Pennsylvania, therefore, have every opportunity to flourish, and that they afford a good example of the fraternity system. Next we learn that fraternities have a beneficial effect upon the social life, because the companionship of men of congenial tastes has a certain value, and the supervision of the older men over the inexperienced men is a distinct advantage. As for this statement, I fail to see why the man in the fraternity who has his friends selected for him, can form more congenial friendships than the man outside who chooses for himself. Next it seems to me that since the student entering college now-a-days is generally over eighteen, it must be conceded that he has already undergone the fundamental shaping of character and therefore it makes little difference whether he has supervision from fraternities or not, even if there were no Y. M. C. A.'s or other religious societies better able to look after his moral welfare. A Pennsylvania fraternity man told me he was bound, in case of a class election, either to vote for his fraternity brother or not to vote at all. I agree with J. C. Crawford in saying that fraternities urge their men to participate in athletics. And I have evidence from a Pennsylvania fraternity man himself, that the athletically inclined fraternity men hold a surprising control over athletics. He says that of all the men elected captain or manager of the various Pennsylvania teams during the last decade, at least eighty-five per cent. were fraternity men. These figures do not mean that fraternity men represent Pennsylvania's best athletes, but simply go to show that the fraternities in their desire for personal prestige have formed a sort of political machine to withhold these athletic honors from non-fraternity men, and to elect a fraternity man to such honor instead. As a result, the welfare of the athletic teams frequently suffers through the election of an inferior candidate.

In the letter from Cornell we find that the fraternities there are allowed every opportunity to flourish, and, like Pennsylvania, afford an excellent example of the society system. The writer says that the fraternities add a great deal to the social life at Cornell, but admits that they are a mixture of good and bad, depending on the personnel of the members. In other words, at Cornell, the personnel of the members is sometimes bad, indicating that the supervision of the older men over the younger has not been a distinct success in some cases. In reply to his statement on social life, let me quote an article in the Educational Review by Duane Mowry. He says: "The secret society in the school life of the individual is the expression of the aristocratic idea. It is therefore opposed to the democratic ideal, and is foreign to the atmosphere of the state-supported institution. And Cornell is a state institution."

"How then, in the presence of the fraternities be instituted upon the broad grounds of the freest democracy. For it is quite apparent that they are the representatives of a class, taking but a selected few and not always the best, for their member hip, leaving the rest mass of patron of such state-supported institution, a undesirable for their purposes, branded without reason and without cause, handicapped with social ostracism. We can understand how the private and select school can and does tolerate, even encourage, social distinctions. The soil is well calculated for its birth and growth. But where the best citizenship is to be reared, such organizations are inimical to the life and hope of the best democratic ideals and institutions. This may seem a bit radical, but the ground has been taken with care and it finds support among many of the most profound educators of the country. Agreement is well-nigh universal."

Now let us turn to the case of Princeton. The correspondent from this University says that for certain reasons he is unable to give me the information requested. This is, of course, unfortunate, but I have obtained some information from other sources. It should be said just here that in this case, in addition to the regular questions, I asked whether or not Woodrow Wilson was in any way displeased with the Princeton clubs, and if so whether he attempted any reforms. Hugh Rendall, a former student, assured me that President Wilson had several reforms in mind, but that he got into politics just then and never carried out his intentions. However, since then his successor has established a common dining hall for the Freshman and Sophomore classes where rich and poor mingle about the same bill of fare. All Freshmen and Sophomores occupy the same dormitories. Formerly men just entering Princeton could join exclusive eating clubs. The clubs are now open to men of the Junior and Senior classes only, which fact greatly lessens their influence upon college life. Altogether it must be admitted that Princeton furnishes only a mild example of fraternity life. The chief reason is because secret societies were abolished three years ago and the clubs of to-day are, as above stated, restricted greatly.

One more college remains to be spoken of. I am indebted to the well-known author, Owen Johnson, for facts concerning fraternities at Harvard. Harvard's intellectual pre-eminence is thoroughly acknowledged. Also its problem is particularly the problem of educating the social class, which happily or unhappily largely patronizes it. Lastly, Harvard shows in the greatest degree the unpleasant results of social segregation. However, lest we place this great university in a false light, let it suffice to add that Harvard shows, in her late history, a movement toward courageous and broad-minded reform. It is not my object to speak of these reforms but to show the facts which make reform desirable.

Harvard receives yearly a certain portion from the small fashionable schools, which are increasingly becoming the property of social sets. The sons of these people are sent to school, not to be molded by association with representatives of all stations in life, but to flock with boys of their own social standing. They enter Harvard possessing a deeply-rooted sense of selection and they hold tenaciously to this protective social theory. Harvard has, above all, to handle the complex problems of Boston society, which has come to look upon it as a social tributary. Boston, unlike other large cities, exclusively patronizes one university. The ruling social element, inheritors of Puritan and scholarly traditions, presents an ironclad exterior to invasion from the less favored outer world. In the words of Owen Johnson, "There are many exceptions, but the majority of Boston youths who enter Harvard have been shielded from rude outer contact, herded together and follow blindly their well-fenced course through Harvard and back into the fold from which they came. Their snobbishness is not personal, or even conscious, but simply an inheritance. Allied to this ironclad hierarchy is a somewhat similar set from New York. The two elements amalgamate at fashionable boarding schools, and between them the control of the most exclusive Harvard clubs is amazingly complete."

They do not enter college possessed with a natural boyish eagerness to seek friendships, but rather regard those who approach them with suspicion. At Yale and Princeton it has ever been the custom for the Freshman to go out and meet his class-mates; no introduction is considered necessary. At Harvard, on the contrary, no such custom exists. A man often completes his college career without speaking to members of his own division. So unchangeable has been this custom that many Western men, coming to Harvard unknown and eager for comradeship, becoming rudely awakened to the true conditions and, overwhelmed with utter loneliness, have preferred to leave. A Western graduate, talking with a Harvard undergraduate some time ago, expressed his astonishment at this excess of formality. "But," said the Harvard man with sincerity, "you don't mean to say you would speak to anyone in your division whether you knew anything about him or not?" "Yes, I'm afraid I would," said the Westerner, with an appearance of reflection. "Why not?" "But suppose he took advantage of it?" was the characteristic answer.

You may ask, what connection has all this with fraternities? The point is just this: Here are young men brought up all their lives in guarded exclusiveness who should get out and mingle with outsiders, who should make a friendship with a fellow student for his good qualities and not because his family is known in three states and his father has six automobiles. Instead, these men form the fraternity class, herding together in their mansions and taking the pleasures and experiences of college life, shut off from their classmates in much the same manner which characterized their existence before going to Harvard. They need to learn that in America, if anywhere, a man is himself and not his father.

Within the last generation, private capital has erected a half dozen luxurious club-houses outside the campus which those of average means, who room in the "Yard," have dubbed the "Gold Coast." Probably eighty per cent. of those who enter final clubs are chosen from this privileged class. In times past the antagonism between the "Yard" and the "Gold Coast" upon some such occasion as the elections for Class Day honors has resulted in a complete break in the class.

Recognizing the just cause for such discord, the next class led on by their broad-minded President, Lathrop Withington, began a "Back-to-the-Yard" movement in order that Senior year should be spent on the Campus in closer and more sympathetic touch with classmates from whom custom had separated them during former years. This voluntary movement is still vigorous, due to the fact that the leaders have fresh before them the opportunity for class harmony. However, the University has not made this movement obligatory and it is a question how long this democratic impulse will continue.

Before closing, permit me to bring one last and vastly important argument to bear upon the subject. It is a known fact that Europeans have been living under a class system for centuries. The wooden partition dividing the English railway coach into first, second and third-class compartments is more lasting than the stone wall of London Tower. In America, our forefathers in disgust at this state of affairs emphasized, by placing it in the Declaration of Independence, the fact that all men are created equal. But to-day it is also a fact that in America class feeling is rapidly rising. The good government and welfare of the nation depend greatly upon our educational institutions. What are the colleges doing to help the nation in eradicating this class feeling? Will they allow fraternities to continue to increase this class feeling or will they strive, by all possible means, to guard and maintain that priceless democracy, which stands for the sympathetic association of all classes, so vital not only to patriotic college training, but to a solid and inspired national spirit?

How can you live sweetly amid the vexatious things, the irritating things, the multitude of little worries and frets, which lie all along your way, and which you cannot evade? You cannot at present change your surroundings. Whatever kind of life you are to live must be lived amid precisely the experiences in which you are now moving. Here you must win your victories or suffer your defeats. No restlessness or discontent can change your lot. Others may have other circumstances surrounding them, but here are yours. You had better make up your mind to accept what you cannot alter. You can live a beautiful life in the midst of your present circumstances.—J. R. MILLER.

EXTRACTS FROM THE JOURNAL OF SAMUEL MORRIS.

(Continued from page 5.)

IN NEW ZEALAND.

Eighth Month 11, 1853.—Alfred Goldsberry would have us see his school, where we spent a short time. Upon the children rising to greet us, the master told them of the far-away land from which we had come, adding that he knew they would be glad to hear anything we might feel inclined to tell them concerning the United States. I thereupon gave them some general outlines of our country; something too of Pennsylvania; its settlement by William Penn and his friends; his treatment of the Indians and his love of peace, the founding of Philadelphia, the meaning of its name, a general description of the city, etc.; to all of which they listened most attentively, and probably much of what they heard was new to the little colonials, for, as a rule, English geographies or histories have little to say of the U. S. A.

11th.—The morning proved bright but frosty, and about eleven o'clock, Stephen Pudney, also Fred Grey with Bithya and her boys were again at Robert Pudney's, where it was proposed we should have a religious meeting, small though it might be. This brought us into near sympathy with the little company here, who seem heartily attached to the principles of Friends, but feel scarcely strong enough to hold a meeting alone. They, therefore, are in the way of attending with the small Wesleyan congregation nearby, though greatly preferring our own simple method of worship. We encouraged them to be faithful to their best convictions, in this as in other matters, and to remember the "Master's" promise to the smallest number who gather in his name. We would have them to accept the responsibilities and duties which come to them in connection with the community in which their lot is cast, and where through superior education and other advantages they may be very helpful for good.

13th.—I walked home with three of Jos. Beal's boys. Before retiring for the night, it seemed best for me to leave with our dear friends here a word of encouragement to hold on their Christian way, steadily and faithfully, while especially for the young men I craved that nothing might be permitted to rob them of their innocence and integrity or to draw them into forbidden paths; but that, giving the strength of their youth, and the best of their powers to the blessed Redeemer and his cause, they might become willing instruments in the spreading of his kingdom of righteousness and truth. If I mistake not, at least two of these promising youths are under the Lord's preparing hand, and I shall watch with no little interest their future course. At a late hour we sought our nightly rest.

15th, Napier.—The open ocean breaking against the wall is faced on either hand by high cliffs and a gracefully sweeping shore. The harbor proper is on the other side of the town, affording good shelter for shipping. The moon was approaching its second quarter, and the evening star added its charms to the scene.

16th.—Toward evening we took another stroll along the cliffs, that can scarcely be less than three hundred feet above the sea. They are of a semi-calcareous formation, with layers of fossiliferous shells interspersed. The face of the cliffs is almost perpendicular, and would seem to be the result of some mighty convulsion, whereby the mass of which they once formed a part had been rent asunder and then submerged in the ocean at their feet. They form a very striking feature in the landscape. We also espied a lighthouse on one of the bluffs, which had hitherto missed our observation.

17th.—Starlings and the irrepresible English sparrow, so far as I could classify them, seemed reconnoitering with a view to securing nests for the coming season. It is too early probably for anything else, and the little creatures in pairs were evidently neither building nor feeding their young, but with much twittering and ado were only peeping into one cranny after another, apparently at a loss in choosing among so many vacant premises.

10th.—Sauntered along the sea wall and out to the extreme end of the breakwater. Here I found a diver in submarine armor was at work. Two men were pumping air through a rubber tube for his use, and a third with a signal rope in his hand was directing the machinery to which chains and hooks were attached, the diver indicating how he would have them managed. Nothing was to be seen of the man, except by the surging of the water, as from time to time the exhaust air rose to the surface. He had already been six hours below, and to gratify the desire I had long felt to see the armor in use, I lingered till he gave a signal for the ascent. Up a ladder, fastened to the timbers for his use, he now clambered. A strong metal cap covered completely the head and neck. With this the air tube was connected. In front was inserted a glass, three by six inches, of elliptical shape, and on either side two others circular in form, of perhaps three inches in diameter and guarded by cross-wires. About the neck hung a heavy collar of lead. The chest seemed to be encased in a metallic jacket, and upon the feet were apparently shoes of copper. Some woollen under-clothing covered the body, and over all was a tarpaulin suit, made tight at the wrists and feet by rubber bands. A comrade was awaiting his return to the upper air, and at once removed the glass front, then the collar, then the helmet, and the face of a man probably thirty-five with a somewhat weary look was before us. A lighted pipe was put into his mouth, and after a few whiffs, he gave his directions in a strong voice to the men at the machinery as to what was needed, and some repairs to the chain which seemed to have broken. The disrobing then went on and he was soon again at large enjoying the blessed sunshine and fresh air. In reply to a question as to his general health, one of his mates said he was well and hearty, though I don't know how long he had followed his present occupation. One should think few would choose such a calling, and it is to be presumed the skill that is required commands high wages.

25th, Gasburn.—We made our way to the "Albion," a fairly kept hotel. Thus far there had been little to remind us of the Sabbath, but that the streets of the little town, probably always quiet, were quieter than usual. In the p. m. we sought out the lodgings of Hannah P. Kenway, who has been long a serious invalid and had left her home in the bush, hoping to be benefited by the change and the medical treatment she is here receiving. She seemed in a chastened, resigned frame, numbering her special favors and mercies with humble thank-offings. Our visit she was ready to add to the list, while we felt, as we went, in the hands of the "Best Physician."

At the evening called on Chas. C. Lucas, a man in the prime of life, of more than ordinary intelligence, who has recently returned to be a jurist of the peace. We were glad to find him strongly in favor of the Temperance Movement, with correct views on many points, and though associating little with Friends, retaining as his own convictions some of their best principles. We encouraged him to hold fast to these, and to use the influence which his position gives him for promoting a high standard of integrity and morals in the community.

29th.—The approach to Auckland is very pleasing. The beautiful, spacious bay is broken by several deep inlets and peninsulas. The town stretches along the water front, consisting of a central built-up section and several suburbs, while back of it, on the eastern side, a line of hills, conspicuous among which are Mt. Eden and Mt. Corbair, rises to a height of 1,300 feet above the sea level. The population, in round numbers, is about 40,000. Auckland was among the earliest of the ports of New Zealand, as an important naval base, and it was the first British town of war, said to be the first port of call in the world. The principal streets are of fair width, and the principal thoroughfares are paved with asphalt. The sidewalks are made of asphalt or a preparation of coal tar asphalt. The principal thoroughfares are of fair width, and the sidewalks are made of asphalt or a preparation of coal tar asphalt. The principal streets are of fair width, and the sidewalks are made of asphalt or a preparation of coal tar asphalt.

The approach to Auckland is very pleasing. The beautiful, spacious bay is broken by several deep inlets and peninsulas. The town stretches along the water front, consisting of a central built-up section and several suburbs, while back of it, on the eastern side, a line of hills, conspicuous among which are Mt. Eden and Mt. Corbair, rises to a height of 1,300 feet above the sea level. The population, in round numbers, is about 40,000. Auckland was among the earliest of the ports of New Zealand, as an important naval base, and it was the first British town of war, said to be the first port of call in the world. The principal streets are of fair width, and the principal thoroughfares are paved with asphalt. The sidewalks are made of asphalt or a preparation of coal tar asphalt. The principal streets are of fair width, and the sidewalks are made of asphalt or a preparation of coal tar asphalt.

seem badly jaded or poorly fed, while the driver's whip is too mercilessly applied.

Upon our landing at the quay, George Creeth, who is a stepson of Wm. J. Beale, was waiting for us. Though the latter is from home and they were not expecting us so early, G. C. seemed to have no hesitation in inviting us to make our quarters at their house in Devonport on the further side of one of the bays. Taking a ferry-boat, we soon found ourselves in a quiet, comfortable homestead, overlooking the water. About a year ago, the wife and mother had been removed by death, leaving three very attractive boys, whose ages vary from six to thirteen. The loss of a lovely mother is being in measure supplied by an aunt, Sarah Creeth, a sister of Wm. J. Beale, she and Mary Creeth of Bendigo, having married brothers. We were received with a hearty welcome and quickly made to feel ourselves at home.

A precious handful of letters from Olney and elsewhere, with papers, etc., from my good nephew, Marriot, setting forth the marvels of the Chicago Fair, gave us delightful occupation for the rest of the day.

Eighth Month 28th.—Having felt it right to attend a clerical meeting, we went to the Baptist "Tabernacle," where we met our friend, Wm. Brackenrigg, who, though not an ordained minister, takes part in the conferences. Here we found about twenty of the City Clergymen, of various denominations, and upon being introduced, I said I felt touched by the brotherly freedom manifested toward such utter strangers as we. Many things tended to confusion in the professing Church to the estrangement of those who ought to be putting shoulder to shoulder in the work of the Lord, and thereby the cause of Christ has been hindered. But my desire was strong that the Church in all its branches may realize that it is the work of the enemy of all good to cause division and strife. We who reverently believe ourselves called to be ambassadors for Christ have heavy responsibilities resting upon us as leaders of the people, and because of the great opportunities for moulding public sentiment upon many important points. We need, therefore, much Heavenly Wisdom in order to receive that clear discernment which will enable us to distinguish between that which promotes and that which hinders the cause of Christ. We need also the courage to speak bravely for the Truth without the fear of man or the desire for his favor, for to these we are all too prone to yield. My desire was that the inconsistency so often shown by professing Christians in advocating warlike measures might no longer exist, so that the church as a united body may be enabled to rid herself of this and all other evils that hinder her work or give cause to the skeptic and scoffer to belittle or malign our holy religion. I rejoiced they had been brought together on broad Christian grounds, that thus they might uphold every good work for the community in which their lot had been cast, that so the Divine blessing might rest upon their labors.

The chairman expressed their satisfaction in having thus met with their brethren from America—he felt their words had been timely. The Baptist pastor followed us, saying cordially, he hoped "we would take part in the service of his congregation next Sabbath." Another meeting prevented this, but we recognized the fraternal feeling which prompted it.

(To be continued.)

O Love Eternal! stooping from the height
Into the depth below,
Shall not our hearts be kindled with delight
That Thou hast loved us so?
Bathing us in Thy through after earthly night
To taste our human woe?
Such love is Thine that would we say or give
Can thank Thee or repay,
Yet we may pray the more that we may live
Beside Thee day by day,
And with a deepening penitence may strive
To choose the perfect way.

[We gladly reprint from the Fourth Month number of Friends' Quarterly Examiner the following poem written by the late Thomas Hodgkin upwards of forty years ago. Commenting upon it a writer well qualified to judge, says: "That by many persons he will be better remembered by it than by 'Italy and her Invaders,' his monumental historical work."—Ed.]

EMORI NOLO: MORTUUM ME ESSE NIHIL ÆSTUMO.*

[Reprinted from the "Friends' Quarterly Examiner," Tenth Month, 1869.]

I.

One wrote of old, "The struggle of this dying
Is all I dread:
I shall not heed when men above me, sighing,
Say, 'He is dead.'"

Not in such words, oh Father of our Spirits,
Speak we again:
A fear, a hope each child of us inherits,
Making them vain.

II.

Awful the hour, and shall be through the ages,
That cloeth I Life:
With the worn Soul the weary Body wages
Self-torturing strife.

Till far, so far from loving eyes around them,
One journeyeth lone,
And that close wedlock that for years hath bound them
Ends with a groan.

The pale, still Form, so late so dear a treasure,
Its fate we know;
The Dust, the Worm, its depth of ruin measure
Where it lies low.

But the vast doubt wherewith our souls are shaken
Outlasts the tomb!
"Where, in what regions, shall the Wanderer waken, Gazing on whom?"

III.

Father! I live or die, in this confiding,
That Thou art King;
That each still Star above me owns Thy guiding,
Each wild Bird's wing.

That Nature feels Thee, great unseen Accorded
Of all her wheels,
That tokens manifest of Thy mightier order
Her strife reveals.

And that without Thee not a wave is heaving
Nor flake descends,
That all the giant Powers of her conceiving
Are Thy Son's friends.

IV.

Yet, I beseech Thee, send not these to light me
Through the dark vale;
They are so strong, so passionately mighty,
And I so frail.

No! let me gaze not on some sea far reaching
Nor star-sprout sky,
But on a Face in which my own, beseeching,
May read reply.

For more than Poet's song or Painter's seeing
Of fiery Hell,
Thrills me this dread of waking into Being
Where no souls dwell.

V.

Such was my cry: hath not the mighty Maker
Who gave me Christ,
Hath He not granted me a sweet Awaker
For the last tryst?

Given a Son who left the peace unbroken
That reigns above,
That He might whisper God's great name unspoken,
The name of Love!

*"Dying I abhor: I care nothing about being dead." Translated and adapted by Cicero, in his Tusculan Disputations, i. 8, from Epicharmus, the Sicilian comic poet. The circumstances of Cicero's death are well known. Epicharmus died at the age of ninety-five. Sir T. Browne (Religio Medici) erroneously attributes the sentiment to Caesar.

VI.
Have I not known Him? Yes, and still am knowing,
And more shall know;
Have not His sweet eyes guided all my going,
Wept with my woe?
Gleamed a bright dawn-hope when the clouds of sadness
Made my soul dim,
And looked their warning when an alien gladness
Lured me from Him?

VII.

Lord, when I tread this valley of our dying,
Sharp cliffs between,
Where over all, our ghastly Shadow lying Fills the ravine,

E'en then, Thy kingly sceptre being o'er me,
I will not fear:
Thy crook, my Shepherd, dimly seen before me,
My way shall clear.

And when the grave must yield her prey down-stricken,
When sleep is o'er,
When the strange stir of life begin to quicken
This form once more,

Oh, Son of Man, if Thee and not another
I here have known,
If I may see Thee, then, our first-born Brother,
Upon Thy throne,

How stern so'er, how terrible in brightness
That dawn shall break,
I shall be satisfied with Thy dear likeness
When I awake.

—THOMAS HODGKIN.

PRISON AS A ROAD TO SUCCESS.

Under the above heading The Circle and Success Magazine prints an article from the pen of the late William I. Stead, hitherto unpublished. In the body of the article and used to illustrate his argument, we find the following reference to the history of Friends, which will be read with interest:

"But one of the most remarkable instances of the way in which prison serves as the stepping-stone to success is to be found in the history of the Society of Friends. This religious body may be said to have been cradled in prison. We know it to-day as one of the most proper and vigorous of all religious societies. Its members are clad in broadcloth and fine linen, and their good name is held in high honor by the Church and the world. But the Friends lost the secret of their power when they ceased to go to gaol. As gaol-birds they swept all before them. The increase of the number of Friends in the second half of the Seventeenth Century was as great as, even if not actually greater than, the increase of the Methodists in the second half of the Eighteenth Century. But when the Friends ceased to go to gaol, they ceased to increase and multiply. They are now—the more's the pity—a small and stationary, if not actually a declining sect.

"The story of the early Friends, of their heroic endurance of all manner of persecution, of their indomitable defiance of the power of the world, the flesh and the devil, of their adamantine devotion to principle, is one of the most thrilling in the annals of mankind. George Fox, who was as often in prison as out of it, looms larger across the centuries than any man of the Seventeenth Century, save Cromwell and Milton alone. What a splendid courage abode in this man, whose faith glowed all the more brightly when his enemies attempted to overwhelm him with obloquy, and crush him with repeated punishment and torture. In Domsdale he lay for months, and out of Domsdale he came undismayed to preach and to testify more confidently than ever.

"In the first two years of Charles the Second's reign, no fewer than 3,068 Quakers were clapped into gaol—an average of four a day, week in, week out. When James the Second came to the throne, in a quarter of a century there were 1,500 Quakers still in gaol, who were liberated by the influence of William Penn. But with their liberation ended the progression of the Society. It ceased to grow. It became stationary, and at one time threatened to become extinct. That catastrophe has fortunately been averted, for the world could ill spare the Society whose members have for nearly two centuries been foremost in every good work, and who to this day take an active and intelligent interest in the much-needed work of prison reform."

—The American Friend.

Reprinted from The British Friend.

DANIEL WHEELER ON BIRTHRIGHT MEMBERSHIP.

In a letter, dated Eleventh Month 20, 1820, Daniel Wheeler says: I enclose the Yearly Meeting's Epistle, and trust the perusal of it will afford thee satisfaction, as it appears that assembly was owned by the great Head of his church, to the consolation and comfort of the upright and faithful standard-bearers. But O! my dear friend, I am fearful lest thou shouldst suppose that the number of those to whom is committed the weight of the law and of the testimony is larger amongst us than is really the case. It is a sorrowful fact, but not the less true, that there are but "two or three berries in the top of the uppermost bough, four or five in the utmost fruitful branches thereof," in the present day of our once flourishing Society: it is indeed a truly mournful consideration, when we look back at what it was in the day when it first came forth. If we look at the ancient writings of Friends, we shall find that originally the Society consisted wholly of such as had joined, and were actually in possession of what they professed to be led and guided by. When these were gathered to their everlasting rest, their children became the burden-bearers, many of whom stood firm to the principles of their fathers, and the cause of Truth was precious in their eyes. As this generation passed away, others sprung up, who entered into the privileges, to procure which their worthy predecessors had labored and suffered; thus the Society gradually became composed mainly of members by birthright. Then persecution ceased in great measure, and worldly prosperity, accompanied with ease and indulgence, followed, combining to induce a relaxation in their vigilance against the attacks of the great enemy of man's happiness, who did not fail to avail himself of the opportunity, more widely and cunningly, to spread his snares and baits against a people, who, perhaps, of all others, had the most contributed to undermine his kingdom, as it is always his aim to attack those from whom he is the most in danger of being kept at a distance. There is no need for him to be jealous of such as are the "children of disobedience," in whose hearts he already rules and reigns; they may go on their way quietly as he has them safe enough. In this manner things have been getting worse and worse, until unhappily it may be said, that to a great and lamentable degree, the glory has departed from our Israel, and little is now left us but a name.

The picture which I have laid before thee is a very discouraging and appalling one; but I was afraid of thy being dazzled by that which only glitters, and is not the pure gold that has been tried in the fire. Notwithstanding things are in the condition "the foundation standeth sure," the Rock of Ages remains unimpaired, and cannot change; the precious soul is yet unbroken "The Lord knoweth them that are his;" and I therefore a little remnant yet preserved alive in that which lives for ever, who are enabled to call Jesus their Lord, and that by the Holy Ghost.

The present state of our religious Society, in my apprehension very strikingly resembles that of the Jewish nation in former days: they were a highly favored people; and our Society has been favored in a very eminent degree; both have proved themselves unworthy of the tender regard and mercy of a long-suffering Lord God. I need not mention to thee the final overthrow of the Jews, as thou art so well versed in the thing;—but it is my belief, that unless the Father of mercies is pleased to stretch out his everlasting arm, either to produce a thorough change in the hearts of our members, or to send a deluge of winnowings that will scatter and disperse the chaff, spirit that is with, and ultimately prevails, so that none can stand but such as are upon the true foundation. I say, I believe that unless there is an interposition superior to the power of man, the greater part of our members will be annihilated with the superfluous of the people, when a few more faithful exiles have departed. But as in the destruction of Jerusalem there was a place provided for the faithful Christian, so I humbly trust that in the bulk of our Society should be scattered, instead of a Bala cast up for the honest-hearted amongst us: for the Lord will never forsake those that put their trust and confidence in him.

An individual thoroughly convinced of our principles, and keeping close to that which has convinced him, will undoubtedly, as he continues faithful, be converted by it; and one such person is certainly of more value in the Society than many who are mere nominal members by birthright only. Such as these have bought the truth, at the price of becoming fools before men for Christ's sake; they have believed in the sufficiency of his power revealed in the heart, to cleanse and purify them from all sin; and although they may have had to pass through many conflicts, occasionally for several years, without appearing to gain any ground, they have been strengthened to persevere, and still to wait for him. The weight of former sins and transgressions has been long and painfully felt to rise in humiliating retrospect before the view of the mind, time after time, in terrible array, working for each true sorrow and repentance never to be repented of. But although at seasons he is ready to faint, when faith and hope have been reduced to a low ebb, yet the invisible arm of strength is still underneath, unseen and unfelt, supporting the tribulated traveller in the apparently unequal warfare, until every sin has passed beforehand to judgment; and at last the glorious day begins to dawn when He, who has been "as a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap," before whom nothing can stand (of a transgressing nature), "when he appeareth" is now discovered to be "the Son of righteousness" "arisen with healing in his wings," to the joy and comfort of the wounded soul. Then the love of God is truly known; and until this blessed day is felt in the great and heartfelt work of regeneration, none can experimentally and truly say, that "God is love;" they are mere words to all who have not witnessed the inward workings of his power in their heart; but now they feel him to be a God of love and mercy too, and are renewedly made willing in the love of him to wait for him. In this waiting, watchful frame of mind, we come to the place where prayer is wont to be made; which rises as sweet incense before the throne of grace, because not of our creating. Here is the Christian's watch-tower, his only place of safety, which was pointed out by our ever-blessed Lord to all—"What I say unto you, I say unto all, watch;" again, "watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." The soul that faithfully watches cannot be long without praying, although but in the language of a sigh. It is enjoined also by the great apostle, where he says—"Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance." Here every thought is detected in the light of Christ, and brought to judgment and into the obedience of Him who casteth down every imagination, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, to the pulling down the strongholds of sin and Satan.

It is such as these, my dear friend, who have advanced in the heavenly race, and had their hearts directed "into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ," which, I trust, thou hast in part, if not wholly witnessed; and I think thou wilt agree with me, that a single individual coming into our Society thus convinced and thus converted to the true faith in Jesus Christ, is of more value to it than a hundred members who have nothing to show but a birthright. And it is these that have followed their Lord and Master in the regeneration that are qualified, from heartfelt experience, to be employed in his service, if it be his will to call for them, and send them to speak a word in due season to others.

A PSALM OF TRUTH.—I will lift up my eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved; He that keepeth thee will not slumber. Behold, He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep. The Lord is thy keeper, the Lord is thy shade upon thy right hand. The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night. The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil; He shall preserve thy soul. The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth and even for evermore.

WHAT IS BLIGHTING WORSHIP?

It is only as we approach public worship as a mystical reality that we can hope to realize it. Treated either externally or analytically, it escapes and leaves only ashes in our hands. If we ask what can be done to make worship effective—to win men back to the church for the sake of the church, or for any other ulterior end—the spirit of worship will surely elude us. If we seek only how to worship God in spirit and in truth we shall find the Spirit Himself seeking us.

But if we seek to unlock the door of worship with the key of mysticism we must first meet the objection. Is not mysticism, in its very spirit and nature, out of touch with common worship? Is not the mystic the man who can worship alone and anywhere, who needs neither place nor fellowship for his devotion? True; but the fact that he can worship alone is just the reason why he can best worship with others. Moreover, the mystic, though he does not always recognize it, needs common worship to sustain his individual worship. It is the fusion and fellowship of individual religious aspirations and experiences that alone give reality and power to common worship. Each individual worshiper brings to the common worship much—and carries away more. The accumulated intensity of corporate mystical experience is one of its most striking facts. It is to the two or three gathered together that the Christ presence becomes most real. It is when those who have been already touched by the Spirit are with one accord in one place that the Spirit comes upon them all, like a rushing mighty wind.

To recover the mystical character to common worship, clearly the first step is one of purification. We have too far lost the soul in the form; the outer has imprisoned the inner. We are fettered by our forms and stilled by our conventionalities. Cleansing must come before enrichment. We must find out what is defeating our worship and expel it. A candid scrutiny of public worship, as it is carried on to-day, cannot fail to disclose certain factors wholly out of keeping with purity of worship.

In the conduct of worship itself there are manifest abuses that directly antagonize its spirit. Chief are what may, perhaps, be termed choralism, pulpitis and pewism. Choralism is put first because it is most obnoxious to the mystical spirit.

Worse than the Covenanters feared from the introduction of music into the church service has happened in a large number of the wealthier Protestant churches. Must we have another Puritan uprising to purify our worship?

Pulpitis is another serious obstacle to true worship. By pulpitis is meant the obtrusion of the minister's individuality—not his personality, for that is hidden in the process—his peculiarities and poverties of mind and spirit, his crochets and conceits, his notions and nostrums, so that the better man within, the Christ man, is obscured and makes no contact with his congregation. The freedom of the Protestant pulpit is at once its power and its bane. It gives to a weak man the same opportunity to display his weaknesses as to the strong man to exercise his strength. As a consequence, there is a sad amount of degradation of worship through a use of the pulpit which is neither reverent nor Christian. In the report of a questionnaire on the subject of "Non-Religious Persons," Professor Edward S. Ames quotes one respondent as saying, "Apart from its dogmatism, the pragmatic attitude of all evangelical Protestant churches I have known arouses instinctive prejudices in me."* Who has not felt something of that repulsion must be either exceedingly charitable or exceedingly fortunate. The preacher who surrenders to self-assertion, to captiousness, to scolding, or to sensationalism must bear the heavy responsibility of perverting his pulpit and of aiding in driving the spirit of worship from the church.

As for pewism as a deadener of public worship, who does not know what that is? The man with proprietary rights and bearing at the end of the pew on the center aisle with his retinue beside him, facing the whole service in the attitude of: "I have paid for this affair and it must be carried out to my approval"—is he a worshipper? Heaven save the mark. If he does not succeed in reducing the spiritual atmosphere to the freezing point it is only because the mystic in the free pew counteracts him. It is because much of the salt of the earth is still in our churches and because the mystic chord in the heart of all of us is sometimes stirred, even by the most bungling efforts, that the spirit of worship still abides in our churches. To eradicate the impervious, incorrigible, unworldly pewism from some churches is as difficult a task as the Church confronts. And yet even the stoniest pew-holder has something of the mystic in him and will yield to the tide of spiritual worship if it only becomes strong enough to humble him.—JOHN WRIGHT BUCKHAM, in The Christian Advocate.

*"Non-Religious Persons," The American Journal of Theology, vol. iii, p. 553.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

MY GIRL.

The dear little children who pass all day,
I watch from my window above—
Darlings, with blue eyes and black and gray;
But one little girl I love.

It isn't because of her lovely face;
Her hair is as straight as a string,
It isn't because of some wondrous grace;
She's a round, little-dumpy thing.

But she always mothers the littlest tots,
And is kind to the weak and small,
Sweet on her two busy feet she trots,
To comfort and help them all.

Once, when a parade was passing by,
And the band was blaring along,
At the sound of a baby's piteous cry,
She turned from the hurrying throng.

She lifted the baby, and kissed the smart—
(I saw from my window above.)
She lost the parade, but she won my heart,
This dear little girl I love.

—PAULINE FRANCES CAMP, in St. Nicholas.

CIGARETTE SMOKING AND ATHLETICS.—This is a kind of intemperance which is exceedingly harmful, and allures many lads who do not use strong drink. "No boy can be a fine athlete, football, baseball or basketball player, runner, jumper or gymnast, who weakens his heart and poisons his blood by cigarette smoking."

THEIR WORK LASTED.—Visitors to the mosque of Saint Sophia in Constantinople notice as soon as they enter a beautiful fragrance pervading the entire building. The solution lies in the fact that when it was built, one thousand years ago, the stones and bricks were laid in mortar mixed with a solution of musk. Those who laid these stones have been long forgotten, but the influence and fragrance of their work remain.
Exchange.

CIGARETTE SMOKING AND BUSINESS.—A business college which has taught more than fifty thousand young people refuses to receive users of tobacco, because they cannot be educated for business success. A great packing house in Chicago says, "We will not employ a cigarette user." In examinations for the United States Army, at one station there were 412 examined, and only fourteen were accepted. Of the 398 rejections, the greater number were on account of weak hearts, caused, in the majority of cases, by cigarette smoking. "One of the questions asked of boys who apply for positions in the John Wanamaker stores is, 'Do you use tobacco or cigarettes?'" It is expected that they will answer "No." One of the great telegraph companies will discharge from its employ messenger boys who persist in smoking cigarettes. On a western railroad, "Twenty-five laborers working on a bridge were discharged by the road-master because they were smoking cigarettes." What is the harm of cigarettes? Their effect is to weaken the heart; to lessen the nerve power; to prevent concentration of mind; to harm the eyesight, the digestion, the whole body. Thus weakened, a young man cannot render satisfactory service, and, therefore, he seeks for employment in vain.

A BOY WITH "NO CHANCE."—Little Platt R. Spencer seemed born possessed with a desire to write. Living in the woods of the Catskills, with very little encouragement for learning, from his earliest years his great wish seemed to be to make letters. Up to his eighth year, he had never owned a sheet of paper, but had marked on any smooth surface he had found. At this time he got hold of a big copper cent, almost the first money he had seen. The desire of his heart could now be fulfilled. He entrusted his coin to a lumberman, and asked him to buy a sheet of paper at Catskill, the lumber camp, twenty miles away. Late that night the messenger returned. The boy, wearied with waiting had gone to bed. At the sound of the arrival, he awoke, his first thought being of the promised paper. He arose, and with feverish eagerness tried to make characters on the smooth, white surface. His hand was too untrained, and the rude characters little resembled letters. Disappointed he returned to bed, only to take up the struggle on the following days, and conquer the difficulties. Paper he could not afford every day, especially as he soon moved with his father to the frontier, in Ohio. There, birch bark, sand banks, snow drifts and ice were his most frequent writing surfaces. His schooling was very meager—a few months when he was twelve years old,—so he had to dig out his own learning by flickering candle-light. Books were scarce and worth any hardship to procure. To continue the study of arithmetic, he had to have a book and heard he could get one twenty miles away. It was winter, and he had no shoes, but he walked barefoot on the frozen ground and secured his treasure. Darkness came on and found him miles from home. His only food had been frozen turnips, found in a field. At length he found a settler's cabin, where he was sheltered for the night. Under such conditions, he acquired a fair education and developed a system of penmanship that for years was almost universal in American schools. Spencerian business colleges were established in forty cities. The boy who learned writing with so much difficulty made the task easier for thousands of boys and girls, and lived a beautiful and useful life on the shores of Lake Erie, where he lies buried at Geneva, Ohio. P. S.

BEST OF ALL.

There's a brown little, plain little, thin little book,
Pressing you hardly would give it a look;
But the children all loved it, "Because," they all cried,
"It's the best of all stories—the lovely inside!"

There's a brown little, plain little, thin little girl;
Her nose is a little better, her hair wouldn't curl;
But the children all loved her, "Because," they all cried,
"She's the best of all beauties and so lovely inside!"

MINNIE LOUISA UPTON.

It is never, not a more serious thing than the responsibility of the life of all human affection. Only think of this, whoever you are, wherever you are. Neither he nor you can hinder or help at the cost of alienation. Oh, if you are grateful but not content, you have rise to the height of so pure a blessing, that it will not dawn to the very embrace with which they will receive you, but that in their gentleness secure their consecration.

It is never, not a more serious thing than the responsibility of the life of all human affection. Only think of this, whoever you are, wherever you are. Neither he nor you can hinder or help at the cost of alienation. Oh, if you are grateful but not content, you have rise to the height of so pure a blessing, that it will not dawn to the very embrace with which they will receive you, but that in their gentleness secure their consecration.

It is never, not a more serious thing than the responsibility of the life of all human affection. Only think of this, whoever you are, wherever you are. Neither he nor you can hinder or help at the cost of alienation. Oh, if you are grateful but not content, you have rise to the height of so pure a blessing, that it will not dawn to the very embrace with which they will receive you, but that in their gentleness secure their consecration.

scribers having called attention to these inaccuracies, the poem was reprinted two weeks ago with the corrections made. Now a post card from M. Kite brings the information that under the title "God Knoweth" the poem appears on page 307 of "Whittier's Songs of Three Centuries," credited to Mary G. Brainerd.—E. P. S.

FRIENDLY NEWS.

ONE of the notable events among Ohio Friends recently was the reunion at Mt. Pleasant, held in commemoration of the establishment of Ohio Yearly Meeting at that place in 1813.

The affair was arranged by the Boarding School Alumni for the Sixth-day following commencement, and was attended by quite a number from Salem, Damascus, Winona, Colrain, Harrisville, Pennsville and Barnesville; seventy or more from the latter place making the trip in autos.

From arrival in the morning until after dinner the time was spent in renewing old acquaintance, in friendly chat of past and present and in review of the old scenes and associations.

After a fine dinner served by those of the more immediate neighborhood, the people were called to assemble in the meeting-house with Jacob Maul as a presiding officer. After a brief period of devotional silence he gave some reminiscences, explained some points of friendly doctrine, and at the close of his remarks called upon Robert H. Smith, who read a previously prepared paper, giving history of meeting and meeting-house.

The meeting was set off from Baltimore Yearly Meeting for the Friends then settling west of the Alleghenies. In 1815, when the old house was completed, there were about fifteen hundred families to constitute the meeting.

Perhaps greatest interest centered in old Mt. Pleasant school. Watson Dewees, formerly a teacher there, very vividly portrayed some of the incidents and characters of its earlier days, paying especial tribute to Joseph Branson and Mary Raley Stratton, as also to members of the committee who used to be in charge of the school. J. Wetherill Hutton read an appropriate poem written by Jesse Edgerton.

Three to five-minute talks were given by Dorothy Ashton, Thos. Crawford, Lindley Steer, Dillywyn Stratton, Wm. F. Smith and L. P. Bailey, giving recollections or impressions of old Mt. Pleasant days, either in connection with the meetings or school, mostly the latter. James Steer, the oldest present, recited Whittier's poem, "To Oliver Wendell Holmes," in a very feeling manner.

With this interesting two-hour program over, another short period of social converse and it was time to turn homeward.

Some of the older ones in the audience, who had been students at the "School," but who are not now members of the Society, seemed to get much out of this occasion. A hasty inventory showed about sixty present who were formerly at Mt. Pleasant School.

This gathering gave many of the young people an opportunity to get some idea of what it is that causes the older Friends to still cherish the name and associations of Mt. Pleasant. To older and younger the day will be remembered as a bright way-mark, and a day well and profitably spent from both a friendly and social standpoint.

Meetings of this kind will do much for the future of Ohio Yearly Meeting by bringing older and younger closer together and strengthening the bond of sympathy between them and by interesting all in the future welfare of our Society.

FROM ACCOUNT OF LONDON YEARLY MEETING.—STATISTICS.—The Summary of the Tabular Statements was presented, showing a total of 345 Particular and 29 Allowed Meetings (one less than in 1911), and a membership of 19,785, a net increase of 171 (1,280 residing abroad, besides 586 belonging to the Australian General Meeting, 87 to New Zealand, and 37 to the Cape Town Meeting). The membership included 9,164 males and 10,621 females. "Attendees" numbered 7,328 (186 less), and Associates 1,255 (94 less). There were 248 Convincements (61 more), 101 received as Minors (34 more), and 9 Reinstatements, while Resignations, etc., accounted for 124 out-goings (17 less). There were 138 Births, 9 less, against 288 Deaths (8 more). Of Recorded Ministers 338 were reported in decrease of 10, and 56 less than eight years ago; 776 Elders, and 1,570 Overseers.

E. Harold Marsh suggested the need of some changes in the form of the information asked for and given. He complained of the grievous lack of uniformity in the way these figures were prepared in different quarters; there should be a greater effort to secure uniformity if these statistics were to be really useful. The births column led to much confusion, suggesting that the proportion of births among Friends was much smaller than in the general population. The column should be headed: "Admissions by Birthright to the Society." In other respects these returns were out of date.

Ernest E. Taylor queried whether regular attenders might not be more systematically approached with a view of their becoming members.

Joseph Firk Clark remarked that all would be glad that the plan of dissolving for marrying out had been discontinued.

Anna L. Littleboy called attention to the London and Middlesex report of the notable gain in numbers over removals in the year, and asked the Clerks of county meetings to be sure to report removals to London promptly. Edwin Bigland and Katherine Wilson Jones emphasized the necessity of the prompt sending of these notices of removal. J. Marshall Sturge agreed, and thought preliminary notices should be sent to London even when there was only a likelihood of a brief stay.

Discussion took place on the question whether to refer to the Meeting for Sufferings the matter of the suggested changes in the form of the Tabular Statement, or to await the time when the Yearly Meeting should have dealt with each of the questions raised on its particular merits.

Eventually it was agreed to refer the whole matter to the Meeting for Sufferings, who are asked to report to the Yearly Meeting as to whatever alterations it considered necessary.—The Friend (London).

CANADA YEARLY MEETING is now over and the members can surely say that it was a time of favor; experiencing from sitting to sitting a precious sense of the overshadowing presence of the Great Head of the Church; it would seem as if there must have been a good number of that little company who were ready to "bring all the tithes into the storehouse" to cause such a blessing to be poured out.

Feelings of thanksgiving arose from most, if not all, hearts to the Giver of all good that so many dear Friends from other parts felt drawn to meet with us, helping to strengthen the weak hands and confirm the feeble knees.

Not one of those whom we have been considering the fathers and mothers were with us and it seemed, as expressed by one of the older ones in attendance, like the children were left to keep house; may we all increase our diligence to have our own work done while the day lasts so that we may be clear, and be enabled through infinite and unmerited mercy to receive the reward of "well done." In so doing there will be a succession of judges and counsellors raised up to show forth to the people that there is a King in Israel.

A CANADIAN.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—A despatch from St. Louis, Mo., of the 1st inst. says: "Electricity, generated by water power at the dam across the Mississippi River at Keokuk, Ia., was turned into the wires of St. Louis to-day, and during the rush hours two-thirds of the street cars in the city were propelled by the new current. All industrial motors in the city also were driven by the same power. By the end of this week practically all the street cars, motors and electric lights in St. Louis will be operated by power generated by the water plant, 137 miles away. St. Louis is the largest city in the country to be thus supplied."

It is stated that more immigrants were landed at this port in the last six months than ever before in a similar period, according to figures issued by Commissioner of Immigration John J. S. Rodgers. The influx of aliens for the half year totals 34,953, a gain of 7,262 over last year, when 27,691 came in. In twelve months last year 61,163 foreigners arrived here. This eclipsed all previous records and was expected to stand as such for several years, but at the present rate it will be exceeded this year by 15,000.

A despatch from Oshkosh, Wis., says: "A revolution in the manufacture of matches will take place here, when the Diamond Match Company, at its local plant, will cease to make matches of poisonous compound. Poisonous phosphorus has caused many cases of "phossy jaw" among the employes of the company. The change in the manufacture of the matches has been brought about by Government enactment of a law prohibiting the use of the poisonous phosphorus."

Superintendent of Police Robinson of this city has issued a general order directing a rigid enforcement of the act of Assembly prohibiting the sale or gift of cigarettes or cigarette papers to minors. By the provisions of the act, minors detected with cigarettes in their possession are required to divulge the names of persons from whom they received them under penalty of fine or imprisonment. The police were supplied with printed copies of the act for general distribution. The lieutenants were ordered to notify all dealers of the contemplated enforcement of the new law.

A despatch from Topeka, Kansas, of the 2nd inst., says: Governor Hodges to-day sent special instructions to the entomologists of the State University and Agricultural College to begin a State-wide war upon the chinch-bug. The recent increase of chinch-bugs all over the State and their spread to cornfields, where serious damage is threatened, has alarmed farmers. The Snow remedy, which may be used, consists of setting free chinch-bugs that have been inoculated with a disease peculiar to that insect. It has been demonstrated that the contagion spreads rapidly among the bugs and is useful in reducing their numbers. In some localities they have already become so numerous that farmers have been obliged to burn pastures and fields of standing grain in order to save cornfields adjoining.

It is stated that the Pennsylvania system is among the first of the railroad systems of the United States to begin the work of railroad valuation required by a late act of Congress. In all parts of the country the task of the valuation of railroad properties has been begun or is about to be undertaken. The Government will employ, it is estimated, some 2000 engineers and more clerks. Robert A. Thompson, one of the Government engineers, has started in the far West, and several railroads have appointed valuation committees for co-operation with the force of Government engineers. The object of this valuation is to furnish the Interstate Commerce Commission with a basis for regulating railroad rates. Every stretch of railroad track will be re-measured and reappraised and every building revalued, so as to ascertain exactly the value of railroad properties as they are at present.

The heat wave which has recently visited this city and its neighborhood has been very severely felt. Many persons have died from its effects.

It is stated that an agricultural exhibit car has just been completed by the Pennsylvania Railroad, which is a new means of approaching the farmers in the railroad's campaign for better farming along its lines. In the exhibit end of the car are 580 samples of vegetables, fruits, grains, hay, tobacco and cotton. The railroad owns and farms a demonstration farm at Bacon, Del., where all new varieties of fruits, vegetables and forage crops are tried out before they are recommended to the farmers as money crops. Many of these new crops, such as new varieties of peanuts, cotton, soy beans, Japanese persimmons, cow peas and others, together with full information as to the value of each crop, will be exhibited on the agricultural car.

William I. Haven, secretary of the American Bible Society, announces that 7,809,000 copies of the Bible were distributed in the year by the British and Foreign Bible societies. The circulation of the Bible Society of Scotland for the same period was 2,350,985 copies, and that of the American Bible Society 4,049,610, a total of 14,205,565 copies.

A despatch of the 4th inst. from Williamsport, Pa., says: "J. C. Wilson, State orchard inspector for Lycoming, Clinton, Elk and Armstrong Counties, who has just completed an inspection of a part of Lycoming County, announced to-day that there is grave danger from widespread ravages of the San Jose scale and other orchard pests unless immediate measures are taken to check further devastations in certain sections of the southeastern part of the county. He says 50 per cent. of the trees are dead or dying. In one orchard of 70 trees all but four are dead. He declares that there is no section of the county free of the scale, and unless orchard owners co-operate in a campaign against the pest hundreds of fruit trees will be killed."

The total number of deaths from the celebration of the Fourth of this month is reported to have been 25, and of injuries, 903.

FOREIGN.—A despatch from London of 6th Month 30th, says: "The opposing armies accuse each other of initiating the offensive. The Bulgarian representatives at Athens and Belgrade respectively have presented notes protesting against Greek and Serbian attacks. The Serbian Government has replied by charging that the Bulgarians are making attacks and repudiating all responsibility."

A French aviator has lately made a flight from St. Petersburg to Paris and back, a distance of about 3100 miles, which is said to be the longest aerial voyage ever accomplished.

A despatch of the 1st inst. from The Hague says: "The second international opium conference was opened to-day by the Foreign Minister of the Netherlands. A Dutch delegate was elected permanent president. Representatives from forty-four nations were present. The work of the conference is limited to the ratification of the general convention drawn up in 1912, although all the States invited to join in the conference on that year have not signed it. The conference will examine into the possibility of enforcing the ratifications of those powers which have signed, and the president appealed for the co-operation of all the States in obtaining the increasing use of drugs."

RECEIPTS.

Three dollars, spent, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for the 57.

Mary Gifford, Mass.; Condy B. Shoemaker, Phila., $12, for himself, Martha L. Shoemaker, Anna W. Bailey, Franklin G. Swayely, Edward L. Ritchie and Elizabeth R. Cohen; George B. Allen, Pa., and for Alfred T. Satterthwaite; A. W. Boone, Canada; Finley Hutton, O.; Joseph P. Biddle, Pa.; Benjamin Vail and for Ruth R. Vail, Pa.; Abram Stratton, Prof. John W. Biddle, Pa.; M. S. Walton, Pa.; Anna E. Smallwood, Pa.; Wm. D. Smith, Agt., for Sarah W. Sears, Ia.; James G. Biddle, Pa.; Tacy M. Bines, Phila.; Sarah S. Carter, N. J.; M. G. for herself, Sarah C. Satterthwaite and Sarah Ellen Galloway; Wm. Biddle, Pa.; J. Elwood Hancock, N. J., $6, for himself, Martha T. Hancock and Mattie A. Stevenson, Anne F. Peisold, Gm.; Josiah P. Engle, N. J., and for Manrice C. Engle, Cal.; Margaritta T. Mickle, N. J., for Howard A. Mickle and Robert T. Mickle; Joseph Edgerton, Ia.; R. Evans for Elizabeth B. Evans, N. J.; Mary Branson, M. D., Phila., and for Isabella McIlwain, Priscilla Wright, N. J.; Alva Wildfield, Ia., $1 to No. 27; Joshua R. Evans, N. J.; Deborah E. Woolman, N. J., $12 for herself, Clayton L. Evans, Howard Evans, John B. Evans, Wm. Evans Ballinger and Laura H. Hewlings; Mary W. Haines, N. J.; T. Lee Haines, N. J.; Alfred C. Haines, N. J.; Samuel S. Haines, N. J.; Dalhis Reeve, N. J.; Margaret B. Wiggins, Pa.; Sarah G. Woolman, Pa.; Jonathan Chace, R. I.; Henry D. Keith, Phila.; Em-line P. Newbold, Pa.; Geo. W. Thorp, Phila.; Joseph Elkinton, Pa.; Annie J. Jones, D. I.; Susanna Kite, Phila.; Samuel W. Jones, Pa.; Jonathan M. Steere, Pa.; Sarah B. Edge, Pa.; Anna P. Moon, Pa.; Jonathan E. Rhoads, Del., $10, for himself, Joseph Rhoads, Geo. A. Rhoads, Robert Tattall and Stephen C. Singleton.

Remittances received after Third-day noon will not appear in the receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

CORRECTION.—In the "Notes From New York State," by Joseph Elkinton, in last week's FRIEND, a typographical error occurred. "Five Partners" should have been "Nine Partners," the name of a place in Dutchess Co., N. Y.

DURING SEVENTH AND EIGHTH MONTHS of this year the meetings at Newton Meeting House, Camden, N. J., will be discontinued.

MONTHLY MEETINGS NEXT WEEK (SEVENTH MONTH 14th to 19th):

Philadelphia, for the Western District, Twelfth Street below Market, Fourth-day, Seventh Month 16th, at 10.30 a. m.

DIED.—At his home near Danville, Ind., on Eleventh of Eleventh Month, 1912, AHMAAZ KENDALL, son of James G. and Sally Dix Bales Kendall, and husband of Minerva Harvey Kendall, aged seventy-nine years, two months and ten days; a member of Mill Creek Monthly Meeting of Friends.

—Sixth Month 14, 1913, at her home, Chester, Pa., PIEBE HUTTON, widow of Thomas Y. Hutton, in her one hundredth year; an elderly and life-long member of Chester Monthly Meeting of Friends, Pennsylvania.

—Fifth Month 22, 1913, PIEBE P. STOKES, wife of the late Charles Stokes, in her eighty-sixth year; a member of Burlington Monthly and Rancocas Particular Meetings of Friends.

WILLIAM H. PILE'S SONS, PRINTERS,
No. 422 Walnut Street, Phila.

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: The inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long time rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

WANTED.—A FRIEND, WHO HAS HAD EXPERIENCE as a selector in selling different lines of goods, desires a position. Call, Care of The Friend.

POCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and Those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevation 1800 feet, commanding extensive mountain and valley scenery. Now is the time to visit the MANOR to enjoy the Rhododendron bloom. Address:

J. W. Hurley, Manager,
POCONO MANOR, PA.

FROM BONDAGE TO FREEDOM, by Isabel Shipley. 2nd Edition THE BEST TRAIT, by L. C. Wood, 3rd Edition. A new and complete copy of the Bible Spirit, wonderfully illustrated, and from the pen of the great prophet, Amos, is now for a limited time only, offered at a special price. Terms of other publications given on application. All orders to be accompanied by cash. Address: J. B. WOOD, P.O. Box 1, Park, Camden, N. J.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

HIS SOUTH FRIENDS STREET
PHILADELPHIA

DO NOT FORGET

THAT GOOD PRINTING CAN BE PROCURED AT MODERATE PRICES FROM

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,

EDWARD T. BIDDLE,

1010 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

To any subscribers desiring to preserve their copies of THE FRIEND we can recommend the Big Ben Binder, made by Bigelow Binder Co., 198 Canal Street, New York. For one dollar they will deliver, about ten days after order is received, a binder, holding fifty-two numbers of THE FRIEND, with name of paper printed on outside. The binder may be used as a permanent or temporary way of preserving the papers. No one connected with THE FRIEND has any financial interest in this sale.

Late Summer is now recognized as a desirable time for planting

Evergreens

Our illustrated catalogue, describing these & other Trees, Plants & Shrubs, mailed upon request.

The Wm. H. Moon Co.

GLENWOOD NURSERIES

Morrisville, Bucks County, Pa.
PHILADELPHIA OFFICE, 21 S. Twelfth St.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL.

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

W. B. WEAVER Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5th ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL ACCOMMODATIONS FOR FUNERALS.

BELL 'PHONE. ESTABLISHED 1880.

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Aves., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

(Marcellus Balderston)

602 SPRING GARDEN ST. 518 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL 'PHONE PHILADELPHIA

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

Subscribers patronizing our advertisers will assist THE FRIEND, especially by mentioning our paper in correspondence.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, SEVENTH MONTH 17, 1913.

No. 3.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to

EDWIN P. SELLEW or THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

REFORMATION THRU REGENERATION.

A little more than a year ago, at the suggestion of the Director of Public Safety, Mayor Blankenburg of Philadelphia appointed a "Vice Commission" to investigate conditions in this city. The Commission was composed of both men and women to the number of twenty-two, all of them prominent as lawyers, physicians, ministers, business men or workers in social or reform institutions.

Their report has been printed and makes a book of one hundred and sixty-four pages. However much such an exhibit may be needed to arouse a sense of responsibility in those members of society who are indifferent to the evils which prey upon their fellows, so long as those evils do not come into too close proximity with themselves, it must be conceded that this report can hardly be regarded as taboosome reading even for persons of mature age, to say nothing of those of fewer years. Its revelations are startling if not edifying. They ought to bring home to every true Christian a fresh sense of the need that exists for spiritual awakening, and for rightly qualified messengers to carry to the slaves of sin the "terrors of the law" and also the "hope of the Gospel". In the face of any and every form of iniquity with which communities are cursed, the Christian has need to ask, "Am I my brother's keeper?" "How far or in what measure am I responsible?"

Every honest investigation into the social evil reveals its close connection with the traffic in intoxicating drinks. This report is no exception to the rule. It would not be correct to say that either is the cause of the other, but it is quite safe to declare that either fosters and promotes the other. Yet this is not alone true of these two forms of evil—for indulgence in one sin, of any form, leads to another, of some other form. It is not strange therefore that probes into evil conditions usually find not only what they are searching after but some things for which they were not seeking. Thus this Commission could not faithfully report the results of their investigations without referring to dance halls, moving-picture shows, theatres and corrupt police and magistrates, as well as to the saloon.

Fresh confirmation is given to the testimony of some who have been prominent on the stage as to the almost universal moral degeneracy of professional actors and actresses—seeming to be nearly an inevitable result of the business they follow.

In view of these easily ascertained facts it is difficult to understand the attitude of many educators and religious teachers toward the theatre. Persons professing to be ministers of the Gospel of Jesus Christ openly patronize the play-house and encourage those under their care to do so, while educational institutions from universities to kindergartens are developing a taste for acting and theatrical exhibitions by the amateur performances which they not only permit but also promote. Puritanism may have seemed harsh and repellent, but its effects upon religious and moral character were certainly better than the present liberal license given to practices of questionable if not absolutely evil tendencies.

Among the several recommendations of the Commission, more stringent laws are outlined and proposed. We are often reminded that men cannot be made righteous by law, and few will be found to dispute the statement. It does not follow that good laws do not tend to promote righteousness, nor that unrighteous ones are not incentives to wickedness. Because we cannot make people righteous by law is no excuse for framing unrighteousness into our laws. By all means let us set up a high moral standard in our legal enactments, making every vice illegal, and its practice incurring penalties sufficiently severe to act as a deterrent. Yet more than better laws we need a faithful, energetic administration of law. If the administration of existing State statutes and municipal ordinances was in the hands of righteous officials, honestly desirous of suppressing wrong-doing, all of the social evils would speedily be greatly diminished.

Neither righteous laws, nor their honest administration, nor any amount or kind of intellectual culture, can eradicate the evil in the nature of man from which spring vices of every sort. Men need reformation, but regeneration is the one effectual means of reforming them. "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new". The self-righteous moralist needs Christ—the slave of evil passions and vicious habits needs Him equally as much, tho' neither of them may be conscious of his need. May we who have felt the need and found Him let our light so shine before men that they may see both their unrighteousness and the one Saviour, and may we live in such a state of preparedness for our Lord's service that we may hear when He speaks to us, and go when He sends us to carry his messages of warning and entreaty to those about us who sadly need reformation thru regeneration!

E. P. S.

TAKE good care of disagreeable duties. Attend to these first. Never select the things that you want to do, and shirk upon others the things that you do not want to do. Choose the disagreeable things you will get in your manhood. You cannot grow in any other way so fast. You may be angry with some shiftless man, who is willing to put on you work that he ought to do himself, but you cannot afford to be unfaithful because somebody else is.—HENRY WARD BEECHER.

NOTES FROM NEW YORK STATE.

II.

Philadelphia Yearly Meeting has maintained a mission among the Seneca Indians in southwestern New York since 1793, when three young men, members of that Yearly Meeting, accompanied by two older Friends, went into this wilderness, a journey of 400 miles mostly through the forest—to teach these Indians in agricultural pursuits. For twenty years previous to that date the condition and needs of the Six Nations had been frequently discussed by Friends at their annual gatherings, but no permanent settlement was effected until 1795. These young men taught the Indians how to build houses, and we saw one of these houses still standing at Old Town, where they made their headquarters, overlooking the Allegheny River.

In 1816 Joseph Elkinton responded to the call of the Yearly Meeting, under a sense of duty to go out as a teacher, and that year he opened the first school at Cold Spring, five miles up the river from Old Town, on the north bank, and some two miles from the present school building at Tunesassa, which is located on the south side of the Allegheny, at a most picturesque opening of the Tunesassa Valley into the larger valley of the river. Tunesassa (pebbly bottom) Creek flows through a farm of 500 acres, 100 acres of which are fertile meadow-land under cultivation and 400 hill and woodland. This farm lies next to the Reservation and was bought by Friends of Philadelphia very early in last century in order to give the Indians practical lessons in farming as well as to supply produce for the school. The first school building upon this site was erected in 1820, and served its purpose until 1880, when it was burned down, but promptly replaced by the present structure.

As one stands on the adjoining hill, overlooking the school and the hills along the farther side of the Allegheny River, the wisdom of those who selected this site for a mission station is more and more apparent.

The Allegheny Reservation follows the river for forty miles, beginning at the Pennsylvania State line. It averages about a mile in width, including most of the bottom lands. These are partly and increasingly cultivated by the Indians, who hold all this territory in common. There is considerable brush land along the river that should be under cultivation, as it is fertile.

Two miles south of the Pennsylvania State line is Cornplanter's Reservation, four miles in length. This was given to the Seneca chief by General Washington in return for his services in the Revolutionary War—and is now held in entirety by his descendants. We saw his monument, which records his age as nearly 100 years at the time of his death, in 1833. He was always much more favorable than Red Jacket was toward educating the Indian children in English. Red Jacket, several times threatened to "tar and feather" me, grandfather if he persisted in opening his school, although personally they were good friends.

There is an excellent State road running the entire length of the Allegheny Reservation. There are also two railroads, one at the Pennsylvania and Erie, which afford every facility for travel.

When we contrast the conditions now existing among these Indians with those recorded a hundred years ago, or even 50 years, that we see thirty years since, there is a great deal to be glad of, those who believe that citizenship is the solution of the Indian problem. The Senecas have been slower in adopting the ways of the white man than many other tribes, but they have made most excellent progress, and any one visiting them in their homes will find a great deal to admire and be proud of. There are about 1,000 Senecas in the reservation, and 2,000 in all on the three reservations. With the good times, and it would be a calamity if the boom should end, it is a pity that a wretched, and this opinion was repeatedly emphatically confirmed by white men, woman and children, with the need of these Indians.

As we spent two evenings with Morton Tripp, a Presbyterian missionary who has lived on the Allegheny, Cornplanter and Cattaraugus Reservations for thirty-two years, we discoursed upon the effect of our school and he said it had given the Indian girls a very valuable knowledge of their domestic duties and he could always tell when girls had been educated at the School by the condition of their houses. Some of the boys who were at the School thirty-five years ago have also given good account of themselves. Their houses and barns would do credit to any thrifty farmer, and a few have 200 acres apiece under cultivation. Many of the houses on the reservation are poorly built and need a coat of whitewash or paint. The Indians appreciate this themselves.

They need a Government farm demonstrator, who would live among them, as is done among the Negro farmers of the South, and show them how to increase their farm products. Something in this direction has been done by our Superintendent, W. Millin Hall, who induced a former student of the School and now a farm-hand to buy forty acres of good meadow land next to the School-farm for $15 an acre and then rent it to the School Committee for $3 an acre per annum, for five years—himself working the crop under the direction of our Superintendent, who had supplied him with the money to purchase. Such personal kindness and oversight count for much in establishing the very kind feelings which exist between the Indians at and near the School and the staff of helpers there.

We were much interested in visiting an Indian home on the Cornplanter Reservation, where we found a very intelligent mother and half a dozen promising daughters—one of whom is working her way through Hampton Institute, Va., while another attends the High School in Salamanca, and a third is at our Boarding School.

The Thomas School, on the Cattaraugus Reservation, forty miles north of Tunesassa, has become a State institution. As it was originally designed for orphans and draws from that class on the Allegheny Reservation, it does not conflict with our School. The State of New York grants this institution $37,000 a year for the education and care of one hundred and eighty-five students. There are about sixteen district preparatory schools on the Allegheny Reservation, supplied with good teachers, so that the instruction given in them compares very favorably with that obtained at our Boarding School, but the former cannot secure a regular attendance from various causes, often only one-third the enrollment being present. It was a real pleasure to visit these schools and contrast the educational advantages enjoyed by the Indians now with those which Joseph Elkinton records in his diary nearly a hundred years ago. His frequent pleadings with the chiefs and his lonely life in the wilderness, together with the difficulties then incident to travel, make very interesting reading for one who has travelled over these reservations and heard from the lips of his father and grandfather the experiences which they had when living among these aborigines.

When the report of the Indian Committee was under discussion during our late Yearly Meeting it was asked whether these Indians had been won to the Christian and Quaker faith. There is an old party who still cling to the traditions and customs of their ancestors. Perhaps one-third of the Senecas are of this group, but there are many devout and earnest Christians who are members of the Presbyterian Church and some Methodists and a few Baptists. All of these have something of a reverent spirit—which has pervaded the whole tribe to some extent. Morton Tripp said the Indians at the Quaker School made the very best Presbyterian members when they decided to join the church, as he could rely on them.

Livia Pierce, a graduate of our school, is president of the W. C. T. U. and has worked nobly against that curse, which, above everything else, has kept the Indians back. Three hundred Indians have been killed on the railroad within the past thirty years, because they were under the influence of liquor, and we attended the funeral of one of these victims.

The widow, with two small children, and a broken-hearted mother were the chief mourners. It was a touching occasion. And the awful wrong which the manufacturers of intoxicating drinks inflict upon their fellowmen was never more strongly felt.

The city of Salamanca stands on the Allegheny Reservation and contains a splendid High School and many worthy citizens, but it has long been a serious disadvantage to the Indians because they can get liquor there. A strong, no-licence campaign, like that undertaken in West Chester and Chester County, Penna., a year ago, should be organized here. The Y. M. C. A. building at Quaker Bridge, a mile from the Friends' Boarding School, is a valuable adjunct to the School and some 200 Indians gathered when we were there one evening. One can best estimate the character of these Indians by considering their inheritance and difficulties and the progress they have made during the last fifty years.

We found that Wm. Hoag, President of the Seneca Nation, with whom we dined, was much nearer advising the Indians to accept the privileges of citizenship than he was five years ago. As we called upon the Indians in their homes the impression was unmistakable that the best of them would be valuable helpers in the management of our School, so that a judicious advisory Committee selected from them would eventually educate these Indians to take charge of the School themselves. It should be equipped, however, at once with a new heating and lighting plant, while the dairy, once one of the best in the State, needs to be better housed and replaced by healthier stock. It will probably require $10,000 to put the School in the condition of greatest efficiency, and Friends should not be content with any mission that is not most efficient. Of the fifty-five students half are boys, and unless we develop the agricultural side of the institution the older boys will go to better agricultural schools, as is the case at present. The girls have strong, wholesome countenances and are helpful in all the domestic departments.

It is a matter of sincere satisfaction that four of the younger members of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting have engaged to go to the School as helpers next fall. A neighborhood nurse, whom the State will supply upon application, should reside at the Boarding School and visit from that center. We found several children whose eyes needed attention, and some of the Indians at their homes do not have the medical assistance they should receive.

The School is so well established in the confidence of the Indians and so well located, with an excellent record, our duty is very plain. By a still further co-operation with the natives in their best efforts to improve their condition, materially and spiritually, our mission among them will be more fruitful than ever. The report of our Committee in the Fourth Month last was designed to place frankly before our Yearly Meeting the needs of the School, and it had its effect to stir up a more general interest in this worthy institution—the only official mission we have supported for a century. We have realized a great deal of solid satisfaction because of the integrity and devotion on the part of the staff of helpers, and no small measure of gratitude is due them for the services they have rendered. The blessing of unselfish consecration has rested and will still rest upon Tunesassa Boarding School.

JOSEPH ELKINTON.

TUNESSASSA, N. Y., Fifth Month 29, 1913.

He preached, very solemnly, on the divided allegiance: wealth, position, clothes, on one side, and on the other, the eternal kingdom and glory of Christ. Which weighed most with those before him in their estimate of their neighbors—the dress, the equipage, the very baubles round their necks, or holiness, and truth, and meekness?—E. B. BAYLY.

CHARACTER is the result of the cultivation of the highest and noblest qualities in human nature and putting these qualities to practical use.—ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

"WHO HATH BELIEVED?"

A MEDITATION.

"Who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?"—Isaiah liii, 1.

In the darkness of the night, from vague, half-slumbering imaginings, suddenly and vividly these words came forth, and remained before the mind till the impulse came to ponder and write them down. What could their immediate purpose be? They seemed to have a personal aim in direct allusion to testifying voices of the past with their instructions, warnings, and reproofs. How many of them can memory recall! Not without self-reproach for the strange insensibility which stifled, like a fog, the pure celestial light, when it would have shed beams of wisdom or flashes of conviction on the mind; sometimes speaking from human lips words inspired by God, that reached the hidden springs and secrets of the soul. Sometimes felt as sacred breathings that trembled in the heart, deeper than words, and fragrant with Heaven's own atmosphere of Love—that love of God whose height, whose depth unfathomed no man knows—swearing our affectionate devotion to Him who is "the fairest among ten thousand, and the altogether lovely;" perhaps drawings to some definite act, or course of conduct; or urging the renunciation of some pleasing evil thing, and picturing the consequences that otherwise must surely come, even the mournful fruit that grows from the blossom of disobedience.

But were there not also more insistent calls that challenged the attention? Mid trials that emerged so bitterly, and suddenly out of the unknown; compelling startled recognition of death, Christ, immortality, the perception increasing in intensity, more and more, until the stricken one, driven by grief and fear, sought the Lord with earnest solicitude for a time.

Could such testimonies and impressions fade away and be in vain? Has it not often been so? And yet by our long-suffering Lord fresh visitations have been given, as though to soften the hard heart and melt the ice-cold feelings, came pleadings of power and pathos, such as only One can plead; appeals of tender entreaty; touching views of truth; divinely kindled emotion; perhaps the language of expostulation: "Why will ye die?" "Come unto Me," ye ransomed, ye redeemed ones, why will ye perish? "Hear and your soul shall live."

While the dark tragedy of Calvary, with its depth of torture, and its agonized cry, proclaimed the fulfilment of his sacrificial words, "I lay down My life for the sheep," it may have been, that even that most potent and pathetic voice was also disregarded.

Here, a personal enquiry is suggested, and one may ask oneself: Not, was it noble? Was it generous? Was it in good taste? but the most selfish question of all: Was it safe to ignore that Voice? "Safe!" one would exclaim. "Might it not bring upon my guilty head the overwhelming volume of all that our Lord shed his blood to save me from?"

Was there not a further personal aim in Divine dealings so kind and so condescending? Is it not true that hadst thou believed, hadst thou obeyed, then had "the Arm of the Lord" been revealed, and by thee, in his strength—how great things might have been wrought!

The thoughtful and awakened mind, in view of considerations such as these, may yet have joyful cause to exclaim: "Oh, the wonderful patience of his infinite love! again He visits; again He speaks; I will humbly listen; I will repent; I will believe and obey."

Wilt thou indeed do so? Then shall his Eternal Life thrill through thy spirit; and his Heavenly Kingdom claim thee for its own.

J. S. K.

Sixth Month 13, 1913.

Do right now. Always scorn appearances, and you always may. The force of character is cumulative. All the foregone days of virtue work their health into this.—EMERSON.

BE STILL AND SLEEP.

To-night, my soul, be still and sleep;
The storms are raging on God's deep—
God's deep, not thine; be still and sleep.

To-night, my soul, be still and sleep;
God's hands shall still the tempest's sweep—
God's hands, not thine; be still and sleep.

To-night, my soul, be still and sleep;
God's love is strong while night hours creep—
God's love, not thine; be still and sleep.

To-night, my soul, be still and sleep;
God's heaven will comfort those who weep—
God's heaven, and thine; be still and sleep.

—FREDERICK SHANNON.

UNDER THE SKY IN CALIFORNIA.*

With this attractive title Charles Francis Saunders, sometimes a contributor to THE FRIEND, has produced a volume of distinct merit and charm. Specifically the merit of the work can be defined under three or four heads, as follows:

First. The author does extraordinary things in the line of walking and riding and camping in an ordinary way—we might all do them without claiming to be trained in woodcraft or in the "science" of the open. Indeed, the effect of the book, one of its chief charms, if we were dealing with charms at this moment, is the fact that we cannot read it without the resolve to go and do likewise. Most of us likely will be saying, "we have always wanted to see the world that way, but the experts have impressed us, never intentionally of course, that we did not have the instinct for it. Now we know better and shall have no further fear that we cannot adapt ourselves to the hardships of the road."

Second. The word pictures in this book are pictures of the real California. One feels this in every page. The superlatives are not wanting; the sky is blue beyond description, flowers and shrubs and trees blossom with unvoiced beauty, but a fine balanced judgment is maintained throughout and values are not exaggerated into unreality. A very little knowledge of the general run of writing about California is enough to convince one that this balanced judgment is an unusual merit.

Third. The historical setting of California is well presented. "The Old World atmosphere, which is its great charm," has rarely, we believe, been dealt with more sympathetically and withal with a more just criticism. It is evidently very easy to write a great deal into the Missions. They make a very sure appeal to the imagination. One needs to approach them in the ancient style, on foot or on horseback, as well to know what they were not as to know what they were. All this is admirably done several times over in the pages of this book.

Fourth. A homely, happy philosophy of getting the best out of everything is a contagious quality in all the episodes and encounters portrayed in the work. One comes back from each expedition thinking better of the world, trusting more, loving more. There is no effort to preach, but it is safe to say the book has a wholesome atmosphere.

Fifth and finally. There is a happy mixture of artist, poet and scientist in all the chapters. One gets pleasure in the reading, but one get more than pleasure. Knowledge is increased and the taste for knowledge stimulated. It is hardly to be hoped that "Under the Sky in California" will be in the list of best-seller or mentioned with the books most called for by public libraries. One can hardly write this without suggesting one's own's the pity. It is surely a work that will be welcome in all public libraries, and summer travelers will do well not to exclude it from their selected lists for summer reading, because it can be a large book for a small trunk. It does keep pretty well in front for holiday use.

J. H. B.

EFFICIENCY AS AFFECTED BY THE DRINK HABIT.*

CHARLES D. BARTON.

The drink habit as considered in relation to efficiency in business at the present time can hardly take into consideration the case of the regular drunkard. No business is seeking his services and in but few is he tolerated in any capacity. Occasional instances of those who, though addicted to the excessive use of spirits, when sober are considered of good business judgment and ability, may be pointed out by some. Perhaps most of us can recall such a case. While ability and efficiency in spite of the effects of alcohol on a naturally strong and efficient mind and body are really no arguments against the ill effects which it produces, such cases have always been stumbling blocks in the arguments of the teetotaler and shining lights in the minds of those seeking arguments for the privilege of indulgence. Fortunately some investigators have made observations and experiments on the effects of alcohol under conditions and with an exactness which give to their results the reliability of scientific investigations. These investigations have been carried on with the idea of determining the effect on purely muscular work, on neat work where the muscles must be under entire control, and on the alertness of the brain in responding to orders and in deciding the line of action when unexpected conditions are presented.

As to the purely muscular effort army officers are emphatic that temperate men can endure more than the regular drinkers. Records in hard work, such as mining and brickmaking, show that the abstainers always accomplish more than the non-abstainers.

The Swedish government, in order to ascertain the best means to obtain the absolute control of muscles and nerves necessary for accurate aim in rifle-shooting, conducted experiments on the effect of alcohol. A number of officers and men, all crack shots, were selected. The trials lasted for several days, at all times of day and under many conditions. The results were always the same. Whenever alcohol had been given the aim was not as good as on the days without alcohol. In the quick-firing, the difference amounted to thirty per cent. less accurate shots while under the effect of a moderate amount of brandy. In the deliberate, slow-firing the difference rose to fifty per cent., strong evidence that in any occupation needing a cool, steady eye and hand, the presence of alcohol in the system is a handicap in the competition for success.

To test the effect of alcohol on work which requires quick thought and rapid muscular response the work of compositors was selected. Four men, all skilled artisans and all in the habit of using spirits, volunteered for the trial. Preliminary tests were made to ascertain the amount of work under normal conditions. Alcohol was then given on alternate days and the amount of work carefully recorded and compared with the amount expected under normal conditions. In every case, excepting one man on one day, the amount was less on the alcohol-taking days than on the alcohol-free days. In every case the men were under the common delusion that they were accomplishing more work under the influence of the alcohol than on the other days. On both the days with alcohol and the days without, the work was less than it would have been under normal conditions. Many other experimenters have also demonstrated that the effects of small quantities of alcohol last throughout the next day.

Probably the most important phase of the drink habit as related to business is the case of the man responsible for the quick performance of orders delivered to him by signal or otherwise. Kreaplin by the use of some ingenious devices was able to measure the length of time elapsing between the suggestion of an idea and the resultant brain action. In order that the results might be reliable, two persons were always employed in making the observations. Commenting on these results he says: "Frequent variations of this method of experiment all tend to prove that alcohol both delays the rapidity of cerebral association and also alters its quality." Other experimenters have come to the same conclusions.

*Paper read last winter at a conference held at Moorestown, N. J.

*Under the Sky in California, Charles Francis Saunders, McBride, West & Co., 11 E. 11th St., New York, 296 pp., 51 illustrations, price $2.00 net, postage free.

Experimental work on the actions of a man conscious that he is being observed, might be influenced by that consciousness. Prof. Hodge, however, has proved that in the experiments to determine the effect of the drink habit this has not been the case. He selected four puppies and observed for some days to see that in habits and natural activities they were as nearly alike as possible to secure. Two of them were then given alcohol in their food. Soon after beginning the administration of alcohol it was noticed that the normal dogs would be actively playing while the others were content to remain quiet. The dogs were then taught to retrieve a ball when thrown across the gymnasium. The records showed that in the course of fourteen days the normal dogs had retrieved about twice as many balls as had the alcohol-taking dogs.

Many of the leaders of commercial enterprises have been impressed with these experiments or by the same facts as gleaned by observations of actual commercial operations. The railroads head the list in the stringency of their requirements. According to the U. S. Dept. of Labor, ninety per cent. discriminate against the drinker. Railroads operating 250,000 miles of road have adopted the following rule: "The use of intoxicants by employees while on duty is prohibited. Their use or frequenting of places where they are sold, is sufficient cause for dismissal."

The Lackawanna R. R. Co. has taken one step more. After the investigation of the terrible Corning wreck had shown that a recent drunk of the engineer might have been the cause of the disaster, the Lackawanna Co., under date of Seventh Month 20, 1912, issued an order to all men directly connected with the movement of trains, declaring that "The use of intoxicants while on or OFF DUTY, or visiting saloons or places where liquors are sold, incapacitates men for R. R. service and is absolutely prohibited."

While not so conspicuous to the public, employers in other lines are safeguarding their interests by eliminating the risks of intoxicated employees. According to the same report of the U. S. Dept. of Labor, from conclusions drawn from several thousand reports, eighty-eight per cent. of the trades, seventy-nine per cent. of the manufacturers, and seventy-two per cent. of the agriculturalists, discriminate against the employee addicted to the use of intoxicants as a beverage.

The State of N. J. by the passage of the Employers' Liability Law has stimulated the discrimination against the drinker. Accidents must be eliminated. Intoxication of the injured is one of the grounds of exemption, but last night's revel would not be exemption when a man sticks his hand in a moving machine. That hilarious condition, the effect of a glass of whiskey at the last saloon, which cracks the whip over a spirited team and causes a runaway, would not be intoxication when that driver went into court as a result of injuries received in that runaway.

It would seem that the employer is being forced more and more by necessity, if not by choice, to seek the sober, dependable man. What then is to become of the boy now forming the drink habit, perhaps beyond his power to give it up, when the opportunity is before him? It would seem that the State must either make some provision to take care of the man incapacitated by the business in which the State is a direct partner, or else take the wiser course and eliminate the temptation whereby the man is going to be barred from the fields of profitable toil. It would seem from many indications that there is little prospect for the realization of this hoped-for condition.

Perhaps, however, if the State of N. J. cannot be moved by a moral principle, if the love of brother and interest in fallen humanity have no effect in the battle with the interests of the drink habit, the need of efficiency in the business of the State, the selfish interests in the preservation of our industries may cause us to appreciate the despotism under which we are held, and our business may be forced to join hands with those who have long labored to drive from our State one of the greatest curses it has ever experienced.

PRAYER.

When prayer delights thee least, then learn to say,
"Soul, now is thy greatest need that thou shouldst pray."

Crooked and warped I am, and I would fain
Straighten myself by thy right line again.

Say! What is prayer—when it is prayer indeed?
The mighty utterance of a mighty need.

The man is praying who doth press with might
Out of his darkness into God's own light.

The greenest leaf, divided from its stem,
To speedily withering doth itself condemn.

The largest river, from its fountain head
Cut off, leaves soon a parched and dusty bed.

All things that live, from God their sustenance wait,
The sun and moon are beggars at his gate.

All skirts extended of thy mantle hold,
When angel hands from heaven are scattering gold.

—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH.

Reprinted from The British Friend.

PEACE VERSUS WAR.

Strife and contention belong to the lower world. Christ came in the flesh to inaugurate the complete reign (until then only partly manifested) of self-sacrifice for the sake of others, of love even to one's enemies. This reign and kingdom will not be set up or much advanced by argument unless there is a personal coming into the spirit of it in each individual soul, and a corresponding outward practice of true, loving self-denial according to our growth in the life and nature of Jesus Christ.

Before God all are equal. He knows nothing of nations. We are all looked upon as members of one family for whom Christ died. He who is our supreme King forbade the use of the sword on his behalf. How then can we draw it for ourselves, or for any lesser potentate?

He taught, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, 'Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy'; but I say unto you, Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you. If any man will take away thy cloak, let him have thy coat also. If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him to drink. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good. And in so doing ye shall be the children of your Father which is in heaven, who maketh his sun to shine upon the evil and upon the good, and sendeth his rain upon the just and upon the unjust."

The Christian religion is not a set of beliefs, nor the mere attempt to follow certain precepts or to carry out certain practices; but a change of heart through actual intercourse with and submission to the Spirit of the Redeemer, of Him who laid down his life for our sakes. ("No man," said He, "taketh it from me, I lay it down of myself.")

As we or any become imbued with, and gradually transformed by, this holy and all-loving influence, we become more and more redeemed from and brought out of the spirit of strife and contention, and feel how antagonistic it is to the life and power which is in Christ Jesus. Then we know what that means, "He that hateth his brother is a murderer;" we know that our religion is and must be something that goes down to the very foundation of things, and not a matter of outward performance only.

The new wine of the Heavenly kingdom must be put into new bottles, and the old garment which cannot be mended must be replaced by the pure, loving, meek and comfortable covering of God's own Holy Spirit replete with virtue, wisdom, true courage and invincible might, as revealed and manifested in and through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ of Nazareth, to whom be honor and praise and glory forever. Amen.

EDWARD WATKINS.

Fritchley, near Derby.

ROBERT BARCLAY.*

There has recently come from the press of Headley Bros., London, a "Life of Robert Barclay," which should find readers not a few on this side the Atlantic. When one comes to reflect on it there is very little that any of us know of the personality of this man, and the reading of Christabel Cadbury's little volume leaves a picture more definite in outline than anything else that is so easily accessible now in print, not nearly so full as one might wish, but the fact that Robert Barclay's home life was in a circle so different from that of most of the other early Friends precludes the idea that any in sympathy with him should have given a generous portrayal of the daily life he lived.

There have been times since his day when the death of a young Friend of eminent promise has cast a gloom over the whole Society, but it can be questioned whether the death of Robert Barclay, at the age of forty-two did not in this respect exceed all others of which we have record in the annals of Friends.

Compared with some others of his time, he may not have been a most powerful minister; we do not know and it is rather idle to question, but as a writer who enjoyed argument and who was clear and logical in his presentation he had no equal among the Friends in an age when controversy and pamphletting were a common method of influencing men's feelings.

Possibly the richest chapter in the book is the one devoted to the conversion of Robert Barclay to the Quaker form of belief. It is a lesson that cannot be repeated in full in the twentieth century, for the conditions of life prevent it; no young Presbyterian to-day could meet the Calvinistic theology of 250 years ago, or come under quite the same spirit of priesthood and sacrament as the Romanists stood for in 1666, for conditions that then prevailed do not now exist. He was eighteen when he joined the infant Society and for the twenty-four years granted him he served it with a full measure of devotion.

Of less interest, but historically of more importance, stands his literary effort. The controversial writings of the seventeenth century are of value now chiefly as history, none but students even rarely read them and they only that they may gain what side lights they will throw on some chosen topic. Barclay's books, if collected and bound together would form a huge folio volume of some one thousand pages, and excepting one volume only these have passed and passed forever out of sight. But this one book, Barclay's "Apology for the True Christian Divinity," still has a place and now and then one hears of a life that has been powerfully influenced by perusing it; this was written in his twenty-eighth year, printed first in Latin by a German printer, to whom the young enthusiast carried the manuscript across the North Sea; it was afterwards translated into Dutch, German, Spanish and French, and later part of it was translated into other tongues.

Many things have been written and said of Barclay's Apology. In Caroline Fox's charming journal one finds this, which should be taken with a grain of allowance, and which needs a little reading between the lines, if one is to gather the truth he meant to convey. She wrote: "There is a shelf in the Oxford Library which is the receptacle of all works opposed to the Church of England, which are placed there to be read as a war may open. Barclay's 'Apology,' and Locke's 'Essay' alone, remains unanswered and unanswered, though many a time has it been taken from the shelves, approved of it has always slunk back to its old place."

It is interesting to note in passing that our own Yearly Meeting of 1891, the Book Committee of the Representative Meeting of that year purchased itself of new stereotype plates of this volume. It is reported at the time that Barclay's Apology was not to be had of any other publishing firm and to find a copy one would need to visit the second-hand book stores. Our publishing committee was not influenced by the sentiment attached to it in thus spending a large sum of money, neither probably did we expect that the cold logic that confronts one on every page of the volume would be the first lever to turn an indifferent man's thoughts into more serious channels, neither did the Society to-day need this exposition as it did 250 years ago to clear up the misunderstandings concerning Friends; the spirit of to-day is not so much perversion as it is indifference, but no clearer and fuller presentation of Christian doctrine has been written than Robert Barclay's Apology and it is in place that it should be preserved by the Society, whose preservation is in a measure due to it.

Third, perhaps, in the incidents that are made to figure in Christabel Cadbury's book is the picture we have of the three Quaker worthies—George Fox, William Penn and Robert Barclay. The three all attended a Friends' Meeting at Harwich in the morning of an early summer day and then waited on the pier far into the night hours for the boat to take them across to Holland. We know little from Robert Barclay's pen of the incidents of this religious journey. Penn's vest-pocket diary kept with scrupulous neatness was not long since in the custody of a Philadelphia Friend, a priceless possession. Speaking of his travels with Robert Barclay, Penn said: "The apprehension I had of him was this, he loved the truth and way of God, and was not ashamed of it before men; but bold and able in maintaining it; sound in judgment, sound in argument, cheerful in travails and sufferings."

The fourth item that has called forth special comment in the book is the picture of the Barclay home. It would take us too far into the volume itself to give even an outline of it here. Swarthmore Hall and the meeting-house close by it promise to be long visible reminders of the days of George Fox; there is more in Buckinghamshire that is linked in history with William Penn and which keeps his memory fresh, but there is literally nothing at Ury Place, the residence of the Barclays, to call up the home life of this remarkable family.

In William Savery's journal an account of a visit he made to the estate in 1707 shows how very far the spirit of a previous century had deserted the Hall, but to-day even the Hall itself has vanished, and excepting a small graveyard close by the site of the mansion, which contains less than a dozen marked graves of the Barclays, there is no vestige of the past.

There is no portrait of Robert Barclay, not even a conjectured likeness. We have a right to suppose that he was a man of more than average stature, better able to cope with imprisonment and suffering than many others, with marked traits of leadership which he displayed in outlining a policy for the infant colony of New Jersey over which he had been elected governor.

While Christabel Cadbury's book does not quite give us what no pen can give, for the material does not exist for the picture our fancy would create, she has made a real personality of Robert Barclay, and the chief charm of the work rests in this. "I have never known him in any peevish, angry, brittle or disordered temper," wrote one of his friends; "I can say I have parted with a most entire friend and counsellor."

D. H. F.

READ BEST BY STUMBLING.—A few years ago a blind man had taken his station on the bridge over a canal in the City Road, London, and was reading from an embossed Bible. A gentleman on his way home from the city was led by curiosity to the outskirts of the crowd. Just then the poor man, who was reading in the fourth chapter of Acts, lost his place, and while trying to find it with his finger kept repeating the last clause he had read, "None other name—none other name—none other name." Some of the people smiled at the blind man's embarrassment, but the gentleman went away with a new thought in his mind. The words he had heard from the blind man were like music to his soul. "None other name given under heaven or among men whereby we must be saved," was the message which awoke him to a new life.

*Published by the City and World. By M. Christabel Cadbury, London.

For "THE FRIEND."
THE CROSS-BEARING LIFE.

DAVID HOLLOWAY.

Said our blessed Saviour, "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily, and follow Me"; "If any man serve Me, let him follow Me, and where I am there shall also my servant be"; "It is enough for the disciple that he be as his Master, and the servant as his Lord."

So if He our righteous Judge and Lawgiver is brought under suffering in the hearts of any of his professed followers, through their halting or unfaithfulness, the loyal servant is made partaker with Him in that suffering—comes to be in his or her measure a sufferer with the suffering Seed.

That a self-denying, cross-bearing life is essential to the Christian the New Testament Scriptures bear ample testimony. Also to the same purport is the precept and example of the faithful from the beginning, throughout the Gospel Day, down to the present time; and doubtless will continue so to the end of time.

If such a life is incumbent upon Christians in general, how much more is it required of Friends in particular, whose profession makes the Holy Spirit in our respective measures of it the practical, every-day rule, and guide of life!

Exalted as this standard may seem to the casual observer, it is doubtless in unison with the Saviour's precept as contained in his memorable Sermon on the Mount, viz: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father, which is in Heaven is perfect." Who can conceive of a higher attainment in the spiritual life than is thus made possible for poor fallen man unto which this endearing invitation calls him? Not that we may attain to the fulness of our Heavenly Father therein, but only to the measure that He appoints, and which He will enable each one, as we are faithful, to attain unto.

The writer trusts that he is not insensible of his unworthiness to thus hold up to view this pure, undefiled Gospel standard of living; yet he is comforted in the thought that he does not thereby (if done in sincerity) lessen his chances of a further advancement in the better life, through its gracious provisions, as he feels he would do by rejecting the same, and accepting a substitute therefor, either of his own or others' devising—except from the restraints of the cross and in accordance with the will and wisdom of unregenerate man.

That the way of the cross, as set forth in the foregoing, is not popular in this degenerate age of the Society, is evidenced by the lowered standards which have obtained as substitutes for the cross-bearing life. Doubtless, these are many and varied as the designing and misguided, who are more or less active in their use, see will best promote the object in view, which, whether knowingly and designedly or not, is always to rob the blessed Master of his honor and lower the standard of our beloved Society to the same unfriendly and unchristian level.

The substitute presenting to the writer most forcibly, and which he has felt most exercised as to its workings, and which seems to have gained strong foothold and to be received with much favor in some places within our borders, is one that rests on a refined social basis, is amply garnished with a profession of love, and plenteously furnished with the Christly Spirit (so called), thus presenting to the unanointed eye of beholders a very pleasing exterior, and so is equipped in no ordinary degree for successful proselyting. This modern deified invention of intellectual ascendancy over the witness for God in the soul, this unsanctified usurper of the blessed Master's seat, and robber of his honor, is seeking recognition as the great panacea for the Society's every lack of adaptation to present-day needs. From its ample resources it is hopefully claimed may issue the much vaunted twentieth century message, that is to save from extinction the seventeenth century type of Quakerism.

For, by its modified provisions, the avenues or approaches to Truth are so extended and broadened as to successfully appeal to the popular demand that it can be embraced by an intellectual grasp without the mortification that bearing Christ's cross always imposes. It has been said that although Truth does not change, its avenues do change to suit the varying conditions of the ages; that it may appeal to and reach out to the masses in an inviting and intelligible manner. Oh! fatal delusion, does not Truth possess its own avenues of approach? and are they not a part and parcel thereof; and is not the whole comprised in the Saviour's words, "No man cometh unto the Father but by Me," and "No man can come to Me except the Father which hath sent me draw him?" So in the Father's drawings to the Son in whom alone there is salvation, are comprised all the avenues that truly and surely lead to Him who is unapproachable by his finite creature man except as the sceptre of his love is felt to be extended, inviting and drawing unto Himself through his only begotten Son, our Saviour and glorified Redeemer.

Although this provision is ample in itself, without the help of instrumentalities, yet it has pleased God in the infinitude of his love and regard for his whole creation, and that all may be preserved in harmony and used for the exaltation of his glory and honor the purpose for which He brought them into being that man, being the highest in the scale of intelligence of all his diversified work, should occupy the province of chief actor therein. For it is through his employment in the faithful occupancy of the gifts of the Holy Spirit, as they are graciously bestowed upon him, that we are blessed with the helps to a dedicated life, chief among which are the Holy Scriptures, and Gospel Ministry in its varied forms, as prophecy, teaching, etc., etc. "The gifts and calling of God, are without repentance," declared Paul to the Roman church, which doubtless still applies to all who would be members of the Church Militant upon earth. When we are favored rightly to understand this declaration and its application to each one individually, and have brought home to us the momentous consequences of rejecting the same, we shall doubtless be more concerned to heed the Divine call that we may come into the possession of our own, the particular gifts which the blessed Head over all things to his Church and people holds in his hand ready to bestow upon all, as we submit to the necessary qualification to receive them and are exercised in them in his putting forth and leadership.

It is only in this consecrated way that we are brought on to the ground of true unity—that unity that subsists in the fellowship of the Spirit and introduces into the bond of peace, a peace that passeth the understanding of the natural man and fully satisfies the longing of the immortal soul, effectually weaning its possessors from the fleeting pleasures, pastimes and recreations of the world in the pursuit of which there waneeth not sin. To those in this fellowship the prophetic declaration still applies, "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before Him for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon his name; and they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them as a man spareth his own son that serveth him."

Oh, blessed bond of fellowship! what substitute may equal it, or long be permitted to suspend its functions in bringing babes immortal to the birth, that they may be nourished by the sincere milk of the word and grow thereby in stature, and in favor both with God and man, and no longer be murdered with the world's joys? as the writer greatly fears is now too prevalent because of the ascendancy of error over Truth, as partially, but imperfectly, set forth in the foregoing.

EVERY duty, even the least duty, involves the whole principle of obedience. And little duties make the will dutiful; that is, supple and prompt to obey. Little obediences lead into great. The daily round of duty is full of probation and of discipline; it trains the will, heart and conscience. We need not to be prophets or apostles. The commonest life may be full of perfection. The duties of home are a discipline for the ministries of heaven.—H. E. MANNING.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

BROTHERS

I Can't sit mooping at his work,
His thoughts are just a crazy crew
Intent on shifty ways to shirk
The things he needs to do.
His only purpose is to see
How he can shuffle thro' his tasks;
To find excuse by some false plea
Is everything he asks.

I Can, with face set toward the day,
Sees but the goal he hopes to gain,
And all obstructions in his way
He fights with night and main.
I Can be resolute, but still;
He makes no boasts, but forges on
With all his powers at work until
The victory is won.

I Can't hang by a feeble grip,
I Can hold on with forceful hand;
I Can't lose all his chances slip,
I Can bend all to his command.
I Can't fling out his envious taunt,
I Can respond with gracious deed;
I Can't slink down the Street of Want,
I Can relieve his need.

—ANNE L. MUZZEY.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE FENCE.—“Now count ‘em,” said Archie, rolling out the pretty, rosy apples on the grass. “What beauties!”

Rob, sitting on the lowest limb of the apple tree where it crossed the fence, looked down on the boys below. “I’ll see how many I have, too, and then we’ll divide even,” he told them. “Isn’t it good that it’s such a great full branch that comes over our side of the fence? I asked neighbor Gray if we could have all the apples that fell on our lot, and he just laughed and said we didn’t have to wait till they fell; all that grew on our side were ours. Look out, now! I’m going to jump.”

Rob had his hat full of the yellow and rosy balls, and he poured them out with the others. “Just eight for each one of us,” he said, and the boys began gathering them up. Just then they heard a little cough that sounded as if some one wanted to be noticed, but didn’t quite like to speak, and down at the other corner of the fence they saw a pair of brown eyes looking through at them.

“It’s Trudie Jemmes,” said Archie in a low voice. “No apples fall over on their grass.” Then he called aloud, “Hello, Trudie!”

“Hello!” answered Trudie, glad to be seen. “You’ve got some nice ‘nec day.” Trudie suddenly decided that it might seem a little queer to her to see anything about the apples, but her eager little face told what she was thinking.

“We don’t have to give her any,” whispered Vyle. “And there are just enough for three of us.”

“No, we don’t have to give her any, but they’d make even for four folks, too,” said Rob, slowly.

“And if we lived on that other side of the fence,” began Archie.

Then Vyle called, “Wait a minute, Trudie; we’re coming over to give you some of our apples. We’ll have just six apiece.”

“Six in a minute or two, Trudie’s little apron held a share of the ‘nec treat, and Trudie’s face was shining.

“Now, I’m an’ into the house,” he said, “to divide mine with my mother and the baby. Things always taste sweeter when you divide ‘em.”

The boys looked at each other and smiled. They thought as Trudie did. Trudie’s own.

—“THE TOWN.”

Yes, you’ve seen it. How beautiful it is to behold the youth adoring their Creator, and how affecting to see even little children bow in their act of adoration that the first duty is to their Heavenly Father! Parents cannot begin too early to instil into the hearts of their children the duty of adoration and praise to the Giver of all our blessings.

Not long ago three little children, the oldest barely yet speaking plainly, called at the next house on an errand when the family were engaged in their morning devotion. The children quietly and reverently stood by the open door with countenances that bespoke appreciation of the occasion, until the silence was ended. Those children certainly must have been accustomed to such acts in their own home, and no doubt knew something of the solemnity which should accompany acts of devotion to our Creator. May heaven bless the parents of such children, and the children of such parents.—E. B. DINGEE.

DONALD had been corrected for some slight misconduct; and, before the clouds had entirely rolled away, he was asking to be given some special pleasure. “I cannot say yet,” said mamma. “I’ll see how you behave in the mean time.” With a smile that was almost angelic, Donald responded: “Mamma, dear, there isn’t going to be any more mean time. I’m going to be good all the time now!”—The Christian Register.

THERE seem to be many signs quite recently of a revival in the literary world of poetical writing. Any complete list of the volumes of poetry published during the last five years would be quite impressive. It makes one busy to keep up with it all, even if one has that ambition. One of the late claimants for attention is Martha Gilbert Dickinson Bianchi, of Amherst. Her name would indicate an effort to graft the sturdy New England stock into an Italian tree. Something of the melody of a southern clime seems to be in her verse if the following can be accepted as a sample. Her latest volume has the title, “Gabielle and Other Poems.”

—J. H. B.

THE RETURN.

Back to the farm!

Where the Bob White still is calling
As in remembered dawns when youth and I were boys,
Driving the cattle where the meadow brook is brawling
Her immemorial wandering fears and joys.

Home to the farm for the deep green calms of Summer,
Life of the open furrow—life of the waving grain—
Leaving the painted world of masquerade and mummer
Just for the sense of earth and ripening again!

Down in the hayfield where scythes glint through the clover;
Lusty blood a-throbbing in the splendor of the noon—
Lying ‘mid the haycocks as easting clouds pass over,
Hearing insect lovers a-piping out of tune.

Caught in the spell of old kitchen garden savors—
In luscious lines retreating to slopes of musky corn
And clambering grapes that spill their clustering flavors—
Each in fragrant season filling plenty’s golden horn.

Off to the wood lot where briar bloom runs riot
And wary forest errata no hunter’s snare deceives,
Where virgin growth becalms the solemn-hearted quiet
With songs of Winter fires a-ripple through the leaves.

Up to the bars in the twilight’s soft reaction—
Winding through the ferny lanes to barns of stooping eaves
Welcoming at nightfall to simple satisfaction,
When the reeling swallow her dusky pattern weaves.

Out in the dews with the spider at his shuttle—
In that half-dreaming hour that awakes the whippoorwill
And sets the night hawk darting sinister and subtle,
E’er the full moon complacent loiters o’er the hill.

Back to the farm!

With the friendly brute for neighbor,
Where youth and Nature berken, the trust who would not keep?
Back to the luxury of rest that follows labor,
Back to the primal joys of hunger and of sleep!

The poem “Decorations Day” has the inspiration of dignity and fitness. It succeeds where the failures have been beyond numbering and the successes few.

Each year to ancient friendships adds a ring,
As to an oak, and precious more and more,
Without deserting or help of ours
They grow, and, silent, wider spread each year
Their unbought ring of shelter or of shade.

—LOWELL.

POCONO NOTES.

The charms of our Lake re-new the appreciation of every returning camper who has to reopen a bungalow. With the eagerness to set things to rights comes the privilege of dislodging the hold time rodents that have taken possession for the winter. The cobwebs trace for the intruder the secret happenings of the long, silent months, but down they go before the energetic broom. When all things are in order we step outside to see the certificates of Dame Nature that this summer is to be just as sweet and fresh and restful as last.

The veery and hermit thrush are "chanting as of old," the laurel and rhododendron are or have been in full bloom, and the new growth of the evergreens adds a grace that lifts the mind above its toils. Then the silence of the woods—"the holy hush that brings God's Presence nigh"—mixed with those breathings that contrast so forcibly with the din of trolley car and rumbling cart bring a solace to the soul and promptly insinuate their influence.

Thus we gathered in our grove for worship on the twenty-second and twenty-ninth ultimo, with nearly two hundred present on the latter date, when John B. Garrett brought feelingly to our remembrance the declaration of the Apostle Paul concerning the need of putting on in our heavenly journey and leaving the things that are behind as also his estimate of his own life-work—having finished his course, fought a good fight and kept the faith—he was prepared to receive that crown which is reserved for all who love and serve the Saviour, and Henry Richardson added a valuable testimony based upon the prophet Isaiah's vision in the temple.

The Town Meeting held on the twenty-eighth of Sixth Month witnessed a most picturesque gathering of one and fifty persons seated on the ground around a camp-fire. The absence of our beloved chairman, Wm. F. Wickersham, was felt by all, but the colony discussed its affairs with interest and the occasion was pronounced equal to any Town Meeting held at this historic spot. Our fellow camper, Henry Pleasants, has published the most comprehensive and felicitous sketch of the history of this section of Penna. "Pocono." This sketch is well worth a careful reading, and can be obtained of the John C. Winston Co., 1010 Arch Street, Phila.—with a valuable map—for $1.00. The proceeds go to the assistance of a Pocono Missionary in Central East Africa—Dr. Virginia Blakeslie.

The fourth of Seventh Month was celebrated most appropriately by historic tableaux based upon passages in this book.

These were all well rendered by the younger members of the community and constitute a marked improvement on the old-time celebration of "The Fourth." The interview between Wm. Penn and the Delaware chiefs, when the memorable treaty was made, was excellent, while the dismissal of the Delawares was full of pathos. Canassatego, the Chief of the Six Nations and Shick-Calamy, their representative, were invited by Thomas Penn and the Provincial Council of Penna. to meet the chiefs of the Delawares and Forks Indians of Philadelphia during the Seventh Month of 1742, in order to coerce the latter into parting with their hunting grounds between the Lehigh and Delaware Rivers, also including this Pocono region—as a result of the Walking Purchase steal of 1737. Canassatego, turning to the representatives of the Delaware Indians, presented in the most imperious manner and, in a diction almost elastic in its bitterness, ordered the tribe forthwith to vacate the entire territory then occupied by them in these words: " Cousins, let this belt of wampum serve to chastise you. You don't know what ground you stand on or what you are doing. Our brother Onas' case is very just and plain, and his intentions to preserve friendship. On the other hand, your cause is bad, your heart far from being upright . . . and you are maliciously bent to break the chain of friendship with our brother Onas. We have seen with our eyes a deed signed by nine of your ancestors above fifty years ago (1686) for this very land and a release signed not many years since by some of yourselves and chiefs now living . . . But how come you to take upon you to sell land at all? We conquered you. We made women of you. You know you are women and can no more sell land than women. Nor is it fit you should have the power of selling lands since you would abuse it. Did you ever tell us that you had sold this land? Did we ever receive any part? This is acting in the dark, and very different from the conduct our Six Nations observe. . . . For all these reasons we charge you to remove instantly. We don't give you the liberty to think about it. We therefore assign you two places to go—either to Wyoming or Shamokin . . . then we shall have you more under our eye and shall see how you behave."

Henry Pleasants adds, "The edict so pronounced was inexorable and no alternative remaining, the Delawares in deep and silent grief burned their cabins and removed across the Susquehanna, there to await their opportunity to return with torch and scalping knife against the unfortunate settlers who occupied their coveted hunting grounds."

The evening entertainment consisted of a water pageant, in which boats and canoes were decorated according to the taste of the occupant, and much ingenuity and artistic ability were in evidence—especially when illuminated by Japanese lanterns.

The weather was perfect and the group of two hundred and fifty campers very happy, so the whole event was most satisfying as a worthy celebration of the one hundred and thirty-seventh birthday of our nation. J. E.

POCONO LAKE, SEVENTH MONTH 5, 1913.

FRIENDLY NEWS.

IMPRISONMENTS AND PROSECUTIONS IN NEW ZEALAND AND AUSTRALIA.

—The last mail from Alfred H. Brown contained correspondence with regard to his plans for the immediate future, from which it appears, after he leaves Brisbane, he will probably return south to Sydney and Melbourne and postpone his visit to the Northern Territory until later. J. P. Fletcher, now that the Australian elections are over, has probably gone to New Zealand to help the boy Passive Resisters at Christchurch. The position is a grave one. The Central News Agency on 14th inst. reported that "the magistrates are committing large numbers of youths to military detention in forts for refusing to take the oath and to do their drill under the compulsory training scheme."

William Henry F. Alexander, and John Morrison, of Auckland, write at length of the visit of the Dreadnought New Zealand and the elaborate arrangements made by the Government to foster a warlike spirit. "Auckland is in the throes of an attack of battleship on the brain." "Eleven thousand school-children from Auckland and the surrounding district were treated by the Government to a free trip to the vessel; the authorities are determined at all costs to inoculate the rising generation with the defence virus." At Wellington, "1,000 children were brought 150 miles and similarly treated." The newspapers are saturated with military and defence articles and unanimously extol compulsion; anyone who dares to refuse to accept these conscript laws is denounced as a shirker or worse. The impression created here at home of the stand the boys are making is that it is an heroic one demanding courage and will find a place of honor in British history.

The returns of prosecutions in the Auckland court for Fourth Month alone show on the 9th about 100, 16th 82, 24th 67, 28th about 40, and on the 30th 31. On the latter date magistrate Cutton observed: "You will never get the Act decently observed until you go for the defaulting employers." Robert Semple, one of the trusted Labor leaders in the South Island, was imprisoned in Greymouth gaol for failing to pay a fine of £4 for refusing to give the age of his son as required under the Defence Act. Mackie, Secretary of the National Peace Council, and Atkinson, a prominent citizen of Christchurch, were put on trial for speaking—the former, at the Clock Tower, and the latter at Bedford Row—on behalf of the lads and against the Defence Act. A number of Defence cases were held over whilst a shocking case was taken in full detail in the presence of the boys. Several ladies interviewed the Editor of the Lyttelton Times and strongly expressed their views that such cases, which the paper considered unfit for the eyes of the general public, should on no account be thought fit for the ears of mere boys. The local Women's Institutes at Auckland and Dunedin are taking the matter up with the Minister for Justice. The authorities, in their eagerness to prosecute, are responsible for many grave blunders. . . . A peculiarly painful case of a lad named Stevens shows the callous spirit of these military prosecutions. The lad's employer paid his fines three times, but on the fourth prosecution, he determined to go to prison. "He was put in with criminals of the worst type—one a murderer under a long sentence." A law which in its administration admits of such penalties is itself a danger to the State. A number of men well known in Labor circles in Christiansh was fined in Fourth Month in varying amounts for having spoken at the C. L. K. Tower against the Act, among them E. Howard and I. R. Cooke, who were each fined £2 and costs; failing to pay, they were sent to Littleton goal for one month!

From Melbourne J. P. Fletcher gives, among other cases, the two following: A houseless, the son of a working woman, objected to drill as his business prevented him. He was threatened again and again, fined £5, and ordered to make up his drill, and was to have been sent to the C. L. K. Gaol, but he left home and his mother did not know where he had gone. His mother had since heard from him, and so became a little more lenient. "Any person who—knowing any person liable to be sent from the Defence Forces, conceals him or aids or assists him in avoiding his duty, shall be liable to be imprisoned, with or without hard labor, for any period not exceeding twelve months." Another case: A yachtsman and retainer of grocer, with many shops in Melbourne, refuses to allow his boys, various grounds—two boys eligible who are at the Scots College, one of the large public schools. Rather than submit to his sons being sent to military detention, he has decided to leave the country. Such cases are numerous and inevitable under a system of conscription.—Illustrated Catalogue of the Press (London).

Two letters from California will be of interest to Friends. A newspaper clipping forwarded by C. T. Saunders tells of the death of Emily A. Holder in Pasadena, Fourth Month 21, 1913. Before her marriage she was Emily A. Gove. Her family as well as the Holder family were among the first Quaker settlers of New England. This interesting connection is thus pointed in the clipping:

She was a lineal descendant of Edward Gove, of Hampton, N. H., who lived in the seventeenth century and who was the head of a long line of Quakers. Edward Gove was her fifth great-grandfather. In 1670 he led a revolt against Governor Child of New Hampshire, a notorious character, and according to Erskine, the historian, a dishonest public servant. Being an army officer Gove was arrested, tried on a charge of treason, and sentenced to death. This was later changed to imprisonment and confiscation of his estates. Gove spent three years in the Tower of London, part of time with William Penn. James III pardoned him in 1680, and restored his estates in America, one of which is still in the possession of William Gove of Hampton. The poet Whittier died in one of the old Gove homes at Hampton. Edward Gove was the founder of the family, and after leaving the army joined the Quakers. Emily Holder was born in Wrentham, N. H. She moved to Lynn, Mass., where her parents, John Chase and Hannah Gove, were prominent Friends. There she married Dr. Holder, colonel and of Christopher Holder, the pioneer Quaker.

The other point is the announcement of a volume with the title "The Quakers in England and America." It is to be "A Popular Illustrated History of the Society of Friends" to be "Profusely illustrated, about 400 pages, and to sell for $6.00." The author is Charles Frederick Holder, of Pasadena, son of Emily Holder, noticed above. He is a well-known literary character with skill in history, so that his effort will naturally be interpreted with much interest.

Our friend, William C. Allen and wife, sailed Seventh Month 1, 1913, on S. S. London for England. He expects to attend the International Peace Conference at The Hague, which opens the twentieth of the Eighth Month. Being designated as a delegate, thereby by the Interdenominational Peace Committee of Pacific Coast churches, which represents most of the church conferences and synods in California, Oregon and Washington, and a high committee he is secretary. He also is delegate to the conference of the same kind in Congress.

GATHERED NOTES.

Reading the records which many college men need to hear, of the life of the Quakers in England, there is too much tendency toward a more conservative, or, to be frank, "established" attitude toward the Friends of our own country. The book with a mild suggestion of a better, more genuine temper. They teach a Greek philosophy, and they regard themselves as the Christian teaching that has come to the world, and that is why. They are ship-bent, but are not sea-sick. They are bright in all, but rather deprecate reform. They are not so much interested in our colleges with this bias. They are not so much inclined toward a cynical attitude toward the Quakers of our own country. In other words, the graduating classes I have watched every year in various colleges, have not impressed me as being made up largely of eager, prophetic youth. Somehow I more easily associated them with cigarettes and self-importance and a mild contempt for church and the devoted life. There were many splendid exceptions in every class. But something is the matter with our colleges that they cannot turn out a more eager group of men.

The omissions of almost all these baccalaureate sermons were the real religious note and any word about the church of Christ. For four years the several thousand men graduating from our colleges this spring have been hearing day after day of philosophy, history, economics and literatures, ancient and modern. In many colleges they have heard very little about religion. Some of our colleges seem afraid to mention the subject to an undergraduate. It would seem as if the baccalaureate sermon, coming as it does at one of the great dramatic moments of life—at commencement; that is, when one commences life, might be made an earnest appeal to dedicate oneself to the Lord Jesus Christ. Is Christ becoming obsolete? If not, why this hesitation to present his claims to young men as the Lord of life, and as the Master of all one's ways? Will any plea to live the life of service have lasting influence if dissociated from him who gave us service as the law of life and whose presence makes service a delight and enthusiasm for humanity natural and spontaneous? A great apostle said, "We love him because he first loved us." He might have said with equal truth, "We love the brethren because we first loved him."—FREDERICK LYNETT, in The Christian Work and Evangelist.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—A despatch from Bristol, Pa., says: "Judge William C. Ryan, of Bucks County, has declared baseball on the First-day of the week illegal and has handed down an opinion sustaining the opinion of Justice of the Peace Tomlinson, of Langhorne. The charge was brought under the "blue laws" of 1794. Five persons were fined.

A reduction in the number of the cases of communicable diseases, except measles, is shown for the first six months of 1913, as compared with a similar period in 1912, in a statement lately issued by Dr. Joseph S. Neff, director of the Department of Public Health and Charities. During the period there were 616 cases of typhoid fever, or 151 less than in 1912, an average of 72 to every 100,000 of the city's population, as compared with 95 last year. Of the cases this year, the number per 100,000 in the various filtration districts were 103.7, whose water supply came from the Torresdale plant; 48.3 from the Torresdale high level; 34.7 from the Belmont; 61.1 from the Roxborough, and 46.2 from the Queen Lane. There were 1479 cases of diphtheria, or 138 less than a year ago; 1591 cases of chicken-pox, a reduction of 624; 2427 cases of scarlet fever, an increase of 960 cases; 559 cases of whooping cough, a reduction of 415; 2374 cases of tuberculosis, an increase of 12, and 996 cases of mumps, a decrease of 681. Measles, however, showed a great increase. There were 14,959 cases reported, as against only 669 in the corresponding period of 1912.

A despatch of the 10th from Washington says: "Drought and early frost in certain parts of the country brought the average condition of crops in the United States down to nearly 1 per cent. lower than on the same date last year and 1.7 per cent. lower than the average crop condition on Seventh Month 1st for some years past, ten years in most cases. Conditions are below the average, the Department of Agriculture announced to-day, in the Atlantic Coast and North Central States, except Virginia, Florida, Ohio, Wisconsin, Iowa and Nebraska. They are above average in the South Central and Far Western States, except Kentucky, Alabama, Montana, Utah and California.

Director Porter, of this city, has issued orders for the establishment of a school for policemen, the students to be trained in all branches of a patrolman's work.

An effort is being made in Washington, D. C., to rid that city of disease-ridden alleys. A committee of one hundred has been formed to accomplish it. One of that committee has lately said: "If we find that the death rate in the alleys is twice as high as it is on the street, is it not to our interest to make every effort to remedy the cause? Disease breeds in those places. When a plague enters a city it is invariably by way of its alleys and slums. The second reason may be based on an economic argument. The third reason, and the greatest one of all, is the moral obligation that comes with our sense of brotherhood."

A despatch of the 7th from Atlantic City, says: "War for the total elimination of the mosquito in Atlantic City was declared to-day by the announcement that the County Mosquito Extermination Commission will receive bids for the excavation of 200,000 square feet of small ditches to drain the meadows between the city and the mainland. Ten thousand feet of the ditching will be 20 inches wide, and an equal amount will be 30 inches wide. The commission has $20,000 available."

It is stated that Doctor Neff, Director of the Department of Health and Charities has said that the Bureau of Health is prepared to vaccinate with anti-typhoid fever vaccine all persons who may apply there for the treatment. Typhoid fever, like smallpox, he declares, can now be prevented by vaccination, which is especially advocated by him for those who, on account of their occupation or surroundings, are constantly exposed to the disease, including physicians, nurses, hospital attendants, travelers, soldiers and sailors. The efficiency of anti-typhoid fever vaccination in preventing or lessening the severity of the attack in the small proportion of cases in which the disease occurs in spite of vaccination has been established beyond question, Doctor Neff added.

"One hundred thousand conductors and trainmen on Eastern Railroads want their wages increased $17,000,000 a year. They may strike because the railroad managers' committee do not feel that any increase is warranted. The managers' committee, therefore, in justice to the public—who must pay the railroad wage bill in the end—and in justice to their companies, have refused to make the increase."

The Conference Committee of Managers, representing the forty-four Eastern railroads which refused conductors and trainmen an increase in wages of $17,000,000 a year, has inaugurated a wide publicity campaign for the purpose of informing the public why the demands of the conductors and trainmen were refused.

A despatch of the 8th from Topeka, Kansas, says: That the plague which killed more than 25,000 horses and mules in Kansas last year was not an infectious disease, but due to a poison, was the report yesterday of the special commission of the University of Kansas, appointed by the Governor to investigate. The report announced that there was no known cure, and that the climatic conditions which produced it probably will not prevail again in many years. A parasitic fungus growing on grains and other vegetation caused the deaths, according to report, and the poisonous condition in the pastures resulted from excessive moisture, accompanied by high temperatures.

A telegram from Dodge City says: The corn crop in this part of Kansas is threatened with destruction by grasshoppers, according to statements by leading farmers. The hot weather of the last week has hatched millions of the insects. Most of the wheat has been harvested.

A telegram from Detroit says: "Five thousand Michigan men, from nearly every walk of life, have recently set an example by building 250 miles of excellent automobile road in a single day. As a result of the labors of these Michigan people, there now is an unbroken line of graded highway for over 250 miles from Bay City to Mackinaw City, where two days before there was mile after mile of corduroy road, sand holes and swamp lands.

FOREIGN.—A despatch of the 11th from Rome says: "Torrential storms are raging throughout Italy, devastating the country and destroying the crops. The weather is cold, the thermometer falling in this city to-day to sixty degrees. Extraordinary falls of rain and hail have flooded the country surrounding Naples for the last two days. Torrents of water mixed with mud and ashes from Vesuvius have inundated the villages along the Gulf of Tarin. The temperature fell to-day almost to freezing-point, and snow is reported in the Alps. A violent tempest in the vicinity of the Straits of Messina, accompanied by heavy rainfall, has caused enormous damage around Messina. Crops have been destroyed and floods have compelled the population to leave the huts in which they have been living since the earthquake of a few years ago.

A despatch of the 9th from London in reference to ending the war in the Balkans, says: The outbreak of cholera at many points in the field of operations, combined with the exhaustion of the armies by the fierceness of the struggle, is calculated to render some such solution welcome to the combatants. There are indications to-day that the conflict may not be much further prolonged. The Bulgarian Government, it is reported, has sent a circular note to the European Powers, expressing its readiness to negotiate for peace.

It was stated from London on the 7th inst. that the American commission on agricultural organization, co-operation and rural credits arrived here to-day, and it was met by Walter Runciman, secretary of the Board of Agriculture, and several other officials of the Board. The program for the sojourn of the commission in England is in the hands of the Department of Agriculture. Accompanied by Government officials, the commission will inspect several co-operative agricultural enterprises. The delegates will be given a chance to talk with farmers who are actually engaged in co-operative farming. On the 11th the commission will leave for Ireland.

A French aviator has recently made a flight from Paris to Berlin without a stop in about nine hours.

A despatch of the 7th from Naples says: "The activity of Mount Vesuvius, which became pronounced last spring, is growing more accentuated. Studies by Professor Merzalli, director of the observatory, show that the volcano, from 1700 A. D. to date was never tranquil for a time surpassing seven consecutive years. At the end of the seven year period, which corresponds with the present year, that length of time having elapsed since the eruption of 1906, the volcano enters an eruptive stage. Professor Merzalli says, however, this does not mean a violent eruption necessarily is imminent."

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 87.

David E. Cooper and for Samuel R. Cooper, N. J.; Joseph G. Evans, N. J.; Jos. C. Exton for Amy S. L. Exton, N. J.; Ruth A. Clement, Phila.; Fred'k C. Louhoff, Va.; Sarah B. Leeds for Deborah C. Leeds, Pa.; Elizabeth T. Troth, Phila.; Hannah H. Ivins, N. J., $6, for herself, Martha T. DeCou and Dr. Howard Ivins; Leah J. Passon, Ia.; Anne Zoak, Pa.; Charles B. Weston, F'ki'd.; Barclay R. Leeds, Phila., $20, for himself, Daniel L. Leeds, Wm. H. Leeds, Wm. E. Tatum and others; Wm. F. Terrell, Va.; Anna Mary Kaighn, N. J.; John G. Willits, N. J.; Hannah E. Sheppard, Phila.; Caleb Wood, Phila.; Mary Scott Kay, Pa.; Mary C. Vail, Cal.; Susanna S. Kite, Phila.; Anna Morris, Phila.; Pennell L. Webster, Pa.; Elizabeth S. Smalley, Pa.; Edwin Balfinger, N. J., $6, for himself, Mark B. Will and Herbert Jones to No. 13, Vol. 88; Levi S. Thomas, Pa.; Joel Bean, Cal.; Geo. Abbott, N. J., and for Geo. Abbott, Jr.; R. Satterthwaite, Del.; Edw. Jefferies, Pa.; Geo. T. Slew, Ill., to 27, Vol. 87; E. H. Rieble, N. J., $8, for herself, E. Roberts Rieble, Wm. I. Rieble, and Francis R. Taylor; Chas. Francis Saunders, Cal.; Wm. Scattergood, Agt., Pa., $86, for himself, Elizabeth S. Brinton, Edward Brinton, Mary B. Bailey, Jane M. Cope, David Cope, Gilbert Cope, Morris S. Cope, Aaron S. Edkin, Mary E. Eldridge, T. Clarkson Eldridge, Rebecca F. Evans, George Forsythe, E. Malin Hoopes, Wm. R. Hoopes, Ralston R. Hoopes, Sarah T. House, Jane B. Jacobs, Elizabeth D. Meredith, Thomas S. Mellor, George B. Mellor, Elizabeth W. Moore, Mary E. Roberts, Hannah H. Savery, Chas. C. Scattergood, Rachel W. Scott, Lena Sharpless, Ann Sharpless and for Thos. Sharpless, Wm. T. Sharpless, M. D., and Isaac Sharpless, Deborah C. Smedley, Roland Smedley, Elizabeth S. Taylor, Jane B. Temple, Enos E. Thatcher, Jane S. Warner and for Benjamin S. Lamb, Joseph E. Meyers and Martha Price, Anna Webb, Deborah J. Windle and Philena S. Yarnall; Sarah N. Lippincott, N. J.; Daniel G. Garwood, Agt., N. J., $56, for J. W. Nicholson, Jos. Stokes, M. D., Caroline Maule, Ebenezer Roberts, S. N. and A. B. Warrington, Henry W. Moore, Anna Mary Woodward, M. and R. Matlack, Martha E. Stokes, Rachel W. Borton, Wm. J. Borton, Miriam L. Roberts, Nathan H. Roberts, Ellis Haines, S. P. and M. W. Leeds, Wm. E. Darnell, Edwin R. Bell, Howard H. Bell, Jos. H. Matlack, Gideon B. Contant, Allen Maxwell, Mary W. Roberts, Chas. C. Haines, Benjamin S. DeCou, Wm. Matlack, Wm. Matlack, Jr., Henrietta Willits and Ida W. Roberts; Chas. Lippincott, Gtn.; Lydia S. Ballinger, N. J.; Wm. Berry, Gtn.; Sarah A. Hinchshaw, Kans.; Joseph Roberts, Pa.; Rebecca W. Warrington, N. J.; John W. Hilyard, N. J.; E. J. and S. Barton, N. J.; James F. Reid, Pa.; Edward F. Stratton, Agt., O., $17, for Catharine M. Thomas, Annie C. Bonsall, Geo. Blackburn, Clarkson S. French, Harry E. Moore, Elisha B. Steer, Rebecca S. Hodgkin, and Elisha L. French, $3, for half Vol. 86 and Vol. 87; Margaret W. Haines, Pa.;

Remittances received after Third-day noon will not appear in the receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

DURING Seventh and Eighth Months of this year the meetings at Newton Meeting House, Camden, N. J., will be discontinued.

HARRISBURG Friends are arranging to have their annual picnic in Reservoir Park, Harrisburg, on the afternoon and evening of Seventh-day, nineteenth inst. A religious meeting is expected to be held in the evening and visiting Friends will be welcomed. Those from out of town who desire to be with us and remain over for the meeting on First-day

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, SEVENTH MONTH 24, 1913.

No. 4.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to
EDWIN P. SELLEW OR THE FRIEND,
NO. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

INTERVISITATION.

In a report of Westmoreland Quarterly Meeting (England), held during the Sixth Month last, the Visitation and Extension Committee informed the meeting that during the year eighty-four visits had been made to meetings by thirty-seven Friends. Many of the Quarterly Meetings in England have similar committees, and their reports during several years past would indicate that the activity of Westmoreland Friends is by no means unprecedented. Intervisitation has thus come into prominence as an important instrument of quickening the organic life of the Society. The word itself (intervisitation) may strike some Friends as new. The process is as old as the founding of the Society. Clarkson in his "Portraiture of Quakerism" points it out as a vital principle of the organization.

The changed social conditions of the past fifty years have seemed to make the old-time methods of entertaining Friends in our homes impossible. Until adjustments to new conditions are completed this is a distinct loss to the Society. Indeed, new conditions and new arrangements do not seem to permit quite the former freedom of intercourse, quite the former heart to heart touch of the old-fashioned family visiting. And yet under new arrangements Friends are getting together. What with Conferences and Old Scholars' Associations and Summer Schools do we yet lack? Slowly but quite surely one other means is now appealing liberally to the interest of Friends in Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. During a single fortnight of last month three meetings for worship, we might call them annual meetings for a better name, were reported to have brought together nearly one thousand people. In a seventeenth century journal these all might have been recorded as "glorious meetings." All three of them were in neighborhoods where Friends are nearly extinct. One was a meeting in what has been a closed meeting-house. Perhaps it is not fair to speak of these occasions as instances of "intervisitation." They, at least, have much of the merit of this ancient practice.

One other point we wish to observe in regard to them. The idea of an arranged annual meeting to bring Friends to isolated localities also belongs to the early history of the Society. It is not an innovation. The so-called Half Year's Meeting seems to have been little else than such an occasion. The hardships and perils Friends endured in the seventeenth century and in the early part of the eighteenth century to attend these Half Year Meetings might well put us in this comfort-loving age to shame. If the revival amongst us in holding such meetings is a revival of this ancient spirit let us take heart. A closed or neglected Friends' Meeting-house is a sad commentary upon Quakerism. We may be able to explain to others the apparent decline of interest and zeal which it indicates. Our explanations have more force if backed by an effort to show once a year or oftener that the Society itself still has vitality. But there is one other cause for encouragement for the effort. In nearly all of these abandoned or neglected centres there is such a hospitality of feeling for what Friends stood for in the neighborhood that there is a most liberal response of attendance at such appointed meetings. Truth seems to be opening a field in this direction. It is to be hoped Friends will be prepared for the harvest! J. H. B.

ADDRESS TO THE GRADUATING CLASS AT CHEYNEY INSTITUTE FOR COLORED YOUTH, 1913.

ALFRED C. GARRETT.

A little over a year ago I stood before a wonderful statue in Athens, one of those ancient Greek statues in bronze, of life size, over two thousand years old, yet practically perfect—the statue of a young Greek athlete or hero in all the wonder of his symmetry and power and beauty. Whom it represents seems not to be known; it is hardly one of the very famous statues; yet I have never seen or heard of any to equal it as the perfect representation, not of a god, but of a man! I believe it will always remain to me as the symbol of human perfection in the outward sense; if we could but add to it the beauty of character, the spiritual perfections, brought in by Christianity, we should have a perfect human being indeed.

Some such ideal should be the aim of education, a perfected human personality—first in the person to be educated himself, and then, through his service, in others also. And I hope that the Greek concept of perfected personality, which some think the human race has never since attained, as well as the ancient Greeks attained it—I hope that this concept may never be entirely lost sight of. Indeed, one wonders whether this thought of a perfected personality is not a higher, finer test of our education and civilization than much that has prevailed in modern times, which seems to make the test only that of our material output, our efficiency as to what we make, or do; in a word, not what we really are, but what we are able to make.

However, the educational world seems now to be largely engaged upon a different task, a better one we trust; in fact, a kind of combination of the two programs above mentioned, viz: not perfection of personality aimed at directly for itself, and not solely the "output" without regard to its effect on the person who produced it; but the perfecting of the person by the process of producing something worthy, moulding character, moulding a race, by action and the reaction of skilful effort. And you, I take it, members of the graduating class, have been in the midst of this fine modern process, gathering in yourselves the benefits of Cheyney, an institution where this method is specially and effectively carried out.

You have been passing through what may be called the era of enrichment in human life, when the many varied and rich ingredients of our wonderful existence may be absorbed and incorporated, and woven into one's texture by select action and habit; and now you are about to carry the process on into wider and more practical spheres, and have before you the sense of larger opportunity.

Now my concern for those in this situation is that they should realize fully their great wealth in this matter of opportunity and should not squander it; but use thoroughly and well and to the very full the advantages in the midst of which they are moving, which are theirs now and may not be found to come again. So only will they be successful.

This is a somewhat uncertain time, just at the transition from one's education to one's life work—a time when one may lose his bearings. It is therefore very needful not to drop the activities and interests that have been established in the educational period, but to carry them straight on in ever increasing development and efficiency into practical life. In this kind of education that you are receiving, it should be especially true that our education is never ended. Let us be careful not to slacken effort at this point; for when there is abundance of hope we are apt to be easy going; when we have plenty of chances we feel in less hurry to grasp them and may become aimless; we like simply to revel in good fortune, instead of using it as capital to produce more success. There is a need to lay plans wisely and well, and to continue diligent and vigilant.

A good friend of yours and of all of us, President Sharpless of Haverford, made a remark some twenty years ago, when I was in college, that has always stuck in my memory; he said "Experience proves that if a man is ever going to be distinguished, he will show it before he is twenty-five." Now if this is true, there is not much time to be lost, those who mean success will watch how the days are passing. In the next eight or ten years much if not most of the materials of success are to be gathered, and your first strong work is to be done.

This, your golden age, is also your golden opportunity. Do not dissipate, but rather discipline. For, as the greatest poet said, —

"There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which taken at the flood leads on to fortune;
Neglected, all the voyage of their life
Is bound with shallows and with miseries."

And that flood tide is likely to come to you in the next ten years. We are to continue our education then—to continue planning for a perfected personality in the midst of practical life.

There is one simple, often mentioned way of looking at one's personality in planning to improve it, the way I used to think of things as a boy at college, in aiming at an even all-round development; that is, that we are made up of body, mind and soul, so that we have physical interests, intellectual interests and spiritual interests, all equally to consider. A well-rounded, complete, noble nature, is one in which all three of these are well attended to, and a right proportion is preserved among them. A wise, planned life, therefore, is one which plans right proportion and place to the need of each, body, mind and soul.

Let us then, turn a word on the bodily or physical. This is fundamental, mental and moral success are built up on it. We all know the vital importance of clean, well-regulated lives, hygienic rules, exercise, all kinds of health-giving habits, if we are to be successful in our life work. In this "epoch of enrichment" in which you are, nothing is much more important to enrich life than rich red blood. Guard this treasure of physical health, never squander it. Idleness or overwork, dissipation or any overdoing will squander it and hinder success. Let there be plenty of vigorous exercise and recreation but no excess of any kind. Do not let any success striven after now handicap your success in life as a whole.

Man is an unusually long-lived animal; the race of life is a long-distance race; and he needs staying qualities to finish well. Life is not a hundred-yard dash in the heyday of youth; it is more like a ten-mile run. So do not spurt on the first lap, but reserve your breath and your nerve, lest you fall out before this race is run.

Just here, speaking of the physical interests and before proceeding to the intellectual, I find a suspicion arising that there are faculties of great importance for us to develop which it is hard to place exactly in the sphere either of the body, the mind or the soul.

Take even such a thing as manual skill: to which does it belong? It belongs in the bodily sphere, of course, we are inclined to say; but all skill has close connection with the mind; and it also has important effects in the moral regions, and so is connected with religion and the soul. Qui laborat orat: he who works prays. Or take morality itself, it is of highest importance to the body; yet it is in closest connection with the soul; it is an essential to both. A third class of faculties—the esthetic or artistic instincts—do they belong to the body, the mind or the soul? They seem to partake of all three—they have a large place in the sensuous region, they must pass through the intellect, and they may reach to the higher, finer instincts of the soul; they seem to bind all together in a light and graceful bond. So such faculties as these three, the manual, moral and esthetic, were not clearly included in my boxhood classification, yet are of high importance for us to remember and attend to in seeking perfect development. It was only the day before yesterday that I heard our honored Mayor, Rudolph Blankenburg, in addressing a graduating class, declare: "The trouble with education has been, that it has kept head and hand too far apart. We need an education that brings head and hand together—and heart too, for that matter; head and hand and heart drawn close together, and all working together; that is what we need, and that is what we are seeking in our education to-day." Did not our good Mayor, in these words, come close to our present thought of the importance and close interrelation of body, mind and soul, as found in such things as the manual, moral and esthetic interests of life? It is in the unity and concentration of personality that power and integrity and success are to be found.

Dr. G. Stanley Hall has taught us of the close connection there is between well-chosen muscular effort and training of the will. If one suffers from a weak will, one of the best helps he can get is to undertake muscular training, seeking the development of force and manual dexterity, whether athletic or industrial; so closely do muscle and will work together. This is the great justification of guarded athletics as a part of education; it trains the will; and as the will is the chief instrument with which to secure morality, it is evident that right bodily training directly helps morals. We can all feel that when we put forth all our bodily force in pleasurable action, and under the control of skill or "headwork," as athletes call it, to the attainment of a pleasurable end, we are exerting our wills—giving exercise to our force of will, lending zest and tone to the will, in a word, developing will-power. And this is true also in the attainment of manual dexterity in industrial pursuits. All carefully directed and selected habitual action, accompanied by a sense of skill, intelligence and interest, must bear good fruit in us, of stronger, steadier wills and sounder moral tone, and even when somewhat monotonous and difficult for human nature to sustain, must be building in us habits that will serve us and bear us up in after life.

Have you ever considered the blessedness of habit? It may be hard pioneering to establish a habit; we may seem to need almost a taskmaster's lash to keep us to the first drudgery; but in after days we are thankful for that habit. Just as the pioneers in our own forests had to struggle with enemies and beasts and the innumerable host of great stubborn forest trees, yet now we enjoy the peaceful farms they cleared; so all pioneering is hard, but the fruits are peaceful. We revert to the hard work of former days with more or less of ease and delight. I have seen this in so simple a matter as learning Latin; in trying to help my children in it, I find the work is all hard and distasteful to them; they would like to cast to the four winds the poor old dead, dry language, and I recall that so it was to me also in that first pioneering, but now it is a pleasure to go back to it, to puzzle out the sentences, to gather by degrees the thought, and then enjoy the literary result. The old habit now makes a pleasant pursuit. Or take the contrast between the attitude of a young man just entering business and an old man nearly ready to give it up; to the young man, the restraints, confinement and hard work are often only distasteful drudgery, he is pioneering, but to the old man, oftentimes his best comfort and support is still to come down to his office, sit at the accustomed desk, attend to a little correspondence and accounts, and when he stops all this, he becomes a prey to discouragement and disease, so great a help to him in the end was the early hard-won habit of industry. "Blessed be drudgery!" Let all be encouraged in what may seem the painful effort of manual pursuits. "In due season we shall reap if we faint not."

One of my school-boy recollections is that of hearing Samuel Longfellow, brother of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, when speaking in our school, remind us that his brother, the great poet, said, "Genius is simply the infinite capacity for taking pains." It is a saying that has often been quoted since, but I trust it is still useful to spur us on to faithful, patient effort. "Genius is the infinite capacity for taking pains."

Now as to the esthetic element in our work—that seems to me of great importance too. It is the sweetening that we may mix into it. Is it not this artistic interest in the thing we are making that lifts it out of the mere category of an "output," and by linking it with our higher faculties, and exercising them, gives it a part in the development of our character? In looking over the exhibits of your work in the adjoining buildings, the artistic character of most of them is what was most striking to me and most satisfying; they are not only things of use, but things of beauty and delight. And to be able thus to create objects which, while primarily intended for usefulness, also have that touch of grace, of individuality, of personal pride of craftsmanship and good taste, so as to ornament your homes while completing their convenience, and to raise the mind from the commonplace round by an appeal to the higher faculties, that surely is a veritable mission to one's people.

To return now to our first line of thought—body, mind and soul; we have touched on bodily interests, and those, such as the manual, moral and esthetic, which are connected with the body, yet extend into the other faculties also. Let me now say just a word as to the mind's interests, the intellectual faculties purely such. I wish it had been practicable to be better acquainted with the student life of this Institute in order to know how far the delights of the intellectual life are cultivated and known here. I know you have an excellent English department, which promises very well indeed for the purpose I allude to—the pure delight in the best minds, that is, the best books, of the world. In them we find the highest thought, the finest feeling, produced by the whole human race, and in a measure may make these our own. As Milton said in words I often revert to—"Many a man lives a burden to the earth; but a good book is the precious life blood of a master spirit, treasured up and embalmed on purpose to a life beyond life." If our regular duties keep us in manual pursuits, may it not be of special importance for well-balanced development that we should have as a pastime an intellectual companionship with such master spirits, as a relief and release from those duties? So I specially commend the acquirement of a good habit of reading for pleasure—certainly not novel reading—but reading from the best minds of the world, essayists, historians, poets; and the beginning of a little library of one's own, of choice books worthy to be often returned to and pondered over, till they become life-companions. I can commend this as one of the purest pleasures and most happy resources that I know.

And now, in concluding, let me speak to you regarding our spiritual or religious interests. I almost wish the subject of our moral faculties had been reserved for treatment till now, if only to indicate that morals cannot be separated from religion but are a vital and essential part of it. This may seem obvious, but that we know how men sometime are diligent in religious things and yet at the same time, alas! are no strangers to immorality. True religion, the true soul's interests, must always mean the binding close together of these two things, the moral and the spiritual; and in what I say of spiritual things the moral is meant to be assumed.

The spiritual or religious interests then are the ones that are most apt to be neglected of all three—those of body, mind and soul; and yet most people will acknowledge in theory that they are the most important of all. We therefore need to be specially on our guard not to omit them from our lives; but to work against the natural tendency to ignore them. For no life is full or perfect, much less a noble life, which is not spiritual.

How often you have gathered within these very walls to think on religious things, and hear good counsel together. Did you know how important it was? Perhaps the hours seemed tedious, or the words unsuited to your taste and need. But I believe to some these hours will be remembered as their chief blessing in the years to come. Let me ask you to cherish this memory, and may it prove a benediction to you. One thing I want to say as to the spiritual:—A few moments ago I spoke of life as a long-distance run, and so requiring foresight and endurance. Life is longer than I thought on then; taken in its whole, it is nothing less than life everlasting; be still more careful, therefore, and use a yet larger foresight here, that no success that you attain to now shall handicap you for the success that is eternal. The race of our life must be a long one to last forever; keep in sound training, run the first round (which is upon this earth) quietly and simply, set the pace that will last, thinking on the recompense of reward; and then "run with patience the race that is set before you, looking unto the author and finisher of our faith."

Or it is a voyage—a voyage into a very distant clime. Oh! when we have crossed the bar and put out into the perilous unknown seas of that great future life, may we not find that through default of foresight here, our bark is "bound with shallows and with miseries,"—but plows the splendid blue of the deep water. What is the deep water? It is God's will; and we find it by ranging ourselves on his side. He who is the beginning and end of all things, the basis and background of the world, the soul and heart of the universe—can we afford to neglect such a Being? To do so means failure; it is suicidal. But success, power, and victory must be for those who are in league with him; the very stars in their courses will fight for them.

My young people, if any of you have not yet decided to be on the winning side, I would do it to-day—your Graduation day. Then life will be well-planned; the most important thing will be given its important place, and all other interests will fall in harmony, and "make one music as before, yet vaster."

FEELING ELDERS: THE OIL AND THE WINE.—I left London, and arrived at Dunstable, the next day at Northampton, and attended their meeting on Fifth-day. Mournful and sackcloth were my lot. I had lost my beloved, my stay and my staff. I endeavored to seek him, but I found him not; I hung my harp upon the willow and wept when I remembered Zion. I longed to feel the sweetness of mind I felt after I had requested the certificate. On First-day, in the afternoon, two tender Friends called and sat with me. I began to rise a little by their sympathy, and by an affectionate letter one of them put into my hand. I often wish our feeling elders would not withhold little offerings of duty when committed to their charge, it sometimes proves a balm, like oil and wine, that heals the wound. I believe this proving dispensation was of service, by showing the necessity of carefully endeavoring to keep to the root, the precious Seed, the only safe director. He in tender mercy remembered me, when I had no strength to crave his help, in a strange land.—Memoranda of Mary Hagger.

THE FATHER'S BOSOM.

"The only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father," (John 1: 18.)

He never left the bosom,
The Son was always there;
The Word, the First Begotten,
From everlasting dear,
The Father's Well Beloved,
The bosom was his home,
Though He, for man's redemption,
Was seen on earth to roam.

He left, indeed, the glory,
But quitted not the love;
Behold, over Jordan's waters,
The pure, the spotless Dove;
And hear, upon the mountain,
Where heavenly radiance shone,
The voice from glory saying,
"My well-loved Son."

When sin to Him was reckoned,
And He on Calvary died,
Jehovah's face was hidden—
"My God! My God!" He cried;
Sin there to Him imputed,
Jehovah's holy eye
In justice was averted,
And hence the bitter cry.

Yet, unto death obedient,
The Father's love was his,
And from the grave He raised Him
To everlasting bliss;
The bond of love, so holy,
Not earth or hell could sever,
Nor render void the bosom,
His dwelling-place forever.

—ALBERT MIDLAND.

FRIENDS TO ASK LAW TAKING "QUAKER" OFF TRADEMARKS.

SOCIETY ESPECIALLY OBJECTS TO THE USE OF THE NAME IN WHISKY ADVERTISEMENTS.

If the delegates at the New York Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends, who for the last four days have been in session at the Friends' Meeting House, 144 East Twentieth Street, have their way, the familiar figure of the Quaker in the garb of his society will soon disappear from advertisements.

Manufacturers of goods which range from whisky to corsets, and which bear the name, will be forced to change their trademarks.

For many years, the Friends declare, the name Quaker has been used to advertise certain lines of merchandise and the Society objects. They oppose this because they declare, "It is immoral for any one to trade for his own profit upon the supposed virtues of another, and a public indecency to exploit for that purpose the name of a religious denomination."

"If Quaker whisky, why not Baptist beer?" said one of them. "If your automobile is equipped with Quaker tires, why not carry a Presbyterian pocketbook? If your wife's dress is trimmed with Quaker lace why not buy a Lutheran looking glass for her? If you use Quaker red paint why not Episcopalian paint when you turn your attention to your house? If you have Quaker oats for breakfast why not get up your appetite for dinner with a Methodist martini or a Catholic cocktail."

ESPECIALLY OBJECT TO QUAKER RYE

The Quaker admit that the one that rangles most is a sign which has been tarring him in the face all over the country. "Quaker Rye—Honest as It Name" Painted on the sign in the form of a Quaker dressed in the old-time garb of the abolitionist.

The Quaker does not like it, and, in an effort to have a law passed to prohibit the use of the name of a religious denomination for a brand of merchandise, will appeal to other religious denominations to join in the passage of the bill.

To obtain the help of a committee on special legislation which has had the matter in charge for some time, presented a report to the Yearly Meeting, and it was decided to show the other churches just what might happen to them if a law was not passed forbidding the use of the names of their denominations for trade purposes.

"Baptist Beer is the Best Booze."
"Methodist Martinis Make Multitudes Merry."
"Episcopalian Paint Covers a Multitude of Sins."
"Catholic Cocktails, a Cure for All Cakes."
"Presbyterian Purses for Plethoric Pockets."
"Lutheran Looking Glasses Give Pious Reflections."

WILL ASK AID OF RELIGIOUS PRESS.

These were but a few of the suggestions which the committee declared might offer themselves to some enterprising advertising manager. At first it was thought that through an advertising campaign, using these slogans as examples, some good might be accomplished, but the matter was finally turned over to the committee with power to act and the suggestion that they enlist the aid of the religious press of the country in the effort to pass the law which they seek.

The report of the committee declares that when last year they sought to have such a bill passed their purpose was defeated by the argument of commercial concerns using the name Quaker as a trademark.

The report quotes several advertisements in which the name Quaker is applied to merchandise in a manner which they deem offensive, and urges the Friends to use all possible means to do away with this use of their name.

The New York Yearly Meeting was the 218th annual one held in this city, and was attended by more than two hundred men and women, representing the branches of the Society in this state and Vermont. One of the questions considered at the meeting was capital punishment, and it was urged that all possible action should be taken for the abolition of this penalty for murder.—The North American, Sixth Month 2, 1913.

[The Editor acknowledges a measure of sympathy with the feelings of those who fear the effect of much personal reference in THE FRIEND. He also unites in the view, frequently expressed of late, that interest is often added to the reading of an article by a knowledge of its author, and that accounts of meetings are similarly affected by a recital of the names of those engaged in vocal service. This subject having recently been considered in a meeting of "The Contributors," the following view of one Friend in 1864, which lately came to the Editor's notice, seems peculiarly interesting.]

FOR "THE FRIEND."

CONTRIBUTIONS FOR "THE FRIEND."

The writer of these remarks reads with satisfaction these essays, and is often comforted and instructed by them, and by no means would say a word to discourage such productions, but acknowledges that a fear often attends his mind as to any real use there is in giving the locality of the writer's residence, or the initials of his name. And may there not be a danger to some extent by thus bringing himself to such public notice, of fostering an ostentatious feeling in his breast, which would prove in the end to be to his disadvantage. "When thou doest thine alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." On one occasion when Samuel Fothergill signed a production of his pen, "Philanthropos," he says, "Inquire not who is the author of these remarks, but whether they are true." As the contributions, above alluded to, come under the observation of the Editor before being made public, any thing calculated to turn the attention of the reader to the writer might be safely avoided.

First Month, 1864.

We take care of our health, we lay up money, we make our roof tight and our clothing sufficient, but who provides wisely that we shall not be wanting in the best property of all—friends?—EMERSON.

Reprint from The British Friend.

RELIEF WORK IN TURKEY.

Letter From Stephen Hobhouse.

There is a point in the ruinous chain of the land-walls of Stamboul, where these rugged fortifications dip gently down to follow the contour of a valley perhaps three-quarters of a mile in breadth. A dirty stream pierces the wall at the lowest point and brings moisture and fruitfulness to a wide expanse of market gardens that run like a wedge into the city's heart. On the southern brow of this garden-valley, close to the great wall, stands "Ghazi Achmet Djami," the Mosque of Ahmed the Glorious—"our Mosque" as I love to call it. With its single lofty minaret and its grey-white dome it is a conspicuous object from the central parts of the town. We are close to one of the principal gates, and soldiers and military convoys often pass within a few yards of us; and yet the entrance to the mosque is so secluded that few passers-by find their way into the court-yard. It has been my duty to go there day after day for some five weeks, and I have got to love the place. A picturesque and pathetic drama is being enacted there. The white-turbaned mollahs and softas, lazy parasites, as they seem to be, of the mosque, have had a rude invasion. One of them told me the Government should have forced the rich to give up their mansions to the homeless refugees instead of turning into a hotel what was intended for a house of prayer. And now, to make matters tenfold worse, unbelievers have settled down in the place and by their ostentatious charity are attracting three hundreds of other war sufferers from the district around.

The wounded pride of these Moslem clerics is natural enough; and yet some of them, I fancy, can forget that we are foreigners and heathen, and rejoice with us to see their Prophet's precepts of charity fulfilled at their doors. The motley crowd of peasants adds life and warmth to a scene that without them is still full of quiet beauty. The mosque is capacious and airy, walls and dome painted with an intricate tracery of rich and well-matched colors. In other mosques that I have visited the atmosphere is damp and stilling, and every square yard of floor space is taken up for the curtained "squatting places" of the peasants. But our mosque has never, I think, been thus overcrowded; and since the spring began a number of families have moved out into the cloistered court outside. And so there is plenty of open space in the centre of the mosque; room enough for the children to chase each other there, and to play marbles. Our people too have got accustomed to live in public; they have dispensed for the most part with curtains, and very few of the women make any pretence of covering their faces when a strange man visits them. That is perhaps one good thing that has come to them from the rude uprooting that they have undergone. Some of the newly arrived refugee women are still afraid to be seen looking a man in the face; I hate to have to carry on conversations with these muffled figures.

We have had much sickness in our mosque, and my visits inside the building have usually had reference to the sick folk. An English Red Cross Sister, who has been through both the Boer and the Greco-Turkish wars, is working with us. She is admirable in her skilful treatment and common sense. Her simple remedies and kindly manner are a wonderful comfort to these trustful people. I expect many of their illnesses are brought on by depression and sorrow; and a little loving encouragement, administered with a Burroughes and Wellcome tabloid, goes a long way towards curing them. We are able to order milk for the ailing, and that is a great boon.

Death has been a visitor at our mosque several times during the past few weeks. We have had an outbreak of rather virulent small-pox among the children. After two children had died in one night I went round to the Municipal Health Officer and induced him to send round a doctor to vaccinate everyone and to have the two other children affected taken to a hospital. The vaccination went off happily enough, and it was a pretty sight to see the women and children baring their arms in the most eager and interested way for the operation. But we had a distressing time in getting our two little sufferers into the motor ambulance which was to take them to the hospital. The family protested with weeping and wailing, saying the children were sure to die there. Finally we got leave for the distressed mothers to go also to hospital with their darlings. (This is one advantage of the Turkish hospitals, which are otherwise dreary places, that they allow mothers to go with sick children, and children with sick mothers.) We saw them go with heavy hearts, for the poor little things looked as if they would die in any case; but for the sake of the others we had to send them. One of them was the boy of our head cook, Osman, a fine, dignified man. Fortunately he was able to visit the hospital three days after, and his visit dispelled most of his prejudice against it.

Two days later I found the mother returned, and relating her experiences to a group of neighbors sitting round. Alas! the child was dead. When I spoke to his father, he only said quietly, "It is the will of God. We must all die sometime. Only I would have liked to have had the child near me when it died." I can understand; I would not like to die in a Turkish hospital. Even so, another poor woman in a mosque, whom we were going to send to hospital—a sufferer from some painful internal disease—said to us: "If I am not going to recover, please tell me so, and don't let me stay in Hospital. I want to die here among my own people." They take the visitations of death very calmly, these peasants, as is usual among Moslems; so different from the wild demonstrations of grief in which the Christians here are wont to indulge. And besides, the sufferings and sorrows of the last six months have hardened them, I suppose. I got quite angry one day with our excellent "Chanish," or Head-man, for the smiling way in which he brought me back three milk tickets one morning, saying that they would no longer be wanted, as the sick folk to whom they belonged had died since the evening before. In a very few hours and very quietly, after the women have washed the bodies and laid them out, the dead are carried out to rest in the great cemetery that fringes the city walls.

Wonderfully docile and easy to manage are these ignorant Moslems, herded together in so uncomfortable a way on the mosque floor. Considering the circumstances they keep the place beautifully clean and orderly. A crowd of English people of a corresponding social status would be infinitely more dirty, more discontented, and more miserable under similar conditions; so would Greeks or Armenians. These Turks will beg and tell any number of lies, if they think they will thereby get something out of you; but they do not for the most part grumble or quarrel. When we go into the mosque they are mostly sitting cross-legged on the ground round their little bit of charcoal fire; perhaps they are heating on it some water for washing, or else the food which we gave them a few hours ago. But even now, when spring is come, they love to warm themselves over their glowing charcoal; sick people in their last hours will be propped up to crouch over the little bit of fuel, rather than lie down under their quilts. Some of the women may be knitting or sewing, and we encourage them to do crochet work or embroidery. But everywhere they will greet us with a smile; and the children, unless they are sick, are nearly always smiling—dear, delicious children they are, like all children the world over.

In the midst of much that is depressing, my heart is full of thankfulness that I have been given this task to do; yes, and of praise, too, that no failure or disease can entirely efface the image of God in which man was made.

STEPHEN HOBHOUSE.

11 RUE SERRIS, Constantinople, [Fourth Month] 24, 1913.

THERE is so much to be set right in the world, there are so many to be led and helped and comforted, that we must continually come in contact with such in our daily life. Let us only take care that we do not miss our turn of service, and pass by those to whom we might have been sent on an errand straight from God.—Selected.

For "THE FRIEND."

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER, HIS LIFE AND WORK.*

Another life of Whittier? Is it worth while? The author answers this question so well herself that we may quote from her introduction:

"The question whether such a life as I have been able to write is called for I must leave with those who asked me to undertake the work. But I am confident that the consideration of Whittier's nobility of character, his courage, self-sacrifice and beautiful spirit in connection with all he undertook should inspire many hearts to cultivate more of that faithful adherence to truth so conspicuous in the poet. If my work fails in this it will be due to the portrayal of my hero, not to the hero himself. . . . To my American friends I feel a word of apology is due"—she adds—"for my writing of Whittier without having visited their great continent. This has not been possible, owing to pressure of work, and I must ask them to allow my love for their poet and for the American people to overshadow the blemishes that I fear they may discover."

In closing the introduction she says: "The curse of slavery has not ceased." If Whittier's life can encourage "a sturdy hate of wrong, a fine sense of right, pity for the oppressed, and a determination to carry on a strong opposition to all unrighteousness, we shall each have to do our part to abolish everything in the nature of slavery everywhere."

These words are perhaps addressed especially to the author's own countrymen, since she also says: "Unspeakeable cruelties exist; and we are not as a nation keeping our solemn pledges on behalf of the colored races," but surely there is much that needs reform in our own land, and this life of Whittier brings out and emphasizes that side of his character so strongly that it must stir up and strengthen the spirit of service in those who read it.

The admirable conciseness of the volume may also be commended, in this day, when what our young people call "slow" books are not in favor.

Perhaps the points which the author most emphasizes are these:

That Whittier's religious faith not only animated his poems but his life. "Whittier never confused theology and religion; one a science, the other a life. 'I regard Christianity,' he says, 'as a life rather than a creed.'"

The story is told of a poor fallen woman in a New York prison, who appeared to resist every effort that was made to reach and ar-use her better self. One day, after an unusually violent outburst of temper, the Superintendent took her a volume of Whittier's poems, asked her if she would read "The Eternal Goodness," and then left her alone. Returning, he found her still reading, her eyes showing that she had been crying. "That is beautiful reading," she said, softly, "but is it true what it says? Does God love me?"

When such stories as these reached the poet's ears, he heard them with deep humility—almost pain—yet when his own dark hours came and his sensitive nature made them dark indeed, he could truly write: "to one fixed stake my spirit clings, I know that God is good."

Just after the death of his precious sister, Elizabeth, his comrade, he wrote to her friend, Lucy Earcom: "I feel it difficult to realize all I have lost, but I sorrow without repining, and as in a feeling of calm submission to the Will which I am bound to obey, and again, 'It can help it I do not intend the sorrow to lead to be gloomy and forbidding through my selfish resentment.' She (her sister) would not have it so. She would wish it cheerful with the old familiar faces of the friends whom she loved and still love."

When he wrote to Sumner of his mother's death, saying, "The world looks far less than it did when she was with us. Half the motive power of life is lost," he still "did not indulge in the sorrow." Though he lamented in himself a lack of patience, and whimsically said he "had to manufacture it."

*John G. Whittier, by George King Lewis. H. and L. Bro., Publishers, 1, C. London, 1904, pp. 101.

how large his patience was, even with those whose views differed widely from his own! This is well illustrated in the incident of his being asked to write an ode to the memory of General Gordon; which is, however, too long to quote here.

His sense of humor is well portrayed, and also the interest in human life in its more trivial as well as its greater incidents, which made him such a favorite with his village neighbors. The story of the house-warming for his washerwoman, "Kate Choate," with the verses he wrote for the occasion; and the "surprise party" for another humble neighbor, of which the village paper said that Whittier, the originator of the party, "disclaimed all merit in the matter, saying it was not his nor anybody's doing—it grew out of its own fitness—it made itself."—are pleasant illustrations of this, and prove that he had learned for himself the lesson of which he wrote to Celia Thaxter thus, "I am glad to learn that thee are making thyself happy in making others so. Probably there is no other way. My happiness has pretty much come in that manner and my unhappiness from the selfish pursuit of enjoyment to the neglect of duty."

The second point of especial interest in this biography to at least one reader is the fact that so many of the reforms in which Whittier took a heart-felt interest are still questions of the day, and that his views were so right and sensible that they are as helpful now as when he wrote them. Take as one example his letter on "female suffrage," written in 1860, when he had been asked to attend and take part in a convention to be held at Newport. After explaining why he could not do this, he goes on to say—"The sacred memory of mother and sister; the wisdom and dignity of women of my own religious communion who have been accustomed to something like equality in rights as well as duties; my experience as a co-worker with noble and self-sacrificing women, as graceful and helpful in their household duties, as firm and courageous in their public advocacy of unpopular truth, the steady friendships which have inspired and strengthened me; and the reverence and respect which I feel for human nature, irrespective of sex, compel me to look with something more than acquiescence on the effort you are making."

After confessing that he is not able to foresee all the consequences of this great social and political change, he adds, "But of this I am at least sure—it is always safe to do right, and the truest expedience is simple justice." Alluding to the fears which he "understands without sharing," that the ballot given to woman will rob her of her womanly graces, he says, "But in this matter it seems to me that we can trust Nature, stronger than statutes or conventions, she will be conservative of all that the true man loves and honors in woman."

"On the other hand, I do not see that the exercise of the ballot by women will prove a remedy for all the evils of which she justly complains. It is her right, as truly as mine, and when she asks for it, it is something less than manhood to withhold it. But, unsupported by a more practical education, higher aims, and a deeper sense of responsibilities of life and duty, it is not likely to prove a blessing in her hands any more than in man's." With all our discussion of the subject have we any better summing up than the last paragraph?

The third striking point is that the life of our poet so truly exemplifies the text, "The path of the just is as a shining light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day." When one stands in the little home at Amesbury and realizes how small and narrow, viewed in the light of our more complex standard of living, Whittier's life might have been to one who had not the poet's nature (never to him!)—it is easy to lose sight of the fact that despite its earlier poverty, and later ill-health, its loss of many dear ones and its exclusion from the closest of human ties, Whittier's life was a happy one in the truest sense. In this latest biography the sequence of events and the expressions quoted show most clearly that this was so.

His genius was more and more fully recognized as the years passed on. Each birthday was observed in a way which proved how widely his name was known and honored. His work in the abolition cause, which he had once felt almost ostracized him, was now his honor and glory in the eyes of the world. His life was one of ease and prosperity as compared with the struggles of earlier years, which his delicate physical frame made a real burden. Best of all and underlying all was the assurance of his Heavenly Father's presence, which surely was in his heart when he whispered his last message of "Love; love to all the world."

One more point of interest. In this book is clearly brought out Whittier's belief in the divinity of Jesus Christ, on which a doubt has at times been cast. "In Him we see the essential character of God." He is the ultimate standard by which we must test all lives, "and humanity can never reach its best apart from Christ." Again, "I am not a universalist, for I believe in the possibility of the loss of a soul that persistently turns away from God in the next life as in this."

"We venture to think," says Georgina Lewis, "that Whittier is growing in the hearts of the English-speaking people everywhere. His poems have crept into many collections without the author's name appearing. His hymns are sung by worshippers of varied creeds."

If this cursory review leads any one to read the last biography of our Quaker poet, surely they will lay it down feeling as he himself did after editing John Woolman's Journal and be able to echo the words, "I have been made thankful for the ability to recognize" (the serenity and beauty of his spirit) "and the disposition to love him."

F. T. R.

In the New York Nation for Second Month 13, under the title of News for Bibliophiles, William E. A. Axon has an article of interest to Friends. The opening and concluding paragraphs follow.

The persecution of the Quakers by the Government of Massachusetts is recalled by the title-page of a quaint pamphlet:

A DECLARATION
Of the sad and Great
PERSECUTION and MARTYRDOM

Of the People of God, called Quakers, in New England for the Worshipping of God.

- 22 have been Banished upon pain of Death.
03 have been martyred.
03 have had their Right-Ears cut.
01 hath been burned in the Hand with the letter H.
31 Persons have received 650 stripes.
01 was beat while his Body was like a jelly.
Several were beat with Pitched Ropes.
Five Appeals made to England, were denied by the rulers of Boston.
One thousand forty four pounds worth of Goods both been taken from them (being poor men) for meeting together in the fear of the Lords and for keeping the Commandments of Christ.
One now lyeth in Iron-fetters, condemned to dye.

Also

Some Considerations, presented to the King, which is in answer to a Petition and Address, which was presented unto Him by the General Court at Boston: Subscribed by J. Endicott, the chief Prosecutor there; thinking thereby to cover themselves from the blood of the Innocent.

Gal. 4:29 But as then, he that was born after the flesh, persecuted him that was born after the spirit, even so it is now.
God hath no respect to Cains Sacrifice, that killed his Brother about Religion.

London, Printed for Robert Wilson, in Martins Le Grand.

When the pamphlet now before us was issued to the public, William Leddra's fate was in the balance. "And we have a further account also," says Burrough, "that one of our Friends, named William Leddra, being banished upon pain of Death, he not departing the Colony, but being moved to Return again to Boston, was Apprehended and cast into Prison and there lyeth Chained to a Logg with a Horse-lock, Condemned to Die." He was executed fourteenth of First Month, 1660-61. There were many in Boston who disapproved of these proceedings, and on the Restoration the Magistracy thought it necessary to send to Charles II a vindication of their action. This pamphlet contains the Quaker reply written to it by Edward Burrough, the man who stopped the further shedding of blood. He obtained an audience of the easy-going King, who had a little taste for persecution as for martyrdom. The King was so impressed by Burrough, that, awakening from his habitual indifference, he at once had an order drawn up forbidding any further persecution, and directing that the Quakers, whether condemned or imprisoned, should be sent to England to be dealt with according to law. At Burrough's further suggestion, this document was entrusted to Samuel Shattock, one of the exiled Quakers. That must have been a bitter moment for John Endecott when the banished man returned, bearing in his hand the royal mandate that put an end to the tyranny of the Puritan magistracy over the liberties and lives of their Quaker brethren. Shattock showed the royal document to Endecott, who, after consultation with the deputy governor, said, "We shall obey his Majesty's command."

Edward Burrough was arrested for being present at a Quaker meeting for worship, and died in Newgate fourteenth of Twelfth Month, 1662. The City of London authorities, who were keen enemies of the Quakers, managed to evade even the King's order for his release. Alius saluus fuit, seipsum non potest salvum facere. (He saved others, himself he could not save.)

A LAY SERMON.

The most powerful lay sermon that has been preached in years is contained in the first article of the will of the late John Pierpont Morgan. It reads:

I commit my soul into the hands of my Saviour in full confidence that, having redeemed it and washed it in his most precious blood, He will present it faultless before the throne of my Heavenly Father; and I entreat my children to maintain and defend, at all hazard and at any cost of personal sacrifice, the blessed doctrine of the complete atonement for sin through the blood of Jesus Christ once offered, and through that alone.

Such a declaration of belief in the truth of the Gospel would not have been surprising in the will of a clergyman, for ministers are expected everywhere to assert their faith in the essentials of the Christian religion. Of course, every Christian ought to have that same unquestioning faith, but when a layman fearlessly and frankly affirms it, somehow the world is a little surprised.

That is why J. P. Morgan's declaration of faith in the atonement was the first thing that the newspapers spoke of in connection with his will. The large sums that he left to his children and friends, the desire he expressed for the largest public use of his great art treasures, the arrangements he made for the control of his vast business interests were of secondary importance in the eyes of the journalists. The "news" was that the dead banker believed in the saving blood of Jesus Christ, and that he enjoined his children to maintain that belief at "all hazard and at any cost."

Many another layman who has been perplexed with doubts will find the example of the dead financier helpful. If so practical and successful a man of affairs could retain and cherish his faith in the simple religion of his fathers, other business men should find it easier to believe. We are too much afraid in these days of being thought credulous or old-fashioned. J. P. Morgan's explicit and courageous confession of faith cannot fail to turn some who have been wavering back to a firmer belief in the reality of religion.—Youth's Companion.

God is love; but this love is not a weak sentiment, impelling him to condone offense against the moral law and to accept amiable intentions on the part of men in place of positive performance of that which is good. The Divine love is not merely good nature; it is the love of goodness. The Almighty is a moral being, and must regard his own law. Our God is a consuming fire. Let not that truth be forgotten. God so loves men that he would love them out of their sin and into holiness. There is nothing which to-day more needs to be clarified than the idea of the love of God, which many in their misapprehension and perversion of it are making an excuse for continuance in sin or of avoidance of religious obligations.—Zion's Herald.

TEMPERANCE.

A department edited by BENJAMIN F. WHITSON, of Moylan, Pa., on behalf of the Friends' Temperance Association of Philadelphia.

THE very fact that we are still here carrying on the contest against the hosts of annihilation proves that on the whole the battle has gone for humanity. The world's great heart has proved equal to the prodigious undertaking which God set it. Rebuffed, but always persevering; self-reproached, but ever regaining faith; undaunted, tenacious, the heart of man labors toward immeasurably distant goals. Discouraged not by difficulties without or the anguish of ages within, the heart listens to a secret voice that whispers: "Be not dismayed; in the future lies the Promised Land."—HELEN KELLER.

"THE temperance movement is one of the greatest of our time—a movement by which the people will gain self-reliance and self-control. The final aim is nothing else than the most complete possible liberation of our people from the destructive effects of the use of alcohol. That nation which is first to free itself from the injurious effects of alcohol will thereby attain a marked advantage over other nations in the amicable yet intensive struggle for existence."—CROWN PRINCE OF SWEDEN.

"THE destiny of that people which is unable to react against the moral and physical degeneration accepted in exchange for a degrading pleasure is sealed. . . . All men of good-will, without distinction of party, should unite in a common effort for the relief of the country, threatened at so many points and at one time." M. LOUIS JACQUET, of France.

A GOOD STORY of an experience of Wm. Jennings Bryan when he was in Japan is told by the Methodist Times. He was invited by Admiral Togo to drink to his health in champagne. To do so would have been to break his temperance pledge, and to refuse, unless with the utmost tactfulness, might have caused much offense. Raising his glass of water to his lips, he very neatly combined a mild rebuke and a graceful compliment in the same sentence. "Admiral," he responded, "all your victories have been won on water. When you win on champagne I will drink to them in champagne."

A PROHIBITION MEASURE.—One of the bills signed lately by Governor Fener, of Pennsylvania, prohibits the sale of cigarettes and cigarette papers to persons under twenty-one years old. A sale or gift is made punishable by a fine of $100 to $300. A minor in possession of cigarettes is required to tell where they were obtained. Refusal to do so is made a misdemeanor. If the offender is more than sixteen years old the penalty is a fine of $5 or imprisonment for five days. If under sixteen years, the Juvenile Court is to take charge of the offender.

LESS DEMAND FOR INTOXICANTS.—The Brooks high license law of Penna. gives the court authority to grant license to the saloonkeepers under the guise of providing for the entertainment of the traveling public, but it is being discovered that the habit of the traveling public are changing very rapidly with reference to the use of liquor. One day, not long since, in the city of Scranton, a traveling salesman invited eight other men of the road to go into a bar and drink with him. They accepted the invitation. He invited each man to order according to his own taste, and they did so. The result was that he himself was the only man before the bar who ordered an intoxicating drink. The other eight ordered lemonade and other non-intoxicating beverages. If the saloons of Pennsylvania were obliged to depend for their patronage upon the traveling salesman, many of them would not sell sufficient drinks in a year to pay for their license. American Issue.

AN AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION to prohibit the sale, manufacture and importation of distilled liquor containing alcohol, except for mechanical, scientific and medicinal purposes," was proposed to-day [Sixth Month 21st] by Senator Works.—North American.

THE superintendent of one of the largest collieries in Washington county some time ago scouted the idea that the use of liquor had anything to do with the accidents occurring in the coal mines. However, after a conversation with Coroner Heffran, who has given great attention to the matter, that superintendent looked through the records of his own collieries and discovered 72 per cent. of their mine accidents occurred on Mondays and Tuesdays. He also found that Friday (ordinarily reckoned as an unlucky day) showed up best of all the week. Saturday and Sunday are great days for booze in the mining communities. The fact that Mondays and Tuesdays show 72 per cent. of the accidents, while the other four working days show only 28 per cent. is in itself a striking commentary on the effects of strong drink in producing accidents.—American Issue.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION.—We have long believed license of the liquor traffic unconstitutional under the present Constitution of the United States. We began declaring this belief early in our temperance platform work, nearly forty years ago. We have never ceased asserting it. We have no doubt that a fair judicial decision of our national Supreme Court would establish this belief.

Twenty years ago the vision came to us as clearly that all taxation of the liquor traffic is unconstitutional; and this belief also, we have taught in print, on the platform and in the classroom with unwavering persistence, asserting it first in "Wealth and Waste."

Yet, while believing that our present national Constitution affords ample basis for outlawing the liquor traffic absolutely, we have long and patiently urged the wisdom of a national prohibition amendment. Over and over again upon Southern soil we have said that as the North once forced on the South prohibition of slavery by constitutional amendment, so the South might one day be compelled to force upon the North the prohibition of the liquor traffic for the good of the nation, also by constitutional amendment. Only in this way, perhaps, could our Empire State, with its great metropolis, be brought under the sway of clean life and pure government, and other States might rank in the same class.

But we have always recognized that constitutional provisions do not enforce themselves. We have never believed that a prohibition amendment would be automatic and finally become a fact in government without governmental administration.

We know that such an amendment will not be secured easily or soon. It may take years to win the necessary two-thirds of the States in majority approval of it. Years previous may be consumed in getting it before the States by act of Congress that they may consider it. Only as the people mass themselves and their sentiment in some solid phalanx, and move upon Washington by their approving representatives, can there be the slightest hope of presenting the amendment to them for popular endorsement and possible passage.

We welcome every proof that such an amendment is demanded in the people's behalf. The louder the demand and the mightier the phalanx making it, the sooner it may be met. The more cohesive the effort behind it the larger the possibility of success. Through cohesion only can power be applied. The kind of cohesion must be determined by the thing to be done and the kind of power imperative to do it.—National Advocate.

WAR AND OTHER WICKEDNESS.—At a recent Hague anniversary meeting, held under the auspices of the Washington Peace Society, Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan said some true things about war.

"War is in the interest of a few people, not of all," W. J.

Bryan declared. "The profits are garnered by a few, while the masses pay the taxes. A few men gain glory while the mothers of the nations furnish the sons who make food for battlefields. War rests upon feeling, not upon necessity. Back of much of the furor for war is the interests of the manufacturers of battleships. And there are men so unpatriotic that they try to stir up trouble in another country against their own so as to make possible profit therefrom. Is there any baser use for money?"

Truth of precisely the same kind might be declared—indeed often has been declared—about the liquor business. Its "profits are garnered by a few," and the cost of it is borne by the many. There is no glory in it, but the gains of it give power to the brewers and the distillers, while "the mothers of the nation furnish sons who make food for" the traffic's voracious maw.

Back of much clamor for the liquor traffic's right to live and grow is the selfish interest of brewers and distillers. If the avarice of the maker and the seller of drink could be eliminated the appetite of the drinker would be easily overcome.—National Advocate.

MICHIGAN is reported as "the first State to offer a concurrent resolution requesting Congress to pass an amendment to the Federal Constitution forbidding manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. The vote," says The Union Signal, "was 45 to 37 in the House and 16 to 12 in the Senate."

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

PERSEVERANCE.

"Perseverance! Can you spell it?
And its meaning, can you tell it?
If you stick to what you're doing,
Study, work, or play pursuing,
Every failure bravely meeting,
Bravely each attempt repeating,
Trying twice and three and four times,
Yes, a hundred, even more times,
You can spell it! You can spell it!
And its meaning, you can tell it!"

—Selected.

WHAT A LITTLE CLOCK DID.—A little clock in a jeweler's window in a certain Western town stopped one day for half an hour at fifteen minutes to nine. School children, noticing the time, stopped to play; people hurrying to the train, after a look at the clock, stopped to chat a minute with one another. And all were half an hour late, because one small clock stopped. Never had these people known how much they depended on that clock until it had led them astray.

You may think you have no influence, but you cannot go wrong in one little act without leading others astray.—Selected.

A KIND-HEARTED MAN.—A story is told of Professor Leidy, the great naturalist, which shows how kind he was to animals of every sort. Once he collected half a dozen frogs for the purpose of studying their habits under different conditions. He shut these frogs up in a little box for a little while and presently, forgetting all about them, he left his home on some important errand.

When he was six blocks away Professor Leidy suddenly remembered the little captives that he had left behind him, and fearing that they might suffocate because of his neglect, he walked back the whole distance and put them into a more comfortable place.

This great naturalist, to whom a monument has been erected in Philadelphia, took pains not to cause suffering to any dumb animal. Surely we should all follow the example of the scientist who was so kind-hearted in all his dealings with animals.—Selected.

THEY TOLD THEIR FRIENDS.—The fact that dogs have a way of communicating news to one another was shown in a very singular and amusing fashion in a certain place in Georgia, where, as yet, little provision is made for the comfort of domestic animals.

One bitter night, such as "cold waves" frequently bring to that locality, a Georgian heard at his front door the unmistakable sounds of scratching and whining. Upon opening the door he found two of his neighboring friends, a pug and a little terrier, asking admission.

In the face of the cruel cold it was granted them, and they were made welcome to share the comfortable quarters of the two household dogs. In the morning they took their leave, but great was the astonishment of the Georgian to see them return the following cold evening, this time accompanied by a large Irish setter, who likewise wagged admission to the warm quarters of which he seemed to have knowledge.

If there were any doubts as to whether these hospitable night lodgings were discussed among the shelterless dogs of the neighborhood, the doubts were removed on the third night, when the three tramps returned, their number further augmented by another pug and an old pointer. The mute but eloquent language of their wagging tails, the humble appeal in their eyes, were at once amusing and pathetic.

With his own two pets and these five tramps, the Georgian had now seven dogs stretched out comfortably before his dining-room grate, but their irreproachable behavior and many ingratiating ways had insured for them a welcome at his house as long as the cold wave lasted, which was a week. After the cold subsided they returned no more.—Harper's Weekly.

THE LOVE OF A DOG.—For several years a small business-like dog sold newspapers to hundreds of people in Boston every day. The little dog, so loving, patient and faithful to his crippled master, was always to be seen near Park Street subway entrance, trotting around with a paper in his mouth, until a sale was made to a regular customer or a stranger. The money must first be deposited in a small leather pocket attached to a collar with bells which the dog wore before the paper was to be had; then the dog would return to his master for another paper to sell.

Silently, yet persistently, this dog of business approached the men, women and children with the latest news of the day. Patrons dropped their pennies in the pocket about the dog's neck and hurried away, more thoughtful and considerate of others because of this friendly morning greeting. Often the shopping people and children would linger for a friendly talk. It was not an unusual sight to see from fifty to a hundred persons waiting their turn to buy and say a few kind words to the intelligent little worker.

Each week the dog earned about twenty-five dollars for his master, who in return shared his fire, his food, his bed, his heart with his companion. Such love and service were as the love of David and Jonathan.—The Child's Hour.

WHEN MARK TWAIN WAS SERIOUS.—Mark Twain writes, in one of his notebooks, a passage that may well take its place among the best things ever said about the style of the Old Testament:

"It is hard to make a choice of the most beautiful passage in a book which is so gemmed with beautiful passages as the Bible. Who taught those ancient writers their simplicity of language, their felicity of expression, their pathos, and, above all, their faculty of sinking themselves entirely out of sight of the reader and making the narrative stand out alone and seem to tell itself? Shakespeare is always present when one reads his books; Macaulay is present when we follow the march of his stately sentences; but the Old Testament writers are hidden from view."—The Christian Advocate.

The issue of your work is not of the slightest consequence. Whether you succeeded or not is of no moment whatever; that was in my hands, not in yours. But the spirit in which you set about it, the diligence, the cheerfulness, the earnestness with which you obeyed, what was that?—BISHOP TEMPLE.

I. PAVSON, once wrote: "Christians might avoid much unhappiness if they would but believe that God is able to make them happy without anything else. God has been depriving me of one blessing after another; but as every one was removed, He has come in and filled up its place, and now when crippled and not able to move, I am happier than ever. I was in all my life before, or ever expect to be, and if I had believed this twenty years ago, I might have been spared much anxiety."—Selected.

FRIENDLY NEWS.

IMPRISONMENT OF A FRIEND IN AUSTRALIA.—A letter from William Ingle, 23 v, 1913, says: "I am thankful to say I am out of prison to-day strong in faith for the honor of doing the fourteen days, and ready to go on again." The nights were evidently long, but at his labor in the daytime he got interested in some of the other prisoners and tried to be of service to them.

When asked His age, etc., and religion, "I said, a member of the Society of Friends." The warden snapped out, "That's no religion." I said, "It is very much of a religion or I should not be here." The other warden said, "It's a Scotch society, is it not?" I said, "It is not tied to any race or caste, but is a whole seven days' religion." He said, "I have been here forty years, and you are the first." I said, "I won't be the last to make the mistake." Then he was marched to the store and rigged out in prison dress with the broad arrows on, and so looked up.

He felt as if in his prison cell he could hear the prayers and words that were being spoken in meetings; and listening to the voice within, he meditated the more on the true strength the world wants to bring a higher sense of brotherhood to bear, making religion in life more real, and the Fatherhood of God a living thing, so that Christ would yet reign in righteousness.

When released, he was met by his wife, John Hills and other Friends, and all the workmen from the Robinsons, and taken to a restaurant, "but I could not eat, and was pleased when I reached home." "I ask you to leave no stone unturned to build up the freedom of the future race."—J. W. C. F. and London.

CHARLES F. HOLDER'S HISTORY OF THE QUAKERS was noticed in last year's FRIEND. Since then the following clipping from the Pasadena Star has been received from our friend, C. F. Saunders. We gladly give it place in our new column:

"The Quakers in Great Britain and America" is the title of an interesting book of 600 pages, by Charles Frederick Holder of Pasadena, which has just been published by the Neuner Company. It thoroughly covers the religious and political history of the Society of Friends from the seventeenth century to the twentieth, and is in every respect a valuable and entertaining work from the viewpoint of anyone at all interested in the subject. It is dedicated to the widow of Russel Sage, a descendant of the early Quakers of the early days. The work is profusely illustrated with original and rare reproductions.

It is true that C. F. Holder explains that in writing the book he endeavored to put himself in the place of a reader hunting in a library for the history of Quakerism, and made his own demands and selections accordingly. The author himself is descended from illustrious Quaker ancestors and had a great personal interest in his work, which naturally affected its style and interest. He writes most entertainingly, and he succeeded admirably in his attempt to prepare a history for the layman, and to provide a work in which the student or historian could obtain a general view of Quakerism without having to refer to intricate details which would be scattered over America and England. He has done a most excellent, condensed history of the Quakers, yet one which is not only readable, but also interesting.

It is true that the author has emphasized, but not unduly, the political and social movements brought by the Quakers, and has briefly touched upon the religious and the various religious monarchs and rulers of the world. However, it is to be regretted that every citizen has a faint idea of the religious and social history of the evolution of Christianity in the last two thousand years, and the last century in England and America, and that the author has not touched on the evolution of Christianity in the United States, and the Quakers in his country. He shows that the Quakers were first mentioned in New York, Philadelphia, or New Jersey, and that the Quakers in each of these, and he asserts the Quakers were first mentioned in each of these dominant reform for which they were famous, and that they were the first to introduce the Quakers into each of these countries.

The Friend (London) of the 7th inst. has an appreciative article (with photo.) concerning Joseph Storrs Fry of Bristol, England, recently deceased at the age of eighty-seven years, who was the head of the well-known "Fry's Cocoa" concern of that place. From 1881 to 1890 this Friend was the Clerk of London Yearly Meeting.

THE Meeting for Sufferings of London Yearly Meeting, at its recent sitting approved a carefully prepared message to the Chinese people from the Society of Friends in England. It will be translated into Chinese in London, under careful supervision, and will then be personally delivered to influential statesmen in China and published to the people in general.

The Friend also reports the receipt of a cable from Sydney, Australia, conveying the information that a Friend, Sydney Crossfield, a lad of eighteen, is now confined in Victoria Barracks under sentences totalling fifty-three days for declining military drill. "He and his father are both quite determined neither to drill nor pay the fine imposed."

CORRESPONDENCE.

LETTER TO MARGARET W. HAINES.

TOKYO, JAPAN, SIXTH MONTH 13th, 1913.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—

These are days when we live much in twenty-four hours in Japan.

It has been necessary for those in touch with Peace affairs to be on the alert.

All the Spring it has been difficult for those outside the Sunrise Kingdom to know the tenacity of feeling here. To-day's paper gives the best, the newest real grasp of the situation, and we can but rejoice that this whole California affair has come up. There was, at first, a great outburst of indignant feeling with many indignant meetings held in the parks and in the wrestlers' hall, the largest hall in Tokyo. A few spoke of the unfittiness of the Japanese to become citizens of the U. S., particularly as they would not give up ancestral worship, and that was a thing that could not be assimilated, but must be given up if they became naturalized.

Now, this morning's paper says, "Japanese must raise their moral standards and ideals if they would gain the favor of the Americans."

On the evening of the eleventh we had a Men's Meeting in our drawing and dining-rooms—sixty-five men—with Mayor Baron Sakutani as the main speaker, and two Keio University professors as the other speakers.

I was glad to hear Baron Sakutani say this: "The question of the day is not so much one of color, as to whether a man is white, yellow or black, as it is whether he is the child of God." Count Okuma said a few days ago: "This is a question that can be settled by prayer to the Christian's God, but not by diplomacy." Professor Muko following the Baron, plead with the people not to blame the Americans, saying he was sure that if the Americans would suddenly dump down into Tokyo the same quality of people most of the Japanese were who were on the Pacific Coast, they would do much worse toward them than the Japanese had yet received from the Americans.

They are beginning to see the difference. I am glad to say the Emperor seems to be well again. He had pneumonia, and we came very nearly losing him last month. These are days full to the brim with work and interest. I must not take time to write more now, but just to let thee know we are well and busy, and also that the spirit in Japan is improving on this question.

Always affectionately,

MINNIE P. BOWLES.

FRIENDS' MEETING IN PARIS, FRANCE.

THE EDITOR OF THE FRIEND, PHILADELPHIA.

Dear Friend:—American Friends visiting Europe have often found their way to the Friends' meeting which has been held for many years in Paris, every First-day morning, at the house of a French Friend, Justine Delencourt, 67 Rue du Théâtre, Grenelle. This meeting, however, has hitherto been closed during Eighth and Ninth Months, which our friend is accustomed to spend at her country residence, where she has established a Home of Rest for Christian Workers. Leon Reyvoire, formerly a Roman Catholic priest, now director of a mission to ex-protestants, who, though not a member of our Society, is largely in sympathy with it, has now kindly arranged that the meetings may be held during these two months at his room, No. 1 Rue du Pont de Lodi, near the Place St. Michel, and within easy reach of the centre of Paris.

Friends passing through Paris can be warmly encouraged to attend this meeting, where they will have the opportunity, according to the season, of making acquaintance with one or other of the above-named French Christians, who have both been constrained to leave the church in which they were brought up, and are seeking to make known to their fellow-countrymen a simple and spiritual gospel.

JOSEPH G. ALEXANDER.

3 MAYFIELD ROAD, Tunbridge Wells, England.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—A despatch of the 15th from Washington, D. C., says: "Wireless storm warnings and general weather forecasts for ships at sea, covering conditions 100 miles off shore all along the Atlantic coast, is the latest innovation of the Agricultural and Navy Departments. The plan was inaugurated to-night and hereafter every night a few minutes after ten o'clock bulletins will be sent broadcast from the great naval wireless stations at Radio, Virginia, and Key West, Fla.

It was stated from Washington on the 15th that Senator Owen to-day introduced a resolution calling upon the President to suggest to the nations of the world the holding of an international conference to put a general limitation on war preparations and for the promotion of world peace.

The playing of baseball on the First-day of the week is illegal in this State. This decision was handed down by Judge William C. Ryan, of Bucks County, on Seventh Month 8. It affirmed the judgment of Justice Frederick C. Tomlinton, of Langhorne, in fining a baseball player who was arrested.

A despatch from Harrisburg of the 16th says: "Governor Tener to-day signed the bill providing for a City Planning Commission for cities of the third class and giving these commissions jurisdiction within the city and in a territory for three miles beyond the city limits. The commission is to be composed of five members whose terms will be one, two, three, four and five years, respectively, so far as the first commission is concerned and five years each thereafter. The Mayor and Council are to appoint the members, who are to serve without pay. The commission is empowered to pass upon all ordinances relating to the location of public buildings, civic centers, streets or the widening, extension or paving of streets, parks, parkways, boulevards, playgrounds and the like.

It was stated in a despatch from Marietta, Ohio, on the 14th: "Following a cloudburst near Zanesville to-day, the Muskingum River and Duck Creek are out of their banks, the entire valley is under water, and it is feared a number of lives have been lost. The property damage will be enormous. The waters of Duck Creek came upon them like a mighty wall, rising five feet within a few minutes, then settling to a rise of five feet per hour. The rainfall was 6.45 inches, less than half an inch below the rainfall which caused the 3d Mo. flood. The damages were estimated anywhere from $200,000 to $3d million."

It is stated that under a new law all persons are prohibited from furnishing minors with cigarettes or cigarette papers by "gift, sale, or otherwise." Violation of the law is punishable with a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $300. Refusal on the part of minors to give the police names of persons who furnished them with the smoking materials is made punishable with a fine or imprisonment for minors more than 16 years old. Those less than 16 years of age will be taken before the Juvenile Court.

It is announced that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company is preparing to spend $600,000,000 for the elimination of grade crossings on its lines east and west of Pittsburgh. This is according to an estimate made by officials, who say that there now are approximately 13,000 crossings at grade which, in the interests of public safety and efficiency of operation, must be removed. It is estimated that the removal of one grade crossing costs $50,000. On such a basis it would require an expenditure of, approximately, the sum named to elevate or sink the tracks. Since 1902, it is said, the Pennsylvania system has expended $66,641,294 on the elimination of 1052 grade crossings.

It has recently been stated that at least 100 farmers in Ford, Grey, Edwards and Pawnee Counties of western Kansas have joined in spreading tons of poisoned bran mash over the fields in an effort to check the ravages of grasshoppers that in the last three weeks have done thousands of dollars of damage to young trees, alfalfa, corn, cane and other crops.

It is stated that an increase in the death rate for the first six months of this year in this city was due in large part to deaths of infants under two years from measles. Dr. Neff has again called attention to the fact that measles is not a trivial disease. The fact, he says, is that measles causes more deaths of children under two years of age than any other contagious disease.

A telegram from Fort Smith, Ark., of the 16th says: "Eight hundred men, including ministers, bankers, doctors and farmers, appeared at sunrise this morning, and by sunset they had completed twenty miles of fine roadway connecting Vian and Sallisaw, Okla. Business in both towns was suspended, and all farmers along the road quit their fields and lent their horses and implements to the road builders. Ministers used picks and shovels and tugged at road scrapers and graders. More than 100 teams were contributed without charge and 30 scrapers and 15 graders were lent by the county."

George H. Rea, of Jefferson County, Penna., has been appointed State inspector of apiaries. It is said that it is hoped that by careful attention and instruction in overcoming enemies of the bee, farmers can be induced to revive the industry, especially in the fruit-growing districts, where the bees' presence is necessary for the proper fertilization of blossoms.

FOREIGN.—Despatches from Pekin mention that fighting has occurred between the adherents of the regular government and the revolutionary forces.

A despatch from Berlin of the 14th says: "Regular wireless communication between Germany and the United States has been brought appreciably nearer realization by successful experiments just conducted between the German Telfunken station, at Saville, Long Island, and the great central station at Nauem near Berlin. For the first time on record, telegrams totaling 28 words were transmitted to-day, from New York to Nauem, by means of Arcos high frequency apparatus."

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 87.

Bullard Palmer, Pa., $4, for herself and T. Chalkley Palmer; Edgar T. Haines, Agt., Pa., $10, for Joseph T. Whitson, Elizabeth C. Cooper, Pennock Cooper, J. Adrian Moore and Zebulon Haines; John H. Foster, R. 1; Hannah B. Home, Ind., per M. T. H.; Caroline Cope, Calif.; Mary A. Knudson, Ia.; B. V. Stanley, Agt., Ia., $24, for John E. Hodgins, Wm. G. Coppock, E. S. Smith, Robert W. Hampton, Russell Z. Taber, Thos. E. Stanley, Lewis B. Stanley to 13, v. 88, Esther Coppock, Morris Stanley, Pearson Hall, Ellis W. Stanley and Mary L. Test; Phoebe Harned, Pa.; Benjamin Briggs, Ia.; Henry T. Moon, Pa.; Joseph J. Coppock, Agt., Ia., $6, for Benjamin Ellyson, Wm. Thomas and Pearson W. Thomas; Hannah B. Evans, Gtn., and for Edith W. Silver; Joseph J. Neave, Australia, £1, 5s. to No. 27, vol. 89; George M. Warner, Gtn., to 13, v. 88; Sarah J. Rich, Kans., $1 to No. 27; Matilda Verkes, N. J.; Thomas Hartley, O.; Edwin K. Cooper, Phila.; Jos. H. Roberts, N. J.; Sarah D. Hoopes, Pa.; Anne Hutton, O.; Geo. B. Barton, N. J.; Rezin Thompson, Calif.; $4, for himself and John C. Thompson; Daniel G. Garwood, Agt., N. J., for Wm. E. Rhoads; Anna P. Chambers, Pa., and for Alfred Sharpless; Ruth L. Jones, Phila.; Rebecca B. Lowry, N. J.; Marianna Eastburn, N. Y.; Anne S. Lippincott, Gtn.; Ellen C. Tomlinson, Phila.; Margaret Maule, Pa.; Elizabeth Cadbury, N. J.; Samuel Benington, Ia.; Minerva Harvey, Mont.; Walter L. Moore, N. J.; Mary W. Stokes, Phila.; Henry D. Allen, Phila.; Caroline Morris, Nova Scotia; Mary R. Williams, N. J.; F. J. Hoag, O., $8, for himself, Mary E. Hoag, Emma H. Dobbs and Wm. H. Hoag; Joseph S. Moore, Kans.; Geo. L. Smalley, Phila.; Joshua S. Cope, Pa., to 13, v. 88; Henry W. Satterthwaite, Pa., and for Mary A. Sharpless; John E. Darnell, N. J., and for Frederic Lippincott; R. A. and H. C. Williams, N. J.; Elizabeth Taylor, Pa.; John M. Sheppard, Pa.; Joshua L. Bailly, Pa., $6, for himself, Anne T. Bailly and Sarah Lloyd Collins; R. S. Ashton, Agt., Ind., $16, for himself, Arthur B. Maxwell, Edward Maxwell, Joel D. Carter, Alpheus T. Pike, Phineas Pickett, Morris Peacock and Edward Edgerton; Thos. W. Draper, Calif.

Remittances received after Third-day noon will not appear in the receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

DURING Seventh and Eighth Months of this year the meetings at Newton Meeting House, Camden, N. J., will be discontinued.

MONTHLY MEETINGS NEXT WEEK (Seventh Month 27th to Eighth Month 2nd):

Gwynedd, at Norristown, Pa., First-day, Seventh Month 27th, at 10.30 A. M.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, SEVENTH MONTH 31, 1913.

No. 5.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVID H. FORSTHIE.

Make remittances payable to
EDWIN P. SELLEW or 'THE FRIEND',
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

SELECTIONS FROM THE DIARY AND CORRESPONDENCE OF JOSEPH S. ELKINTON, 1830-1905.

This is the title of a volume of about five hundred pages "printed for private distribution" by the family of the late Joseph S. Elkinton. In matter and in measure it is not one whit too long to satisfy the affectionate interest of a very wide circle of close personal friends. More than most, perhaps more than any other public Friend of the past fifty years in Philadelphia, Joseph S. Elkinton had the capacity of entering into sympathetic, we had almost said into confidential, relationships with a very great variety of people. That expression of one at his funeral, "Oh! I have lost such a true friend!" was the feeling of many hearts. Indeed, this gift of sympathy, called the "pastoral gift" in the concluding paragraph of the book, was so much in evidence and so much in his case in the line of self-effacement that even his "true friends" will possibly have some amazement at the importance and extent of his religious services revealed in this volume. For more than fifty years he was actively engaged on behalf of the Indians and Negroes, and during all that period found time to move about in the meetings of Friends in most of the eastern states. His service, however, was by no means confined to these limits. During seven years he was "grandfather" to the Doukhobors. His labors on their behalf seem almost incredible. The Mennonites and River Brethren claimed his sympathy and interest and his time. He was probably better known in Roman Catholic circles in Philadelphia than any other person not of their faith. Mayors and governors and presidents, with all grades of intermediate functionaries in several states, received him with respect and assisted him with his concerns. He was not a stranger even in Hebrew synagogues, and most of the organized evangelical missions of the city as well as the jails and reformatories of a wide range of territory gladly promoted his efforts. At seventy-four years of age, although with reduced physical strength, he is found laboring amongst the coal miners of Pennsylvania, and getting into personal touch with them by going into perilous places in the mines. Nor is any of this work done in other than the most thoroughgoing manner. This paragraph from the record of a Doukhobor pilgrimage when he was seventy is typical:

"We reached Yorkton after visiting the villages in the North and South Colonies. We held forty-seven meetings, visited five or six hundred houses and had from three to four hundred miles' riding in twenty-two days."

Such records extending through half a century make a challenge to our generation that cannot safely be put aside. Any disposition to reflect upon a past (or passing) type of Quakerism as too much devoted to quietism and introversion should be effectively silenced by such instances of world service. Much better will it be for any of us to seek the secret spring of power in such lives and to concern ourselves with that power. The volume before us makes this secret spring clear. In simplest phrase it is the universal principle of communion with the Highest, and of guidance under the effect of that communion. Joseph S. Elkinton was educated in a home and school atmosphere where these ideas were dominant. The portion of the book that pictures this period is made particularly interesting by anecdote and narration of special providences. The matter chosen and the way in which it is put together reflect much credit upon the editor. Apart from godly parents probably no religious influence of this period was more potent than the ministry of Elizabeth Evans. The history of Friends in Philadelphia during the corresponding time has frequent mention of the value of her prophetic gift in determining in the young the choice of a religious life. She was, however, but one of a large circle who commended the type of personally guided lives as at once practical and lovely. Modern child study may have made it appear that much that belongs to child nature was excluded from this particular form of child nurture. It remains for demonstration that the more modern method produces a larger measure of desirable fruit. In any event, it was a great point gained to have the matter of God's immanence and of the communication of his will to individuals so well rooted in developing characters.

These fundamentals of the religious life made two characteristics of Joseph S. Elkinton's service observable throughout the fifty years of his public career. These characteristics have been noted in what is already written above. It may be well to specify them still more definitely. John H. Dillingham, who had great respect for Joseph S. Elkinton and for his type of Friend, more than once in conversation reverted to these characteristics. "If you will observe," he said, "the communications of our Friend, it will be apparent that two expressions are most frequently on his lips." These were, "There is a power," and the single word "community." In modern phrase then he was preaching the great principles of the Divine Immanence and of the Social Consciousness. This is the rallying ground of present-day Christianity. The address to the citizens of Philadelphia, for which Joseph S. Elkinton was chiefly responsible, and the constant service of his life for "community" were prophetic of the deepest as well as of the most enlightened efforts of our day. These characteristics loom very large in this volume, and before them types of Friends and idiosyncrasies of character sink into insignificance. We rejoice in such a record and welcome it as a valuable contribution to real religious history.

J. H. B.

For "THE FRIEND."

MEMORIES OF JOHN BRIGHT.

Having last evening finished reading Trevelyan's life of the great Commoner of England, fresh from the press of Constable, I am persuaded that we have in it a biography of no common value. It should appeal to every member of the Society of Friends the world over, as the record of a life of singular devotion and nobility; as the enduring portrait of a character at once strong and gentle, pure and passionate, humble and courageous, filled with a lofty scorn for all selfishness and hypocrisy.

The author indulges in no fulsome eulogy, but has succeeded in drawing a picture of the man and of his work which will repay the reader; to those among us who remember the dark days of fifty years ago and the perils of our country, the services rendered to this nation by John Bright are a peculiar treasure.

In the midst of the political unrest and tumult of this present time, our young men will do well to turn aside for a moment and contemplate the scene in which were engaged the energies and talents of Bright, Cobden and their associates; and no man can do this with an honest mind without receiving some inspiration for the duties of to-day.

In the belief that a few extracts from the book will be acceptable to the readers of THE FRIEND I have selected the following, which, though necessarily disjointed and fragmentary, may yet serve to reveal some features of a Christian statesman, and, none the less, of a faithful servant of the Lord Jesus Christ.

GEORGE M. WARNER.

GERRYSTOWN, Seventh Month 10, 1913.

"He practised the silence of his sect, and drew thence the strength of his soul, the purity of his heart, and the quality of his speech."

"More than a generation after the Corn Laws had been repealed, a great Liberal meeting was advertised in Manchester with Lord Hartington in the chair, and Bright as chief speaker. Before the proceedings began, a gentleman in the audience found himself sitting behind three old workmen who had walked in from a neighboring county to hear John Bright speak once more, because they had often heard him in the Corn Law days. When they saw him come on to the platform, they all three broke down and burst into tears.

"Neither in youth nor age was Bright moved to speak at the religious meetings of the Society, though he took an active part in their meetings for business. And even in the family circle as he advanced down the vale of years, he touched on religion less often in speech or writing than he does in these earlier letters to the Priestmans. But his faith, never with him an elaborate structure of theology, did not fall away from him. Religious feeling in its simplest form, was the very basis of his life. He was always a Friend before everything else; and a servant of God; a man of deep, though ever more silent devotion."

(On the Crimean War.)

"After his speech," so Bright told Spence Watson, "I went to the Galleries to have a chop, and Dizzy came and sat down beside me, and he said, 'Bright, I would give all that I ever had to have made that speech you made just now.' And I put it to him, Well, you might have made it if you had been honest."

Twenty years later Bright was passing through London with Philip, his youngest boy. They drove by the Guard's Monument in Pall Mall, one of the few public memorials in London that shows any appositeness of feeling for the men or events commemorated; three bearded privates in the bear-skins and great coats stand with heads bowed, in sorrow for their comrades fallen at Inkerman, while a Victory in mourning crowns them from above. No general or statesman is honored in the word CRIMEA at the base. As father and son drove by that day, the Rochdale lad, looking out eagerly at the great city, asked the meaning of that word. Bright was silent for a moment, then said, 'A CRIME.' He offered no further explanation, and the boy, a little frightened by something in his father's voice, asked no more, but always remembered what he did not then understand."

Entry in Journal, 1857, at Rome.

"I write this surrounded by the ruins of the once mistress of the world, and from her history, and indeed from all history, I learn that loud boasting, great wealth, great power, extended dominion, successive conquests, mighty fleets and armies, are not immovable foundations of national greatness. I would rather rely on an educated and moral people, and on a system of government, free at home, and scrupulously moral and just in its dealings with every other government and people."

In a speech to the men of Birmingham:—

"I believe there is no permanent greatness to a nation except it be based on morality. I do not care for military greatness or military renown. I care for the condition of the people among whom I live. There is no man in England who is less likely to speak irreverently of the Crown and Monarchy of England than I am; but crowns, coronets, mitres, military display, the pomp of war, wide colonies, and a huge Empire, are, in my view, all trilles light as air, and not worth considering, unless with them you can have a fair share of comfort, contentment and happiness among the great body of the people. Palaces, baronial castles, great halls, stately mansions do not make a nation. The nation in every country dwells in the cottage, and unless the light of your constitution can shine there, unless the beauty of your legislation and the excellence of your statesmanship are impressed there on the feelings and condition of the people, rely upon it you have yet to learn the duties of Government."

In his speech at Rochdale, 1861, in favor of peace and arbitration on the Trent affair:

"Now, whether the Union will be restored or not, or the South achieve an unhonored independence or not, I know not, and I predict not. But this I think I know, that in a few years, a very few years, the twenty millions of freeman in the North will be thirty millions, or even fifty millions, a population equal to or exceeding that of this kingdom. When that time comes, I pray that it may not be said amongst them that, in the darkest hour of their country's trials, England, the land of their fathers, looked on with icy coldness and saw unmoved the perils and calamities of their children. As for me, I have but this to say: I am but one in this audience, and but one in the citizenship of this country; but if all other tongues are silent, mine shall speak for that policy which gives hope to the bondsmen of the South, and which tends to generous thoughts, and generous words, and generous deeds, between the two great nations who speak the English language, and from their origin are alike entitled to the English name."

"Bright was well able to defend his honor against definite false charges, but he was not of a disposition to rush into controversy with those who made personal attacks upon him. He was combative in the public interest, but not quarrelsome on his own behalf. On one occasion when a celebrated antagonist was reviling him with marked animosity, one of his family exhorted him to reply, but in vain; 'a man in a clean coat should never wrestle with a sweep,' he said."

"Every fine day he was lifted on to a quiet Welsh pony, and with wife or daughter rode at a walking pace for more than two hours on the sands or in the quiet lanes around Llandudno. In this way he used often to visit a lonely cottage under the Welsh hills where for twenty years a poor little woman had lain in a bed as small as a child's cot, too crippled by disease in her joints to move anything but her head; entirely dependent on a husband out all day and a neighbor who came in once or twice to move and feed her. Her one companion was

'Robin,' a devoted collie, who would sit in the lane listening for the horse's feet and then run in to tell his mistress who was coming. My father always carried a packet of bones for 'Robin,' and some little comfort for the invalid, and would sit on his pony at the open door talking to the occupant of the cot with the deformed and shrunken figure and the bright eager eyes. Her cheerfulness under the terrible conditions of her life, and above all, the look in her face, which is only given by an abiding and sustaining faith, were lessons not to be forgotten. My father often said he left that cottage 'humble yet uplifted.' He never forgot her, and continued to care for her in various substantial ways till she died.

"Dogs played a large part in his home life. So did a grey parrot, who was taught by the rising generation to interrupt the master of the house by the disconcerting remark, 'John Bright, let it drop,'—a phrase which he himself often employed to put a term to discussion. One day the bird opened its cage, flew away, and was lost for a considerable time. Finally it was picked up in the town and restored to One Ash, because it plaintively explained to the crowd that it was 'John Bright's Polly.'"

"Lord Morley has said that the most impressive and pure piece of religion that he ever witnessed was John Bright reading a chapter of the Bible to his maid-servants shortly after his wife's death, in his beautiful and feeling voice, followed by the Quaker silence."

JOHN WOOLMAN QUAKER.—Woolman took to wife Sarah Ellis, a sweet girl who was at once devoted and devout, and lived in a tiny white-washed cottage on Rancocas Creek in West Jersey. There, amid his apple trees which he planted and cultivated, he was most happy, what time he was not going to and fro spreading his Gospel of purity and pity. It was an humble abode, but he was content. He regarded agriculture as the business most conducive to moral and physical health, and was wont to say that "if the leadings of the Spirit were more attended to, more people would be engaged in the sweet employment of husbandry, where labor is agreeable and healthful." He did not condemn honest wealth, but he saw that luxury rots men and deforms women.

From his little farm he looked out with a mingled feeling of wonder and sorrow upon the fret and unrest of the world, and especially was he grieved to see luxury overgrowing the early simplicity of his own religious society. He regarded the merely rich man with unfeigned pity. With none of his scorn, he yet had all the feeling of Thoreau for men who went about bowed down with the weight of broad acres and great houses on their backs. Near the end of his life he went to England on a religious errand, traveling in steerage, despite the protest of his friends, rather than endure the luxury of the cabin. There he saw the hardship of the life of the sailor, and it haunted him to the end. A storm came up mid-sea, and for a time all seemed lost, but Woolman, inwardly still, went about among the panic-stricken company giving words of cheer. It reminds one of a like day in the life of Fox when his ship was pursued by pirates, "but there was a spirit in her that could not be taken."—J. F. NEWTON, in Green's Fruit Grower.

CONTRITION is tender. It has no harshness. It springs from the love of God. It does not come before the mind as a duty; it springs out of the heart by the necessity of its own inspiration. It is the longing of a soul burdened with the sense of defilement to be conformed to the holiness of Him whom it loves. It springs from the love of God, not from the hatred of sin; we cannot rise to love by hatred, but we must pass on from the love of God to the hatred of what He hates.—B. W. MATURIN.

CAN it be true, the grace He is declaring?

Oh, let us trust Him, for his words are fair.

Man, what is this, and why art thou despairing?

God can forgive thee all but thy despair.

—F. W. H. MYERS.

EXTRACTS FROM THE JOURNAL OF SAMUEL MORRIS.

(Continued from page 18.)

IN NEW ZEALAND.

Ninth Month 1, 1803.—A good open time with Ann Jackson, she returning to Auckland after lunch.

P. M.—I am rearranging my notes on Japan, and refreshing the memory for a "talk" which our good friends here are expecting this evening.

The weather was not favorable, but about fifty gathered at the Meeting-house, and I discoursed for more than one hour to a very attentive audience, whose questions at the close showed an intelligent interest in their neighbors, the Japanese.

Ninth Month 2nd.—To Otahuhu by an early train. Hither we had gone to visit the widow Wetmore, who, though not a member with Friends, inclines strongly to them and expects a visit from travelling ministers. She received us very kindly. Edward West with his wife also called. We had met with the latter before, and though not a Friend, she is evidently a tender-spirited young woman. The maid who had waited on us at table also joined our little company and she too seemed to be one "not far from the kingdom." The occasion proved an open and refreshing time.

Ninth Month 3rd.—First-day.—Bright and fair; about seventy came together at our meeting this morning. Ann Jackson opened with a sweet prayer. Then I spoke of the walk of the two disciples to Emmaus, the meeting with their risen Lord; the holding of their eyes that they should not know him; but how He gradually revealed Himself by first opening to them the Scriptures and finally by the breaking of bread. Thus I had been led into sympathy with some who fervently love their Saviour now, but who might not realize so much of his presence as they would desire. These I trusted might believe that He is nearer to them than they may sometimes suppose. That He is ever tenderly watching over them, and that, as they continue waiting and looking and longing for his coming, He will again and again, as with the disciples of old, break the spiritual bread to the refreshing of their souls. Then they too shall realize that they have been with their Beloved.

With John Rigg we went again to the Hall where the Y. M. C. A. hold their weekly services. Here about four hundred assembled, and I soon felt they represented a more thoughtful class than we met a week ago. The exercises were now led by an elderly brother, C. E. Button, whose reverent spirit and a prayer full of unction impressed us as marking a man of deep Christian experience, while he seemed able at once to carry with him his audience. Upon his introducing us, I had felt very unprepared with anything to offer, but seeking fervently for the help without which I knew I "could do nothing" for my blessed Master, I was opened upon the circumstances attending his coming in the flesh, the Shepherds of Bethlem, the song of the angels, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will toward men." It is the spirit which breathes through this heavenly anthem that still is to distinguish the Gospel Dispensation. We may well grieve that to-day there are to be found so few of the results which we might have looked for in the hearts and lives of many, while wrong and oppression and war still exist. This I sought to prove arises not through any lack in the teachings nor yet the example of our Holy Redeemer, but in the unwillingness of men to receive him into their hearts and conform their lives to his plain precepts. Some of these, as set forth in the "Sermon on the Mount," were briefly referred to, and how, if they were but carried into practice, many of the wrongs and much of the misery that now abound would speedily vanish.

Ninth Month 6th.—Thomas Jackson tells us that on their old home at Otonga, Whangarie, there stood a Kauri pine, that was fifteen feet through, carrying nearly this thickness seventy feet to the first branch, its full height being one hundred and fifty feet. It was estimated to cut 35,000 feet of boards, and as remarkably free from twists or knots, a large tree would not have more than one or two inches of sap wood. The "Mate" is another pine, growing often one hundred and fifty feet high, four or five feet in diameter, with spreading branches at the top. Its wood is hard and finished much like mahogany, taking a fine polish. The "Rata" is a vine that drops its roots from the crotch of a tree, where the seeds may have been carried by the wind or dropped by a bird. Upon reaching the ground the vine clasps the tree and encircles it with many folds, crushing the fostering trunk to death and in its turn becomes a tall umbrageous tree. In this singular habit it resembles the climbing fig of Queensland. The wood makes excellent fuel and is hard and durable, but necessarily twisted in the grain. The "Totara" is a large tree, very durable, and under water is worm-proof. It is, therefore, much valued for making piles. The foregoing are all New Zealand trees, the "Kauri" being native only in the North Island. The cold Flax of New Zealand grows in all parts, and its fiber makes excellent ropes, though scarcely equal to hemp or jute. It is also spun and woven by the Maoris into strong fabrics for clothing, etc., and at Palmerston, N. Z., there is a colonial manufactory for working it up. But the prices are low and the plant is nowhere cultivated. Eight tons of green leaves make one of fiber for manufacturing purposes.

Ninth Month 8th.—I took a delightful stroll along the shore, and the morning was one of the loveliest we had yet seen in New Zealand, for Spring is just opening, and one would rejoice to see more of it, did not stronger attractions call us in another direction. In the evening we joined the kind Friends with whom we have been so freely mingling of late in a "farewell social." Thus about fifty met us and after partaking of a simple collation at the Meeting-house, the tables were cleared and chairs rearranged for an opportunity for the dear people to express themselves, and to hear from us what we might have to offer on their behalf.

Thus, Jackson now spoke, with much feeling, of the comfort and help he had received from our visit. Jon. Dimmock, Jon. Rigg and others followed in expression of their thankfulness at our having been sent to them and the strength our services had been to their meeting.

Ninth Month 9th.—Had a comfortable sitting with our kind hosts, and the little boys toward whom my heart has been much drawn, with earnest desires that they might be preserved in the innocency and ingenuousness of character, which are now attractive in them all. Jonathan went to town to see to some business matters. I finished my packing and toward two p. m. we were at the quay of the Mariposa. Here we found dear Ann and Bertha Jackson had come, "because they must have one more parting look and word." Then our friend Brackening wanted again to say "Adieu." Wm. Beal and George Creech, with the boys, were there, also John Rigg, Wm. Smith and his wife, with others of the "adult class." Very near the hour, our good ship slipped her hawser and swung into the harbor. Soon the last waving of hats and handkerchiefs were lost to sight, and we bade farewell to Auckland. I confess my sympathies and Christian interests had found a strong lodgment upon first entering it as a stranger, and these only grew deeper with our longer stay.

Ninth Month 10th.—Sea still rough. Took breakfast and lunch in our berths, but little of either.

P. M. Got again upon our feet. Sea easier and we in better plight. A flying fish leaped upon the deck and among the passengers, but the poor thing seemed badly bruised and one of its wings broken. 'Twas mercifully returned to its native element.

Today we crossed the 180th meridian, thus making by nautical reckoning another day, which I will designate as Ninth Month 11th.

Ninth Month 11th. This evening we enjoyed a glorious sunset, heightened by a young moon that was beautiful by contrast, singularly large and brilliant, lying almost within the horns of the crescent.

13th.—I found a squad of Islanders in the waves, splashing and diving after money tossed to them from above. 'Twas said they would bring a coin from the bottom when failing to catch it on the way.

16th.—Had an unlooked for but open talk with the young man who delivered the lecture last evening. He is from London, has passed through Cambridge University, lost his father when quite young and being exposed to various influences unfavorable to his establishment as a Christian, acknowledged with regret that he had in great measure lost his faith in the truths of Christianity. He wished with all his heart it were otherwise, but feared he was gradually getting further and further from its teachings. I endeavored to place a few views before him, which seemed to put some things in a new light, presenting the Gospel in a very simple aspect, stripped of the dogmatic theology with which he had grown weary. He thanked me for my interest in him and felt our talk had done him good.

In the evening, Robert Louis Stevenson, who is widely known as a writer, and his companion, a young man connected with a newspaper in the States, gave some brief information regarding Samoa and its people. Both speakers had joined us at Apia, and the former on account of his health has been making his home in the Island for some time past. They represented the government and business affairs there as being in a very unsettled and unsatisfactory condition, while from what we have otherwise learned the morals of the community in Apia must be deplorably low.

17th, First-day.—This morning a gentleman from Sydney, who seemed, up to this point, to have studiously avoided exchanging with us the common civilities of ship life, approached me in a very friendly manner, evidently desiring to "break the ice." He has been acting as "Chairman of the Committee on arrangements," is a man of more than ordinary intelligence, but reserved in his manners. Since it seemed almost needful that we should understand each other regarding the exercises of the meetings to-day, I was especially glad thus to open an acquaintance.

At eleven the gong was sounded, and our cabin passengers very generally with the Captain and several of his officers came together in the "Social Hall." Several hymns were sung. Lindsay Brown read a selection from the Scriptures of Jonathan's choosing; and I spoke with much liberty upon the claims which our Father in Heaven has upon us for a large measure of thanksgiving and praise because of his tender care over us thus far on our voyage. Therefore it was eminently fitting we should do, as I trusted we had done, in coming together this morning with grateful hearts and desires turned toward Him. But it is not only in his watchful care over us. He would have us recognize his loving hand, but to know Him also in the riches of his grace and that abounding love which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. The visitation of the Holy Spirit to our souls was described as one of the principal means He employs for making us realize our real condition without Him, and our need of a Saviour; while it is only as we yield to these that we are brought into that tender relation to Himself wherein we can, from the depths of our hearts, call Him "our Father in Heaven." Jonathan offered prayer, another hymn was sung, and the company dispersed feeling, as I could but believe, that it had been good for us thus to come together.

In the p. m. Lindsay Brown, two ladies and ourselves went among the passengers who had their quarters in the after part of the ship, and upon explaining our object, several gathered about us willingly, one of them saying, "We heard there was to be preaching in the saloon this morning, and we are glad to be remembered at our end of the steamer." Our companions proposed several hymns in which others joined. Jonathan read selections from the Epistle of James, and then spoke forcibly upon the nature of sin, its remedy, and the salvation from sin and sinning for which, we may thankfully believe, provision has been made through our blessed Saviour. I spoke more especially to some of the wandering ones who might be present but who, like the prodigal, realized that they are to-day far from the Father's house and their souls are perishing with hunger. I assured these there is still "bread enough and to spare," while there is only needed on their part a repentance for sins that are past, and a hearty turning of their hearts to the Lord, in order to find that forgiveness and mercy and love are waiting for them at his hands, through Jesus, the sinner's friend.

18th.—Jonathan had some interesting talk with R. L. Stevenson, in his state-room, regarding Samoa and its present condition, which only goes to confirm the impressions we have already received.

For "THE FRIEND."

THOUGHTS ON THE PLAIN DRESS.

There are four considerations put forward in our Discipline that ought to weigh in determining our conduct in regard to dress. These are Simplicity, Utility, Economy and Non-conformity to the Fashions of the World.

In regard to the first three, Friends would agree pretty closely in theory, though the practice of many shows such a wide deviation from simplicity that it would be hard to justify their course on any reasonable ground of righteousness; and the natural appeal to our pecuniary interests does not always weigh very strong against our fancies in deciding whether an article is useful or economical.

On the fourth head, there seems to be a wide divergence of sentiment, even among Friends who are otherwise well concerned; and as it seems to me to be the most important of the four, so far as men's dress is concerned, I have felt like offering a few suggestions on the subject.

In the first place, let it be understood that our testimony is not primarily against any particular cut or fashion of dress, though we think that all should endeavor to exercise a sound and discriminating judgment in regard to form; and that form which has come to be known as the distinctive appearance of a Friend I believe I can commend as a good one.

The testimony is against following that immaterial thing known as fashion, rather than against a fashion; that disposition to be looking for and following after every new fanciful device or cut which the leaders of the fashionable world see fit to impose on humanity, and which so often occupies the attention of the world at large as to exclude more serious thoughts. In this sense, it becomes an idol, before which the majority of people fall down to worship in a sense just as surely as the ancient heathen prostrated themselves before their images of wood and stone.

In an article which appeared in THE FRIEND a year or more ago, a writer speaking of this matter of fashion while in a measure upholding it, says, "It is hard to estimate the evils which rise from our inability to dress as our fancy dictates. From an economical standpoint it is one of the greatest curses of mankind. As a disturber of domestic quiet it is exceeded only by strong drink. As a promoter of discontent, which means inefficiency, there is nothing else so detrimental." This is not from the pen of a member of our Society, who might be thought to be biased by education, but written by the editor of a daily newspaper, showing plainly that the editor was awake to the evils of following the fashion. And when we consider how many families are led to ruin, through extravagant expenditure on their apparel; the envy and ill-will which many feel because they cannot keep pace with others; how husbands and wives are estranged as a result of the family demands for money to keep in the fashion; and how the world in general is so ruled by this passion as to give rise to the saying, "We might as well be out of the world as out of the fashion," are not the above strictures fully justified?

When the Society of Friends was in its primitive days the members were enjoined to simplicity in regard to clothing, and assumed the simpler modes of attire then commonly worn by religious people. But little was said about the form of dress. As, however, the people of the world were changing with every change of fashion, the Society soon found they must bear testimony against this evil also; and so it came about before long that their dress was peculiar to the Society, whose members came to be known by it from the rest of the world. By the middle of the eighteenth century this habit came to be known as the appearance of a Friend; and while the Society may not have gone so far as to advocate it publicly in its writings and discipline as one of our testimonies, yet in practice Friends were expected to conform thereto; and those who were sincere converts to the Society soon found themselves constrained to wear this same form. This, however, did not forbid our members from occasionally making some changes, which plain utility seemed to dictate; being careful, however, to see that such changes were not the result of a desire to be in the fashion, remembering the adage:

"Be not the first by whom the new is tried;
Be not the last to lay the old aside."

When, in the fore part of the nineteenth century, it became the common fashion to have the coat collar turned over behind and the vest with the folding lapel in front, and somewhat later for men to wear the beard, Friends could not approve of these deviations, feeling that they were at the dictation of fashion, without sufficient utility to justify their adoption. From thenceforward for many years the making of the distinctive appearance of a Friend was looked upon as one of the essential testimonies that we had to bear before the world, not, however, insisting that any particular make of the coat or hat was necessarily a part of our religion, but that this is the only way that we can show that we are not conforming to the changing fashions.

It would seem that the reasons that were applicable then ought to have equal force now. How can we disapprove of the vagaries of fashion indulged in by the fair sex, if we too are wearing suits made as the fashion dictates.

It has been said that the plain dress is a hedge to keep us out of many hurtful associations, and therefore to be recommended. But I think it is more; that following the fashion because it is the fashion is an evil, and we should give no countenance to it by word or act. Many will insist that they are not looking after the fashion in being so attired; but does that excuse them? Many of the customs against which our Society has testified have in measure lost their original significance. Yet it cannot be expected that customs which had their origin in evil can ever be acceptable in the sight of our Creator; and I believe this to be one of them. I have also found in the course of a large acquaintance with the conditions of society in various parts of our land that the more faithful Friends have been in observing this testimony the better has seemed the general state of the meetings.

Many objections are brought against wearing a plain coat; some from not having a true idea of the reasons for maintaining this custom; but chiefly, I fear, because it is naturally such a cross to differ in appearance from other people that we are ready to seek almost any excuse to avoid it. We are told that it is expensive to have our clothes made in this way. I admit that common, ready-made suits are cheaper than those made by a tailor, but oftentimes not so neat or durable, and a plain suit will cost no more than a fashionable one when ordered made. Where, however, a principle is at stake, it is not right to swerve from the Truth on account of expense. Many other things cost us something to maintain; we might make more money by staying home from mid-week meetings, but that would not justify us in doing so.

Probably the strongest objection put forward is that we ought not to assume the plain dress until we feel drawn to do so by the Spirit. While I believe that few will take up so great a cross to the natural inclination unless drawn thereto by the Holy Spirit (and I would not have it understood that the mere following of a custom in this particular is all that is required of us), yet it does seem to me that, in all cases where the application of the moral law is concerned, if there is no decided conviction in either direction, it is better to be on the side of the virtue than of the opposite, vice; and no one can reasonably assert that he is Divinely required to follow out the fashions in dress. Upon the theory advanced, would not the paid pastor be required to continue receiving money for his services so long as he does not feel uneasy with his profession, and the soldier remain in the army so long as he feels no conscientious scruples arise against the service? In our own Society, it would be right to stay away from mid-week meetings unless we were drawn to attend them; to use the plural language and the heathen names of days and months unless Divinely drawn to reject them. The declaration of a minister years ago in a family sitting has always seemed to me pertinent to the case in hand. Using the text, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them," she endeavored to press upon us in regard to these peculiar testimonies of our Society, that if we were exercised in them, they would more and more become matters of conviction; and I cannot believe that out of the many hundreds or thousands of members of our Society, who have been attired in the plain dress of a Friend, some perhaps with little conviction on the subject, any were ever called to recede it on a dying bed. Rather the fact of our being so attired tends to make us think why, especially when called on to defend our course as often as we are.

I have heard it argued that it was unreasonable to think no one would ever get to Heaven unless he wore a plain coat. I think such argument puerile, for I do not believe any really concerned Friend who advocated the plain dress ever had any such thought.

Again, we have been accused of being narrow-minded for urging the importance of this practice. Is it not possible that our opponents have so little knowledge of the true reasons which actuate Friends in upholding this testimony, that they are really the narrow-minded ones who have never comprehended the principles of the Society in this matter?

One other error I wish to notice, advanced by no less a writer than Caroline E. Stephen. It is that those thus attired give the suggestion of over-sanctity or thinking themselves on that account better than others. The same principle will hold good here as in some previous objections. If our wearing the plain dress must subject us to the charge of Pharisaism, will not our faithful attendance of meetings, our use of the plain language, our declining hat honor, and others of our testimonies do the same? Think where such a course would lead us. It would almost forbid the exercise of every virtue except as it was observed by the common crowd around us. But some one will say, It is all right for those to live up to conscience who feel a duty in it, but they ought not to endeavor to force their sentiments on others who do not feel such requirement. I would not wish to deny to any one the right to act as he feels required of him, aside from what others think. But in organized religious society there are responsibilities which we cannot shirk and do right. As members of the Church, in our families, and in our schools, there are occasions constantly arising that require the crossing of the path of other Friends, for whom we have no ill will, and towards whom nothing but a desire for the right, and a concern for the best interests of those over whom we are placed, leads us to take the position of opposition to their wishes. It has been the concern of those who have charge of our boarding-schools to preserve the plain dress among the children, because we wish to early impress them with the importance of keeping their minds from being devoted to the hurtful and changing fashion in dress. How then can we rightly assist in giving the character of these institutions to those who are not concerned with the testimony? And it seems to me the obligation must be equally strong on parents also to train up their children in a consistent manner.

Whenever, too, we place in a prominent position in Society those whose apparel does not conform to our distinctive appearance as Friends, at least if faithful Friends can be employed, we are practically saying to the rising generation that we consider the testimony of little account, especially in such a hurtful attitude exerted when we recognize as ministers and elders, the people who disregard our distinctive form of dress. We will be told we must not "flee." There is danger of wresting passages of the Bible from their true meaning, and if we study carefully the whole of the Scriptures, we will find there are many passages that show judgment to be a Divine requirement. Without it how could we be allowed to treat with offenders, and how would we single out and avoid evil company in our daily associations? And as to condemning others better than ourselves, the charge so often brought against concerned Friends in this connection, I believe we will find many in other denominations so closely following the light that is given them that we will have to give them credit with being deeper Christians than we are; yet they would not on that account be calculated to maintain the doctrines of Friends. No more can those in our Society who do not unite with our practices be expected to faithfully maintain them. In any worldly organization for social, philanthropic, or financial purposes, who would advocate giving the management of their affairs to those who were opposed to the principles on which they were organized? It would seem that we ought to exercise as much care at least, when choosing the officers of our meetings, that they should be really concerned to uphold all our principles. So strong was the belief in the past generation of Friends in the necessity of this practice that Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, even so late as 1874, deemed best to send out the following advice: "It has been cause of sorrow to observe that in some meetings, those are occasionally appointed to stations or employed in services who make no appearance of being Friends, and whose manner of life is not in accordance with our distinguishing doctrines and testimonies. Herein the precious cause which we are called to uphold and promote must suffer."

It would be practically impossible under present conditions in nearly all our meetings to follow out the advice above cited, and yet I feel that we should not lose sight of the concern. Far from thinking the plain dress is all there is in religion, I should yet be glad to see it restored to its rightful place among our testimonies. The word in closing seems to be, "Be watchful and strengthen the things that remain, that are ready to die."

BARNESVILLE, O.

JOS. E. MEYERS.

CHARACTER STANDARDS.

An esteemed correspondent and subscriber has put into our hands a copy of the report of the Commission on Character Standards made to a recent convention of the Young Women's Christian Association. The whole report is interesting and valuable. Its dominant note may be gathered from the following quotations. The commission gives no uncertain sound on a most important subject.—[Ed.]

"This country is in the throes of a great moral and spiritual awakening. Religious leaders are keenly sensitive to the blurred standards of character and conduct. In the midst of the complex demands of modern society, the multiplying of impersonal interests, the widening chasms between groups of people, the prevailing irreverence, it has been so easy to lay failure in character attainment at the door of heredity, environment and physical disabilities. We share the profound need of each succeeding generation for a force mighty enough to strike through the tangled interests and befogged ideals of people and stamp their lives for righteousness. As we face our responsibility to the young women whose narrow, aimless, superficial lives must be transformed to breadth of purpose, steadfast, deep and true, we realize that only as Jesus Christ himself becomes the great redeeming standard, can we hope to see character made strong instead of flabby, and life a throbbing dynamo of power."

"Our work will be finished only when every girl has come into the experience of vital faith in Jesus Christ and a joyous allegiance to him, and has caught his enthusiasm for a life spent in service for others, not only along the broad lines of philanthropic effort, but even more in simple friendliness for those who need her sympathy and love."

Men look to God for some mysterious sign,
For other stars than those that nightly shine,
For some unnatural symbol of his might.

THE MARCH OF REFINEMENT.

Sons and daughters of Fox, from your slumbers awake ye,

No longer in listless indulgence recline!
From the fetters of sloth and luxury break ye,
And put on your beautiful garments and shine!

Time was when your fathers, in wisdom grown hoary,

In their doublet of leather, the pilgrim's rude gear,
Contemning the pride of this world and its glory,
Pursued their rough path of reproach to the skies.

Unletter'd as they who on Judah's lone mountain,

By her wind ruffled lake, in deep forest or den,—
Drawing waters of life from salvation's best fountain,
Surrounded the houseless Redeemer of men.

Your sires, by his spirit's best influence guided,

Regardless of dangers, of prisons, and death;
Alike by the sage, and the trifter derided,
Look'd o'er this vain world with the keen eye of faith.

From the lure of false glory, false happiness, turning,

With the courage of martyrs they follow'd their Lord;
Their loins girded close, and their lamps brightly burning,
Unceasing they publish'd his life-giving word.

Those days are long past, and new light rises o'er us,

No longer we suffer such hardship and loss;
The "March of Refinement" now opens upon us,
And points other ways than the way of the cross.

No longer we talk of neck, patient endurance,

Of low self-denial and watchful restraint;
But of confident hope and exulting assurance,
And the triumphs that wait on the steps of the saint.

Knowledge waves her light wand, and poor, wandering mortals,

No longer a rugged and thorny road trace;
The gate that was strait now unfolds its wide portals,
The way once so narrow expands into space.

Religion has softened her features; around her

The attractions of taste and of fancy are shed;
The arts with their graceful adornments surround her,
And weave a rich veil for her delicate head.

Our maidens, no longer the homely task plying,

That once could engage the grave masons of yore,
Are all in each liberal accomplishment vieing,
And high on the pinions of sentiment soar.

"Tis true there are some who, these flow'ry paths fearing,

Again and again tell us plainly we stray;
Who the standard of ancient simplicity bearing,
Exhort us to pause and consider the way.

But many, tho' granting their honest intentions,

Deem them rigid and narrow, of prejudice's mind,
And believe that 'midst thousands of modern inventions,
Some happy expedient yet we shall find

To reconcile things in their nature discordant,

Inclination and duty no longer at strife;
Religion with luxury kindly accordant,
The peace of the soul, with the pride of this life.

Vain hope of blind man! in his fond self-deceiving,

Whilst immutably true stands the Saviour's own word;
Happy they, who, its sacred assurance receiving,
In lowliness follow their crucified Lord.

*Ye cannot serve two masters.—Matt. vi. 24.

—Tract.

ANSWERED PRAYER.—He asked for strength that he might achieve; he was made weak that he might obey.

He asked for health that he might do greater things; he was given infirmity that he might do better things.

He asked for riches that he might be happy; he was given poverty that he might be wise.

He asked for power that he might have the praise of men; he was given weakness that he might feel the need of God.

He asked for all things that he might enjoy life; he was given Life that he might enjoy all things.

He has received nothing that he asked for, all that he hoped for. His prayer is answered. He is most blest.—Selected.

Reprinted by request from No. 44, Vol. 76

THE TESTIMONIES OF FRIENDS.

It has been customary to treat of the principles and testimonies of the Society of Friends in connection, and we may further say it has been admitted by those of deep religious experience that the adoption of the one necessarily leads to the practice of the other. Among what have been marks of distinction there may be some that have been merely habits. Where these have been accidental it has been a weakness to claim for them any Divine authority. But even when not fundamental they have their value, and when any under our name from temptation of conformity with the world have yielded in minor points, they have commonly lost further ground by yielding the badges that are essential to a Christian character.

The departure in dress and manners has become so extensive that it has raised the question in many minds how far this testimony to plainness is obligatory. We have based it upon conformity to the will of God, and it was a maxim with J. Dymond that "the will of God being known, human duty is ascertained." It is an excuse on the part of some that they do not perceive it to be the Divine will that they should bear these testimonies. This may be true for the moment. But if one sets about leading a religious life it is not expected that conformity in dress and manners with the standard of Friends will be the first outward evidence. Our Saviour testified that the change in his followers should commence within, and all experience goes to show that in the way of holiness the first step is the work of regeneration. When this takes place, when the heart is cleansed the outside afterward becomes clean also.

We may see this all-important work, as it is gradual, in all stages of fulfilment. At first the temper, the countenance, the manner of expression are necessarily affected. The speech of dedicated ones, "betrays that they have been with Jesus." In the case of early Friends they found it to be a call of duty in various ways to confess Christ before men.

To preach the Gospel publicly may be the work of but few; but to bear some testimony in everyday life is a service for which all are fitted, and we may say is required from all. It should be borne in mind that each of us is accountable for the influence he exerts in passing through the world. Any one who has been divinely visited and led in some degree to "bear the yoke" is likely to be influenced in shaping his heavenward course by the example of those around him. Some of these perhaps have "stumbled at the cross" and become callous in regard to their unfaithfulness. Others are encouraged in a compromise with the world, by association with such as have fallen short in duty, and the more creditable these evil examples may be the greater is their influence. Thus the evil goes on. And when these nominal members, imbued with the spirit of the world are placed in positions of trust in the Church, it greatly magnifies their unconscious power for spiritual weakness. It would ill become any who have attained some stature in Christian growth to cast aspersions around them upon others they may think less favored. They cannot, however, but fervently desire the overthrow of the doctrine that the Truth no longer leads in these paths of self-denial. That the followers of Christ must bear his yoke is an ever-during testimony.

Christ is spoken of as our example in a sinless life. He could weep with the sorrows of mankind, but there is no intimation that He ever indulged in what the world calls pleasure. His service does not entail upon us a life of gloom and dejection. He does forbid participating in delights that are at war with his perfections, but to those who wholly follow Him He gives "the peace of God which passeth all understanding," a fountain of enjoyment the world knows not. I am inclined to think that the deficiency in attainment of the present day is somewhat referable to taking ideas obtained from studying the Scripture as the beginning of a religious life. If there is no heart work preceding it or co-operating with it, a religion obtained in this way will be wanting in vitality. Its growth will be unhealthy, and when beset by the allurements of the world on the one hand, or its frowns on the other, will yield to its force. Some of our members who highly value religious consistency, but do not appear as Friends, may flatter themselves that their line of usefulness lies in conformity with customary usage. But I apprehend that this sphere of action is not just what God designed for them. Perhaps if they would carefully trace back their past lives they would find some places where duties were pointed out which they failed to comply with. A few such mistakes would account for all the deflections that appear. I believe there should be no compromising the difference between those who observe our testimonies and those who but partially do so, and there is no unity to be arrived at but by going back to Bethel, and noting from thence the waymarks of our pilgrimage.

LLOYD BALDERSTON.

COLORA, Fourth Month 4, 1903.

CHEYNEY SUMMER SCHOOL.

As usual during the Seventh Month for seven years past, a Summer School for colored teachers has been conducted at Cheyney this year. The completion of a new dormitory last month (Baily Hall) has made possible a larger number of students than heretofore. There have been over a hundred resident at the Institute. These and those boarding nearby and in West Chester have made a total enrollment of one hundred and twenty-five. Nearly all the Southern States are represented in the enrollment, several teachers coming from as far south as Florida. The amount of determination and self-sacrifice represented in the attendance is most promising for the progress of the race. Most of the teachers from the South have meager salaries and the outlay for carfare and a ten dollar fee at Cheyney often requires the savings of two or three years. The universal testimony of such teachers is that the short term at Cheyney is worth all this cost.

Another interesting feature of the attendance is the fact that several of the teachers come to the Summer School at the instance of Boards or Associations to promote the progress of the race. This is a further acceptable indication that the training at Cheyney has recognition in some of the most intelligent circles. The work this summer has had a good measure of momentum from the start, and those who have any pause of feeling as to the wisdom of investing money in such a cause would certainly find their perplexities relieved in the presence of such an object lesson as the Summer School presents.

J. H. B.

NEW PRINCIPAL AT CHEYNEY.

After ten years of valuable service for the Institute for Colored Youth, Hugh M. Browne is retiring from the principalship at the conclusion of the present term of the Summer School. The Board is happy to announce that they have secured E. L. Pinckney Hill for the position. He is a Harvard graduate, has had valuable experience in teaching and for six years has been principal of the Industrial School at Manassas. He found Manassas with one poorly appointed and poorly equipped building. Chiefly through his efforts, $80,000 has been wisely invested in a farm and a good school plant. An enrollment of about three hundred students has justified the need of this investment, and a quality of work has been attained in academic and industrial lines equal to any in the colored Normal schools.

Under such circumstances no slight responsibility has been attached by the Cheyney Board in attracting L. P. Hill from his present post. It is due him to say that he would not have accepted the change had it not appealed to him as an enlarged opportunity for service in his chosen field. To his professional as to many others teacher training appeals as the most economical as well as the most effective means of serving the Normal cause. For the ensuing year Leslie P. Hill will continue some responsibility for Manassas. It is hoped this will attract the interest and sympathy of Friends to assist this worthy monument of the late war. Manassas is situated so it overlooks the battlefield of Bull Run. Let education wipe out wrongs as blood could not.

J. H. B.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

THE BOY FROM TOWN.

He had not thought the sky was blue,
Nor realized the grass was green.
The city streets were all he knew,
The country he had never seen.

He had not heard the birds and bees;
He had not seen the brook, his friend;
The beckoning road beneath the trees
Would gaily on without an end.

Like a caged creature free at last,
He gave a ringing shout of joy,
And running far, and running fast,
He claimed this world made for a boy.

Now he can wander merrily,
With no policeman near to frown.
The grass, the flowers, the earth is free,—
Free to the poor patched boy from town!
—ABBIE FAREWELL BROWN, in Everglad.

KILLED BY A WORM.—“See that dead tree! It was killed by a worm,” said a gentleman to his friend.

“How could a worm kill a tree?” asked the other.

“Two years ago that tree was full of leaves, but I saw a wood-worm about three inches long working its way in under the bark of the tree. I thought, ‘I wonder if that black worm will do much harm to the tree?’

“The next summer the leaves of the tree did not stay green, but dropped off very early, and the second year not a single leaf came out upon the tree. That one worm had killed the tree.”

“Strange!” said his friend, “but if one worm kills a tree, it shows how one sin may kill a soul.”—The Picture World.

Selected by S. S. K.

MINER.—Bradford was spending his vacation with his grandfather who lived on a large farm in New Brunswick. He found many things to interest him there. “The farm is remarkably well stocked,” he heard his father tell his mother, one day.

The horses, especially, interested Bradford, they were so big and strong looking. All but the one they called Miner; he appeared a little more clumsy, Bradford told his grandfather.

“Miner has done excellent service in his day,” Grandfather said, stroking the animal’s mane lovingly.

The horse returned the caress by gently rubbing his nose against Grandfather’s coat sleeve.

“Why doesn’t Miner work, like the rest of the horses?” Bradford asked. For he had noticed that this horse was always either in his stall, or else feeding in a near-by field.

“Poor Miner’s working days are over, my boy,” Grandfather answered.

“But he looks just as able to work as the rest of the horses,” Bradford declared.

“He may be physically as able, but he is blind,” Grandfather replied, as the horse raised a pair of large, brown, but unseeing eyes to his own. “For twelve long years Miner worked in a coal mine,” Grandfather went on to explain, “and he did faithful service there. One day it was proposed by some one that Miner be ‘retired,’ as they call it when they lay off a man on half-pay when he becomes old and feeble. Miner hadn’t got feeble yet, but the men who had worked with him and who knew what a faithful horse he had been thought it would be nice to let Miner see and enjoy daylight again before he died.

“So one day the horse was put aboard the mine car on one of its upward trips, ‘sent up to pasture,’ as they call it. But when he stepped his foot on the ground Miner began to stumble about like a blind person. I happened to be standing near and I grasped his bridle to keep him from falling.

“‘It is too sudden a change,’ some one observed. ‘He should be put into a stall for a few days until his eyes become gradually accustomed to the light.’ As no one seemed to want a blind horse, I offered to take Miner and care for him until his eyesight came back. But it never came." Grandfather said, after a pause. And in a voice that sounded a trifle husky, "and I would part with every horse in my stable, now, before I'd let Miner leave me," he assured the little boy who had listened to the recital with shining eyes.

"Where was the mine where Miner worked?" Bradford queried and his voice, also, seemed a little unsteady.

"Under the Bay of Fundy, lad," Grandfather replied, taking a handful of oats from the bin and holding them under Miner's quivering nostrils. "Horses that go down into a coal mine to work usually stay there until they die," he went on. "They grow accustomed to it, just as the men do. A man who has worked down in a mine for a number of years usually is homesick to get back. But I never intend to let Miner get homesick; and that is why I am allowing him to spend his old age in enjoyment and comfort." Grandfather patted the old horse affectionately.

"I am so glad for Miner, Grandfather," Bradford whispered, burying his face in the flowing mane of the faithful horse, who neighed softly as if in answer to the caress.—NELLIE M. COYE, in Our Dumb Animals.

Selected by S. S. K.

SEEN ON A NEW YORK STREET.—Editor Our Dumb Animals: Even in cruel New York one finds a tender heart for horses. This morning (the temperature near zero) as I was coming from the ferry to the office I heard a man talking loud about a horse which evidently did not want water from the water-tank in front of him.

The man on the wagon said, "Yes, he does want water. Don't check him up." As he jumped off the wagon, I stopped and noticed that the poor horse was blind.

The man carefully took the poor thing's head and slowly pushed it to the water, and, my, how that poor horse did drink, and how pleased the driver was and how sheepish the cursing man looked and acted! There were enough of us watching that incident so that not only the kind-hearted driver but other drivers saw that such kindness was appreciated by others than the horse.

I complimented the driver and he said, "Oh, Bob is a good old skate. He will do anything for me, but when I bought him for $12 no one could get near him." Then he started talking to Bob and Bob understood, and I knew they were friends.

If we could only have all drivers like this one!—C. W. WHEATON.

FRIENDLY NEWS.

MAX I. REICH of London, a member of Westminster and Longford Monthly Meeting of Friends, has been in Philadelphia and vicinity during the past few weeks and has attended acceptably a considerable number of meetings. Some Friends have also had the privilege of having him in their homes. The minute of his Monthly Meeting informs Friends that he is "an esteemed member whose service among us has our cordial appreciation," and that "he hopes to have some service among Friends and others" while on a visit to America and Canada. The minute was granted him the twelfth of Sixth Month. On religious service he has previously traveled in Wales and Scotland and also in Germany.

JOSEPH STORRS FRY, whose death was noticed in last week's FRIEND, sent a written message to London Yearly Meeting in 1912. At that time his health was too much enfeebled to make attendance possible. The following is the concluding sentence of the message:—"My chief desire for my dear Friends is that they may all be found truly living under the transforming and sustaining power of the grace of God, coming to us through faith in that blessed Saviour who ever abides as the great Head of his Church and people, and Who gave Himself for us all that we might be his faithful followers here and partakers of his heavenly Kingdom for evermore."

THE prospect of a new edition of the works of William Penn, by Albert Cook Myers, has been noted in THE FRIEND. A correspondent has furnished a clipping from the British Congregationalist which recites several results of the search in England for new historical data bearing upon Penn and upon his family. The bulk of the clipping is reprinted herewith:

THE LIFE STORY OF WILLIAM PENN.

Albert Cook Myers, who has been in this country for some months past prosecuting enquiries and researches regarding Penn and his ancestors and descendants, has devoted a considerable time to Bristol and the West Country, and one of the most interesting of his discoveries is that William Penn, ere he sailed for America, was appointed an inspector of the Friends' "Latten Schools" in the Bristol district. Probably he secured this appointment because he had received an University training, which few members of the community of Friends, or Quakers as they were then known, at that time enjoyed. What would have happened to the future of the New World had Penn settled down to his humdrum life of teacher or inspector of schools it is perhaps idle, although it is undoubtedly interesting, to speculate.

Among other discoveries of A. C. Myers' whilst at Bristol was that of the will of the famous Admiral Sir William Penn, the father of the founder of Pennsylvania and the friend of garrulous Pepys, in which he directed that his body should be interred next to that of his mother in the beautiful church of St. Mary Redcliffe. By tradition Wm. Penn, the founder of Pennsylvania, has been regarded as the writer of the epitaph which appears above his father's tomb, but A. C. Myers, although desirous of proving or disproving this tradition, has failed to find any evidence in favor of it.

There are many picturesque stories of Penn's conduct when an undergraduate that A. C. Myers' researches have served to shatter. One of these is that Penn, after becoming a Quaker, set to work and tore the gowns off his fellow undergraduates' backs. His new biographer has also failed to find a scrap of evidence that he was "sent down" from Oxford as the penalty of becoming a Quaker. But A. C. Myers has succeeded in adducing considerable evidence that the story that Penn was not after all interred at the spot indicated at Jordans by the existing headstone is without reasonable foundation.

In an old Cautions Book in the Bodleian Library, A. C. Myers found an entry under the date 1660: "William Penn, Gentleman Commoner, Cautions Paid," and two years later an entry of "Ten pounds cautions returned" under the same heading. This approximately fixing the duration as well as the date of Penn's sojourn at the University.

In his very widespread researches A. C. Myers has discovered in the collections of the Dukes of Devonshire, Portland, Bueloch and Earls of Lonsdale and Spencer many quite forgotten and hitherto unpublished letters of the great Quaker. Included in these interesting finds were his diary entitled "My Journey on Truth's Account through Kent, Surrey, and Part of Sussex," and two letters, dated from Philadelphia, giving valuable particulars regarding the German immigration into Pennsylvania, and details concerning the foundation of the city of Philadelphia in the early part of the eighteenth century.

One fact which is not, I fancy, generally known or realized, has been established by A. C. Myers' researches, it is that William Penn spent rather less than four years altogether of his life in America, although the fruits of that short sojourn were so important and even epoch-making in their effects. Not the least interesting of A. C. Myers' many discoveries have been the itineraries and details of Penn's many journeys "On Truth's Account" both in England and on the Continent. Light will be shed upon this only partially known and neglected aspect of the "Great Quaker's" life. By his diaries and letters he substantiates a claim to be considered a great and one of the earliest missionaries. A quite romantic touch has been lent to the researches of A. C. Myers by the discovery of a chest containing the orders and decorations bestowed upon Admiral Sir William Penn by the Stuart Kings, long forgotten and unopened.

From the materials and letters—the latter upwards of one thousand in number—which A. C. Myers has been able to trace and examine, we are promised not only a deeply interesting biography, but William Penn presented in a quite new aspect from several points of view.

ALYMER NORRIS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

QUOTATION FROM LETTER OF WM. W. CABRYR, M. D.—"Religious Work—In no line of endeavor during the past twelve months has success so signally attended our work as in the religious life of the institution. An intense interest in religion is manifest among our Chinese associates. A year ago only two of the nurses were Christians,—since that time all have joined the church, except the two probationers just admitted.

A recent despatch says: "Dr. Henry S. Drinker, president of the American Forestry Association and president of Lehigh University, in speaking for the association at the forestry conference here to-night, spoke of the awakening of the public to the dangers and losses from forest fires and to the need for adequate protection. He said: 'The lesson has been taken to heart by our people. No less than 34 of our 48 States have taken active practical State action in forestry. We have some 27 well organized forestry and conservation associations, and some 35 associations organized for timber protection and allied conservation purposes.'"

The Department of Agriculture at Washington, says: "Protect and encourage the meadow lark, for its principal diet consists of cotton boll and alfalfa weevils, grasshoppers and predaceous ground beetles. While the bird, it is acknowledged, does some damage to sprouting grain, its value as a destroyer of injurious insects is shown to be far greater."

Announcement has been made by Secretary of Agriculture N. B. Critchfield, at Harrisburg, Pa., of the appointment of the ten experts who are to give advice to farmers on soils and methods of farming under the terms of the North act. These experts are to cover the entire State, responding to requests for advice on problems in practical farming and aiding in agricultural development.

A despatch from Nome, Alaska, says: "Direct wireless communication between America and Asia is now an accomplished fact, the United States army signal corps, stationed here, having been in nightly communication with the Russian station at Anadyr, Siberia, 500 miles west of Nome."

It is stated that the Richards marriage law prohibits the issuance of marriage licenses to persons with transmissible diseases, to imbeciles, to epileptics, to the insane, to persons under the influence of liquor or drugs, and to males who are or have been within five years an inmate of any county asylum or home for the indigent. Physicians and social workers were greatly pleased over the fact that Governor Tener had signed the Richards marriage license bill, and looked upon the new law as a highly desirable application of the science of eugenics.

Wireless storm warnings and weather forecasts are now to be sent out about 10 o'clock each night from the great stations at Radio, Va., opposite Washington, and from Key West. The message will reach mariners all along the Atlantic coast and far out to sea so that they will be prepared in advance for the weather.

A despatch from Washington of the 23d, says: "Strong corroboration of the theory of scientists that the original American Indian came from eastern Asia and Mongolia by overflow of the original population of those regions was obtained by Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, of the Smithsonian Institution, who has recently returned from a trip of scientific exploration in Siberia and Mongolia. The particular object of this Asian mission was to search for data concerning the race which is supposed to have peopled America. He gathered extensive information and collections, from which he draws the conclusion that there exist in several places in Siberia, Mongolia and Tibet numerous remains of an ancient population which was physically identical with and in all probability gave rise to the American Indian. He found striking evidence that the theory of transmigration of the aboriginal Indian from Asia is correct, basing his belief not only on the prehistoric remains found in this little-explored region, but also on the striking resemblance of the existing race of natives to the American Indians."

It is stated from Chandler, Ariz., that the growing of Egyptian cotton has become such a great industry in Salt River Valley that a ginning plant has been purchased and will be installed at Chandler. As it grows now the long staple cotton is 94 per cent. a perfect stand, the stalks averaging two feet in height. It is said that the average production per acre is about three times greater at Chandler than elsewhere, because of the long season and abundance of water and sunshine.

To safeguard the public health against milk-borne diseases, the Board of Health of this city has adopted a new rule which will require that all milk and cream sold in this city shall be pasteurized, except that which is certified or guaranteed by authorities approved by the Board of Health. Pasteurization consists, in principle, of exposing the milk to a temperature high enough and for a period of time long enough to destroy all disease germs which contaminated milk and yet not to interfere with its quality or food value. One of the great advantages that is expected to result from the enforcement of the new rule is a further reduction in infant mortality.

FOREIGN.—In reference to the war between Bulgaria and Greece it is stated that the battles between the Bulgarian army and the Servians, Greeks and Montenegrius were desperate, with heavy losses to both sides.

It is estimated that more than 50,000 have been killed and wounded. The harvesting of crops has been restricted by the lack of men and must result in serious suffering in the camps and threatens a serious epidemic. A commission is trying to arrange peace. On the 21st it was stated the Bulgarian Cabinet formally notified the European Powers of its readiness to order the cessation of hostilities immediately if the Powers could induce Servia and Greece to take a similar course.

A despatch from Constantinople of the 17th says: "Trustworthy reports of appalling massacres and devastation by Turkish irregular troops come from districts in Thrace which the Turks are reoccupying. The Bulgarians pillaged and burned the Muslim villages and massacred their inhabitants, and now the Turks are wreaking dreadful vengeance on the Christian villages which the Bulgarians spared."

A despatch from Berlin of the 21st of Seventh Month, says: "Besides the sharp shocks of earthquake felt throughout Wurttemberg yesterday, tremors were experienced all over southern Germany. Many persons were thrown down in the streets, and hundreds ran in terror out of their houses. At Strassburg the seismic recording instruments were put out of order by the violence of the disturbance."

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 87.

Jacob R. Elfreth, Pa.; Jane D. Engle, N. J.; Addison Hutton, Pa.; Nathaniel B. Jones, N. J., $6, for himself, Rebecca W. Jones and Jesse H. Jones; James W. Bradley, Calif.; Sarah A. Lovett, Pa.; Alice C. and Sarah H. Letehworth, N. J.; Wm. B. Moore, Pa.; Sarah R. Baker, Calif., $6, for H. P. Rudolph, Morris Longstreth and Warner W. Cooper; Henry W. Leeds, N. J., $8, for himself, Sarah W. Leeds, Samuel P. Leeds and Laura Moore Leeds; Wm. Evans, N. J.; Samuel Forsythe, Pa.; Jesse Negus, Agt., Ia., $25, for himself, Peder G. Petersen, Joseph N. Dewees, Nicholas Larson, Lars C. Hanson, L. Claudia Negus, Voorlees Industrial School, John Mather, David F. White, Jacob Cook $1 to No. 27, Elisha J. Bye, $4, for $6 and $7, and Israel S. Larson; Annie Mickle, Pa.; W. W. Dewees, Pa.; Mary P. Nicholson, Mary A. Osborne and for Hannah Frazier, Ind.; Mary W. Trimble, Pa., $6, for herself, Robert W. Baklerston and John B. Hutchinson; J. H. De Wees, Agt., O., $32, for Edith Smith, Lizzie M. Smith, Hanna M. Matson, Jos. P. Binns, Jonathan Binns, J. Henry Binns, Lewis Hall L. Hall, B. F. Starbuck, Samuel Hall, Gilbert McGrew, A. D. Hall, Lewis C. Steer, Edward D. Whinery and Gilbert E. Thomas; W. E. Meeckel, Agt., N. Y., $10, for H. Foster Owen, Edward Wood, Arthur H. Wood, Jesse Meeckel and Sara D. Meeckel; Samuel T. Haight, Agt., Canada, $16, for Joseph H. Clayton, Joseph G. Pollard, George Pollard, Albert Pollard, Joshua Waring, Henry S. Moore, Catharine Hall, and Alice Trefroy; Wm. Scattergood, Agt., Pa., $10, for Lydia Emlore, T. Francis Warrington, Mercy Anna Roberts, Elizabeth L. Roberts and Charles C. Roberts; Jonathan Elbridge, Pa., $4, for vols. 86 and 87; E. G. Standing and R. K. Peckham, Ia.; Ezra C. Bell, N. J., and for Clayton H. Evans; Joseph H. Haines, N. J., $10, for himself, M. W. and E. H. Haines, Jane E. Eves, M. Emma Allen and Annie H. Stokes; Wm. D. Smith, Agt., Ia., $6, for Thomas Blackburn, Wilson T. Emmons and Elisha Hoge; Thos. K. Wilbur, Agt., Mass., $14, for himself, Sarah E. Mitchell, Isabel L. Gifford, Job S. Gidley, James H. Tucker, Jesse R. Tucker and Samuel S. Wilbur; Edward Lippincott, Pa., and for Thos. B. Lippincott; Sarah Hoyle, O.; Elizabeth P. Smith, Phila.; Wm. Hoyle, O.; Rachel B. Dowlin, Phila.; Thos. A. Crawford, Agt., O., $20, for Jonathan K. Blackburn, Henrietta French, Jesse Edgerton, Chas. E. Crawford, Robert Ellyson, Edgar Warrington, Gilbert Warrington, Horace J. Edgerton, Selma Taber Miller and Abner Woolman;

Remittances received after Third-day noon will not appear in the receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

During Seventh and Eighth Months of this year the meetings at Newton Meeting House, Camden, N. J., will be discontinued.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK (Eighth Month 4th to 9th):
 Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting, at Fourth and Arch Streets, Third-day, Eighth Month 5th, at 10 A. M.
 Abington Quarterly Meeting, at Germantown, Phila., Fifth-day, Eighth Month 7th, at 10 A. M.
 MONTHLY MEETINGS:—
 Kennett, at Kennett Square, Pa., Third-day, Eighth Month 5th, at 10 A. M.

Chesler, at Trenton, N. J., Third-day, Eighth Month 5th, at 10 A. M.

Chesler, N. J., at Mercersburg, N. J., Third-day, Eighth Month 5th, at 7:30 A. M.

Boydell, at Coatsville, Pa., Fourth-day, Eighth Month 6th, at 10 A. M.

Boydell, at West Grove, Pa., Fourth-day, Eighth Month 6th, at 10 A. M.

Upper Springfield, at Mansfield, N. J., Fourth-day, Eighth Month 6th, at 10 A. M.

Haddock, N. J., Fourth-day, Eighth Month 6th, at 7:30 P. M.

Whittington, Del., Fifth-day, Eighth Month 7th, at 10 A. M.

Uchelman, at Downingtown, Pa., Fifth-day, Eighth Month 7th, at 10 A. M.

London Grove, Pa., Fifth-day, Eighth Month 7th, at 10 A. M.

Burlington, N. J., Fifth-day, Eighth Month 7th, at 10 A. M.

Falls, at J. Burlington, Pa., Fifth-day, Eighth Month 7th, at 10 A. M.

Evesham, at Mt. Laurel, N. J., Fifth-day, Eighth Month 7th, at 10 A. M.

Upper Evesham, at Medford, N. J., Seventh-day, Eighth Month 9th, at 10 A. M.

DIED.—Seventh Month 6th, 1913, ESTHER NEWLIN STOKES, daughter of Frances and Catharine W. Stokes; a member of Germantown Monthly Meeting of Friends, Pennsylvania.

—, at the residence of Benjamin H. Cope, near Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, on the morning of the seventeenth of Seventh Month, 1913, MARY B. LUPTON, wife of the late Isaac B. Lupton, in the eighty-seventh year of her age. She was a member of Short Creek Monthly Meeting of Friends.

—, Sixth Month 20, 1913, at the residence of her brother-in-law, Jesse Edgerton, Dunascus, Ohio, SARAH A. GILBERT, daughter of Benjamin and Lydia Gilbert, in the eighty-fourth year of her age; a member of Salem Monthly Meeting of Friends, Ohio.

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.
Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.
Standing business cards are also solicited.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER
N. W. COR. 16th & RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL PHONE SPRUCE 0546

FOR SALE

A very desirable home from cottage at Pocono Manor, Monroe Co., Pa. Located on the highest portion of the Mountain of the level walk midway between the Inn and Golf Course. Plastered and heated, bath-room, close the lights, laundry in basement, screened throughout. Suitable for sale subject to a lease expiring March 31, 1914.

ESTATE OF WM. H. MOON,
MORRISVILLE, BUCKS CO., PA.

WANTED A FRIEND, WITH LONG EXPERIENCE, make a position as salesman with a firm controlled by Friends. E. Care of THE FRIEND.

WANTED CHRISTIAN WOMAN DESIRES position as bookkeeper or stenographer in Philadelphia, Pa. References given on request. Address: W. Care of THE FRIEND.

WANTED TO CORRESPOND WITH A FRIEND who is young and wishes a married man to take charge of his bookkeeping practice. No objection to correspondence through the medium of THE FRIEND. H. L. M., Care of THE FRIEND.

FOR SALE: DESIRABLE PROPERTY, No. 15 E. 2nd Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Well located and in good repair. Lot about 50 feet by 120 feet. House, 140 rooms, 100 ft. front porch, lot a street car and gas.
Apply to SARAH E. PRATT,
500 N. Monroe St., Media, Pa.

Eye Comfort Guaranteed

By glasses that suit, that give clear, easy vision. Fitting glasses to Old Eyes with a generosity with us and to Young Eyes, too.

C. A. LONGSTRETH
Specialist in Eye Testing
222 Market St., Philadelphia

Late Summer is now recognized as a desirable time for planting

Evergreens

Our illustrated catalogue, describing these & other Trees, Plants & Shrubs, mailed upon request.

The Wm. H. Moon Co.
GLENWOOD NURSERIES
Morrisville Bucks County, Pa.
PHILADELPHIA OFFICE, 21 S. Twelfth St.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

From Badger to Freedom, by Isabel Shipley, 2nd Edition, 2 cts.
Northfield Symposium, 1905. What 16 young Friends thought when they were 8 years younger. 2 cts.
Christ in all the Scriptures, by A. M. Hodgkin 60 cts.
Haydock's Testimony 50 cts. } by L. C. Wood
For a Free Conscience $1.00

ALL POSTPAID

J. B. WOOD, PINE POINT PARK, CAMDEN, N. J.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER

Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
(Mercellus Balderston)

302 SPRING GARDEN ST. 518 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL PHONE PHILADELPHIA

NORTH CAROLINA PINE BOX BOARDS OR ROOFERS

In solid or mixed cars, send us your inquiry. We make a specialty of this material and can make prompt delivery.

THE COX LUMBER CO., Inc.
Ashboro, N. C.

NO NEEDED

To worry as to where you can get good printed matter at fair prices. Consult us.

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,
FRANK T. BIDDLE,
1010 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

Subscribers patronizing our advertisers will assist THE FRIEND, especially by mentioning our paper in correspondence.

POCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevation 1800 feet, commanding extensive mountain and valley scenery. Address

J. W. HURLEY, Manager,
POCONO MANOR, PA.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL.

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

W. B. WEAVER Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5th ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN
TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT
OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL
ACCOMMODATIONS FOR
FUNERALS.

BELL PHONE ESTABLISHED 1880.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, EIGHTH MONTH 7, 1913.

No. 6.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT.
DAVIS H. FORBYTHE.

Make remittances payable to
EDWIN P. SELLEW OR THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

SOCIAL SERVICE, ITS PLACE IN THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.*

This is the sixth Swarthmore Lecture delivered as a prelude to London Yearly Meeting since 1907, when the lectureship was founded by the Woodbrooke Extension Committee. In a sense the series has been an ascending one, each year's contribution coming one step nearer to a practical self-realization of the power and withal of the limitations of the Society of Friends. This word self-realization may not express the conscious purpose of the Committee in establishing the lectures, but from a point of view across the sea it has in part at least seemed to be the purpose. In any event, the strength if not the weakness of the Society has been well inventoried, and the militant forces measurably put in array for battle.

The choice of subject this year has been at least timely, and probably no Friend living is better equipped to treat of social service than Joshua Rowntree. A new call to social service has been so variously sounded of late that the demand was specially for a judicial presentation of the case from the point of view of accurate historical perspective. This form of treatment has made the lecture now under review a recital of very great interest. Indeed, the history is so well presented that it argues its own case, and we accept as true for a Christian Society what Robert Barclay wrote, "Good works come as naturally from the birth of Christ in us as heat comes from fire." It is mentioned by Joshua Rowntree that Auguste Jorns, the latest German critic of Quakerism, makes this quotation from Robert Barclay, and it may not be out of place to observe that her theses in "Studies in the Social Politics of the Quakers" is quite in line with this sentence from Barclay and with the following statement made by Joshua Rowntree in his lecture: "The early Friends worked ever from the centre of life to the circumference. Their work came out splendidly true and it was never shallow" (p. 110). Indeed, it seems only just to A. Jorns and to two other German students of Quakerism to confess that they, better perhaps than any historian of our own membership, have disclosed the real dynamic of our early history. Prof. Paul Wernle's phrasing of the subject, quoted by J. Rowntree, is in these striking words, "There is no great work of humanity and mercy in which the Quakers have not had their share, and which finally is not rooted in that which Fox recognized as the power of the Seed of God."

An equating of this ancient phrase "the power of the Seed of God" with the modern term "social service" is actually the work that Joshua Rowntree has done so well in this lecture. The range of subjects shown by him to have been included in seventeenth and eighteenth century Quaker activity may well give pause to much of our self-gratulation as to our enlightened attainments in the present. Here are some of them: A living wage; improvement of conditions in farming, in industry, in commerce, in invention; efforts for prisoners, for the insane; various educational movements, including play grounds! Is it any wonder that a great German publicist called the Quakers "ethical Socialists?"

The method of "the power of the Seed of God" in social service—a method which makes men and movements as a consequence of men, is put in a most amiable light by Joshua Rowntree. One paragraph from the lecture will illustrate this and serve to convey the flavor of the whole:

"The writer recalls in his school days the tall, spare figure of a venerable Friend who regularly attended Yorkshire Quarterly Meeting. It was evident that he lived in the wholesome deliberate air of the country. His Quaker garb was spotlessly neat. His face spoke of indwelling light and peace with all mankind. When words came they were few and weighty. It is told how he would drive fourteen miles to a Friends' Meeting to worship. On one such occasion he rose and said, 'God is love,' and then sat down again. It is believed no listener forgot that sermon. He and his family were known to be of the salt of the earth; but what could a plain tenant farmer accomplish in a small village aloof from the life of the world? At the time when he settled in it, several of the houses were in an unsanitary condition; the laborers had no gardens to speak of, the children had no school, but there was a public house for the parents. When at fourscore years his call came to go up higher, he left a village where every cottage was a healthy home, where all able-bodied laborers wishing for an allotment could have one. The public house had gone and a good village school had been established. For many years the schoolmistress had lived in his house. A Bible Society anniversary in his big barn was the annual festival and Eirenicon of the district. It may fairly be said that the whole neighborhood was slowly uplifted by the coming of one quiet life into its midst. When he died Dr. Vaughan preached a funeral sermon in the parish church of Doncaster on his friend, William Dent, the Quaker tenant farmer of Marr."

J. H. B.

* Social Service, Its Place in the Society of Friends, by Joshua Rowntree. Headley Brothers, Bishopsgate, London, E. C. Price, one shilling.

To be truly happy is a question of how we begin and not of how we end, of what we want and not of what we have.—STEVENSON.

THE CASE OF THE MINISTERS.

There has always been to me something pathetic about the case of the clergies. But for many years I did not know why. When I found out it was because they were compelled to do their work by means of laughter. Now laughter is, of course, a spontaneous and even a capricious thing. It is one thing to be merry in life, it comes with an enfranchisement of the intellect perhaps, but real from the pressure of some realities. That this case, free thing should be put in harness and made to serve these sterner realities therein lay the pathos that I had always dimly felt. From such a lot might every one I loved be delivered! Let them work hard and get a good deal of pay, what you will—but let their laughter be free!

It is a good thing, but it has enlarged its scope. For I now see that there are other things which should be left free. Let us, for instance, let us say, is the gleam of sunlight over life. By all means let us not try to turn it into "power." But there are other gleams—the moonlight of poetry, the white light of religious experience, the radiance of love. And in my prayer I include all these.

It is a needless prayer. Thousands and thousands of men are suffering to-day, perhaps without knowing it, because the prayer has in their cases not been answered, because they are compelled, in the pursuit of their livelihood, to exploit some one of these.

I am thinking particularly of the clergy. They have come to seem to me even more to be pitied than the clowns. Laughter, indeed, is precious, but that which our ministers are required to put in harness is even more precious; it is the impulses and experiences of the religious life.

In all the discussion about the ministry and the church which is now so rife, no one seems to have a word of pity for those who, while being forced continually to do the impossible, do the unthinkable thing, namely, to exploit their own spiritual nature in the earning of their daily bread. Some discipline is doubtless good for us. To be compelled to chop wood when one is weary, to keep books when one loathes accounts, to sit behind a desk or teach spelling when one longs to go to town—these things may be good for one's moral fibre, or for one's character. But to be compelled by one's "job" to profess a prayer, when one does not feel prayerful, to be obliged to talk about spiritual realities which are at the moment, or perhaps never, real, to sell one's realities at all—this can never be good for the moral fibre, it must be disintegrating to it. This is the case with the clergy, the most disastrous form of slavery. It is the case with the men who do a dozen sometimes past hope of recovery, and the men who are the foundation of character; spiritual honesty and integrity are things which, even more than to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness—every one has a right, and that a right which goes down to the very depths of selfhood. There is in the case of the clergy a certain unacknowledged, usually unexpressed, but nevertheless real, reserve. With most of us it is protected from the world by the fact of reserve. Not so with the ministry! With them the fact is not hidden back at the stroke of an hour, or the sound of a bell, and the latch-strings are out for every passer-by. They are forced to give up their deepest convictions, their deepest longings, their deepest hopes, and to put it most crudely, their deepest selfhood, into the hands of the capitalist. That which with most of us is a part of our life, with ministers comes to be a part of their work. The fact makes the anomaly, and the anomaly makes the tragedy. It is useless to say that the clergy are "paid for their services." The services have, in the case of the clergy, a value which is not the same as when a man is paid for his services. He is paid for the work he does, but with the clergy the work is not the same as when a man is paid for his services.

There is something wrong. It is the wrong of professionalizing what ought to be left free. We see this quickly enough in other cases; poetry is a lovely thing, but so soon as it becomes professionalized, it is in danger. Personal charm is an adorable thing, but when the actor makes it a daily offering to an expectant public its finer bloom is too apt to vanish. Love and friendship are the greatest things in the world, but when they are habitually exploited, they lose part if not all of their greatness. The court favorite, paid for his devotion, the lover or the mistress, paid for their favors, compelled to render them without regard to the spontaneous impulse behind them, these are in danger of falling very far short of greatness. Perhaps Tolstoi was right, and every man should have some tangible work to do, not perhaps with his hands alone, but using his whole practical equipment of skill, knowledge and expert, and he earns his living by a combination of honesty, industry and skill in applying his expert knowledge. All this he can do, and still preserve that sacred something we have called selfhood.

With the physician it is the same; he has the aptitude, he equips himself with the knowledge and the skill. He offers these to society, and society gladly avails itself of them. In both professions, to be sure, the self behind the day's work is what gives the day's work its final value, but it is always behind the work. It is not served up as the very work itself. These men may have sympathy, inspiration, reverence, faith, love. They must have them, in some degree, but they are forces that underlie and compel.

The case of the minister may, indeed, be stated so as to make it seem parallel. He too, starting with some natural aptitude, spends years acquiring knowledge and skill. He masters ecclesiastical history, he delves in theology, he studies church government, he practices oratory. Along these lines he too becomes to some extent an expert.

This sounds well, but it will not bear scrutiny. For, whereas as the expert equipment of the lawyer or the doctor is what gives him his value and ensures his measure of success, the minister's expert equipment, except perhaps his training in oratory, and this only in a minor degree, has very little to do with his value or success. What we want in a lawyer is mastery of the law, what we want in a physician is mastery of the conditions of health, but what we want in a minister is not mastery of church history, theology, church government, or even oratory. The thing we really demand of him is the possession of a vivid religious life and the power to make "telling" use of it so that it gets a real grip on the spiritual lives of others. Without this the rest of his equipment is useless. With this, the rest may be dispensed with.

That is, his sympathy, inspiration, reverence, faith, and love, instead of being the underlying forces of his nature, must be kept on top all the time, ready to pass out to people at a moment's notice. At certain hours of the week the minister must summon from his hiding-place the spirit of prayer, he must literally exploit it for the edification of three hundred or five hundred or a thousand listeners. At certain other hours he must call forth his most solemn convictions about life and death, and exploit them in the same way. And at uncertain times, at any and every time, week in and week out, he must have his personality ready to deliver when called for.

Is this fair? Can we wonder that the weakness of the ministry is along the line of hypocrisy, of the over-facile in expression, of the cheaply ready in sympathy? that ministers sometimes develop a professional manner as marked as the professionally sympathetic manner of the undertaker? Is it surprising that in self-defense they should build up for themselves an armor, not of obvious reserve, but of glib expressiveness which meets the same end? If they were always really turning themselves inside out, as they are nominally supposed to do, there would be nothing left of them; they would be worn to a frazzle in three months. Some there are who really do this, and these are usually indeed worn to a frazzle. Or, to use the conventional term, they "break down." Most of them do not do it, and they survive, but ideals suffer.

There is something wrong. It is the wrong of professionalizing what ought to be left free. We see this quickly enough in other cases; poetry is a lovely thing, but so soon as it becomes professionalized, it is in danger. Personal charm is an adorable thing, but when the actor makes it a daily offering to an expectant public its finer bloom is too apt to vanish. Love and friendship are the greatest things in the world, but when they are habitually exploited, they lose part if not all of their greatness. The court favorite, paid for his devotion, the lover or the mistress, paid for their favors, compelled to render them without regard to the spontaneous impulse behind them, these are in danger of falling very far short of greatness. Perhaps Tolstoi was right, and every man should have some tangible work to do, not perhaps with his hands alone, but using his whole practical equipment of skill, knowledge and aptitude, and allowing for an overflow of energy which should follow whatever channels it found open, without being forced into pipes, to turn wheels and push pistons.

Such, indeed, was to some extent the life of the monks of old. They worked their gardens, they nursed the sick, they made medicines, they taught, they printed books; and these activities formed as large a part of their lives as their daily office, often a larger part. But back of all this, the daily round of tangible duties, lived the ardors of conviction and faith, flashing through sometimes in a radiance of inspiration, oftener perhaps smouldering unrecognized in the depths of an unchallenged and unexploited reserve.

This was a healthy life. And there are some ministers to-day whose lives are much like this. There might be more. For there is enough practical work waiting to be done to keep all the ministers busy, if they never again made a reluctant prayer or delivered an enforced sermon. There are many people who think that an institutional church and a liturgical service is the ideal for the future. But there are many also who deny this. And meanwhile, the public accepts, and demands, this living sacrifice of its ministry. It is imposing a compulsion which cannot help sapping some of the honesty, the vitality, the spontaneity, that are our most precious possessions.

For "THE FRIEND."

FIVE IMPORTANT RENDERINGS OF VERSES AS ADOPTED BY THE AMERICAN REVISION COMMITTEE, A. D. 1900.

H. R. WANSEY.

1. Luke xi: 41.—"But give for alms those things which are within; and behold all things are clean unto you." By looking at the context of this verse we see that our Lord had been rebuking the Pharisees for paying more attention to outer than to inner cleanliness (verses 39 and 40); and He proclaims their foolishness and their impending calamity for thinking more about tithes in money than the inner tithes of justice and the love of God (verse 42).

2. Luke v: 36.—"No man rendeth a piece from a new garment and putteth it upon an old garment; else he will rend the new, and also the piece from the new will not agree with the old." The context shows that our Lord was defending his own ways against those of John the Baptist, and the inference can be drawn that John's water baptism does not agree with the establishment of Christ's wholly spiritual kingdom.

3. Luke xviii: 16.—"Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not: for to such belongeth the Kingdom of God." Then, little children with their joy and happiness, their innocence and humility, their trustfulness and freedom from care, etc., are already within the Kingdom.

4. John iii: 15.—"Who so ever believeth, may in Him have eternal life." All those who believe—not only in Him but "into Him," as it is in the Greek text—that is, all those who so believe in Christ that they live in the Spirit of Christ, have eternal life.

5. 1 John v: 12.—"He that hath the Son hath the life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life." Note the difference between "life" and "the life." The life that is life indeed—the "life more abundant"—is the life of the man of God where Christ reigns supreme.

NIKKO, Japan.

A MORNING RESOLVE.—I will this day try to live a simple, sincere and serene life; repelling promptly every thought of discontent, anxiety, discouragement, impurity and self-seeking; cultivating cheerfulness, magnanimity, charity and the habit of holy silence; exercising economy in expenditure, carefulness in conversation, diligence in appointed service, fidelity to every trust, and a childlike trust in God.—JOHN H. VINCENT.

For "THE FRIEND."

THE INWARDNESS OF CHRISTIANITY.

MAX I. REICH.

When the message of the early Quakers concerning the inwardness of Christianity is preached to-day, it is often met with the criticism in certain circles that such preaching leads to morbid introspection. I have had quoted to me as a good motto the words: "If you would be miserable, look within; if you would be happy, look to Jesus." And yet our early Friends, and for that matter the dear old saints of former generations generally, whether known as Quakers or not, delighted to speak of their "turning inwards towards the Lord." That which transformed and lit up with increasing brightness the life of "the long mournful Isaac Penington" was his finding within what he had long sought in vain without. This had been the confession long before of such an one as the great Augustine of Hippo, as it afterwards became the watchword of such an one as the evangelical mystic, Gerhardt Terstegen of Germany. The Quaker, the Catholic and the Calvinist, thus unite their testimony that within must be known the Kingdom of God, within the fountain of living water, within Christ must be formed, or else the profession of Christianity is a sham, a form of godliness with the denial of its power, a shell without the kernel.

It is admitted that turning within first produces misery. But it is a wholesome experience. It is the light within that reveals the corruption. It is because many desire a short cut to peace and assurance that they turn away from this self-discovery with its attending distress, and comfort themselves with texts and promises which have not been applied to them by the Divine Spirit. Thus a false conversion results. The religious life is built up on a sandy bottom. "Repentance towards God and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ" cannot be divorced to-day any more than formerly—neither one without the other.

The preaching of the early Quakers was as a two-edged sword against the profession of their day, and is not the selfsame profession under new names still with us? The new birth alone can give spiritual vision; and yet many imagine that the mind of man, if only sufficiently trained, is capable of itself of apprehending the Kingdom of God! The wise and prudent still miss what is revealed inwardly to babes who welcome the Divine approach, who are tender towards the tender visitations of the Spirit, who seek after and abide under that overshadowing which forms Christ within, the only righteousness, sanctification and redemption of his people.

To seek an inward experience of the grace and power of God, to have made good in us what Christ, by his work without us in the days of his flesh, has secured for us, will not produce introspection. Said a servant of Christ to a troubled seeker: "Fix not thine eyes on thy corruptions, but on the light which shews thee thy corruptions." "The inward light" is not the natural reason, noble gift of God though it be, but Christ by the light of this Spirit shining in the darkness of human ignorance and sin, to reveal not only the evil, but also his saving power to deliver from the evil. And blessed are they who in our generation, as others have in generations past, so come to this light as to believe in it, and to become children of it, bringing forth the fruit thereof.

INSTEAD of pleading what he had done for God, David's only thought of help was in what God had done for him. The multitude of past favors which are ours, are the ground upon which we may hope for further grace in time of need. While we must always say it with feelings of deepest humility, yet we can say it truthfully: God has purchased us at a tremendous price, and we are precious in his eyes. This very fact assures us that having brought us thus far, He will not abandon us now. "Being confident of this very thing, that He which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ."

bondage, minutes on the subject being quite frequent and the concern unabated until the final emancipation. Thereafter the freedmen claimed much attention, appropriations being sometimes made for their help. At one time $300 was sent to North Carolina for Friends to use in aiding free colored people.

Following the division which occurred in 1828, near fifty pages of our minutes are devoted to giving the cause of the division, and explaining many points of doctrine—parts of it very interesting to some of us two generations removed, as also a much briefer record following the separation of '54. These may also be instructive, as showing how effect follows cause, as also teaching lessons for the present from the history of the past.

Reference was made to the establishment of schools as early as 1814, but much more definite action was taken in 1830, by naming a committee to inspect the condition of schools the children were attending, with encouragement to provide schools of our own. Monthly Meetings were also advised to appoint committees to have care of schools, not only school work, but to look after the behavior of the children, when outside at playtime, indicating extraordinary care or extraordinary children! Next year the committee reported some schoolhouses built and schools established.

A committee to encourage the use of the Scriptures, and see that each family was supplied with a copy, reported next year, 1832, the "lamentable fact" that some families were found to be destitute of legible copies. From this time forward more attention was given to this subject, and to supplying books through a book committee.

During these years the frequent visits of English Friends, and correspondence with London, were important features continued until the division of '54. This with that of 1828 and setting off Indiana from Ohio Yearly Meeting in 1830, were the three important changes and reductions in our membership. It has been said by some that one of our most interesting periods was for a few years prior to removal to Stillwater, partly perhaps because many of our members most vividly recall happenings of this period in connection with Mt. Pleasant.

During the years from '61 to '65 the exercise of the meeting in regard to the trials of its members in upholding our testimony against military service was a notable feature. We of this generation know comparatively little of these things. But there are occasional murmurings which lead us to reflect that either through military requirement or religious intolerance, we might be aroused from our sense of security to a time of testing of the reality of our faith.

In 1877 it was decided that the time had now come to change the place of holding the Yearly Meeting to Stillwater, and a committee appointed to have a suitable house erected for the next year. Not without some misgivings, some tears of regret, were many old associations severed, yet time has proven the wisdom of the move.

In sketching our records the writer has been particularly impressed with the ready response of the membership to the advice of the Yearly Meeting and not only the interest, but manifestly the deep concern of our fathers in the line of apprehended duty. "They rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

* Perhaps we have a work. Perhaps the mission is not ended. Perhaps there is still place for a conservative Friend, a conservative body. We believe so, distinctively so.

"There are those who take note our numbers are small,

New Gibbons who write our decline and our fall.

But the "Lord of the seed field" takes care of his own,

And the world shall yet reap what our sowers have sown."

More to us than our professions, our gifts, or our inheritance, is it that our impressions of duty are ripened into convictions, and those convictions heeded; even if it cause "weeping for a season, joy cometh in the morning."

Reprinted by request from The United Friend, First Month 15, 1896.

THE MESSAGE OF QUAKERISM.

There comes a time in our human lives when, in some measure, we begin to feel the solemn responsibility of life; and the desire stirs within us to put away childish things, to take a place in all seriousness amid the workers in the world, to do something for the betterment of our fellow-men. Whether this condition is first experienced in early years or not until later, it marks a critical stage in the earthly pilgrimage; and upon reaching it, it is of vital importance where we look for counsel—whether the attention is directed outwardly to man for leading and direction, or inwardly to a greater than man; for there is needed now, both for our own welfare and that of those whom we would benefit, the teaching of One, who knowing the secrets of every heart, can speak with certainty to its needs. Is such instruction within the ability of man to give? Is there not, indeed, great danger lest men, through ignorance of the true condition of the seeking soul, or perhaps from a well-meant zeal to utilize a willing hand, may hurry it unconsciously into activities before its time and beyond its strength, so stunting its growth? An eagerness to work for the spread of righteousness in the earth is a good motive, but it may well be questioned if it is ever in itself a sufficient qualification for labor. "I began to see," says John Churchman, humiliated because of some over-zealousness of his youth, "there was a difference between seeing what was to be done, and being bidden to do the thing shown; besides this I had to consider there [is] a time to bud, a time to blossom, a time for fruit to set and appear, and a time for it to ripen."

The earth is not man's but the Lord's. To the fields white unto harvest, it is the Lord's prerogative to send the needed laborers. Grave is the responsibility, therefore, alike of them who, being called, hold back, and of them who, taking the need or some earthly motive for a call, go unbidden of the Lord of the harvest. He it is that ruleth in the kingdom of men; He alone is Lord; beside Him there is no Saviour. To man there would seem to be the choice of but one of two positions as regards Him. Either he must resign all to the disposition of his Lord, that whatsoever he does may be in harmony with the Divine will, and himself a willing instrument in the Divine hand; or, failing that, he becomes, by following the leadings of his own imagination (however high his motive), as an undisciplined and self-willed workman, wasting his own energies and by his waywardness impeding the labor of others.

"We are nothing, Christ is all," has ever been a watchword with the devoted followers of the Lamb of God. But this sense of nothingness is not a thing to be assumed at will; it is attained only by a daily death—by a patient submission to that thorough purging of the heart, that burning up of the chaff with unquenchable fire, which marks the essential baptism of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. "Who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when He appeareth? for He is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap; and He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver." In those who wait for and give themselves up to this heavenly work, mortality becomes "swallowed up of life," and Christ the Lord becomes all in all. Not in name merely, but in truth. He is their life, their righteousness. Abiding in Him, as branches in the Vine, they wait to know his will declared in them, and what they do is done in that power fresh from the spring of his Divine life. Their works, then, are not their own, but his wrought through them. Such may say with Paul, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me."

Certain of the people coming unto our Saviour, inquired of Him, "What shall we do, that we might work the works of God?" Jesus answered and said unto them, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent." Now a true belief in Him implies such a trust in Him, such a confi-

IN THE CROSS OF CHRIST I GLORY.

In the Cross of Christ I glory;
Towering o'er the wrecks of time,
All the light of sacred story
Gathers round its head sublime.

When the woes of life o'ertake me,
Hopes deceive and fears annoy,
Never shall the Cross forsake me;
Lo! it glows with peace and joy.

When the sun of bliss is beaming
Light and love upon my way,
From the Cross the radiance streaming
Adds new lustre to the day.

Bane and blessing, pain and pleasure,
By the Cross are sanctified;
Peace is there, that knows no measure,
Joys that through all time abide.

In the Cross of Christ I glory;
Towering o'er the wrecks of time,
All the light of sacred story
Gathers round its head sublime.

—SR. JOHN BOWLING.

TAKE THESE THINGS HENCE.

(John ii: 16.)

A recent number of The Record of Christian Work makes the following astounding statement:

There are various paragraphs in the report of the Social Service Committee of the Men and Religion Forward Movement which read like a bad joke. We are told that "the theatre has been a religious institution during most of the world's history," and that it is the "daughter of the Church." The Y. M. C. A. is asked to arrange dancing gatherings in its buildings. It is urged that the churches see to it that their young men are provided with pool tables, which, with other amusements, "would tend to make the work of garnering a harvest of souls saved, much easier, all of which would redound to the glory of God and make the establishment of that Kingdom here on earth which Jesus came to do (!) the nearer at hand." Not a word of Scripture is to be found from end to end of the seventy-five pages, but space is given to various quotations from the Zend Avesta, the sacred book of the Persian sun worshippers. We are informed, for example, "that the riches of Volu-manu shall be given to him who works in this world for Mazda."

All this is suggestive of the conventional social talker, the young man with the mildew of college education not yet rubbed off.

Truly, it would seem that the scourge of small cords was imperatively needed to meet the conditions named in the preceding paragraph. It is almost incredible that any voice would be raised to advocate the views therein set forth. Yet nevertheless such is the fact.

To learn that the theatre has been a religious institution, during most of the world's history, and also that it is a daughter of the Church, is news indeed. It has been said there is Scripture for almost everything. Perhaps these pious advocates of the stage fall back upon Paul's experience at Ephesus, when his companions were rushed into the theatre, and Paul essayed to follow them, but his friends persuaded him from so doing.

Our modern Pauls, however, are no longer prevented from frequenting the theatre, but, rather, encouraged to patronize it. Verily, time works wonders.

If the Men and Religion Forward Movement really approves of the stage, the sooner it disbands, the better.

Those who are promoting this scheme must certainly know that there was never a time when the forces of evil were so rampant as now, when godly men and women mourn and sigh for the abominations they cannot prevent; when worldliness, high living, extravagance, luxury, sensuousness, lavish display of dress and jewelry, divorces and the gilded sin of immorality, were so prevalent as at the present day; when these all permeate society; when too many who have named the name of Christ partake of these; when church discipline, if attempted to be enforced, is absolutely defied and set at naught; when too many churches are so leavened with these conditions that the dividing line between them and the world is scarcely perceptible.

Of all forms of worldliness, there is nothing so fascinating and bewitching as the stage. To connect the stage with our holy religion is profanation indeed, and those who attempt this show an appalling degree of spiritual obtuseness.

How any one can reconcile the teachings of the New Testament, which enjoins a renunciation of the world, the flesh and the devil, a daily cross bearing, a faithful following of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ; a lowly, consecrated, sanctified life, an avoidance of everything that would bring disgrace upon the Gospel of Him whose blood stained the cross of Calvary; a rejection of all things hurtful to the soul—with the theatre, its associations, its demoralizing influence, its delineations of the vulgar, the vile, the sensuous, it is impossible to conceive.

Some, who do not frequent the theatre, patronize the opera, which is simply an adjunct of the former.

And can a good word be spoken for the opera? which is the place of the most lavish display of jewelry and gorgeous apparel, and where, in these respects, the greatest rivalry is shown, each one trying to outvie the other. And yet, thousands who have confessed Christ before the world, and consider themselves consistent church members, have watched most eagerly the sacrilegious, licentious performance of "Salome."

As for the scandalous lives of too many actors and actresses, who are flaunting themselves before the public (only too eager to behold them), let a covering be placed over them, after the manner of Noah's sons, lest modesty and decency should be shocked at their conduct.

If the Men and Religion Forward Movement be joined to this most unholy alliance, let them pause and consider the great injury they are doing to the cause they profess to further. If such is really the case, then let all piously disposed persons, and these yet seven thousand who have not bowed the knee to Baal, shun this movement altogether. Let them refuse to countenance it. Let them take no part in their proceedings, or contribute to their coffers. Let the churches give them the cold shoulder, and refuse their sanctuaries for their meetings.

This may be thought too drastic and radical, and the disease not warranting such heroic surgery; but, nevertheless, it is the teaching and requirement of the Gospel to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, or invoke Satan's aid in furthering the Lord's work.

As for the Y. M. C. A., it is as great a sinner as the Men and Religion Forward Movement. "Dancing Galleries," and "Pool Tables!" Who would ever have thought that these abominations would find a place in a professedly religious institution? Or, if not actually there, their presence desired? Will the officials of this much-vaunted institution fall back upon David dancing before the ark, and thereby justify dancing for their members? Can they consistently leave a "pool" table, and, in a reverent frame of mind, attend the table of the Lord?

Recently, the writer of this article, on reading the announcement of a well-known Y. M. C. A., saw "boxing" and "fencing" amongst its attractions. Have they perverted and twisted St. Paul's declaration, "So fight I, not as one who beatech the air?" Would the great apostle, if here, sanction such exhibitions? Nay, verily.

Now, let all spiritually-minded persons, as well as all churches, who still believe in an old-fashioned Gospel, that enjoins a consistent, self-denying life, a renunciation of the world, its customs and maxims, an avoidance of all evil and immoral associations, refuse the right hand of fellowship in every way whatever to these, and all similar movements, which cast a slur and disgrace upon our blood-bought and holy religion.

The time will come when the Zend Avesta, the sacred book of the sun worshippers, will be relegated to the limbo of all other false faiths, and the everlasting Gospel of a once crucified Saviour will go onward, conquering and to conquer, illuminating the dark places of the earth, turning the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; proving its Divine authority in saving souls.

football game at Cambridge last year," he asked, "do you remember the inscription on the Stadium, 'Dedicated to the joy of manly contest?' Learn that 'joy of manly contest' with hard work, my boy!

"Don't run away from work, George! Don't be afraid of it! Meet it bravely, with the joy of manly contest in your heart, and day by day you will begin to find the struggle good, and out of it will come one of the supremely great and enjoyable things of life."

George sat quiet for a time. Then his jaw closed with a snap. "I'm going to begin right now," he said, "and I'm going to know what this chapter's about!"—Youth's Companion

LETTING DOWN THE BARS—WORLDLINESS IN THE CHURCH.

"Remember the days of old, consider the days of many generations, ask thy father and he will show thee; thy elders, and they will tell thee." And, surely, they will tell us of better days when their hope and trust was in God, and their aims and ideals were to live in conformity with the law of God.

This talk of "progress," which we hear so much about to-day, is often used as an excuse, to allow the world to dominate our Churches. This is sad in the extreme. Under the guise of what is termed progress, we must allow the world to crowd out the Churches' spirituality. If we protest against dancing, card playing, etc., we are considered narrow and mean. To look at this sort of thing as proper and progressive in church life, we must turn our backs upon the Bible—then we can readily say, Yes, let down the bars; we must keep up with the times. We cannot deny the sad fact that the devout spirit is rapidly disappearing. What is the cause of this drifting away from our principles? Let us not deceive ourselves; "Let us search and try our ways, and let us return again unto the Lord." He will surely reveal to us that the cause of our spiritual bankruptcy is no other than that we have followed our own ways, which are imperfect by nature, and left His ways, which are perfect. One of the most striking peculiarities of the Scripture is that they disclose to us the mysteries of the spiritual life. The cause of all the perplexities that confront the Church to-day is perfectly plain to him who prayerfully studies the Scriptures, and surely we are overwhelmed with protestations against worldliness in whatever guise it presents itself. We must confess that, in order to realize our spiritual aims and purposes, we often make use of worldly means, and call the world into the Church, instead of keeping it out. And as the world passeth away, so our efforts become fruitless, for we have "gone after vain things which cannot profit nor deliver, for they are vain." While if we choose rather the will of God, we should be filled with the spiritual power necessary to bring about enduring results. And even if results were not visible to us, we still might be sure that we had done our part towards their fulfillment. Among the delusions now pressing is the one which advocates that dancing in the church would make it popular. Here we would ask a few questions:

How many of those who advocate dancing in the church hold family worship? How many conversions have there been in the church that holds dances in the last twelve months? Are entertainments having all the ear-marks of the theatre necessary for the promulgation of the spiritual life?

The order of the day seems to be how near the precipice can we go, and not go over? We think the time is now ripe that we make a stand, and draw the line. The psalmist says: "Holiness becometh thine house, O Lord, forever." Some say: "Unto the pure, all things are pure." "And whatever we do is right if we make it so." We are commanded not to love the world, neither the things that are in the world, if we desire to have the love of the Father in us. "The world passeth away, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." If we are of God, we are a peculiar people; in the world, but not of it. "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." If Christ was in New York to-day, and made a protest against dancing, etc., in his Father's house, we would be apt to hear from some Progressive leader: "If there is anything I dislike, it is a narrow-minded man." It is on record that He whipped the traders out of the temple, saying, "My house shall be called a house of prayer; but we have made it a den of thieves." He protested against the current evils of his time, and denounced worldliness in no conciliatory terms.

The Church must progress, but in spiritual lines. There is enough to do in the way of progress in adapting God's unchanging truth to the changing needs of humanity. Let us see to it that we live up to the faith of our fathers, and as Christians, will be "true to it till death."—KATHARINE W. GERRARD, in The Presbyterian.

THE LAST VOYAGE.

These lines were written by an old carpenter in a workhouse in North London, so said The Spectator.

My work on earth is well-nigh done,
I wait the setting of the sun,
I hear the surging of the sea
That beats upon eternity.

I see far off the shady realm
And thither turn the trembling helm.
The winds that blow so cold and drear
Grow softer as the end draws near.

The distant gleams of silver light
Relieve the darkness of the night;
There stand upon the misty shore
Faint forms of loved ones gone before;
The voice that once said "Peace, be still"
Now whispers softly "Fear no ill."

I sail alone, yet not alone;
The Saviour takes me for his own,
I wait his greeting when I land,
I wait to grasp his loving hand.

POCONO NOTES.

One of the most important acts of the Penna. State Legislature during this summer was the enactment of three laws designed to encourage forestry. This is the culmination of the concerted efforts of the Pennsylvania Forestry Association, The Penna. Conservation Association, the State Forestry Reservation Commission, Lehigh University and The American Forestry Association.

Dr. Drinker, of Lehigh University, was appointed a year ago as Chairman of a Committee on Forestry Legislation, and he made an exhaustive study of the taxation of wooded lands, resulting in the passing of these laws. As the Pocono Lake Preserve has over three thousand acres of forest land, this subject was presented at a Town Meeting of two hundred and forty campers on the 19th inst. under most attractive surroundings. The first law grants auxiliary forest reserves (all private, wooded lands listed as dedicated to the growth of trees) the same protection as that extended to the State Reservations—of which the State now has about 1,000,000 acres under its care. This act provides that any person or persons desiring to grow timber may enter the territory so occupied and exclusively used for growing tree, whatever its area, as an auxiliary forest reserve. The application of such entry must be made to the State Forestry Reservation Commission, with a description of the land, its location, boundary, area and character, and shall state as far as practicable the species, character and condition of the trees growing thereon and whether they are of natural reproduction or are from seed sown for the purpose or have been set out on said land, or all combined, and such other information as the Commission may require.

The Commission will judge when the trees on such tracts shall be cut, the owner meanwhile caring for them as the Commission directs. He must agree in writing to take such care of them. If he fails to do so, his privilege of exemption from taxation will be withdrawn. If he cuts his trees before the Commission approves the County Commissioners shall on notice from the State Commission proceed to recover from said owner the difference in the amount of tax which would have been paid had the property not been placed upon the auxiliary list. A release from the State can be obtained by the owner if he so desires.

The trees when old enough to cut are so ordered by the State Commission to be put in the market, and if the land is immediately replanted it

Chief of Police. When it is possible, terms of six months' imprisonment in the county jail in Media will be given.

A despatch from Washington of the 30th ult. mentions the effects of a storm there on that day. It says: "Three dead, scores injured and hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of property ruined were the toll recorded when the city aroused itself from half an hour of helplessness in the grasp of the elements. The gale, reaching a velocity of nearly 70 miles an hour, swept the streets clear, unroofed houses, tore detached small structures from their foundations, wrecked one office building, overturned wagons and carriages in the streets and swept Washington's hundred parks, tearing huge branches from trees, and even uprooting sturdy old elms, the landmarks of a century."

The discovery is reported of a large bed of scallops off the New England coast. It is described as an inexhaustible giant bed of scallops extending all the way from Block Island, off Rhode Island, to the Virginia Capes.

A despatch from Pottsville, Pa., says: "Fearing that mosquitoes might carry smallpox germs, State officials ordered to-day that all windows in houses where smallpox patients are being treated must be guarded with mosquito netting. On account of the prevalence of smallpox, the poor directors to-day closed the almshouse at Schuylkill Haven to all visitors for the next month. Inmates who insist on making outside visits will be barred from the institution during the period of quarantine."

The number of children of school age in this city will reach nearly 300,000 according to an estimate by Henry J. Gideon, chief of the Bureau of Compulsory Education. While the total of school children has increased substantially there will be found another marked growth in the number of employed children, which advanced from some 13,000 a year ago to about 20,000 at the present time. Chief Gideon, however, in speaking of the situation, pointed out that the increased number did not really prove that there are that many more children this year, but rather was a result of a more exhaustive and complete census than in years past.

A recent despatch says: "Scientists of the Dairy Division of the Department of Agriculture to-day made public the result of a series of experiments in pasteurization of milk. As the result of the tests it is recommended that when milk intended for the market is pasteurized 'it should be heated to about 145 degrees Fahrenheit and held at that temperature for 30 minutes.' The scientists found that pasteurization at high temperature was destructive of many of the healthful and body-building qualities of the fluid. Pasteurization at high temperature is discouraged, because it was found that the bacteria which survived the operation were largely of the putrefactive kind. This condition has a tendency to make the milk rot, instead of sour."

It is stated that a conference of pastors and teachers in Kansas has brought to public notice that there are upward of a thousand abandoned houses of worship in that State. In the conference the opinion prevailed that the decline of popular interest in church service is due mainly to fondness for motoring, and the result of too much prosperity generally.

Applicants for a marriage license in this city are now required to answer certain questions, among which are the following: "Is applicant an imbecile, epileptic, of unsound mind or under a guardianship as a person of unsound mind, or under the influence of any intoxicating liquor or narcotic drug? Is the applicant physically able to support a family?"

A despatch from Washington says: "Automobiles and automobile parts to the value of $40,000,000 were shipped from the United States in the past fiscal year, as against $1,000,000 worth in 1903, a decade ago, according to figures by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce."

It was stated from Chicago on the 1st inst. that Mayor Harrison appointed ten patrolmen for Chicago in accordance with the provisions of an ordinance recently passed. He selected the women on the recommendation of several women's organizations. They will begin their duty at once. All are widows and trained in the care of children and young girls except two. With one exception they are well advanced toward middle life.

A despatch from Madison, Wis., of the 1st inst. says: "The Governor of the State has signed the Richards bill, requiring every man applying for a marriage license to hold a certificate of good health from a licensed physician, and the Chinnock bill, prohibiting the marriage of second cousins. The Richards bill, as introduced, required both parties to a proposed marriage to present certificates of good health, but it was amended so as to require the certificate only from the man. Under the act the certificate of health must be issued within 15 days of the marriage. Persons who attempt to evade the law by going outside the State and marrying are subject to imprisonment from 30 days to one year."

FOREIGN. A despatch of the 31st ult. from Peking says: "News from the south implying the collapse of the revolt is pouring into Peking. Much of it requires confirmation, but there is little doubt that the military phase of the trouble is past."

It is stated that the United States is being visited by a party of Russian professional men and women who are here as representatives of the Society for the Promotion of Technical Knowledge of Moscow. They are touring this country studying social, industrial and scientific questions of general and technical interest. The society they represent each year sends out more than 7,000 excursionists to all civilized countries of the world. The knowledge gained by these travelers is spread among the people through reports published by the Society and through lectures given by some of the members.

A recent despatch says: "Wrapping paper made from seaweed, and claimed to be fireproof, waterproof and odorless, has been invented by an English chemist, according to a notice in the Daily Consular Trade Reports."

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 87.

Wm. B. Moore, for Oscar Moore, Pa.; Susannah Cox, Ind.; Henry B. Abbott, Phila.; Joseph Henderson, Agt., Ia. $26, for Lewis L. Rockwell, Christian Thompson and for Tosten H. Strand, Arthur R. Rockwell, Oman T. Tow, Thos. E. Mendenhall, Florence Edith West, Archibald Henderson, Roy W. Rockwell, James Mott, Cyrus Cope, Lars Stange-land and Herman J. Battey; S. F. Walton, Pa.; Samuel A. Willis, N. J.; Mary R. C. Reeve, N. J.; Sarah R. Wilkins, N. J.; Philena Y. Smedley, Pa.; Lydia H. South, Pa.; Tristram Coggeshall, Ore.; Lydia S. Thomas, Pa., and for Hannah R. Willis; Edith Lippincott, G't'n.; Mary E. Moore, Phila.; Mary McGin Malley, O.; Wilson Hutchens, Mo.; Elwood Evans, N. J.; Grace A. Tierney, G't'n.; Walter J. Burzy, N. J.; Elton Brundley, Phila.; Isabella P. Russell, N. J.; Catharine Jacob, Phila.; A. L. Ritchie, N. J.; Frank H. Goodwin, Pa.; Joshua Brantingham, Agt., O. $20, for Wm. Brantingham, Charles Cope, Charles Gamble, Louisa Harris, Martha Harris, Joseph Hall, George G. Mോഗил, D. Stratton, Wilson J. Steer and Leonard Winder; Sarah T. Smith, Agt., O. $20, for Lydia J. Bye, Carl Patterson, Hannah P. Smith, Belinda H. Schofield, C. W. Vanlau, Temperance Gifford, Elsha Llewellyn, Jason Penrose, Edwin Crew and Martha M. Vaughan; Joseph E. Barton, N. J., $6, for himself, Charles D. Barton and Joseph Barton; Seth Shaw, Agt., O. $16, for H. Blackburn, Sarah C. Blackburn, D. C. Batty, S. Carter, E. L. Cope, J. H. Edgerton, Mary M. Kirk and Gulielma Neill; Wm. T. Cooper, N. J.; Mary A. Cowgill, Calif.; Jno. Barclay Jones, Pa.; Wm. H. Pollard, Canada per S. T. Haight, Agt.; Alice P. Roberts, G't'n.; D. H. Forsythe, Pa.; Reece L. Thomas, Pa.; D. G. Garwood, Agt., N. J., $6, for Mary Anna Matlock, Elizabeth F. Darnell and Albert Haines; Richard P. Tatum, Phila.; Samuel Bucknell, N. J.; Clement E. Allen, Pa.; Susanna Brinton, Pa.; Benj. P. Hoopes, Phila.; J. Edward Moon, Pa., to No. 20; Martha H. Garrett, G't'n.; Sarah W. Rhoads, G't'n. to No. 14. Vol. 88; Charles E. Eroyod, Pa.

Remittances received after Third-day noon will not appear in the receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

DURING Seventh and Eighth Months of this year the meetings at Newtown Meeting House, Camden, N. J., will be discontinued.

THE "Memorial of John H. Dillingham" is now for sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia. Price, paper cover, five cents each, by mail, six cents; per dozen, 50 cents; by mail fifty-six cents. Silk cloth cover, six cents each; by mail seven cents; per dozen sixty cents; by mail sixty-nine cents.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK (Eighth Month 11th to 16th):

Concord Quarterly Meeting, at Media, Pa., Third-day, Eighth Month 12th, at 10.30 A. M.
Calm Quarterly Meeting, at Coatesville, Pa., Sixth-day, Eighth Month 15th, at 10 A. M.

DIED.—Third-day, Seventh Month 29th, 1913, MARY COATES, daughter of the late George M. and Rebecca Horner Coates, in the ninety-ninth year of her age. A member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia.

Rhoads Nonkink Hose

It is a safe sure to use Nonkink Hose because it is so smooth and light. You need not be afraid from making short turns for it does not kink and break as ordinary hose, because the rubber is forced through the cotton fabric and vulcanized into a solid wall.

We furnish it coupled without extra charge in any length desired up to 500 feet.

It costs less in the long run because it wears so well.

Another good hose at a lower price is our Corinth.

With hose let us supply your needs in Nozzles, Sprinklers, Reels, etc.

J. E. RHOADS & SONS
12 N. Third St., - Philadelphia
102 Beekman St., - New York

WILLIAM S. YARNALL MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

115 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

A MILLSTONE

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,

1010 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

Eye
Comfort
Guaranteed

C. A. LONGSTRETH
Specialist in Eye Testing
222 Market St., Philadelphia

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 25 cents; or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

WANTED—A FRIEND, WITH LONG EXPERIENCE, wishes a position as salesman with a firm controlled by Friends. E. Care of THE FRIEND.

WANTED—CHRISTIAN WOMAN DESIRES position as housekeeper or caretaker in Philadelphia. Experience can give any references. Address W. Care of THE FRIEND.

WANTED—TO CORRESPOND WITH A FRIEND who has a farm and wishes a married man to take charge. Live stock keeping preferred. No objection to coming up a "train down" place with possibility of development. H. T. M., Care of THE FRIEND.

FOR SALE—DESIRABLE PROPERTY, No. 15 E. 2nd Street, Media, Pa. Well located and in good repair. Lot about 55 feet by 120 feet. House—ten rooms, bath, fire porch, hot water heat and gas. Apply to NATHAN L. PRATT, 500 N. Monroe St., Media, Pa.

ROOMS AT ITHACA, NEW YORK—YOUNG MEN intending to enter Cornell University, next year, can secure comfortable and reasonable rooms, about ten minutes' walk from the Campus, at 238 Linden Avenue, EDWARD WOOD, Ithaca, New York.

FOR RENT—FURNISHED BUNGALOW, AT POCONO Lake, Pa., for Ninth Month. This bungalow, well equipped, will house very comfortably a moderate family. There is a large living-room with a big stone fireplace. There are two bedrooms and a fully equipped bath-room. The kitchen has a sink with running water. The front porch is roofed and extends the length of the house, 20 feet. There is also a dining-porch. The bungalow is one of the best at the Lake, with a fine view and direct access from the dining-cabin. The furnishings are complete. Ninth Month is the most desirable month of the summer at Pocono Lake.

For further particulars address:
J. LINTON ENGLE,
316 Ludlow Street, Phila.

Bell Phone, Lombard 1197.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER
S. W. COR. 16th & RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL PHONE BRUCE 6646

Who in the market for NORTH CAROLINA PINE BOARD BOARDS OR ROOFERS

at 101 Cherry Street, send in your inquiry. We make a specialty of the material and can make prompt delivery.
THE COX LUMBER CO., Inc.
Asheboro, N. C.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
(Marcellus Balderston)
902 SPRING GARDEN ST. 618 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL PHONE PHILADELPHIA

Late Summer is now recognized as a desirable time for planting

Evergreens

Our illustrated catalogue, describing these & other Trees, Plants & Shrubs, mailed upon request.

The Wm. H. Moon Co.
GLENWOOD NURSERIES
Morrisville Bucks County, Pa.
PHILADELPHIA OFFICE, 21 S. Tenth St.

POCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevation 1800 feet, commanding extensive mountain and valley scenery. Address

J. W. HURLEY, Manager,
POCONO MANOR, PA.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL.

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY MANUFACTURERS PHILADELPHIA

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT made from the entire whole grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

W. B. WEAVER Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5th ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL ACCOMMODATIONS FOR FUNERALS.

BELL PHONE. ESTABLISHED 1880.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST COMPANY OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.
Accounts Solicited Deposits by Mail
Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET

FOURTH AND CHESTNUT STREETS

From Bondage to Freedom, by Isabel Shipley, 2nd Edition, 2 cts.
Northfield Symposium, 1905. What 16 young Friends thought when they were 8 years younger, 2cts.
Christ in all the Scriptures, by A. M. Hodgkin, 60 cts.
Hayden's Testimony, 50 cts. by L. C. Wood
For a Free Conscience, $1.00

ALL PORTRAIT

J. B. WOOD, PYNE POINT PARK, CAMDEN, N. J.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, EIGHTH MONTH 14, 1913.

No. 7.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to
EDWIN P. SELLEW or THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

LEAVING THINGS.

In a letter accompanying a renewal of subscription for THE FRIEND occurs the following sentence: "There are, indeed, many things that are beyond my comprehension, and such I have found it better to just leave". The wisdom of the course proposed by this Friend is too apparent to require defending, but some have found it difficult always to pursue that course which wisdom dictates. The inquiring mind is unwilling to have bounds fixed to its researches. The intellect which has mastered so many difficult and perplexing scientific problems—which has comprehended so much that in its earlier stages of development seemed incomprehensible, is slow to admit that aught can be beyond the scope of its efforts. But when the finite undertakes to comprehend the Infinite there must come a place where the intellect reaches its limit, when to it, as to the sea, is said: "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further; and here shall thy proud waves be stayed".

The expression of our correspondent suggests the variations in definition of the verb "leave", two of which are evidently intended in the use he makes of the word. First he is resolved to "cease from" all effort to comprehend that which he is satisfied is "beyond" his comprehension. But this is not the unsatisfactory or hopeless conclusion that at first thought it might seem to be; for it is evident that he has in mind a second definition—he refers the things beyond him to the decision and regulation of One who comprehends, who does know them. How precious is that faith which enables the soul to rest in the arms of an Infinite Creator and Saviour, and preserves from beating out one's life in vain endeavors to comprehend by intellectual processes that which can never be fully known except by Divine revelation! Until "this mortal shall have put on immortality" we see as "in a mirror, darkly"—"we know in part"; "but when that which is perfect is come" then shall we "see face to face" and "know fully". What better can we do than to leave until then those things which we are now unable to understand?

Another kind of "leaving things", more directly active in its operation, has been an essential in the experience of the Christian believer—essential to his being able to become such. It is the "leaving" implied in the word repentance—"repentance toward God" which precedes "faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ"; the leaving which means forsaking turning away from—such a course as Isaiah demanded of Israel, "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts". This "turning from" is the way to "turn unto" the Lord who will have mercy and abundantly pardon. This leaving the Egyptian bondage of sin to enter the Canaan of Christ's kingdom of righteousness, peace and joy ought not to be a difficult thing to do. Yet how many appear to choose the bondage rather than the proffered liberty!

Yet another kind of "leaving" is that mentioned in Hebrews: "Wherefore leaving the doctrine of the first principles of Christ, let us press on unto perfection"; and that which Paul wrote to the Philippians concerning himself: "Forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal, unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus". This leaving means growth-development. It is a leaving not of the evil alone, but of the good—leaving the good for the better and the better for the best. God called Abram to leave his own country and kindred and his father's house and to go unto the land which the Lord should show him and where his name should become Abraham—father of a multitude. Moses was called to leave the Egyptian court—refusing "to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward". But whatever of good these left was left for something better. So Paul could say, "What things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ".

"Leaving first principles" and "forgetting the things which are behind" does not necessarily imply that those principles and things were wrong or erroneous, nor that any antagonism or contradiction exists between them and the things beyond—the "perfection" unto which we are to press. Rather they were the preparation for the further acquisition—the foundation for the future building. We are not always learning alphabets and multiplication tables, but however far beyond them we progress, we do not find them to be untrue and that we have need to unlearn that which we have learned. If the "word of the beginning of Christ" was true, we shall find nothing beyond it in Christian experience or knowledge that will contradict it, but only that which will complete or fulfill it. Let us be suspicious of that progression in experience or knowledge which goes counter to "first principles", accepting only that which perfects or completes them!

Reverting, in conclusion, to the original thought of leaving or trusting to our loving Lord the things we seem unable to understand or explain, the things perhaps which have caused fear or anxiety, the assurance of the poet may be ours if we follow his advice:

"Leave to his sov'reign sway
To choose and to command;
So shalt thou wond'ring out his way,
How wise, how strong his hand!
Far, far above thy thought
His counsel shall appear,
When fully He the work hath wrought
That caused thy needless fear."

E. P. S.

mountain meet other troops, raised and urged on in an opposite direction by the sea breezes from the west and south. As they approach each other, there seems truly a contest, and they either sweep in confused piles, or retreating, leave a clear open space, as though a drawn battle had been fought in the upper air.

We were soon made most comfortable in two commodious chambers, and could but feel ourselves at home.

2th.—George Beckwith and we started betimes for a drive across the hills. Halting at "Makawao Seminary," we found a most interesting institution: a boarding school for Hawaiian girls, carried on by a board of trustees, who fill their own vacancies. The funds are mainly obtained from a very moderate charge for board and tuition, the contributions of interested friends, and occasional aid from the government. The pupils number about sixty; the teaching staff consists of four intelligent and refined ladies from various parts of the U. S., and another from Scotland. We saw something of the girls in their classes, and dined with them all, the refining, wholesome influence of the excellent women with whom the pupils are thus associated being very marked. We called on Lawrence Andrews who, as a little boy thirty years ago, had been left in charge of J. and H. Bean for some time. He has just been appointed sheriff by the Provisional Government.

20th.—We started again for Kahalui. Just before sailing, a boat with additional passengers and their luggage rowed up, towing a struggling horse who had swam from the shore at least half a mile off nearly spent with the effort. A rope sling was, however, put under him, and in a moment the donkey engine had swung him into his place between the rows of cattle, dripping and seemingly lifeless with terror and exhaustion. A few minutes' rest revived him, and shaking himself he was again on his feet. He looked like a well-built young animal and was evidently a pet with his mistress.

25th Month 6th.—The region around Pearl City is highly fertile, and the Chinese, as usual, are turning it to good account in the raising of rice, garden vegetables, etc. The land is owned by large proprietors, and leased at high rates, ranches, as we were told, renting at $25 and even $50 per acre. We passed one small farm where experiments were being made on Sea Island cotton, which, so far as the culture is concerned, were proving quite successful. The plants looked admirable. We learned also that coffee of a very superior grade is being raised to good advantage on the islands.

7th.—In the evening looked in at a religious service held several times in the week, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., for the sailors and rougher class of people on the harbor side of the town. Outside a "Merry-go-round" and a shooting-gallery were drawing large crowds, and the whole neighborhood was noisy and astr. But within the "Bethel" walls we found a company who seemed to prefer its quiet atmosphere and the profitable discourse that was being delivered by the secretary of the Y. M. C. A. His doctrine was sound and its application practical, while he was deeply in earnest in pressing these home upon his hearers. Between the hymns and reading from the Scriptures, several lively testimonies were given as to the religious experiences of the speakers, and more than one fervent prayer was offered. We were gratified to see the effects of such work, carried on, as it must be, amid many hindrances and discouragements.

8th.—Toward 7.30 Pastor Parker drove with us to "Coral Church," where we found several hundred of the Hawaiians, including the pupils from the Kawaroho Girls' Seminary; some of the performances of the choir and organ combined were of the very crashing sort, and being seated near them, seemed more than my ears could well bear. As we heard afterward, this style of music is especially admired by the aborigines. A part of the singing this evening was, on the other hand, singularly soft and melodious. The pastor read from the Scriptures, and offered prayer in Hawaiian, and then seemingly with great ease and satisfaction interpreted for both of us. I spoke of the inestimable blessing that had come to their people by the preaching of the Gospel through their friends, the missionaries. We trusted this would be to them not merely a hearing of the "good tidings of great joy which should be to all people;" but that it will best a hearty acceptance of the truths of Christianity and lead them into lives in accordance therewith. The present critical condition in their affairs was referred to, and the importance of those who were truly disciples of the Lord Jesus standing firmly together.

TRACT DISTRIBUTION.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

NATHAN P. STANLEY.

The interesting and heart-pending account of "Cripple Tom" nearly a year ago in THE FRIEND stirred up my feelings, as I hope it did those of others. It reminded me of a way of doing similar work for the Master that has yielded a great deal of precious fruit in my life, and I felt it would do so for others, if they would be faithful to Divine requiring in carrying it out. It is distributing tracts on railway trains and elsewhere. I have gone from end to end of a car, and sometimes when I felt I must from end to end of a train, and have given a tract and sometimes two or three to each person who was willing to take them. Often, when traveling far, I have gone through the train several times and given more tracts to new passengers, and to those to whom I had given before, and I have found some who were very much interested and who would want more, or to exchange what they had for others. I have thus made many new and satisfactory acquaintances, and I have found it one way to find good company on a long journey. It does my heart good to find a person who loves the same Saviour I do, and it is a comfort to talk with such. If any Friend feels lonesome while traveling, it would be well if he would remember a line something like this: "If life seems sad and lonely, do something for somebody quick." Lonesomeness is out of the question with me at such times if I am supplied with tracts, and feel, as I most always do, a sense of duty to begin the work of distributing them. I know of nothing in my life, that needs more care and watching upon prayer, and a willingness to do it as I feel the Spirit of Truth directs, than distributing tracts. There are usually a number of subjects to select from, and one needs to decide quickly, and in the life, to give each person a tract suited to his needs, one that will be as a brook by the wayside to a thirsty soul. How much good we may do or how much we can get in this way we have very little idea, if we have never tried it, but have kept putting off feelings of duty that were urging us or gently pleading with us. I feel like encouraging any and all who sometimes feel this way to be faithful, and I can assure all there is no sweeter reward, and none more easily obtained by those who are fitted for the work, and feel the necessity laid upon them. But I must say too, that I have often, if not almost always, had to have a struggle with self, and through the help of Divine Grace conquer, before I could make a move in this work; and I have no doubt others have the same process of preparation to go through, and have many of the same excuses to make, and imaginary hindrances in the way as I have. So it is with some little feeling of the importance of the work, and the way it has to be done, and the blessed reward of having done it that I feel it my duty to encourage all to be faithful to little or greater manifestations of duty; believing as I do, that you will never regret it. To such I would say, how welcome the language will sound at the end of time: "Come ye blessed of My Father" and "Inasmuch, as ye did it unto one of the least of these, My brethren, ye did it unto Me."

THAT faith which consists merely in a correct belief of the doctrines of grace, and prompts to no self-denial—that faith which allows us to spend all our days in serving self, content with merely refraining from outward sins, and attending to the ordinary duties of religion—is no faith at all. O, let me beg of you to look well into this matter!—A. JUDSON.

BECAUSE.

With such a groveling heart how shall I dare
Ask Thee, my Lord, to make Thy dwelling there?
—Because the Bethlehem stable Thou didst share.

With restless passions, surging like a sea,
How can I think to find repose for Thee?
—Because thy voice hushed stormy Galilee.

With guilt's defilement stained without, within,
How may I hope thy cleansing grace to win?
—Because Thou saidst, "I have forgiven thy sin."

With earth's poor, careless droilings tired, oppress'd,
What right have I to lean upon thy breast?
—Because Thou offer'dst to the weary rest.

With soul affections stony-cold and dead,
What claim have I to plead for life instead?
—Because in Joseph's tomb was laid thy head.

—MARGARET J. PRESTON.

It is pleasant to find Philadelphia taking the lead in some lines of educational advance. Perhaps no line is more important for the future vitality of the race than this of a lower temperature for school-rooms. Could the movement spread to office buildings and other public places no doubt an appreciable advance might be noted in the general welfare. Experience in schools in Europe has pretty well demonstrated that sixty degrees is quite high enough for a school-room temperature, but in our country some State laws direct principals to send children home if the temperature does not exceed sixty degrees. We feel sure our readers will be interested in the following article from the Journal of Education.—[Ed.]

THE OPEN WINDOW.

A medical inspector of the Philadelphia public schools, with the co-operation of teachers and parents, recently made an experiment to determine the value of cold fresh air in school-rooms, which was reported in the American Journal of Public Health. He opened the windows at top and bottom and kept them open throughout the winter. The room was shut off from the heating plant of the building except on the occasional days when the temperature fell below forty-five degrees; but the children of course wore extra wraps and had frequent drills and exercises.

Week by week during the fall and winter and spring this physician weighed and examined the pupils; watched their study and their play, and compared their progress in health and scholarship with that of pupils in another room of the same building. In that other room the pupils were of the same grade and of about the same number, but the room was heated and ventilated according to the usual methods. The pupils in both rooms were normal, healthy children from the same kind of homes, so that the test was as fair, accurate, and searching as possible.

At the end the inspector found that the pupils in the open-window room had gained in weight on an average more than twice as much as those in the warm-air room. The pupils in the open room kept wholly free from colds, and were much more regular in attendance than the others. They were also more alert, free from day-dreaming, quicker to learn, needed less review work and were better behaved. In health and happiness, in development both of mind and body, the children of the room with open windows had a clear advantage over the others.

In these days, the gospel of sunshine and pure air ought to need little preaching. Most of us accept it, but we do not always practice the doctrine that we believe in and preach. This Philadelphia experiment lay not in giving the open-air treatment to sick children—which everyone approves; it lay in giving to well children some of the good things that Nature intended that they should enjoy, and in demonstrating to the school officials and parents the advantages of lower school-room temperatures.

As a result the school board, recognizing their value, has authorized the establishment of open-window classes in several other Philadelphia schools.—WALTER W. ROACH, Philadelphia.

JOSEPH HOAG ON WAR AND SELF-DEFENCE.

We stopped on our way at Knoxville, to take breakfast. The Indians having made an invasion on the frontiers of the white inhabitants, it was a time of general alarm while I was there. Being taken into the room where the general was with his officers; the sergeants made their returns to the general, that they had warned every man that the law required to do military duty. Quakers and all, and there had not one Quaker appeared on the ground. In the meantime the general looked sharply at me, as I was walking the room, and said: "Well, we have lost a number of our frontier inhabitants, and some of our soldiers, and a people who would not defend the frontier inhabitants, when the savages were destroying and scalping them, could not be considered friends to their country, and should have no favor from him." He then said: "How do you like this doctrine, stranger?" I answered: "It is no doctrine for me; I have little or no opinion of it." He asked, "Why?" I said: "The people with whom I commune, who are sound in their principles, are all King's men to a man, and are remarkably attached to their King, and our King told Pontius Pilate, that his kingdom was not of this world, for if it was, then would his servants fight that He should not be delivered to the Jews; that his kingdom was not from hence, and that his kingdom was our kingdom; that He had nothing to fight for in this world, neither have we; and you warriors are fighting for the riches, honor and glory of this world, and when you have got them, you cannot stay with them. We choose to lay up our riches, and have our treasures, where the rust cannot mar them, nor thieves nor warriors get them from us." The general sat down, but soon rose with these words, "I am not going to give up the argument so; I see by the look of your eye, that you are no coward; you are a soldier; and if an Indian was to come into your house to kill your wife and children, you would fight." I answered: "As for cowardice, I ever despised it," but pointing towards the guns standing in the house with bayonets on them, "General, it would take twelve such men as thou art—and then you would not do it—to make me take hold of a gun or pistol, to take the life of a fellow creature," and looked him full in the face. He said: "I see you do not deny the sword." I replied: "No; I profess to be a swordsman, that is the weapon I go into the field with—a sword that never was beaten in the field nor foiled in battle." He turned and sat down, but not long, and said: "I will bring you to the point. If an Indian was to come into your house, with his knife and tomahawk, and you knew he would kill you, your wife and children, and you knew you could kill him and save all your lives, you would kill him; if you did not, you would be guilty of the death of the whole." I thought it time to look for a close, and proposed a standard to bring the argument to, that should decide it, but he declined. I then asked him if he professed to be a Christian, a Jew, or a Mahometan? He declined awhile. I then added, if he were a Jew, he was not prepared to fight; his men were not circumcised, he had not burnt a sin offering, nor a peace offering. He exclaimed: "I profess to be a Christian; I am not a Jew or a Turk." I asked him if he believed Jesus Christ was the author of the Christian dispensation. He said, "Yes." I asked him if he believed Him sufficiently equal to the work as God himself, as he received all the works of God to do. He said, "He did." I then told him, I should keep him to the Christian platform or creed, laid down by Jesus Christ; and that he would not deny that a Christian was fit to live or die—I meant a true Christian. He said a true Christian was fit to live or die. I then told him I would give the subject a fair statement, and he might judge. I proceeded thus: "I shall state, that myself and wife are true Christians, and our children are in the minority—and thou knowest it is natural for children to believe what their parents teach them—and therefore we are all true Christians as far as our several capacities enable us to be; and now the question lies here; which is most like the precepts and example of our King—the author of the Christian religion—to lay down our lives, and all go to heaven together; or kill that wicked Indian, and send him to hell; for he must of them a very courteous letter, stating that they made no record whatever of the color of a property holder and were therefore unable to give the information. The only way any information could be gotten was the tedious method of a house-to-house canvass, and by such facts and information secured from different persons, we were able to identify eight hundred pieces of property owned by colored people in this city. The number may be one thousand, but there is no way of telling, for there is no "C" on the assessors' books.

Had we been looking, however, for the number of Negroes arrested for rape last year, we could have easily found the number, because a record is kept of the color of those who commit rape, but not of property holders.

We were interested also in securing the number of colored persons who had bank accounts in the city. We accordingly applied to the Western Savings Fund, Tenth and Walnut Streets, and to the Philadelphia Savings Fund, Seventh and Walnut Streets, the two leading institutions for savings of the working people, presuming that there must be a large number of colored depositors. The cashier in both these institutions informed us that they kept no record whatever of the color of their depositors and had no knowledge of the number of colored depositors or the amount of money they deposited. These men, however, were very much interested in our quest for information and very generously agreed to keep a record for a year or more of all the colored depositors. To the surprise of ourselves as well as to our own surprise, in one year, more than two thousand new depositors were listed in these two banks, and the count made by the officials of the banks showed that probably three million dollars of the savings of colored people were deposited in one of these banks alone. There is no telling how much the savings of colored people are in this city, because there is no record of their color. Very different, indeed, is this from the high death rate which is reported by color. Indeed, speaking of the death rate, for many years the only thing recorded of Negroes in this city was their death rate, which was shown to be greatly to their disadvantage, but it was not reported that this death rate was overcome by a birth rate of which the public was in ignorance, because while there was a "C" after deaths, there was no "C" after births in the records.

Again, if we refer to the various histories written concerning the colored people in the State of Pennsylvania, especially the county historians, we will find in a great many of them, the registry of slaves up to the year 1780. In most of these county histories, the names of the owners, and in some cases, the names of the slaves are given, but we have not yet seen, in a single county history, though we have examined more than one hundred volumes of these histories, any list of the colored soldiers who fought in the various wars for this country. As a matter of fact, there were in the Civil War alone over eight thousand Negro soldiers from this State, as against less than half that number of Negro slaves, but the slaves are recorded, and the soldiers are ignored. We might go on indefinitely giving examples of this discrimination which we believe has had a great deal to do with making an unfavorable public opinion with regard to Negroes.

We have been interested in the study of the underground railroad in the various counties in the State of Pennsylvania. From the published literature, it would appear that the colored people have taken but little part in the underground railroad. Indeed, one of the best accounts of the underground railroad in the State of Pennsylvania mentions a number of very worthy white people by name, but rarely calls the name of the Negro, merely dismissing the work of the colored man by stating that a certain colored man did so and so. It seems that the historian did not think it worth while to give the name of the colored hero, while he thought it very necessary to give the name of the white person.

Added to this, is the habit of the press of to-day in magnifying all of the bad deeds of the Negro by calling attention to his color, without similarly magnifying his good deeds.

I was very forcibly impressed with this particular injustice a few years ago when a Negro artist won the Harris prize for art. A paper reporting it said that Henry O. Tanner had won the Harris prize for painting, giving the name of the painting and other details, but did not mention the fact that Henry O. Tanner is a Negro, while almost directly underneath was given an account of the arrest of a man for some trivial offense, but in the case of this arrest it was distinctly stated that the man was a Negro.

It is, in a measure, to react this very long standing injustice to the colored people in the records of the country and State that the proposed Emancipation Proclamation celebration is to be held in Philadelphia in [Ninth Month], when it is hoped to bring before the country the side of the Negro life which is so rarely exploited in our newspapers or recorded in our public records, and of which the public in general is ignorant. And we believe if nothing else is done except to get the record straight, a great good will be accomplished — Editorial in The Christian Recorder, Sixth Month 12, 1913.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

THE "NEW FRIEND" WITH AN OLD FACE.

There has been some expression, and no doubt much more conjecture, regarding the new proposition for THE FRIEND; but doubtless it will be yet largely what those who are called in the spirit, and occupy, cause it to be by their faithfulness. A religious and literary journal it started near four-score years ago, and has still the same title. Sometimes, no doubt, some have feared it was losing the first of these. If so, this may have been in part on account of the faithfulness of some in not yielding to apprehended duty and contributing. In order to fulfil the first purpose—religious—as a Friend would view it, and truly this it was to do, it must be, not a superficial, formal, wordy religious exponent, but a deep, animated expression, with an unction that can be felt—not only milk for the babes, but strong meat of the Gospel for men. Those whose condition and experience has prepared them to relish this latter can yet feel interest in and reap instruction from clean literature, travel, science, nature, etc.; but these too, as the writers are under his influence, will evidence it by the recognition of God as the author and promoter of every good act.

But etern and anon as we turn the pages, will we look for and hopefully expect that which is deepest and truly good for the soul, it may be from what has been written in the past of men and things, which in the newness is never old, or that of the present, fresh and crisp from an inspired penman. God is as able to-day as ever to reveal himself and inspire, where his creature man has come sufficiently under his government. In this feature the "New Friend" may still be the "Old Friend," and that as an old friend, it may still be new, bringing forth things new and old from the sanctuary. Herein it will not be an advocate of a new way, and will not seek to drive either way, but to woo, to turn, to bring souls to Christ, the Word nigh in the heart. It will be exercised for a revival of that which was and is, and is to be; for according to the prophecy of Mary Peasley, the end of the true Israel of God is by no means yet. (See Friends' Library, Vol. 11, page 113. Letter to J. Pemberton.) The expression of another inspired one was; "This spirit which I feel shall yet break forth in thousands." That none may lose their place in such an inheritance or their rightful portion of such a legacy, is the desire of all the honest-hearted, and that all that is put forth may be the means still to bring to Christ. Having been brought and abiding there, there is a future for us as individuals and for the Society.

Those nations which forsook God in due time decayed, and the people who depart from the Gospel, which is the power of God, and from the faith, and who turn to something outward, must eventually stumble or fall; so that our preservation as a religious Society in the Truth must be as we return again from time to time unto the fountain, and learn of Him who said, "I am meek and lowly of heart, and ye shall find rest unto your soul."

CYRUS COOPER.

For "THE FRIEND."

JUST A THOUGHT TO THINK ABOUT.

G. R. ROGERS.

may play some trick, if they think we are not friends? Perhaps they may try to block our precious river so that we can no longer sail up and down the valley as before."

The listeners nodded. "The old one is right," they said. "We, too, must come to this war business. It is evident that Thulie-Toward-The-Sea means some harm or why should she arm?"

So Thulie, like her sister kingdom in the Valley of Peace, made herself ready to meet some future foe. She called together her sons from the fields and river, and gave them weapons, and she hired a general from the outer world to teach them how to aim, attack and kill.

"This is a wonderful training," they said. But a cry of anguish went up from South Thulie at the sight. "Friends, oh, friends!" they cried. "Are we no longer to be comrades on our river? Are we no longer to be trusted? Think you, your daughters marry our sons, and our daughters marry your sons. How then can there be trouble in our valley?"

Thulie and Thulie-Toward-The-Sea heard not the cry, though. They were busy. So the mothers of South Thulie sold their jewels and bought arms, and their sons called them noble and promised to do them honor by killing other mothers' sons. And within a twelve-month they made good their promise.

A dark night, without a star, shut in the valley, and the soldiers of each kingdom, ever watching for some trouble or some trick, said, "This is the night we must be on our guard. Let us creep down to the river. Who can tell what we may find?"

Slowly and noiselessly they formed and made their way along the valley, three lines of silent sons and fathers, all eyes to see, all ears to hear in the inky blackness. And as they neared the river where the kingdoms join, each band heard clanking and the sound of feet.

"Ha!" they gasped. "It is as we expected; they are here."

With a cry of exultation they rushed forward and fell upon each other like wild beasts—wild beasts, these one-time friends of a happy valley. All night long they fought and surged, all night long they groaned and fell, and all night long the river went by upon its way as it had done for generations. When dawn came down from the hills, the men of Thulie, South Thulie and Thulie-Toward-The-Sea were stretched upon the fields, many of them stark dead, and their women folk came and, fainting, bore their bodies home. Only a few survived the battle and they were scarred and maimed for life—especially Timon the bold of Thulie-Toward-The-Sea. He was so maimed that ever after children screamed at sight of him, and hid their faces. Yet he lived to be an old, old man, forgotten and alone, for his son died in the fighting and his wife died when she heard the news.

Sometimes strangers in the valley are said to have asked him why the kingdoms, once so friendly, should have come to such an end. And it is said that the old man always murmured, "It was something about the river—no one knew just what."

You cannot find the kingdoms, the three wise and happy kingdoms of the Valley of Peace because they are no more, as you know. They died long ago of distrust and broken faith. But the river, the pure and limpid blessing, still flows on to the sea.—LUCILE GULLIVER, in Everyland.

SUCCESS.—He has achieved success who has lived well, laughed often and loved much; who has gained the respect of intelligent men and the love of little children; who has filled his niche and accomplished his task; who has left the world better than he found it, whether by an improved poppy, a perfect poem, or a rescued soul; who has never lacked appreciation of earth's beauty, or failed to express it; who has looked for the best in others, and has given the best he had; whose life was an inspiration, his memory a benediction.—BESSIE A. STANLEY.

May I relate a story? Well, some years ago a colony of perhaps four hundred families settled in a new country. They lived within themselves. There were millmen and lumbermen, mechanics, farmers, and all the necessary tradesmen to make the full round of necessities. They were living happily and were reasonably busy, but found time to gather themselves together and worship the God that had so abundantly supplied them with all the necessary things of life. Yes, they met on the First-day of the week; also on the Fifth-day. They enjoyed a day of quiet rest and meditation every First-day.

Things continued as above for some years, all were very happy; but they wished a change and more pleasures, so one-fourth of their number began manufacturing toys and furnishing amusements. This cut down the number of necessity workers, and the remaining three-fourths were obliged to work much harder. In turn they desired more for their products; in fact, more must be forthcoming to buy these toys the other one-fourth were manufacturing and also to pay to see the pleasure-makers. Then the toy-makers and pleasure-furnishers must have more to pay for the increased price of necessities; and thus it continued, each demanding more only to be met with more to pay. Thus a once contented, God-worshipping people became a dissatisfied, money and pleasure-worshipping folk.

How foolish they were. Why is it that they cannot see their folly? But really they say: "We are living better than we did before. Instead of going to meeting on First-day and then home to sit around, we go to meeting, if we have time, and then go out and see the pleasure-makers. We are getting some enjoyment out of life. The Fifth-day meeting is about abandoned; a few old people still keep going once in a while, but it will soon be a thing of the past. We haven't time to leave our work. If we have time after our day's work, we take a spin in our automobile and enjoy life."

After reading the above please meditate, and then take a New Testament and turn to Revelations iii and read from the fourteenth to the twenty-second verses, inclusive; then please turn back and read very thoughtfully 2 Timothy iii, first to seventh, inclusive.

DEBQUE, Iowa.

THE NEED OF GOD.

This ample, splendid, fruitful, energetic, prosperous America of ours is not, perhaps, conscious enough of all its needs. It has many of them, but none is greater or more pressing than its need of God.

This is not an arraignment of our morals. For all our outcry against political and financial corruption, we are, as the world goes, a moral people. We are a generous people, a kindly people, a sympathetic people, ready to respond abundantly to the appeal of any form of want or suffering.

But this habitual kindness and conventional morality, on which we pride ourselves too much, covers but cannot hide the deeper need of which The Companion wishes to speak. Look back at the past, at the history of all the nations of the world; how many peoples do you find who show in their common daily lives as little sense as we show to-day of what you may call, if you will, "the not-ourselves," "the spiritual mystery," "the Divine"? There is no better name to call it by than "God."

We have churches [meeting-houses], you protest. So we have. But there are some who do not go to them, and not all of those who do go, listen. And what is far more important, in most cases God is left in the church [meeting-house]. Who names his Name in the rush of business or in the tumult of pleasure? How many of us—writer, lawyer, doctor, broker, politician, or club-woman—connect the thought of Him with any absorbing interest of our lives?

There are various reasons for this. One is the real decay one of the department's explorers, cabled that he had discovered the chestnut blight disease in China. In the eastern United States this blight has destroyed about $50,000,000 worth of timber. The value of his discovery, it was said, lies in the fact that it proves that the disease is an imported one and not native to this country. It had been contended that it was useless to fight it because it was a native growth and liable to break out anywhere in the country."

A despatch of the 10th from Harrisburg states that, "A forest fire poster has been issued by the Department of Forestry and will be distributed throughout the forested regions of this State."

A recent despatch from Washington says, "The extent of the co-operation the Department of Agriculture is receiving from persons entirely outside the Government service is revealed by the statement that at present about 10,000 persons are experimenting with new varieties of foreign plants sent in by the department's explorers from all parts of the world. The department is seeking to ascertain where and under what conditions these strange shrubs, fruits and grains will thrive."

It was stated from New York on the 4th inst. that a report issued by the American Bible Society shows that a large number of families in the United States have been found without a copy of the Bible. In fact, the number is so large that the society is renewing its efforts to increase its circulation. At the same time the Bible is being translated into every foreign tongue. China, Japan, Zululand, Siam, Portugal, Arabia, and, in fact, practically every country accessible to the white man has been made a field for distribution of the work. But the most interesting figures are taken from the United States. In the northwestern agency 14,480 families were found to be without a copy of Holy Writ in their homes. In the western agency 8225, in the southwestern 24,037. To help supply Bibles to these people 428 persons have been employed and are now at work. In China 1,268,180 copies were put into circulation. A total of 1238 persons are employed in making the distribution.

Further to popularize the parcel post system with the public, Postmaster General Burleson has announced that after Eighth Month 15th the weight limit on packages would be placed at 20 pounds (it now is 11 pounds) and that a reduction in charges for the transportation of packages would be made. He announced also that on the same date the "banking by mail" feature would be introduced.

A despatch from New York mentions that John Mears has circled the earth in 35 days, 21 hours and about 36 minutes. He left New York about an hour after midnight on Seventh Month 2 and traveled by way of Paris, Harbin, Yokohama and Vancouver.

It is stated in a preliminary report, the Commission on Pensions of the Protestant Episcopal Church outlines a plan to pension the 5500 clergy of the church, for which a fund of $7,000,000 will be necessary at the start, and an expenditure of $500,000 each year thereafter. The report shows that the Episcopal Church pays its clergy $8,000,000 a year in salaries.

It is stated that practically all the Kansas colleges have joined in the simplified spelling movement, and an effort is being made to get all the high schools of the State to adopt the new word scheme when school opens next fall. The Wichita High School has already adopted the new system, and it is asserted that eight more city high schools are ready to follow the new scheme when the school year opens.

A recent despatch says that in a convention of the State Federation of Catholic Societies resolutions criticising the reading of the Protestant version of the Bible in the public schools, the recitation of Protestant prayers and singing of Protestant hymns were adopted. It was the sentiment of the convention that the public schools, being regarded as non-sectarian, there should be no Bible reading at all, not even of the Catholic version, and that its introduction under recent act of Legislature was deplored.

It was stated from Topeka, Kansas, that on the 4th inst. State Senator McMillen, of Ottawa County, was here urging upon Governor Hodges the necessity for calling a special session of the Legislature to appropriate relief funds for farmers in the drought-stricken counties of western Kansas. Half a million dollars, the Senator believes, will be required to prevent actual suffering among farmers who have harvested nothing this year.

A despatch of the 5th from Chicago says, "A jury of women will be empaneled to try the cases of women and children brought into the court for insane at the detention hospital. Judge Owens declared that he intended to call women jurors exclusively to try the cases of women and children. The policemen will visit the public dance halls, excursion boats, beaches and railroad stations, and will try to keep young folks off the streets late at night. They will obtain information rather than make arrests, although on occasions they may be called upon to arrest some one."

It was stated from Minneapolis on the 7th inst. that to harvest the big wheat crop now ripening in northern Minnesota and North Dakota, 100,000 laborers are needed by farmers, according to data station agents at towns in the two States have sent their general offices in the twin cities. Railroad officials who have been over the territory recently say that the crop generally is as heavy as the average, although in some localities a trifle lighter than last year. The shortage of men, they believe, will be nearly as great as ever.

A despatch from Chicago of the 7th says: "The country has been apprised of the drought in several of the Western States and its effect on the crops, and every succeeding dry day subtracts just so much from the probable aggregate of the corn crop. That is the great evil of the drought, but there are many other effects which subject people to inconvenience. Some of the towns have gone so dry that it has been necessary to obtain water from other localities for drinking purposes."

It was stated from Washington on the 7th inst.: "At 4 o'clock this afternoon the first of the treaties under the Bryan plan for world-wide peace was signed at the State Department. The contracting parties were Salvador and the United States. Although the treaty is to undergo the ordeal of ratification by the Senate, State Department officials are confident it will go into force. This treaty, which is the first of a series of identical agreements, is to be offered to every nation."

FOREIGN.—A despatch from London of the 7th inst. says: "Bulgaria last night concluded peace with Serbia, Greece and Montenegro, thus bringing the second Balkan war to an end. A treaty of peace was signed on the 10th inst."

It was stated from London on the 8th inst.: "The House of Commons to-day ratified the Government's contract with the Marconi company for the construction of an Imperial chain of wireless stations circling the world."

It is said that the remarkable spread of the temperance movement in the British Isles was discussed by Sir Thomas Barlow lately at a breakfast given to several hundred physicians by the National Temperance League. There has been, he said, an enormous change among the commercial classes, while the use of alcohol in hospitals and by medical men generally has greatly decreased. The president appealed to the doctors to check the consumption of medicated wines, all of which, he said, were mischievous.

A despatch of the 1th from Hong Kong, China, says: "The Southern Chinese rebellion has been practically suppressed and the declaration of independence of the revolutionary provinces abrogated. In Canton the populace to-day is celebrating the ending of the uprising with public rejoicings."

It was stated from Lima, Peru, that an earthquake on the 6th inst. destroyed the Peruvian towns of Caraveli and Quichea. Thousands of the inhabitants were rendered homeless and extended relief measures will be necessary.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 87.

Susan Pearson, Pa.; Geo. J. Foster, Ill.; Hamilton Haines, Phila.; Joseph S. Leeds, N. J.; Charles Lee, Pa.; Joseph B. Kester, Pa.; E. Dean Stanton, Pa.; John S. Brown, Agt., Pa., 86, for himself, Abel McCarty and Job McCarty; Lydia W. Evans, N. J.; 84 for Ezra Evans and Joseph Stokes Evans; Helena J. Connor, per Wm. Scutergood, Agt., Pa.; Thos. W. Downing, Pa.; Jane G. Suedley, Pa.; Horace B. Foster, R. I.; Frank M. Normant, Pa.; Elizabeth L. Thomas, Pa.; per Rose L. Thomas; John Stamp Keeling, Ireland, 108.; Sara L. Draper, Phila.; Phoebe S. Gawthrop, Pa.; Bertha E. Jones, N. J.; Thomas Hinchshaw, N. C., 85 to No. 52, vol. 88.; Geo. R. Meloney, Pa., and for Laura B. Meloney; Wm. Stanton, Pa., and for Anna Stanton Palmer; Isaiah M. Haworth, O.; Joseph Warner Jones, Pa.; James M. Moon, Pa.; John G. Hall, O.; Isaac Heacock, Pa.; Sarah H. Kaighn, N. J., vol. 86.

Remittances received after Third-day noon will not appear in the receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

The "Memorial of John II. Dillingham" is now for sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia. Price, paper cover, five cents each, by mail, six cents; per dozen, 50 cents; by mail fifty-six cents.

3. Club cover, six cents each, by mail seven cents; per dozen sixty cents by mail, seven dollars.

WEDNESDAY'S WEEK, Eighth Month 18th to 23rd:

Weston Quarterly Meeting, at West Grove, Pa., Sixth-day, Eighth Month 22d, at 10 A. M.

MONTHLY MEETINGS—

PHILADELPHIA, for Western District, Twelfth Street below Market, Fourth-day, Eighth Month 20th, at 10:30 A. M.

MARYLAND, at Pikesville, Pa., Fourth-day, Eighth Month 20th, at 10 A. M.

LONGLEAF, Phila., Fourth-day, Eighth Month 20th, at 7:45 P. M.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Fifth-day, Eighth Month 21st, at 5 P. M.

GREENSBORO, Phila., Fifth-day, Eighth Month 21st, at 10 A. M.

TO ADVERTISERS—THE FRIEND is now open for special advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents; or 4 cents a line; no charge for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

Selling More Goods

BY THE BEST PRESENTATION IF YOU USE GOOD PRINTING.

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,
1501 CHERRY STREET,

1010 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

Eye
Comfort
Guaranteed

My glasses that suit, that give clear, restful vision, bring happiness to Old Eyes, as especially with us—and to Young Eyes, too.

C. A. LONGSTRETH
Specialist in Eye Testing
222 Market St., Philadelphia

Plant Paeonies and German Iris at this season of the year

There are many beautiful and a variety in color and form of Paeonies and Iris, which grow easily and abundantly in the open air.

Write for a list of names and prices. If you are asking for a particular variety, mention it. We have almost 2000 varieties of Paeonies, Iris, Striped and Variegated Paeonies.

THE WM. H. MOON CO.

NEWRYMEN

Room 11, Stephen Girard Bldg.,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Send for prices, names or descriptions, will send you a list, especially by mentioning our name in correspondence.

During Seventh and Eighth Months of this year the meetings at Newtown Meeting House, Camden, N. J., will be discontinued.

FRIENDS' SELECT SCHOOL, 140 N. Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, reopens Ninth Month 22, 1913. Catalogues and complete information may be had on application.

WALTER W. HAVILAND, Principal.

BURLINGTON AND BUCKS QUARTERLY MEETING, at Burlington, N. J., Third day, Eighth Month 26th, at 10:30 A. M.

DIED, at his residence, near Spencer's Station, Gurnsey County, Ohio, on the Third of Fourth Month, 1913, ANNER HALL, in the eighty-seventh year of his age; a life-long member of Richland Preparative and Stillwater Monthly Meetings of Friends.

W. B. WEAVER Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5th ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN
TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT
OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL
ACCOMMODATIONS FOR
FUNERALS.

BELL 'PHONE. ESTABLISHED 1880.

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

From Bonds to Freedom, by Isabel Shipley, 2nd Edition, 2 cts. Northfield Symposium, 1905. What 16 young Friends thought when they were 8 years younger, 2 cts.

Christ in all the Scriptures, by A. M. Hodgkin, 60 cts. Haydock's Testimony, 50 cts. By L. C. Wood
For a Free Conscience, $1.00.

ALL POSTPAID

J. B. WOOD, PINE POINT PARK, CAMDEN, N. J.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Selected

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
(Marcellus Balderston)

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. 618 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL 'PHONE. PHILADELPHIA

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL.

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

When in the market for
NORTH CAROLINA PINE BOX BOARDS OR ROOFERS

in solid or mixed cts., send us your inquiry. We make a specialty of this material and can make prompt delivery.

THE COX LUMBER CO., Inc.
Ashboro, N. C.

JOSEPH G. FOGG FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16th & RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 6646

WANTED TO CORRESPOND WITH A FRIEND who is a good, practical farmer, a man of executive ability and not under thirty years of age.

WANTED TO CORRESPOND WITH A FRIEND who has a farm and wishes a married man to take charge. Live stock keeping preferred. No objection to taking up a "run down" place with possibilities of development. J. T. M., Care of THE FRIEND.

ROOMS AT ITHACA, NEW YORK—YOUNG MEN intending to enter Cornell University, next year, can secure comfortable and reasonable rooms, about ten minutes' walk from the Campus, at 235 Tandon Avenue, EDWARD WOOD, Ithaca, New York.

FOR RENT—"DEWEES CAMP" AT POCUNO LAKE. Preserve is offered for rent during the Ninth Month. A comfortable outfit for family of six. Near diamond camp and fountain every way desirable. Arrangement is a happy combination of camp life with sufficient shelter and open grate fire for bad days.

Photos and for particulars on application to SARAH B. DEWEES, Haverford, Pa.
or EGBERT S. CARY, Pocomo, Pa.

FOR RENT—HANDSOME RESIDENCE, KING'S HIGHWAY, HADDONFIELD, NEW JERSEY, UNFURNISHED BY THE YEAR. Fine, large, brick, attractive, situated, with porch overlooking large box bush garden; old shade, 16 rooms, bath-rooms, artesian water, all floors, electric lights, perfect repair, stable, garage, chicken house, etc. An ideal home. Reasonable rent. Possession immediately if desired, or Ninth Month.

Address JOHN GILL WILLITS,
Bell Phone 2183, 49 Grove St., Haddonfield, N. J.

FOR RENT—FURNISHED BUNGALOW, AT POCUNO LAKE, Pa., for Ninth Month. This bungalow, just completed, all house very comfortably, a moderate-sized family. There is a large living-room with a big stone fireplace. There are two bedrooms and a fully equipped bathroom. There are a sink with running water. The front porch is roofed and extends the length of the house, 26 feet. There is also a dining-porch. The location is regarded as one of the best at the Lake, with a fine view and directly across from the dining-cabin. The furnishings are complete. Ninth Month is the most charming month of the summer at Pocomo Lake.

For further particulars address
J. LINTON ENGLE,
516 Ludlow Street, Phila.
(Bell Phone, Lombard 107).

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

POCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevation 1800 feet, commanding extensive mountain and valley scenery. Address

J. W. HURLEY, Manager,
POCONO MANOR, PA.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, EIGHTH MONTH 21, 1913.

No. 8.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to
EDWIN P. SELLEW OR THE FRIEND,
NO. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a
notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

FRIENDS AND THE SCRIPTURES.

111.

There is a type of mind satisfied with the findings of others so long as they do not controvert facts and principles which they have accepted as established truths. These would have an easy road, and if they could live in a little world of their own would possess their serenity without any harm to others, but in a community life, which grows more complex with each year that passes, this is out of the question, though an approach is made to it in the case of certain groups we could name.

There is another and a more healthy type of mind which, from the nature of its constitution, cannot and does not remain impassive in the midst of change and discussion, but which shows in many ways that it feels the pulse of life throbbing through it and responds to it. It would be as easy to bottle up the watercourses that flow from the hills to make the rivers of the valley as it would be to put a final quietus on such minds as are represented in this second class. Then, too, different periods of time seem to reflect differently the attitude of thought, and the present shows itself to be a period of unusual alertness, one in which the spirit of research seems especially active.

I do not believe many of the early Friends knew what a grand philosophy of doctrine they were formulating when they propounded their views concerning the real place of the Scriptures. All that they claimed was that the Spirit of Truth led them to enunciate the principles they did, and in these modern days, when men talking about the self-same thing use terms that savor of the schoolmen's craft, we find not a few of the wisest and most thoughtful of our scholars approaching the subject from a different angle reaching precisely the same conclusion.

The Christian world has known two distinct periods which are more clearly recognized to-day than when Richard Claridge in the seventeenth century set forth clearly our attitude. First there had grown up in the Christian church the belief which became firmly rooted that there was an infallible church. This is the most comfortable church affiliation a man can know, and if comfort and not truth is one's objective there is ample reason why all Christians should identify themselves with the church that stands for this dogma.

With little less persistence did another dogma fasten itself upon the church in the days of the Protestant Reformation. Nothing was more honest in motive than the doctrine that led up to this, that God had appointed certain great spiritual truths to be for the guidance of man, and that holy men of old spoke as his Spirit moved upon them, and these sayings undergoing all the accidents that befell other writings of the same periods were handed on from generation to generation, till through instrumentality of men, who knew more than human guidance in their work, they were gathered up in one great book and canonized and accepted as the Scriptures of Truth.

Surely a Christian who holds to such a fundamental as his final rule of living has a wider range for personal responsibility than he who implicitly and almost blindly accepts the deliverances of the Church. Then came the Quaker thought, not new, but never before so clearly stated and certainly never so vigorously defended, that neither was the church nor the Scriptures the supreme rule.

For three centuries the Protestant world believed in the infallibility of the Scriptures—the bitterness that had characterized their predecessors was in their case softened, but it partook of the same nature and history is full of the sad results of their teaching. Protestants to-day of various creeds still accept this, and if they must it need not worry others of us who have been granted a little wider outlook, for we find the old spirit of bitterness almost gone.

Just as in the days of Luther the question was raised—Why is the church infallible? Where is the authority? So to the German school came the suggestion—What proof can be advanced for the infallibility of the Scriptures? and the answer to honest inquiry was the same—there is none. All deductions growing out of this had been based on an hypothesis quite as illogical as that which the Romanists had used to establish their philosophy centuries before.

If one will read the noble defense made by the seventeenth century Friends for the new doctrine and end his reading with Richard Claridge's Essay on the Holy Scriptures and Robert Barclay's Proposition, he will convince himself that they did their part well. We are all satisfied that the dogma—that the church is infallible—is false, but many of us cringe just a little when the second statement is made and dread lest it may lead into irreverence and infidelity. Sad, indeed, it were that such be the outcome of any investigation like this, but a faith that is so tottering as to need props at this stage has not emerged into the atmosphere even of trust and is not faith at all, and is not ready for the thought here presented and does not care for it. His case really need alarm no one.

There is a picture given of the monks of the Middle Ages in their Scriptoria, bending laboriously over their tables, patiently and honestly transcribing the words of the prophets and evangelists till far into the night. There hung over them a fearful doom they felt if they omitted or added a single uncalled-for mark, for they read in the concluding chapter of Revelations the curse pronounced upon him who committed such an offense. These good men did not know that some of the books they were copying were written after these very words had been penned, and they did not guess that the reference was to the apocalypse alone, and had no regard to other books of the Bible which at the time Saint John wrote were scattered and in no way associated as a part of one great volume.

Since the days of George Fox the advance of science has made many inroads upon the province that the Christian held sacred to himself. There has been contention, not a little at times, but differences have been harmonized; there have been sad wrecks of human lives in the encounters, but he who lays these to the charge of science not falsely so called, again argues without his premise. We face to-day the teachings of the so-called higher critics, a name which they themselves regret, and as in the past encounters with astronomy, geology and biology, so in this present encounter there are feelings of anxiety first for those most directly committed to our trust and then for the cause of truth itself. It is natural and altogether laudable that this concern manifest itself, but the truth will be best advanced by recognizing the teachings of history and remembering that to-day the great central truths of God's promise of redemption through his Son, our Lord and Saviour, have a firmer hold upon men and women the world over than ever before, and that Friends as a professing church with doctrines peculiarly their own are occupying advanced ground in many respects and one of them is the matter alluded to in this essay.

D. H. F.

EXTRACT FROM ISAAC PENNINGTON.—"And be content to be little and low, and to receive little and low instructions from God, and to walk in the path of brokenness and humility before the Lord; for this is his way of fitting for and advancing into the high and glorious power of his life.

"And this my soul is assured of, that none shall enter into, or abide in, his kingdom, but as they become little, poor and naked, and as they are led by the little child of God's begetting; who not at all answers the wisdom of man and his expectations, but still confounds them and leads on in such a path, as, if the eye of man's wisdom be open, it will still be crying out it can never bring to life.

"That which disputeth not, but believeth, at seasons feel a progress, and that the growth of life had advantage in the heart of those very things, which at present seemed to give death the advantage.

"Oh! wait on the Lord's believe in his name, trust his love; hope beyond hope for the appearance of his power, and the Red Sea shall divide, and the waters thereof stand on heaps, and Jordan shall again be driven back; the mountains shall skip like rams, and the little hills like lambs; yea, the whole earth shall feel the presence of the Lord, at the presence of the God of Jacob." Vol. II, Works, pp. 187-189. Printed 1802.

PEACE WITH GOD THINGS. First, that one may get into the habit of saying "I am sorry," and thinking that all is healed, provided one believes and is open to experience repentance and creation after that repentance. This is not uncommon, and it will be warmly guarded against. Secondly, when even the flow of repentance is stopped, one should come halfway to meet it. Beware of thorough, but not dead, silence; the small penitence of life, by keeping up what is called your own dignity—the most pitiable thing in the world. STOPPORN BROOKLYN.

WHO IS THE ENEMY?

What shall we say of the talk of war and the ever recurring danger from the enemy? Only this: There is to be no war. There is to be no foreign enemy. The enemy is he who talks of war, the evil-minded knave, the noisy fool, the unthinking who echo the clamor the knave and fool set up.

Just now, the enemy is fuming over Japan. There is no war in that quarter. There is no trouble save what we make for ourselves, and the echoes our noises may provoke. Men without brains in the long run have no influence. Between cowardly fear and cowardly bluster there is not much to choose.

Let us look quietly at the situation. Japan's people recognize—those who have the breadth of vision belonging to the good citizen—that the United States is her nearest neighbor among the western nations, her best customer and most steadfast friend. Her own ambitions and interests lie all in the restoration of Korea, the safeguarding of Manchuria, and in her readiness to do her part in the untold future of China. She is in debt to a degree no other civilized nation knows; her taxes are crushing; her country is without roads, and her railway system must be rebuilt at a cost she dare not face. She is as eager for more war as we of California for more earthquakes.

Along the borders where great nations meet there is friction among ill-tempered or narrow-minded men. This fact makes an immigration problem on the Pacific Coast. This problem was bravely met and solved in 1907. It was solved by national statesmen, without the aid of local politicians; and so it was honorably solved.

Next comes a smaller problem, of alien land-holding. It is microscopic as yet, though it may have germs of trouble if Japanese farm colonies grow up in the midst of an environment of provincialism and intolerance. There is no remedy for this evil, if evil it be, except through a careful study of the actual conditions and their future promise, with an after adjustment through friendly agreement between the government at Washington and the Ministry at Tokyo. As this matter has international bearings and results, it lies outside the jurisdiction of any state. In assuming to usurp federal authority, the Governor and Legislature of California have placed themselves in antagonism, not to Japan—for California can have no direct relations with a foreign nation—but in antagonism to the United States. This antagonism exists in fact, even if it be true that the sinuous language of the statute should legalize its obviously unconstitutional provisions. In any event, the courts of the United States are adequate to settle the question. Any act of the Legislature of California discriminating between foreign nations must become an act of the United States itself, or else it is an act of local usurpation. Only sovereign nations can deal with sovereign nations, and the Governor of California is not a ruler of any sovereign nation. He has no ambassadors from foreign courts and he receives none. All his foreign business is transacted through the Department of State at Washington.

It is manifestly a duty of Japan, as of any other nation, to protest against discriminations, and there her duty stops, until the question of jurisdiction is settled. And there it has stopped. Only the enemy talks of Japan's "arrogance," of "her efforts to domineer," her attempts "to force the issue." War talk the world over is ninety-nine per cent. lies. It has been found in Germany and France that the same money is used in both countries to inflame the water-front mobs. The armor pirates of the world play into each other's hands.

The same spirit excites the water-front mobs in Japan and in the United States. Fortunately the saner elements in both nations are at the head of affairs. This is generally the case, for if it were not so, nations could not long exist.

I quote the following from the editor of the Japan Times, a paper in Tokyo, representing the opinion of the Japanese government:

"The cries of war raised in yesterday's meeting in the Kokugi-kan, Ryogoku, as a demonstration against the land-ownership legislation in California, are ill-advised, to say the least. Those speakers who indulged in such rash arguments have disqualified this nation for criticizing America for its having Hobsons and Hearsts. Besides, they have missed the mark by placing the emphasis on the anti-Japanese sentiment in California. Because no amount of local anti-Japanese agitation would have had any serious effect on Japanese interests, but for the circumstance that the Japanese are barred from naturalization by the Federal laws. The Japanese nation has not yet made any serious effort to obtain the right of naturalization, and if we did, even at the present, we would have a fair chance of success. Only those who talk about war with America are injuring the cause of Japan by decreasing the chance of much success. America is a democratic country, and has the right to refuse citizenship to a people who have shown themselves incompetent to carry out a democratic government. The first necessary qualification of the people for the task is that they should be able to discuss national or international questions in a calm, dispassionate way. The people who easily get hysterical, lose their reason in passion, and are inclined to decide by force those questions that can be decided by discussion, lack the political self-restraint without which a democratic government is impossible. We would refuse to believe that the Japanese were so backward in political training but for the hysterical demonstration that unfortunately occurred here yesterday.

The Japanese crisis is not a matter for warships or soldiers or local politicians. Its solution rests with experts in Constitutional Law and in Social Relations.

Whoever talks of war and stirs up race antipathies, he is the enemy in either nation.

DAVID STARR JORDAN.

WORLD PEACE FOUNDATION.

A FRENCH SOLDIER'S VIEWS.

I am not a born American, having been born in Havre, France. I served in the French army four years. I was a good soldier.

During the four years I never tried to distinguish right from wrong. I never thought. I never reasoned. I only obeyed. Seven of us soldiers were ordered out to fire on a citizen. I obeyed without hesitation. Our company was also ordered on patrol duty. I saw the poor clamoring for bread.

About soldiers firing on women and children, I have heard of _____ and _____ soldiers, who fired on Jewish old men and boys and tore infants from their mothers' breasts.

A good soldier is a blind, heartless, soulless, murderous machine. He is not a man. He is not a brute, for brutes only kill in self-defense. All that is human in him, all that is Divine in him, all that constitutes the man, has been sworn away when he took the enlistment oath. His mind, his conscience, aye, his very soul, are in the keeping of his officer. No man can fall lower than a soldier—it is a depth beneath which I cannot go. American soldiers are not as low as European soldiers.

What the world needs to make it fit to live in are men and women of kind and tender hearts.

From what I know Mavor Baker is a perfect gentleman.

I was a murderous machine once, but I am a changed man. I am a plain French-American workman, fourteen years in this country.—JULIUS TESSIN BLANC, in Cleveland Daily Leader, Sixth Month 6, 1913.

It is recorded that when the father of the late Queen Victoria, the Duke of Kent, lay dying, he expressed some anxiety about his soul. His doctor endeavored to comfort him by reminding him how admirably he had deported himself in the conspicuous position in which he had been placed in this world. But the Duke checked him, saying: "No, if I am to be saved, it must be not as a prince, but as a sinner."

EVERY trial that we pass through is capable of being the seed of a noble character. Every temptation that we meet in the path of duty is another chance of filling our souls with the power of heaven. Every inspiration to do right, however trivial it may seem, is sent to us directly from Him Who sows the word of God.—BISHOP TEMPLE.

THE MASTER'S VOICE.

When days are dark and nights are cold,
And all the world seems going wrong;
When fears are fresh and hopes grow old,
And die because they've waited long;
When all is said without, within,
And I am plagued with doubt and sin;
Yet have I comfort and can rejoice
If I can hear the Master's voice:
"Come unto me, thou child distressed;
Come find a refuge on my breast;
Lay down thy burden and have rest."

When clouds are thick and winds are loud,
And angry waters rising fast,
With many leaping waves that crowd
To overwhelm my boat at last;
When all my chance of life seems lost,
Though far astray and tempest-tossed,
Yet have I courage and rejoice
If I can hear the Master's voice:
"Be not afraid; 'tis I that stand,
In every danger near at hand.
The winds are still at my command."

When earthly voices, once so dear,
Have died in silence, one by one,
Till I am left to mourn them here,
With empty heart and all alone;
When sorrow from the gates of death
Breathes on my cheek her icy breath;
Yet have I peace, and can rejoice
If I but hear the Master's voice:
"A little while; wait patiently;
A little while and thou shalt be
With thy beloved, and with me."
—HENRY VAN DYKE.

THREE ESTATES AND THREE TEACHERS.

The Lord's infinite power and life was over all. In the fresh openings whereof I was moved to declare of Three Estates and Three Teachers, viz: God was the first Teacher of man and woman in Paradise; and as long as they kept to and under God's teaching, they kept in the image of God, in his likeness, in righteousness and holiness, and in dominion over all that God had made; in the blessed state, in the Paradise of God. But when they hearkened to the serpent's false teaching (who was out of Truth) and disobeyed God and obeyed the serpent in feeding upon that which God forbade, they lost the image of God, the righteousness and holiness, came under the power of Satan, and were turned out of Paradise, out of the blessed into the cursed state. Then the promise of God was, "That the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head," break his power that man and woman were under, and destroy his works. So here were three states and three teachers. God was the First Teacher in Paradise; and whilst man kept under his teaching he was happy. The serpent was the second teacher; and when man followed his teaching, he fell into misery, into the fall from the image of God, Righteousness and Holiness, and from the power that he had over all that God had made; and came under the serpent whom he had power over before. Christ Jesus was the Third Teacher, of whom God saith, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, hear ye Him;" and who himself saith, "Learn of me." This is the true Gospel Teacher, who bruises the head of the serpent, the false teacher, and the head of all false teachers and false religions, false ways, false worship and false churches. Now Christ, who said, "Learn of me," and of whom the Father said, "Hear ye Him," said, "I am the way to God, I am the Truth, I am the Life, and the true Light." So as man and woman come to God and are renewed up into his image, righteousness and holiness by Christ, thereby they come up into the Paradise of God, the state which man was in before he fell; and into an higher state than that, to sit down in Christ who never fell.

Therefore the Son of God is to be heard in all things, who is the Saviour and the Redeemer; who hath laid down his life, and bought his sheep with his precious blood. We can challenge all the world. Who hath anything to say against our way? our Saviour? our Redeemer? our Prophet, whom God hath raised up, that we may hear and whom we must hear in all things—Who hath anything against our Shepherd, Christ Jesus, who leads and feeds us, and we know his Heavenly Voice? Who hath anything against our Bishop in whose mouth was never guile found, who doth oversee us in his pasturing of us, that we do not go astray from God, and out of his fold? Who hath anything against our Priest, Christ Jesus, made higher than the heavens, who gives us freely and commands us to give freely? Who hath anything to say against our Leader and Counsellor, Christ Jesus, who never sinned, but is holy, harmless, and separate from sinners? God hath commanded us to hear him, and he saith, "Learn of Me;" and if we should disobey God's and Christ's command, we should be like our father Adam and mother Eve, who disobeyed God's command and hearkened to the serpent's teaching. Now, man commands and would force us to hear the notions, who plead for sin and the body of death to the grave; which doctrine favors of the devil's teaching, not of Christ's; but we resolve to hear the Son, as both the Father and He command, and in hearing the Son, we hear the Father also, as the Scripture testified. For the author to the Hebrews says, "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." Mark that, God hath spoken unto us, his apostles, disciples, church) by his Son. And whereas some have objected, "That although Christ did speak both to his disciples and to the Jews, in the days of his flesh, yet since his resurrection and ascension He doth not speak now." The answer is: As God did then speak by his Son in the days of his flesh, so the Son, Christ Jesus, doth now speak by his Spirit. Wherefore he saith in the Revelations, "He that hath an ear let him hear, what the Spirit saith to the Churches." (Rev. 2.) And Christ is said to "speak from Heaven." (Heb. xii; 25.) "See that ye refuse not Him that speaketh; for if they escaped not who refused Him, that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape if we turn away from Him that speaketh from Heaven." They that resisted Moses' Law, who spake on earth) died for it without mercy, which was a natural death; but they that refuse him, that speaks from Heaven, neglect and slight their own salvation; and so die a spiritual death, through unbelief and hardness of heart. Therefore was the exhortation given of old, "To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation," etc., (Heb. iii, 15, etc.) They who neglect or refuse to hear the voice of Christ now speaking from Heaven in his Gospel day, harden their hearts. Therefore let all mark well these three states and teachers; the God of Truth, was the first Teacher, while man was in Paradise and in innocence. The serpent was the second teacher, the false teacher, who by his false teaching came to be the God of the World, which he is, wickedness. Christ Jesus, that bruiseth the serpent's head, is the third Teacher, who saith, "I learn of Me;" whom God saith "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased to hear My voice;" and of whom the testimony of the saints of old was, "That God hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." Thus they that come to be renewed up again into the Divine, heavenly image in which man was at first made, will know the same God, that was the first Teacher of Adam and Eve in Paradise; to speak to them now by his Son, who hath not, glory be to his name forever, forsaken us, as the serpent did, to lead us by his sin, into Paradise.

It is a privilege, which I draw my heart nearer to God, when I hear the voice of Christ, spoken to my soul, and the comfort of his true and beneficial, that is an exhortation to me, which enables me to mortify my sin, and to resist the temptations of the evil world, and again to receive the sanctification of the Holy Spirit, which dwells in me, and to abide in the fellowship of the Father, in which I am, for the hour, although I am not a full son of appearance, before God, Christ, my Father, and Myself.

EXTRACTS FROM DIARIES AND LETTERS OF RICHARD B. BROCKBANK.

Some notice of Richard B. Brockbank was printed in THE FRIEND shortly after his death on First Month 31, 1912. By the kindness of his daughters we are now able to give our readers the privilege of some extracts from his letters and diaries. Not a few Friends on this side of the water knew Richard B. Brockbank. In many respects he was a striking personality. One soon discovered how deeply taught he had been in the realities of the spiritual life. His Quakerism was not a tradition but an experience, and out of the storehouse of his experience he was able to interest and instruct others. As a minister his gift had the quality of "immediateness." Its relations to worship in spirit and in truth—its dependence upon such worship—gave it a baptizing power easily recognized even by the stranger to Friends' methods.

If we applied any label to our Friend we should say he was of the Philadelphia type. It will be clear in what follows that he had our point of view. This point of view has now, and will have in the future, different interpretations. These records show, we believe, that it is a point of view not aside from that life which is in the Gospel of Christ.

J. H. B.

10-5-1850.—Tulketh Cottage (at that time the residence of Sarah B. Satterthwaite). I scarcely dare note anything of my inward feelings, I feel so very poor and low, it would be as though a complaint was on my lips, whilst I am far better off than ever I could have looked for. When I look at my shortcomings and backslidings I am ready to conclude that there is none so weak as I. And yet, merciful condescension, I am permitted to feel a sweet and secret peace and quiet in this my first step towards London [on his way to Yearly Meeting] which encourages me in the belief that I am in the place.

London, 22-5-50.—Yearly Meeting commenced to-day at 10 A. M., after sitting about three hours was adjourned to four. The Meeting of Representatives was held at the rise of this sitting for the nomination of a clerk and two assistants for this year. John Hodgkin was fixed on as the one to propose for a clerk, Robert Forster and John Thorp as assistants.

The meeting this morning was opened by a Friend appearing in supplication, (I don't know his name), that the Lord who had permitted us thus again to assemble, would be pleased to make us individually concerned for the welfare of the body and the right conducting of the affairs of the Society. Some more Friends spoke, amongst whom were E. C. before the clerk read the opening minute.

The business before the Meeting was principally epistles read from other Yearly Meetings—Ireland, Philadelphia, New York, New England, Baltimore, Indiana, all the American Yearly Meetings, except North Carolina. J. Jones's certificate read. Adjourned to four.

Second Sitting, 4 P. M.—After the appointment of the clerk and the assistants as proposed, the reading the answers to the Queries was proceeded with as far as Essex. Many kind remarks on the appointment of the present clerk and assistants and in reference to the valuable services of Geo. Stacy were made.

A testimony on behalf of Amelia Brown, deceased, was read, also two minutes of deceased ministers, one of whom, Joseph Allen, of Dunmow, had expressed a wish that no minute or testimony should be issued by any meeting respecting him—John Hodgkin expressed a doubt whether Friends should accede to such a wish. He had no doubt that it had been made under feelings of deep humility and unworthiness, yet he believed that the gift was for the welfare and edification of the church, and it was for it to say without respect to the man whether it had been faithfully exercised, etc. Josiah Foster was of the same opinion, and thought this part of the minute should be erased. Several Friends spoke to the same effect, all testifying to the spirit in which the request was made and many bearing testimony to the living, baptizing power of the ministry of the dear departed Friend.

A Friend from the Monthly Meeting (Thaxted) said that similar sentiments had been expressed in their Monthly Meeting by one or two Friends, but that the Monthly Meeting had thought best to send it as it was believed that a weightier testimony was borne in those few words than in many long testimonies. Another Friend from the same quarter said that when a man had so long and faithfully exercised his gift to the entire satisfaction and with the unity of the church, he thought that it would be well to be careful about refusing to accept such a minute—it was the second request of that sort which had been made by much valued ministers, and he believed that there must be some call for such a testimony. He knew that much was said in many of our testimonies that was a burden to some. He thought it would be better to keep to the plan practiced in the Scriptures of noticing the fall of some and the restoring power of Divine Grace in them rather than giving only one side [of their experience]. He had no doubt it would tend more to the advancement of truth. A few Friends spoke in the same way, after which Edward Pease said that it would be best for the minute to go as it was. There did not seem a sufficient feeling in the meeting for it to be altered. (A very instructive discussion—many weighty remarks were made on both sides.) Adjourned to 10 to-morrow.

Representative Committee met to answer the Epistles for Ireland and the Yearly Meetings in America. Five or six Friends were appointed to each.

Third Sitting, Fifth-day, 10 o'clock.—Answers to Queries proceeded with as far as London and Middlesex—a very solid sitting.

Four testimonies read—the one for Elizabeth Dudley was a long and very beautiful one—it was read at the close of the sitting. R. Jeffrey spoke a few weighty sentences in testimony and Thos. Pumphrey appeared in supplication, ascribing praise unto Him who had enabled our dear departed Friend to hold out to the end and to be found watching.

The Epistle from North Carolina came to hand this morning and was read first. It mentioned that Nathan Hunt had attended several sittings of that meeting and imparted good counsel to them in this his ninety-third year. One of the testimonies was from Worcester Monthly Meeting concerning Lydia Newman. One also was from Frenchay concerning Mary Hunt.

The time of this sitting was mostly occupied with the Answers to the Queries and with the remarks on them. Toward the close Edward Pease said that he had seldom sat a more weighty meeting.

Fourth Sitting, 4 o'clock.—The summaries of the answers to the Queries were got through at this sitting and several testimonies were read—a very interesting one concerning Andrew Pearson from Brighouse Monthly Meeting—two from Woodbridge—one concerning Dykes Alexander, the other Ann Alexander—the last a remarkably beautiful and valuable testimony.

Josiah Foster remarked the number which seemed to have been joined to the Society by conviction during the year. At the same time that it gave him much pleasure to see an increase in the number so joined to us, it was necessary that Friends should be careful to exercise due discrimination and that they do not lay hands suddenly on any that there must be not only an acknowledgment of the truth of our principles but as he apprehended it was true Christianity that we profess he held there must be a coming up practically in that.

Edward Pease said that he very much concurred in what had been said, and that it is easy to be convinced of anything, but "converted to the practice," that is a very different matter. There is a phrase often used by our early Friends, such an one—"received the truth in the love of it." He believed that if this was the way in which any received it there would then be no fear. Jas. Backhouse said that he was afraid that Friends were sometimes unduly discouraged by the instability of those who had so joined us, and that some might be rightly joined at the time and afterwards fall away. A Friend said how beautiful it is to see the guard set on the right hand and on the left.

Sixth-day Morning.—After staying all night with dear Russell Jeffrey we walked in to Southwark meeting. It was small but a much favored time. Joseph Shewell appeared in supplication, William Brown in testimony, Sarah Brown and another Friend in testimony, the same Friend in supplication, Wm. Seekin, Birmingham, in testimony.

W. Brown had language of encouragement to hold out to some who were much cast down and in a very tendering manner to me. This meeting for worship on the morning of Sixth-day is very valuable—the sense of it followed me all the day.

Fifth Sitting, Sixth-day, 4 P. M.—The state of the Society under consideration.

John Pease spoke very beautifully on the various causes which might be thought to be the cause of our present state and decrease of members, believing that the principal cause would be found to be a want of individual faithfulness.

Edward Ashworth said that the number and length of the Quarterly Meetings was the cause. This drew out a number of weighty remarks. A young Friend, Alexander from Ipswich, made a few very appropriate remarks, saying that he much agreed with what had been said about reading the Scriptures in families, and believed that his young Friends would find it very valuable to read them privately and that it was not the discipline of the Society that was in fault; he believed that if Friends were more faithful they would be found to increase and many will flock to them.

Sixth Sitting, 7th, 11 o'clock.—Proposition to alter rule 14 respecting going to law, from Gloucester and Wiltshire, referred to committee. Proposition from Lancashire respecting altering the method of appointing Elders considered and decision postponed for a year.

Committee at 5.—The state of Society under consideration. Some remarks on Friends who are intrusted with money belonging to others, using that money for the purposes of trade, &c., then a lengthy discussion about the substitution of the proposed rule from Gloucester and Wiltshire for No. 14. A's cousin went to Greenwich after dinner—I found peace in staying—the committee meeting was like a meeting for worship to me.

First-day.—Walked to Tottenham Meeting at 11. Friends were very kind in asking me to dine. Went to Josiah Foster's by previous arrangement. Sylvanus Fox and many more ministering Friends were there. After dinner walked to Stamford Hill and found T. Richardson much better than I expected. They were very kind and said that he had often enquired for me, which shewed that his memory was not quite gone. Attended Newington Meeting. T. Arnett, J. Backhouse and several more were there—a good-sized and nice meeting. I. Slater had come out to meet me and we walked down together. He seems disgusted with London and Londoners already, which I don't wonder at; but it seems to have had one good tendency, to make him think more deeply for himself. I gave him two of the tracts called "A Summary" and a copy of Penn's "No Cross, No Crown."

Seventh Sitting, Second-day, 11 o'clock.—T. Arnett laid a concern before Friends to have a meeting for the youths and for those who are in the habit of attending Meetings, and also those who had been disowned. One was appointed for six to-morrow evening. We had the privilege of a very acceptable and timely visit from dear Rachel Rickman. Her language was one of encouragement to those who are lowly and feel themselves to be so, desiring that they might not be led away from their simplicity by an increased earnestness in pursuit of the things of the world. She also referred to the travail of some for the right maintenance of our principles and the toiling and rowing of others—saying that formerly there were some who toiled and rowed very much and yet the ship was not brought to land until they turned unto Him who was asleep with his head upon the pillow, with the language, "Lord save us or we perish." And now, though many are toiling and rowing, there must be an effectual turning to Him before any right progress is made. She believed that a day of shaking was coming upon us, in which many would be shaken in a manner they did not look for. And it was only those who were on the right foundation, and looking alone to Him, that could stand in that day.

James Jones set his seal to what dear R. R. had said, believing, that there were many within the audience of his voice who were in lowly earnest concern for the welfare of Zion. He knew where these sat, for he had often to sit with them in a very low place and he would not object again and again if it were necessary to go down with them, though it were unto the very bottom of Jordan if it might be that they might be enabled to bring up living stones of memorial to the praise of Him whose arms were ever underneath to support them.

Eighth Sitting, Second-day, 4 o'clock.—Discussion on grave-stones continued, finally referred to committee to report to a future sitting. School reports read.

Ninth Sitting, Third-day, 10 o'clock.—Wm. Matthews spread a concern before Friends to go into the Women's Meeting, which was concurred in, he liberated and the visit paid. A deeply interesting and weighty subject was now laid before the meeting, viz.: the appointing a committee to visit all the Quarterly, Monthly and other Meetings in this nation. The solemn covering over the meeting and the unanimous feeling that this was the right time for such an appointment encouraged the belief that this, like the previous one (about eighteen years ago) is right. May we indeed, as was expressed, endeavor to feel after a preparation for the reception of such a visit. Many were the beautiful remarks made in regard to this and testimonies concerning the last [appointment]. Two Friends, one Samuel Fox, Tottenham, were engaged in earnest supplication that the Lord would be pleased to guide us aright in this deeply important step. The subject of joining Norfolk and Norwich Quarterly Meetings with that of Cambridge and Huntingdonshire was settled, they are to be joined and the Quarterly Meeting to be called Norfolk, Cambridge and Huntingdon.

Committee on Epistles at 4, Youths' Meeting at 6.—A large and interesting meeting. Surely amongst so many there will be more than one or two who are indeed in earnest concerning their soul's salvation and the upholding of the Truth.

Fourth-day, Breakfast with J. B. Braithwaite, Thos. and W. Hanley from Wensleydale and a young Friend from Sibford. Richard Lamb were there, the two first are lodging there. J. B. B. supplicated that we might be enabled to be more diligent in the service of the Lord. Attended Westminster Meeting when dear J. B. B. again raised his voice in supplication that our Heavenly Father would be pleased to give us a 5th. all, and that all our offerings might be seasoned therewith. T. O. Griggles and several more Friends spoke. It was a very interesting meeting.

Fifth-day, 4 o'clock.—The report of the progress of W. Foster in delivering the address on the Continent was read, also a report from the Baltimore conference.

Sixth Sitting, First-day, 10 o'clock.—Committee at nine to hear a set of Epistles. The subject of tithes was disposed of at this sitting. It is left till next Yearly Meeting under the care of the Meeting for Sufferings with power to call afresh upon their country Friends for help.

In the course of the sitting, John Hodgkin expressed his conviction that every Friend might be faithful in the payment of tithes, and expressed a belief that the time was fast approaching of the church by law established in this country, being able to perform that many tender and loving hearts are drawn towards; Friends that the time is fast approaching, and the tithes were those on which the church might be raised upon them at the present day. He believed that the tithes was bottoming to its ruin and that if Friends were faithful they would have to hold up a light which could penetrate through the rent, which were everywhere open in the mass of wood to this effect. At an after part of the sitting, John Pearce, and that whilst the discussion on the tithes question was before the meeting he had taken no part, but believed that it would be best for him briefly to lay before Friends some of the feelings which had come before his mind on this subject. He believed that the bearing of our Christian testimony against tithes and other ecclesiastical demands was not only by refusing to pay and suffer by the restraint, but that we should be earnestly concerned to bear a faithful testimony against the advances and insinuations of a hireling ministry in all its ramifications. He referred to the care of what is called the church to provide chaplains for gaols, poor-houses, etc., and that he did not know that for the small proportion of the rates for the maintenance of these places which went to these hirelings he should be justified in refusing the whole rate, still, he was concerned to draw the attention of Friends to the various advances and encroachments of this iniquitous system, which he believed was fast, as had been said, tottering to its ruin. And his desire was that Friends by their faithfulness and by the weight of their spirits should so walk before men as to shew that they do indeed believe in and uphold the truth as it is in Jesus. And that so they may be as a light set upon a candlestick which, as had been expressed, would shine through and through this false and erroneous fabric. And that in our desires for their welfare we might not permit anything to creep in of tenderness towards those who were the upholders of this iniquitous system.

Eleventh Sitting, 4 o'clock.—A short sitting, as Thos. Pumphrey had laid before Friends a concern that he had to meet the parents and heads of families at the morning sitting which was united with, and a meeting appointed at seven o'clock this evening. Report of the Indian committees, etc., and of the Baltimore conference read. Went to Peckham with R. Jeffrey, stayed all night and returned next morning to the committee meeting at 10 to hear the draft of the Epistles.

Twelfth Sitting, 12 o'clock.—After the opening minute, Jas. Jones laid a concern before us to pay a visit to the Women's Meeting. After an expression of unity Edward Pease and Peter Bedford were appointed to accompany him. Geo. H. Head stood up and expressed the burden which had been on his mind since a Friend had spoken, who was very near to him, and whose opinions generally he very much valued, with such bitterness against what is called the Church of England—that many of the members of that body were very dear to him and he had no doubt to many there present—that when he considered the number who were separated from this Society in the painful separation a few years ago, he could not but believe there were many who felt with him and he could not adopt those uncharitable and harsh expressions.

John Hodgkin said that he had not gathered anything of harshness but that what his dear relative said was the truth spoken in Love—and that in holding to the Truth it was necessary to testify against error.

Thos. Chalk said that he felt much unity with what had been expressed by the clerk and J. Pease, and said "knowing these things happy are ye if ye do them." He believed that if an individual concern was experienced to maintain in simplicity and faithfulness that which we knew to be right our endeavors would be blest.

J. Pease said a few words in addition to what he had said in the former sitting. They had been on his mind then but he did not wish to detain the meeting. They were as a seal to what he had said before—W. Brown expressed his unity with what had been said by our clerk and John Pease.

Thirteenth Sitting, 6 o'clock.—The minute respecting grave-stones was brought in from the committee. Jonathan Grubb and Wm. Nash spoke against it tho' a little out of order on account of its only being the minute not the whole subject which was before the meeting. It seemed a burden to many well concerned Friends but was at last put on minute.

Some of the Epistles were read, including one to the younger.

Fourteenth Sitting, Second-day, 6 o'clock.—The remainder of the Epistles were read and signed.

(To be continued.)

To have what we want is riches, but to do without is power.

Reprinted from The Westonian for Seventh Month.

OUR PROPER STANDARD OF SIMPLICITY.

HANNAH P. MORRIS.

If we were to go to Devonshire a savor of its cream would linger with us; if we have traveled through Yarmouth a whiff of herring seems to follow us; if we sail among the Philippines the aroma of spices comes to us on the gale; if we have loitered in sunny Italy the luscious grapes and melons tempt us thither again.

So it is when we have been in an atmosphere of simplicity, the very essence of it remains. We Friends are supposed to possess this essential quality, and if it comes to us by inheritance or by contact let us not part with it easily. In our childhood we were impressed by it when we spent happy weeks at grandmother's farm, and the dear old uncle and aunts in their primitive pursuits passed their quiet lives in "the trivial round, the daily task." Their love shone out in patience with us lively youngsters, who never seemed in the way, and if we were allowed to help in the garden, we counted it a joy. Dear Aunt Rebecca whose wavy auburn hair would peep out beneath her cap while her deft fingers fashioned apple-pies, or the ham cured by stalwart Uncle George and broiled over the wood coals—we shall never taste their like again. When we rode with these dear old people to meeting and felt their reverent worship, when we saw that love was the inspiration of the household, could we lose the object lesson? Many guests came and went, among them a New York lady who moved in fashionable circles. But one day she said in this quiet retreat, "Here is the place that I would choose for dying." Her wish was granted. She came "From the prison of anxious doubt that fear has builded,

From the fetters that envy has wrought and pride has binded,
From the noise of the crowded way and the fierce confusion,
From the folly that wastes its days in a world of illusion."

Out of all this she turned to the Christian simplicity of this home, the reality of which made her past life seem shallow and empty.

We feel that the complexities of the present crowd us at every turn, and we are told that in order to keep up with these, we must adapt ourselves to new lines of thought and action. If this be true let us at least believe in the great truth that simplicity is a condition of the mind which should not be crushed with externals, that moral fibre counts for more than money and pleasure. We need to cultivate the tender side of our nature, to believe in good men and pure women, to search and find them. Many of us remember, years ago, a North Carolina drummer boy who, ignorant and unsophisticated, came among us as a Quaker preacher. This Rufus King, by his simplicity, appealed to English Friends and to us as many cultured speakers could not. But he felt our reserve for he said, "When I talk to an audience in the South, the floor is wet with their tears; when I say the same words in the North, you are as hard as a rock."

Therefore, I urge the determination to pray for "the patience of hope," to be governed by our admirations rather than by our aversions, to drink in all the beauties of earth, sea and sky, to let the spirit of childhood animate us even when "years bring the philosophic mind." Let us reverence Hope—let us treat her as did a good Monk, who in his regard for women, however poor and aged, would step aside with his bare feet among thorns, to let these sisters pass, saying that he thus paid homage to the Mother of his Saviour.

And this faith in our fellows will inspire us to cherish the best that is in them, whether they be nations or individuals.

I believe that, as Friends, we still have a far-reaching message to the world concerning Simplicity—if it predominates, it will enable us to offer the other truths that have been committed to us. There were two ministers who discussed their hold on the people. One said, "my words seem fruitless, I am received with indifference, while you are welcomed. How is it?" "Oh, brother," answered the other, "it must be that I preach the blessings of the Gospel, and you confine yourself to denunciation of evil. Let us hold out a hope of salvation."

The simple-hearted Friend is not extinct among us—rather may his tribe increase. His face tells of victory over sin—his words are weighty, his walk circumspect, but he does not hold us at arms' length. He differs from David Newport, whose memorial was read at a recent Yearly Meeting, and he extolled by the Press as "A Pioneer in Higher Criticism." "If this is the most that can be said of a man, then Quakerism is dying. No Friends! we need the simple truths of the Bible without censure and in their entirety. If we begin to pick flaws in it and to accept only what we can understand, we are laying the foundation of skepticism, and 'it were good for us if we had never been born.' The "old time religion" is a precious treasure not to be thrown away. "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith and heirs of the Kingdom which he hath promised to those that love Him?" and do we not find among the lowly folk a response, a grasp of Christianity, which is often lacking in high intellects? But when the scholar, by his reverent study, can combine faith and works, when he is rooted and grounded himself as a follower of Christ, what a power for good does he become. He does not unsettle men and leave them to grope in the dark, he can say with Paul, "I know in Whom I have believed."

And now let us consider simplicity in the home, that nucleus from which our life springs. A woman may be a good housekeeper and yet not a home-maker. She may have so many rules and regulations, so much bric-a-brac, frills and curtains that the blessed sunlight is shut out and the greenness, the beauty, hidden. Every window should afford us a moving picture, "the cloud that sails with rest in motion," the rippling waves of wheat, the flight of birds, the leisurely cattle, or if we be in the city, the tide of humanity has an interest of its own. It is this effort to get back to nature that calls many of us to camp life where we learn the joy of primitive ways. No furniture to dust, no quarrel with insects, no committees to meet, no trains to catch, no factory whistles to waken us, no thought of toil. If we are thus blessed, cannot we carry back a store of leisure to help us through the coming days? Or, if our lot be one long stretch without vacation, can we not make the best of out-door life at home? "The exhilarating walk is far better than any automobile ride," says our dear friend Herbert Welsh, and he at the age of fifty-nine is able to walk twenty miles a day in his swinging elastic gait, and to impart his earnest spirit to his friends. I can see good reason for city folk taking up golf as recreation, but it is not to be compared with work in the garden—how can chasing a ball be better than making plants grow and blossom and bear fruit, up-rooting noxious weeds and putting in their place a rose or a vine? It is just here we can inspire children with a love of gardening, that may determine their future career, not allowing the city to lure them, for they have caught the delight of agriculture.

The Vacant Lot Association appeals to the simple European peasant when he comes to our cities, and in a quarter-acre lent him he raises vegetables for his family; but our American workman rejects the thought—he finds the Trades Union more easy and congenial. The endeavor to beautify the pitiful little back yards is encouraging; one man tells how he planted a pumpkin vine that covered his kitchen doorway and had eleven great golden globes on it in the autumn. Many magazines and books on country life show our growing interest in the hearty work of the farmer. There is one point that I would emphasize, and that is ventilation. Not only do we find close fetid air in the poor man's house—it impresses one on entering many a handsome parlor, every window and door shut, cooking and tobacco fumes unable to get out, and the inmates with sallow faces, "enjoying ill health," regarding it as coming from Providence, whereas air and sunlight and exercise would cure them.

The slow methods of travel in our grandfather's day seem irksome to us, and yet they had a charm of their own—the canal boat giving leisure to enjoy the landscape as the horses walk on the towpath. No, this is not our idea of pleasure. We "must rush to Europe even if we sink on" a Titanic."

In the South my father met an old Friend who felt it right to drive oxen when he went to meeting, four miles distant—he certainly escaped the awful sensation that remains with the man who "speeding his 'auto'" on the highway, kills a pedestrian, and ever after has a sense of blood-guiltiness haunting him day and night. It is the abuse of his machine not its use that I deplore, the endeavor to own one when our circumstances do not permit it, the sacrifice of home necessities, the inability to give to charitable affairs, because of the garage and its contents, a constant drain on our resources.

All this is artificial, a product of over-civilization, and when our children are brought up to admire this side of life, we are losing the sweetness of simplicity; we are inculcating a style of living that will hamper them, they are afraid to marry because they cannot afford it, they are not taught to be brave enough to live in a cottage and to start at the foot of the ladder. You may say this does not apply to us as Friends, we are careful in these matters. Yes, I believe we are, and yet we are changing, we are adopting new ways, new outlooks, some good, some questionable, and we need to stir up the pure mind in each other by way of remembrance. It is the over-civilization that weighs us down—the amount of unnecessary work thus entailed. An elderly missionary who had braved the perils of wild beasts and savages in Central Africa, came home hoping to end her days peacefully, hardly had she been in Philadelphia a week at the house of a wealthy woman, when she slipped on the polished floor at the head of the stairs, and died in a few hours; surely such uncertain footing is a trap and a nuisance.

Simplicity of speech means truth-telling; people expect Friends to say "thee and thou" and are disappointed when we drop them, afraid to show our colors. Then, too, there is a love of slang and exaggeration that hurts the standing of our young folk. When Wu Ling Fang was here, a college art patronizingly said to him, "You speak English nearly as well as I." Yes, madame, better than you," was his answer. "I have the English of Oxford, you talk like a native of the slums."

I was asked last month to a dinner of one hundred club women and to speak to them briefly—choosing my own subject, so with some misgivings I took up the matter of simplicity in our clothing and was surprised at their approval. I told of several dear Episcopal neighbors, who by their adherence to this rule have a much larger place in their church and with the poor around them. I mentioned the concern expressed in our last Yearly Meeting, that we may all contribute our example to working sisters in our great cities, that unbecomingly articles be dropped in order that we may check the current of ugly fashions and "screaming colors," as Julia Ward Howe call them. A blessed liberty comes by adherence to a simple costume unchanging year by year. As a child I tried to look like other, but my father was wiser, he preferred the bonnet, and I have grown to love it and to thank him for his guidance. Too often our obedient parents let the children lead in this matter, and when it is too late they call a halt, "the world and the things of the world" have stripped them tight.

There is however a tender spot in every heart, and if by the wearing of plain, neat, but good and down we can win the hearts of those that are permanently we will gain far more than we lose. A woman in one of our daily papers tells of a young girl in Philadelphia who took her own life because her coming to school that week wore insufficient to enable her to pay for the privilege. Oh, the pity of it, that any woman should die from the pressure of her appearance, her emulation in dress, her competition for the credit of spirit that would lead her into trouble, that at a time when of high ideal and unselfishness, she should prefer to let her own children, or other immortal being, who a part should be her ornament. The manufacturer, the store, and the heart and the die, and the life, to the everlasting rule of our parent, that then his own may be brisk, and so the whirl goes on. Let us be glad that sense is coming to the rescue, and that we see here and there a breaking of this bondage.

Two hundred years ago men were weighed down with plumes, ruffles, laces, jewelry and ringlets. They came out of all this and adopted a sensible costume in which utility and comfort are combined. Cannot women clothe themselves in like manner? I do not advocate our wearing masculine garments, but if we can get serviceable materials, neatly and tastefully fitted, requiring no alterations, we shall have more time for what is worth while, thus adding to our happiness and that of the world around us.

And now what is Westtown doing to build up proper standards of simplicity in the many phases of life? The boy with his hands in his pockets requiring servants to wait on him, the girl in the rocking chair, knowing little of domestic science, will not be leaders. Such heroes as Gladstone, the statesman, wielding his axe; Charles Wagner, the French Protestant pastor, swinging his scythe; John Bright at the loom in his boyhood, are men to be admired. A sense of loyalty to home develops loyalty to the school. The knowing how to work combined with a love of it makes men and women that count in the world some day. "How can I help?" is their cry.

"Let not their cultured years make less
The childhood charm of tenderness,
But let them feel as well as know,
Nor harder with their polish grow;
Unmoved by sentimental grief
That waits along some printed leaf,
But prompt with kindly word and deed
To own the claims of those who need."

Westtown is a little world in itself, reflecting the many homes which send students hither. When "plain living and high thinking" have been the animus of these young people from the cradle they bring a priceless contribution of it to the old school.

Aristocracy fades out, true democracy grows, the teachers take fresh heart, because self-government begins early and becomes permanent. We are sure that every year young men and women are going out equipped not only with knowledge but with a measure of heavenly wisdom.

Thus simplicity of thought, of expression, of home life, of recreation, of religion, becomes a sparkling jewel which has no need for the spirit of heaviness, but which clasps "the garment of praise." "The wearer of this finds that the holiness of beauty is good, and that it is a result of the beauty of holiness."

Selected for "THE FRIEND."

SARAH LYNES GRUBB'S TESTIMONY.—At the Yearly Meeting in London, in 1820, Sarah Grubb addressed the meeting at some length. She told us she hoped the Lord would give us wherewith to bear with what she was about to say; it was a burden that had pressed her sore by night, and that now the time had come for her to leave it amongst us. She then proceeded to say that we were now, as a Society, more and more mingling, mingling with the people; that we are now employing ourselves in what are called charitable pursuits, benevolent purposes, but she believed this was very much the work of the crooked serpent; that by these means he is slowly undermining the pure seed. This, she told us, she said not from outward observation, but her spiritual eye had clearly seen it.

She had seen the serpent which first beguiled Eve, dressed in fair colors, and that we might notice in our pocket-books, if we pleased, that what she now said would come to pass, if we did not trace our steps back again; that by degrees we should be so mingled with the people that we should think there was no occasion for this query, or that query and that the other might be a little altered, so that by and by we should think there was no occasion for any discipline at all.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

FARMER JOHN.

Home from his journey, farmer John
Arrived this morning, safe and sound.
His black coat off, and his old coat on,
"Now I'm myself," says farmer John;

And he thinks, "I'll look around;"
Up leaps the dog, "Get down, you pup!
Are you so glad you would eat me up?"
The old cow lows at the gate to meet him,
"Well, well, old Bay,
Ha, ha, old Gray,
Did you get good feed while I was away?"

"You have not a rib," says farmer John,
"The cattle are looking sleek;
The colt is going to be a roan,
And a beauty, too; how he has grown!
We'll wean the calf next week."
Says farmer John, "When I've been off,
To call you again about the trough,
And watch you, and pat you while you drink,
It's a greater comfort than you can think!"
And he pats old Bay,
And he slaps old Gray,
"Ah, this is the comfort of going away!"

"For after all," says farmer John,
"The best of a journey is getting home;
I've seen great sights, but would I give
This spot, and the peaceful life I've,
For all their Paris and Rome?"
"These hills, for the city's stifled air,
And big hotels, all bustle and glare,
Land all houses, and roads all stones
That deafen your ears, and batter your bones?
Would you, old Bay?
Would you, old Gray?
That's what one gets by going away."

"There money is king," says farmer John,
"And Fashion is queen; and it's mighty queer
To see how sometimes, while the man
Raking and scraping all he can,
The wife spends every year
Enough you would think for a score of wives
To keep them in luxury all their lives!
The town is a perfect Babylon
To a quiet chap"—says farmer John,
"You see, old Gray,
You see, old Bay,
I'm wiser than when I went away."

"I've found out this," says farmer John,
"That happiness is not bought and sold
And clutched in a life of waste and hurry,
In nights of pleasure, and days of worry;
And wealth isn't all in gold,
Mortgage and stocks and ten per cent.,
But in simple ways, and sweet content,
Few wants, pure hopes and noble ends,
Some land to till, and a few good friends,
Like you, old Bay,
And you, old Gray,
That's what I've learned by going away."

And a happy man is farmer John,
O, a rich and happy man is he;
He sees the peas and pumpkins growing,
The corn in tassel; the buckwheat blowing,
And fruit on vine and tree;
The large, kind oxen, look their thanks,

As he rubs their foreheads and strokes their flanks;
The doves light 'round him, and strut and coo,
Says farmer John, "I'll take you too,
And you, old Bay,
And you, old Gray,
Next time I travel so far away."

—J. T. TROWBRIDGE.

"GOVERNOR, STOP PAPA DRINKING."—A Child's Pathetic Letter Touches the Heart of Oregon Executive.—A Salem, Oregon, despatch says:

The faith of a little girl in the power of the Governor to make everybody stop selling her papa "drink" so her mamma will have money with which to buy clothes is graphically portrayed in a letter received by Governor West from a little girl living in a small Oregon coast town. The Governor is making an investigation. The letter says:

"Mr. West, Dear Governor:
"I am a little girl, twelve years old, and I have read the newspapers and seen that you are trying to make people do what is right. I have two little brothers and one little sister. My papa is a hard-working man, and he is not very well, but what I am trying to tell you is that oftentimes he gives the hotels for drink what we need at home, oh, so bad, and they sell it to him on Sunday, too, and it makes us all so unhappy. My dear mamma cannot go to church. She has no clothes to wear like she used to have. Oh, I wish you could do something for us. He is often so cross to my mother.

"I tried hard to earn enough to buy my mother some clothes. It is such hard work to earn money when you are so small. Now, please, don't tell anyone I write this, as my mother would not like me to do it. She will not let me speak to her about papa drinking. She says it makes me to dislike him, and she wants us to love him."—Lancaster New Era.

HE'LL DO.—"He'll do," said a gentleman, decisively, speaking of an office boy who had been in his employ but a single day.

"What makes you think so?"
"Because he gives himself up so entirely to the task in hand. I watched him while he swept the office, and although a procession with three or four brass bands went by the office while he was at work, he paid no attention to it, but swept on as if the sweeping of that room was the only thing of any consequence on this earth at that time. Then I set him to addressing some envelopes, and he stuck at it until the last one of them was done. He'll do, because he is thorough and in dead earnest about everything."

You may naturally be a very smart person; you may be so gifted that you can do almost anything, but all that you do will lack perfection if you do not do it with all your heart and strength.—Christian Endeavor.

A PECULIAR WAY TO COAST.—It seemed odd to think that coasting is possible in the tropics, for when this sport is mentioned one invariably thinks of snow. But it is a fact that coasting affords great amusement to the natives of some of the tropical regions.

They build long sleds, and also choose steep hills just as we do, but for their course they have, instead of snow, dry grass, which grows there abundantly. Stones also are used in the building of the course, which must cost a great deal of labor, but the enjoyment derived from them amply repays for the trouble.

It is an amusing sight to see the natives on their sleds, only about six inches wide, three inches deep and twelve feet long, speed down the course, and go quite a surprising distance across the plain.—The Comrade.

Is it fair always to forget all the good or kindness shown to us by those with whom we live, for the sake of one little pain they may have caused us, and which, most likely, was quite unintentional on their part?—From Gold Dust.

miles of the sending station. The rate of postage on parcels exceeding four ounces will be five cents for the first pound and one cent for each additional two pounds or fraction thereof when intended for local delivery, and five cents for the first pound and one cent for each additional pound or fraction thereof when intended for delivery at the first and second zones.

The working hours of women in Pennsylvania have been reduced from 60 to 54 a week, with not more than 10 hours in any day, by a bill just approved by Gov. Tener. No female under 21 years will be allowed to work all night in a manufacturing establishment.

Jane Addams of Chicago lately addressed a meeting of the National Council of Women Voters, representing about 4,000,000 feminine voters in several Western States. Urging the need for universal woman's suffrage, she declared that women should have the franchise not only to bring about intelligent humanitarian legislation, but in order to be in a position to follow it into intelligent enforcement.

A despatch from Washington of the 11th says: "Americans continue to be the greatest consumers of sugar in the world, a fact set forth in figures issued to-day by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. In the fiscal year of 1913 the United States devoured or otherwise used approximately eight billion pounds of sugar, an amount never disposed of before in any twelve months. Of this, fully one-half was imported from foreign countries, one-fourth came from the nation's island possessions and the remainder was produced at home."

Minnesota has a new law that is intended to dispense with the unanimous jury verdict. It provides that after deliberating twelve hours, a verdict may be brought in by five-sixths of the jurors; that is, in a 12-man jury 10 will be sufficient to decide a case.

Crop losses aggregating millions of dollars were reported as the result of the abnormal temperatures in Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma, a maximum of 110 being registered at one place in Kansas, and the average being above 100. Hundreds of persons sent letters to the Governor of Kansas asking him to issue a proclamation calling for a day of prayer for rain. Much suffering from heat and drought were reported in Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma, and the hot wave extended to Nebraska.

Dr. D. A. Ramsey, chief of the Inspection Division of the Bureau of Animal Industry, said that a crisis in the meat supply has been hastened by the great drought in the Southwest and South Central States. The drought in the Middle West has been most serious. It means that Mexican cattle and the grass-fed cattle from the Southwest that heretofore have been driven to the Middle West fattening corrals will have no hay. Kansas appears to have lost fully 80 per cent. of its corn crop, while Missouri and Nebraska would lose 50 per cent. or more of their early promise. Iowa, while it has been touched by the drought, is not yet in real danger. It is stated that in Kansas hundreds of persons wrote to Governor Hodges asking him to issue a proclamation calling for a day of public prayer for rain.

FOREIGN.—A despatch of the 12th inst. from Ottawa, Ontario, says: "W. J. White, Dominion superintendent of an American immigration agency, who has just returned from a trip through the Canadian and American West, says that German-Americans are pouring into Canada. The most of them come from southern Pennsylvania, and quite a number from Missouri. Last year arrivals in Canada from the United States totaled 142,000."

A despatch from London of the 15th says: "Deep regret for the recent Balkan wars and hope for the permanency of the peace pact at Bucharest was the keynote of the King's speech of prorogation read by the Lord Chancellor at noon to-day adjourning the British Parliament. The body has been almost continuously in session for a year and a half, due to the Irish Home Rule bill and the lengthy debate on the same."

Despatches from China represent that fighting has continued in China. A despatch of the 14th says: "A reign of terror has begun in Canton. Pillage and rioting are in progress everywhere. Twelve hundred men were killed in the fighting yesterday."

The use of the banana for food is advocated. It is said improved refrigeration and quick steam service will continue to widen the area in which the product can be marketed, and besides its present use as a fruit, it will be used, as it now is in the tropics, where it is boiled as a green vegetable and manufactured into a confection known as banana figs. If present development continues it will raise the Caribbean region from its dependence on foreign markets for food to one of the regions from which an important part of the world's food supply will be drawn. The wheat fields of the Dakotas and Manitoba will meet, as one of their competitors in feeding the world, the banana plantations of the American Mediterranean.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 87.

The name of W. W. Binns was omitted in the list of payments sent by J. H. Downes, Agt., O., printed in No. 5; Thos. C. Hooge, Pa.; Frances B. McCullin, Phila.; Wm. Trimble, Pa.; Ruth Anna Sharpless, Pa.; Joseph Trimble, Pa., and for Ann Trimble; R. R. Hulme, Pa.; Mabel A. McKewen, N. J.; Mahlon Johnson, Agt., Ind., 88, for himself, Ada V. Stanton, Ashley Johnson and Eli Hadley; Rowland Evans, Pa., 84; B. V. Stawley, Agt., Ia., 84; for Abigail B. Mott, Edwin T. Heald, Barclay C. Dewees, James McGrew, Agt., Cal., Albert Beldell and Thomas H. Binns; Hannah W. Williams, Agt., Cal., 810, for Caleb T. Engle, Abigail Ward, Seneca L. Comfort, Hannah N. Hinshaw and Joseph F. Doudna; Wm. Bakkerston and for Geo. W. Bakkerston, Pa.; Walter S. Reeve, N. J., 84; John H. Ballinger, N. J.; Henry Standing, Ia., for Jesse F. Standing to 7, v. 88; Dorcas Gardner, N. Y., 84, for Elizabeth Gardner and Joel Haight; Margaret D. Melross, Scotland, 108; Henry W. Lewis, N. J., for Florence Clement; Malinda A. Thompson, Ia., and for Anna T. Tostenon; A. W. Stanley, Agt., Ind., 812, for Geo. W. Mendenhall, Chas. W. Jones, Caroline Blakeburn, Ezra Barker, Walter Barker and Ann Haworth; Wm. M. Parker, Pa.; Joseph Thomasson, Phila., and for Eunice Thomasson; David Roberts, N. J., and for Helen B. Roberts; Anna T. Griffith, Pa.; Eli H. Harvey, Pa.; Elisha Cook, N. Y.; Mary Anna L. Thomas, Pa.; Thos. P. Douglas, Fla.; Geo. P. Embree, Cal., to No. 27; Mary J. Joster, R. I., and for Amos O. Foster; Anna Potts, Phila.; J. Albin Thorp, Pa.; Thos. S. Downing, Pa.; Marianna Darnell, N. J., per Ezra E. Darnell; Walter P. Stokes, N. J., and for Edwin A. Russell, to 7 v. 88; Margaret J. Scott, Pa.; Joseph K. Evans, N. J.; Harriet K. Howell, Phila.

☛ Remittances received after Third-day noon will not appear in the receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

FRIENDS' SELECT SCHOOL, 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, Philadelphia, reopens Ninth Month 22, 1913. Catalogues and complete information may be had on application.

WALTER W. HAYLAND, Principal.

HADDONFIELD and SALEM QUARTERLY MEETING to be held at Medford, N. J., Ninth Month 11, 1913, at 10 o'clock. Special train leaves Philadelphia at 9 A. M., Camden, 9:09, stopping at Collingswood 9:19, Haddonfield 9:25, Springdale 9:33, Marlton 9:39, arriving at Medford 9:50 A. M. Returning by regular train leaving Medford 1:30 and 5:10 P. M.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK (Eighth Month 25th to 30th):

MONTHLY MEETINGS:—

Burlington and Bucks Quarterly Meeting, at Burlington, N. J., Third-day, Eighth Month 26th, at 10:30 A. M.
Chester, Pa., at Media, Pa., Second-day, Eighth Month 25th, at 10 A. M.
Philadelphia for Northern District, Sixth and Noble Streets, Third-day, Eighth Month 26th, at 10:30 A. M.
Concord, at Concornville, Pa., Third-day, Eighth Month 26th, at 9:30 A. M.
Woodbury, N. J., Third-day, Eighth Month 26th, at 8 P. M.
Salem, N. J., Fourth-day, Eighth Month 27th, at 10:30 A. M.
Abington, at Horsham, Pa., Fourth-day, Eighth Month 27th, at 10:15 A. M.
Birmingham, at West Chester, Pa., Fourth-day, Eighth Month 27th, at 10 A. M.
Philadelphia, Fourth and Arch Streets, Fifth-day, Eighth Month 28th, at 10:30 A. M.
Goshen, at Malvern, Pa., Fifth-day, Eighth Month 28th, at 10 A. M.
Lansdowne, Pa., Fifth-day, Eighth Month 28th, at 7:45 P. M.

DIED.—Seventh Month 14, 1913, at her residence, 129 Ellsworth Avenue, Salem, Ohio, RACHEL W. STRATTON, in the eighty-ninth year of her age; a member of Salem Monthly Meeting of Friends.

—, at his home, near Millville, Columbia Co., Pa., on the sixth of Eighth Month, 1913, GEORGE E. BECK, husband of Jane A. Beck, in the sixty-seventh year of his age; a member of Muncy Monthly Meeting of Friends.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, EIGHTH MONTH 28, 1913.

No. 9.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to

EDWIN P. SELLEW OR THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

IMPORTANCE OF MEETINGS FOR WORSHIP.

The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews presses the claims of Christ upon them in the language of their own ceremonial law and with special reference to their own worship in the sanctuary, first in the Tabernacle and later in the Temple. He points out to them the inefficiency of those typical observances, and establishes the fact of the fulfilment in Christ of the things typified: hence that the former—the temporary—are taken away, that the latter—the permanent—the eternal—may be established. Having shown that the Christians, more truly than the Jews, have all the essentials for worship—access to the "Holy of Holies" in the heavens thru the blood of Jesus (not of lamb or bullock), a Divine High Priest (not human) who has in his body rent the separating veil—he exhorts them to "draw near" and to enter into the very Divine Presence.

This immediate personal access, without the intervention of a human priesthood, must not, however, be allowed to destroy or interrupt the social or congregational features of religion and worship. Therefore the Christian Hebrews are desired to "consider one another to provoke into love and good works; not forsaking our own assembling together, as the custom of some is, but exhorting one another". Valuable as is the individual privilege, it is not a selfish one, but is something to be shared in common with other believers.

Closest worship is essential to the preservation and growth of the spiritual life of the individual. He who depends entirely upon public worship for his spiritual food and sustenance can hardly be expected to keep his soul alive, but is almost certain to wither away and die. At the same time it is equally evident that the life of the recluse is not the atmosphere in which the Christian character most rapidly develops, nor is it the condition in life best calculated to make men serviceable in spreading the Kingdom of Christ, by inducing others to accept his gracious reign in their hearts and lives. In our own interests, as well as in those of others, we need to "consider one another", "to provoke" one another to "love and good works, . . . exhorting one another": and for this we need the assembling together. The importance of the public gathering for the worship of our Lord needs to be particularly emphasized at the present time. The demands of business and the enticements of pleasure are increasingly insistent, pressing and alluring. It seems difficult to obey our Master's command, "Lay up for yourselves treasure in heaven", because of the strenuous effort to lay up treasure upon earth. Many, professing to be followers of "the Man of Sorrows", appear to be "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God". Religious obligations, if not entirely cast off and repudiated, are very slightly regarded by the multitude.

Spiritual life is dependent upon worship—Divine communion—and without it the Christian is cut off from the living vine—Christ the source of his life—and he dies. The desire for worship is one evidence of life. The result of communion with Christ—of abiding in the vine—must be to produce fruit-bearing branches. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit". Christ's religion requires both an experimental knowledge of Him, and a practical obedience of his commands. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them". Hence worship is only one part of Christianity; but it is the essential thing, on which the practice of the religious life depends. The inward current of spiritual life is that which produces the true fruit.

For a long time the writer has feared that the value and importance of meetings for worship were not fully realized by many Friends who are sincerely desirous of promoting the welfare of mankind. This desire has naturally led them into various philanthropic, educational, social and economic betterment schemes and labors, in the promotion of which they are expending no small amount of time and energy, sometimes and in some cases to the apparent loss of the meetings for worship. There is no need to call in question the sincerity, nor the devotion to what they regard as duty, of those who pursue this course; but it may be helpful to some to consider the propriety of it. The same subject has claimed the thought of some in England and various and conflicting views have found expression in The Friend (London). William Henry Berry, in the issue of the twenty-first of Third Month, wrote concerning the "Adult School" movement:

Founded by large-hearted and energetic Friends, the movement has received their best from them. On First-day mornings from one to two hours energetic attention is given by many Friends to the teaching and business of the schools. The meeting for worship follows, and the same members cannot be expected to bear witness with that freshness and zeal which had characterized them in the school, and such workers often utilize the time of the meeting to rest themselves. Hence the Adult School movement has largely grown, while the Society has almost stood still; in many other ways Friends have given of their best, to the neglect of the much more important meetings of the Society. I venture to think that, had the same attention and energy been directed to the upbuilding of our own meetings, the Yearly Meeting figures would have shown substantial increases. . . .

I deplore another tendency, largely the product of the present system, namely, the disinclination of the average adult scholar to attend a meeting for worship, either with Friends or any other body, though there are exceptions, of course. Now teaching, discussion, and debate are not worship; and nothing will ever give to the soul its most needed provision in these strenuous days but waiting upon the Lord. If the Adult Schools are not producing a type of man in whom the desire for worship steadily but surely grows, then they are missing a very important side of their mission.

That others besides Friends are feeling that outside activities may rob the church of her distinctively religious character is frequently disclosed in the public utterances and writings of ministers of different denominations. One of our religious exchanges recently contained the following, credited to E. W. Lewis, pastor of the King's Highway House Chapel:

The Church is, at the moment, deeply involved in these governmental, political, social questions; but to give you a whole view of the situation, I must add that there is a growing feeling that these, and similar entanglements in "affairs" dissipate a good deal of energy which should be concentrated on the generation and communication of spiritual power. There is a possibility of the church ceasing to be a social sanctuary. The ripples of outside conflicts and controversies are apt to vibrate disturbingly within the shrine. It is seriously thought by many that while we are full of good works, our prayer and worship and devotional life is losing much of its vitality. We are concerned about many things. Mary is distracted by the bustle which Martha makes in the house. The Church is being asked continually to make ex cathedra pronouncements upon public questions; sermons ad hoc, for example, in respect of the white slave traffic, or woman suffrage, or Putnam's scandals, are called for by earnest reformers; at the time of industrial strikes the question rings through the press, "What are the churches doing?" reform movements attempt to capture the churches for the purposes of their propaganda, and not without success altogether, since many seem to think it a useful and wise thing to "play up" to the workman; so that the Church tends more and more to become a mere adjunct to social organization.

E. P. S.

For "THE FRIEND."

THE OPPORTUNE TIME.

Once I was talking with a friend of mine named Knight, in London, on the necessity of obeying the Holy Spirit's impressions immediately, and he said that he once felt so strongly impressed that it was right for him to give a large sum of money, although at that time he was a poor man, that he consulted his family about it at breakfast. They being willing, he told a few of the young men that he would give $1,000 toward the erection of a First-day School building, and also ten per cent. on all that they could collect, thinking it would take them about five years to get the funds, $12,000. They returned in a few days and said they had the money. It seemed they called on a member of the firm of Peak, Freen & Co., the biscuit makers, and explained the matter to him in a few words. He said naught, but left the room. In a very few moments he returned and said his wife and himself would give $5,000 toward it. With this help they quickly made up the balance of the sum.

It seemed this was the anniversary of their wedding day, and they were discussing giving $5,000 at the time the boys called to one of the main hospitals in London. The only objection to giving it was that their names were to be put up at the head of the free bed, but they wanted it given to the Lord. They looked upon it as providential that the boys called just then, and quickly gave it to the meeting-house instead. God knows just the time to impress upon his children the doing of things.

JOHN B. WOOD.

314 1/2 PINE STREET, CINCINNATI, O., SEVENTH MONTH 28, 1913.

It often occurs that that which is before thee, following right from the Lord, is soon to be called by, without allowing anything else to stand in the way. I remember the Divine part sure, if you should be bound to give it back immediately; if thou holdest to this, expecting nothing to come, nothing, but satisfied with thy present activity according to nature, and with heroic truth in every word and sound which thou utterest, thou wilt live happy. And there is no man who is able to prevent this.

—MARCUS ALBERTS.

EXTRACTS FROM DIARIES AND LETTERS OF RICHARD B. BROCKBANK.

(Continued from page 88.)

20-4-1868.—(After losing all his money in Overend & Gurney failure.) I am very thankful to be thus in a position notwithstanding my heavy losses to pay every one, and to leave a competency for my wife and family. And may I never forget the great mercy of the Lord to me through all this trial, and the constant faith which He has given me through all that in his own time and way He would give me sufficient for all my need. In humble, grateful thankfulness may I ever be found putting my whole trust in Him Who has been and is my alone helper. Having then full faith in his mercy in Christ Jesus as a propitiation for all my sins that are past (without which I could not so much as hope), oh that my whole life may be fully bent to his yoke, and in simple obedience I may be found serving Him in the way of his requiring.

14-6-1868.—On Fifth-day last attended Colthouse Meeting, where we have been staying a few weeks. Soon after the meeting gathered the language, "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness" was present with me in a way that felt as though I ought to express it by way of ministry. Not giving up thereto from a feeling of my own unsuitableness and many shortcomings, I did [then] earnestly cry unto the Lord to preserve me from doing any harm in his vineyard by anything of my own, and that if it was his Holy Will that I should step into this awful service, that it might be in full dependence on Him above.

Our dear friend Elizabeth Robson stood up and spoke very closely to my state, and I believe she was enabled to keep very near to the guidance of the Divine Master, and as tender, nursing mother to cherish the lowly seed, so that I was enabled to rejoice in the belief that the Lord was again making bare his arm for my salvation. And although I feel that it will not do for me to keep back anything which is required at my hand, I was much encouraged by the evidence that I had that she was so led on my behalf. She said that submission to the Divine Will was a great point gained, that it did not do to hold back through fear of consequences, that the language, "Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief" was descriptive of such a state. Did not our Saviour know all our states? Was He not best able to judge of our or of thy state, and shewing that it was best to trust Him fully and He would do all. I felt best satisfied after meeting to say to her, "Lord, I believe, help Thou mine unbelief." She said she had felt near sympathy with me in meeting and though she had not much to say now, she believed that we both desired to serve the same Divine Master.

This First-day morning I attended Moorhouse Meeting, my dear wife and family being still at Colthouse.

A few words seemed to dwell with me, "Wait thou only upon God," and although there is so much that might be said in connection therewith it did not seem my place to add anything to them then. On sitting down my mind was very closely gathered into stillness before the Lord and strength was felt to approach very near to the throne of his mercy in desire, that whatever service it might please Him to call for from me He would give me ability to perform, and again were my prayers put up that nothing of my own might interfere with or mar his work in me and through me.

A few words in E. Robson's communication above referred to reminded me that many matters which had given me much concern in temporal affairs had been arranged satisfactorily. I do not remember the exact words, but that they applied themselves very closely to my case in my mind at the time, and seemed to convey the assurance that these matters would not be permitted to mar the work or bring any slur on the cause so dear to my heart, which is a very great relief to my mind. Truly, "Hitherto has the Lord helped me."

At our Quarterly Meeting at Wigton in Sixth Month, 1868, our dear friend, Joseph Pease, was present, and spoke very sweetly on "The Lord is in his holy temple, let all the earth keep silence before him," enlarging very beautifully on the temple being the Church built up of lively stones compacted together by that which every joint supplieth. When he sat down I informed the meeting that previous to our dear friend speaking my mind had been introduced into the same feeling and how much I desired that we might all become living members of the church, uniting in that living worship which was conveyed in the text. They were a few simple words, but in mercy the reward of peace was graciously vouchsafed.

Since then a few words have been given me with strength to utter them at Carlisle and Moorhouse.

20-10-1868.—I may here record that it has been a great comfort to me to attend as regularly as possible our Fifth-day morning meeting at Carlisle, and that with the exception of one day I have not missed for many months.

This morning our dear friend Edward Brewin was here. It was a much favored meeting and my mouth was opened in a few words of praise. It was a heavenly meeting. The power of God was over all.

6-11-1868.—Afterwards E. Brewin visited the remainder of small meetings about Carlisle, and on First-day I was with him and R. Doey at Solport where we had a good-sized meeting in the morning. On Fourth-day last he had a meeting at Burgh for the villagers in our kitchen and I have again to record a favored time. Praised forever be the Lord! We got a few forms for the large kitchen and we soon found that we were to have it full, after it the small kitchen in which twenty-six were packed very closely, then in the passage by the dairy door there were some, and in the east passage also. It was thought there were one hundred and twenty present. I never remember sitting a quieter meeting, the stillness was very remarkable and the covering of Divine love was felt to be over us. I felt very thankful and very peaceful afterwards, which I account a rich blessing.

Both in this and in the Public Meeting at Moorhouse held a few days back I had a few words to say. I feel that I am bound to this service, and many are my prayers that I may neither go before nor lag behind so as to mar the Lord's work. Preserve me, O Lord, in thy precious life.

My dear sister, H. T., was at Moorhouse one First-day morning a few weeks back. She said, "My presence shall go up with thee." I felt this to be precious language to me.

Since Sixth Month Quarterly Meeting our dear friend, Edith Griffith and her husband have visited this Monthly Meeting and had a public meeting at Moorhouse, a favored time. Nancy Ritson was there and much enjoyed it. Also Godfrey Woodhead, who had a very sweet meeting also. Thus we are cared for by Him who "blesseth the provision of Zion and satisfieth her poor with bread."

E. Brewin is desirous of having a few more meetings at the villages in our district in which I have near unity with him, and hope to help him to carry out.

20-12-1868.—Since writing the above I seem to have left too long a gap. Dear E. Brewin had meetings Eleventh Month 18th at Port Carlisle, 16th at Beumont, 20th at Glasson, 22nd Orton and our meeting in the morning, 23rd Thurston, 24th at Oughterly, 25th at Baldwinholm, 27th at Hingland, 28th Little Bampton and on the 20th at Moorhouse, at 10.30 A. M. and 6 P. M., both of which were favored meetings. In the evening the company was very large, filling the meeting-house, ministers' gallery and all; some said 300. I do not know, I did not count them. The Friends present were E. B., Josiah and H. T. and their two children, M. and T. and myself. It was a favored meeting. My dear sister's voice and mine were raised as well as E. B.'s. A few words have been my portion in many of these meetings, and all in mercy I have to record, "hitherto has the Lord helped me." A fear attends my mind lest I should do anything in this awful work of myself, and cries for preservation herein are often raised in my secret soul unto God. I feel that if He does not preserve me and keep me, vain is the help of man. And now near the end of this year 1868, wherein my mouth has more publicly been opened in the assemblies of the Lord's people to speak for Him, I do record my earnest desires for preservation on the right hand and on the left, and that He will guide me with his eye.

2-12-1868.—A sudden death, W. T. removed in a moment, Twelfth Month 11, 1868, just a gasp, not a word or a struggle. Many in this village have felt it a solemn warning. There seems to be a shaking going on in some hearts and a good work in some others. May the "Lord alone be exalted in that day." May they be brought near to Him and feel the heartsearching power of his holy presence by his Spirit in their hearts, then truly nothing will satisfy them but the fulness of his love in Christ.

3-5-1869.—Much has passed since my last. In our own little district Robert Doey had two meetings, one in my hay-room at the Hill, the other at Moorhouse, both largely attended.

Since then a wish has been expressed, first by dear old Jane Percival, that I would open the room for a meeting on First-day afternoons at three. Much as I would rejoice to see my neighbors meet thus to worship God, I felt a great fear that any should come there looking to me or indeed to us as a Society to provide anything for them. On the other hand, we profess and believe that "where two or three are gathered together in my name, there I am in the midst of them," and have expressed our desire that in every village serious-minded people would meet together in great simplicity and wait upon the Lord, so that when it was put in this way, that there were those who would be content to sit down before the Lord after the manner of Friends, depending wholly upon Him, I felt that it did not become me to throw any impediment in the way. I did not invite any but left it to those dear women who said that the want was felt. And though it was only decided on Sixth-day Meeting to have the first meeting yesterday, we had about sixty present.

H. Scott told me on Seventh-day, without being aware of the above meeting, that he was looking to sitting with us at Moorhouse that First-day morning. He did so, and came on to Burgh and attended our first meeting.

5-7-1869.—Second-day Morning.—The afternoon meeting in my hay-room has been regularly held on First-day afternoons at three since the above was written.

Robert Doey has attended one and H. Scott another, and on the Sixth-day evening after our two meetings, they and E. Brewin attended a public meeting in the same room. Indeed, I may record with thankfulness that, although I have gone in much weakness often and known deep wadings of soul, both in these meetings and in reference to them, I have felt that our trust must be on the Lord alone, and that He has been pleased in his great mercy to overshadow us with his presence and graciously to give us times of refreshing therefrom.

N. R. said a few words on First-day week. "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the Power of God unto salvation; to the Jew first and also to the Gentile," which was a great comfort to me. I feel a great jealousy of anything like the one man system, and as I had often had a few words of expression or of supplication, there was some danger of it being thought to be my meeting. But the Lord is very condescending in his love and mercy wherein He leadeth his flock. Yesterday N. R. appeared very sweetly in supplication before anything had been said. I had a few words after in expression and thanksgiving and prayer; it was a favored meeting, as indeed they all have been. The number who have come has varied from thirty to forty, and sometimes even more.

Mary Wilson was there yesterday; her daughter's illness and removal seems to have been the means of drawing her near in thankfulness.

Yesterday evening I called on N. R. after tea and found Jane P. and M. B. We had a very solemn gathering season before the Lord. Dear M. B. for the first time in my hearing knelt down and poured out her heart before the Lord. N. R. also previously and then myself in very gratitude and praise.

balconies, there was a depressing air of desolation about it, and no signs of life were visible. My porter finally succeeded in drawing out from some recess on the ground floor of the hotel the present proprietor and a young man, presumably his son, both unfamiliar to me. Asking if I could be served with a meal—my mid-day one had been at or before twelve o'clock—I was answered in the negative, but told that I might have a room for the night. The place had ceased to be a hotel, as I afterwards learned, its former prosperity having been sapped by the advent of pensions, and was now only a lodging-house, frequented to some extent by Italian military officers. Pricked to vigorous and unexpected action by the necessities of the situation, I resolved to make a bold attempt to get a carriage, and to reach Bobbio—eight kilometres distant—at the head of the valley, that night. I sent my porter in search of one and succeeded. Trunks and traps were magically stowed away in the diminutive vehicle, and my Italian driver, with his one lean but persistent horse, made his way up the valley, and by ten o'clock that night succeeded in placing me at the old presbytery, within the kindly care of my host and hostess, B. Gardiol and his faithful, intelligent wife and co-worker.

And here I must for the time say farewell to those patient readers who have been willing to follow me thus far. I trust they are not quite so tired from the effort of reading my letter as I was that night from my journey, but may be willing to consider what I may have to say in a subsequent letter, or letters, concerning observations of more than a fortnight passed at Bobbio, and in this and neighboring valleys. The questions that have come up in my mind through this experience have, as I believe, far more than a local interest—they have a positive bearing on some important phases of human welfare and progress.

Le Presbytere, Bobbio Pellice, Province di Torind, Italia.
Seventh Month 21, 1913.

For "THE FRIEND."

WILLIAM PENN'S TESTIMONY CONCERNING GEORGE FOX.

EDWARD T. BINNS.

Among all the writings of Friends which have come down to us from the seventeenth century, there is probably not a more striking composition than William Penn's testimony of George Fox. The fact of its having come from the pen of the founder of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania is enough to attach to it special attractiveness to Friends. Its particular value, however, is the fulness and forcefulness of its expression and the very soundness of its ring. A type of character is portrayed which is as well worthy of emulation to-day as it was two hundred and fifty years ago.

In the distribution of destinies our early Friends were born to live in the seventeenth and we in the twentieth century. It seems natural that we should claim this last age as the ripest and most fully rounded one of all. It may be true that lives must be lived on a different scale in some respects. This life, methinks, would not only well befit this age but be a shining adornment to it.

The following portion of this Testimony is offered for publication in THE FRIEND:

"He was a man that God endued with a clear and wonderful depth, a discernor of others' spirits, and very much a master of his own; and though the side of his understanding which lay next to the world, and especially the expression of it, might sound uncouth and unfashionable to nice ears, his matter was nevertheless very profound, and would not only bear to be often considered, but the more it was so the more weighty and instructing it appeared. And as abruptly and brokenly as sometimes his sentences would fall from him about Divine things, it is well known they were often as texts to many fairer declarations. And indeed it showed beyond all contradiction that God sent him, that no arts or parts had any share in his matter or manner of his ministry; and that so many great, excellent, and necessary truths as he came forth to preach to mankind had therefore nothing of man's wit or wisdom to recommend them. So that as to man he was an original, being no man's copy. And his ministry and writings show they are from one that was not taught of man, nor had learned what he said by study. Nor were they notional or speculative, but sensible and practical truths, tending to conversion and regeneration and the setting up the kingdom of God in the hearts of men, and the way of it was his work. So that I have many times been overcome in myself, and been made to say with my Lord and Master upon the like occasion, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent of this world and revealed them to babes. For many times hath my soul bowed in a humble thankfulness to the Lord that He did not choose any of the wise and learned of this world to be the first messenger in our age of his blessed truth to men; but that he took one that was not of high degree, or elegant speech, or learned after the way of this world, that his message and work He sent him to do might come with less suspicion or jealousy of human wisdom and interest, and with more force and clearness upon the consciences of those that sincerely sought the way of truth in the love of it.

"He had an extraordinary gift in opening the Scriptures. He would go to the marrow of things, and show the mind, harmony, and fulfilling of them with much plainness, and to great comfort and edification.

"But above all, he excelled in prayer. The inwardness and weight of his spirit, the reverence and solemnity of his address and behaviour, and the fewness and fulness of his words have often struck even strangers with admiration, as they used to reach others with consolation. The most awful, living, reverent frame I ever felt or beheld, I must say, was his in prayer. And truly it was a testimony he knew and lived nearer to the Lord than other men; for they that know him most will see most reason to approach him with reverence and fear.

"He was of an innocent life, no busy-body nor self-seeker, neither touchy nor critical; what fell from him was very inoffensive, if not very edifying. So meek, contented, modest, easy, steady, tender, it was a pleasure to be in his company. He exercised no authority but over evil, and that everywhere and in all, but with love, compassion, and long suffering. A most merciful man, as ready to forgive as unapt to take or give an offence. Thousands can truly say he was of an excellent spirit and savour among them, and because thereof the most excellent spirits loved him with an unfeigned and unfading love.

"Though God had visibly clothed him with a Divine preference and authority, and indeed his very presence expressed a religious majesty, yet he never abused it, but held his place in the Church of God with great meekness, and a most engaging humility and moderation. For upon all occasions, like his blessed Master, he was a servant to all; holding and exercising his eldership in the Invisible Power that had gathered them, with reference to the head and care over the body; and was received only in that spirit and power of Christ, as the first and chief elder in this age; who, as he was therefore worthy of double honor, so for the same reason it was given by the faithful of this day; because his authority was inward and not outward; and that he got it and kept it by the love of God and power of an endless life. I write my knowledge and not report, and my witness is true, having been with him for weeks and months together on divers occasions, and those of the nearest and most exercising nature, and that by night and by day, by sea and by land, in this and in foreign countries, and I can say I never saw him out of his place, or not a match for every service or occasion.

"For in all things he acquitted himself like a man, yea, a strong man, a new and heavenly-minded man. A divine and a naturalist, and all of God Almighty's making. I have been surprised at his questions and answers in natural things; that whilst he was ignorant of useless and sophistical science, he had in him the foundation of useful and commendable knowledge, and cherished it everywhere. Civil, beyond all forms of breeding, in his behaviour. Very temperate, eating little and sleeping less, though a bulky person.

"Thus he lived and sojourned among us, and as he lived so he died, feeling the same Eternal Power that had raised and preserved him in his last moments."

TEMPERANCE.

A department edited by BENJAMIN F. WITSON, of Moylan, Pa., on behalf of the Friends' Temperance Association of Philadelphia.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.—Only a page a month and five or more periodicals to cull from! It might seem a very simple task indeed that is laid upon the editor of this department of THE FRIEND. And yet after hours of reading, and some reflection, his desire to present something "suitable" and helpful seems far from being satisfied. Perhaps a review of the effort might prove instructive to some. In the American Review of Reviews for Seventh Month will be found a thoroughly wholesome and "up-to-date" essay by Ferdinand Oswald Lehart on "The Campaign Against the Saloon." It asserts that the common belief that "Germany drinks more beer than any other nation" is a mistake. "The United States," he says, "consumes a hundred million gallons more than Germany." He declares that the United States is "first a beer-drinking nation and second as a consumer of distilled spirits." In the use of the latter "Russia leads the world." The next paragraph asserts that "the saloon has been expelled from one-half of the population and from two-thirds of the area" of our country. It is asserted that, "during the last five years the no-license population has increased a little over ten millions or more than ten per cent. of the total population of the nation." This is an increase of thirty per cent. in the number living in "dry" districts.

In Alabama, where a local option law was substituted for prohibition in 1911, "ninety per cent. of the population lives under no-license." Under the caption "Set-backs to the Cause" the following States are cited as having failed of statewide prohibition when the issue was submitted to the electorate, namely, Florida, Texas, Arkansas, Missouri, Colorado and Oregon. The contests in Colorado and Missouri are declared to have been "ill-advised and against the judgment of the wisest temperance leaders." In the other States mentioned there has been no backward tendency—merely a failure to go forward. "There are only 355 saloons in Florida. In Texas the saloon has been driven from eighty per cent. of the territory and eighty-five per cent. of the people. Oregon led by a small majority. Arkansas, angered at the defeat by the colored voters, passed a law making it necessary to have a majority vote of white people, men and women, before a prohibition law can be issued."

The passage of the Webb Bill, the Kevon-Sheppard Bill of this State, by the last Congress, "marks the impotency of the saloon in American national politics." It is said that "the publications of the liquor dealers declare that this law, if held valid by the courts, will destroy one-third of their business in the country." "The abolition of all saloons in the Panama Canal Zone" is declared another defeat for the liquor interests. Commenting on the "Strength of the Liquor Interest," Lehart writes, "The liquor dealers have an enormously powerful machine whose jurisdiction embraces every town, city and village in the country, including the capital of Washington. They have more saloons than there are hotels, more bartenders than ministers of the Gospel. Before the liquor they have suffered they are still tremendous forces."

Probably one of the fact that great and influential literary men are now publishing such articles as here quoted from, is this: The cause by getting encouraging facts before the people, as in the case of The Friend, the national organ of the Prohibitionists, and read of the failure of the "piece-meal" prohibition laws, and that the Webb Bill "has no teeth" and that "prohibition laws are openly violated to the scandal of the Prohibition cause" and that "there is not an inch of prohibition territory in all the United States" (all of which statements may be truthful, but not the whole truth). A little confused in mind, our eyes catch quickly the heading of an article in the issue of Eighth Month 1st entitled "Where Are We At?" It proves to be an interesting essay by Clinton N. Howard, recently prominent as a Prohibitionist, and The Indicator's reply to the same. Having read both we are ready to exclaim "Ye fight and war," but what availeth? If "a house divided against itself cannot stand," shall it be otherwise with a political movement? Which is more potent for good, exposure of evil and error or pointing to that which is good? We lay aside The Indicator and take up the Public Ledger, the favorite daily newspaper amongst the Philadelphia Friends. On the editorial page, Eighth Month 12th, we find a most timely and appropriate essay regarding the attire of women. Near it is a briefer editorial on "Prodigious Sums Expended for Strong Drink." We read eagerly, hoping to find at last in this great metropolitan "daily" some ringing words of denunciation against this national curse. Not so. Not a word against the drink habit or the drink traffic. What a splendid opportunity for the Public Ledger to put itself on record, as another popular Philadelphia daily has done repeatedly, for a kind of patriotism that is so much needed, a patriotism that will enlist against our moral foes as promptly as against any other enemy to the nation, a patriotism that would go even so far as to change a custom or give up an indulgence for the good of others! After giving figures to show the increased consumption of intoxicants during the fiscal year just past, the article continues as follows: "This amazing increase comes on top of cumulative increases year by year; and, for people who think, it is to be noted that the growth of the liquor habit has been coincident with a spirited prohibition and local option campaign that has covered a large part of the United States." Could any sympathizer or friend of the liquor interests have more adroitly concealed the fact that these same government statistics show that this increase was not augmented by prohibition or local option, but on the contrary greatly reduced thereby, and that the year closed with 18,000 fewer plague centers (saloons) than twelve months previously. Is it truthful to tell only half the truth under such circumstances?

The Ledger editorial goes on to declare that in prohibition and local option territory "in the State of Delaware and nearby Pennsylvania counties where the saloons have been abolished" (we are not aware of any such "nearby" county in Pennsylvania, but doubtless Chester County is meant), "the express companies are shipping liquor, beer wagons are delivering everywhere; the 'clubs' are furnishing it not only to men but often to boys," etc., etc. The article closes with some advice to "men who are planning to curb the liquor evil." Why should not the great Public Ledger help the "men who are planning to curb" this thing? It says these men "should look these facts squarely in the face and remember that a crusade against evil is never to be judged by lofty profession or by good intent but by actual results." Now, as a matter of fact, there are plenty of "actual results," such as are given by the Review of Reviews, but the Ledger doesn't publish them. If it has the courage to "look these facts squarely and honestly in the face," as the temperance workers are doing all the time, there ought to be a "big brother" named Cyrus H. K. Curtis, with his big publishing house and big weekly papers and daily paper, helping us little weaklings, whom his editorial writer presumes to advise. Let us hope he will. Some of us would gladly take of our own time (which does not command the price that his does) to furnish him "copy" free, if he would use it editorially.

The next paper we take up is the American Issue, official organ of the Anti-Saloon League. It illustrates the injunction, "Put your best foot forward." It deals with encouragement, yet at the same time publishes all such discouraging things as the Ledger says we must "look squarely in the face." The editors of the Issue manifest a commendable self-control in refusing to be drawn into controversy with the Vindicator and with party Prohibitionists who criticize the League. From the Issue we clip the following:—

A MILLION DOLLARS A YEAR FOR TWO YEARS.—The National Liquor Dealers' Journal, "official organ of the Pennsylvania Federation of Liquor Dealers," in its issue of [Sixth Month] 18th says that it will cost the liquor business in this State not less than a million dollars a year for the next two years to defeat the proposed plans of the Pennsylvania Anti-Saloon League. Evidently the Federation of Liquor Dealers believes that the Federation of Churches amounts to something. It will cost money to carry on our side of this struggle, but if the federated churches of the Keystone State will put into the treasury of the Anti-Saloon League during the next two years one-tenth of the amount the liquor people are preparing to spend, a county option law will be written into our statutes, and the work of cleaning up Pennsylvania will begin.

This forceful plea is suggestive of words expressed a few years ago in "An Address of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting (Representatives) on the Use of Intoxicating Drinks," as follows: "May the Church, a designed agency for the spread of this (the Messiah's) kingdom, be incited to earnest, faithful labor for the removal of this great and increasing evil from our midst."

Still finding nothing exactly suitable for THE FRIEND, we take up the California Voice, published weekly in Los Angeles. It is a healthy, wholesome paper of eight pages, endeavoring to promote harmony of action amongst all who would oppose the liquor evil. From it we glean the following words from Senator W. R. Webb, of Tennessee, a recent visitor in California—"It seems that the only commodity known to man that cannot be restricted is intoxicating liquor. This great destroyer seems to be, in the estimation of great lawyers, the only disease-breeding commodity that can have no restriction put upon it. America is aroused on the liquor question. Anglo-Saxons have won every reform that once caught the ear of the people. Liquor has got to go. God grant that I may help it go." This Senator Webb is a distant relative of Congressman E. Y. Webb, of North Carolina, who introduced the measure bearing his name that was passed over President Taft's veto.

We read, next, an article from The Iron Age, contributed by a Friend, as illustrating how the demands of commercial efficiency are tending to curtail the liquor traffic. The article in question is entitled, "Tea Kitchen in a German Shop," and sets forth, without sentiment, how a German firm has succeeded in substituting four thousand bottles of tea per day in place of beer, as formerly.

Last in order, but not least in merit, we come to The National Advocate, "official organ of the National Temperance Society and of the Inter-Church Temperance Federation." This paper is published monthly in New York City. It is an attractive, well-edited journal of sixteen pages, handling the subject broadly, while at the same time upholding national prohibition as the true objective. It is the "oldest temperance paper in the United States," gives much space to scientific temperance education and to social reforms, both foreign and domestic. It does not use conspicuous head lines nor employ much space in an effort to extend its own circulation. It typifies the dignity and conservatism of the Churches, but many of its contributors are men and women in the forefront of the battle and who "meet the enemy in the gate." There is, however, in this paper, a good measure of that wholesome philosophy which Alice Cary has expressed in the following verses:

Do not look for wrong and evil,
You will find them if you do,
As you measure to your neighbor
He will measure back to you.

Look for goodness; look for gladness,
You will meet them all the while;
If you bring a smiling visage
To the glass you meet a smile.

For "THE FRIEND."

SOME FACTS CONCERNING THE WHALE SHARK.

Under the title, "Notes from Florida," published by Joseph Elkinton in THE FRIEND, Third Month 20, 1913, we find an interesting account of a huge fish captured near Key West in the summer of 1912.

As some of the readers of THE FRIEND may know, this great creature was stuffed and has since been brought to Atlantic City, where it is at present on exhibition on one of the piers.

Captain Charles H. Thompson is the man who captured the monster and is now exhibiting it for an admission price of ten cents. A small illustrated leaflet setting forth various startling so-called facts relative to the great fish and its capture has been, and is being, liberally distributed by Captain Thompson.

So far as the statements relative to the capture, weight, food, and even dimensions are concerned I am in no position to criticize. I do, however, take exception to the claims made in the above mentioned leaflet that the creature has the characteristics of both fish and mammal contrary to all laws of natural history, and that it is proclaimed by scientists to be the most remarkable specimen ever captured, both genus and species being wholly unknown.

As I have heard this interesting specimen much discussed by readers of THE FRIEND and others it has seemed to me that a few additional facts concerning it might be of interest.

Instead of its being new to science there is no question but that it is a specimen of the Whale Shark (Rhincodon Typicus). It was first described in 1849 by Professor Andrew Smith in his work entitled "The Zoology of South Africa." It is clearly depicted in Plate 26 of this book and the illustration is accompanied by a full description of the species. The treatise closes with the statement that the prepared specimen from which the description was made was deposited in the Museum of the Jardin des Plantes of Paris. Whether or not it is still there I am unable to say. An excellent specimen is, however, on exhibition in the Museum of Tokio, Japan.

This species is closely related to the Basking Sharks, and is even more closely connected to the group known as Mackerel Sharks, the shape of the tail of the Whale Shark being quite similar to that of the Mackerel. It is not a deep sea monster as claimed by its captor, but is pelagic in its habitat, and unless attacked would rarely go far beneath the surface.

In the [Seventh Month] number, 1900, of The National Geographic Magazine, is an interesting illustrated article, entitled, "Some Giant Fishes of the Sea," by Hugh M. Smith, United States Deputy Commissioner of Fisheries. In it he says, "The largest of all fishes, the largest of all cold-blooded animals, and the largest of all existing animals, with the exception of a few species of whales, is the Whale Shark (Rhincodon Typicus), originally described from the Cape of Good Hope, but now known from India, Japan, South America, Panama, California, and various other places, a small specimen having been obtained on the Florida coast a few years ago." This capture would therefore antedate by several years that of the specimen under consideration and proves that the species is not even new to these waters.

I am indebted to my friend, H. W. Fowler, head of the Ichthyological Department of the Academy of Natural Sciences, for his assistance in gathering the above facts. I might add that Professor Fowler has seen the Atlantic City specimen and has given its owner full information regarding it. A few minutes after having received the scientific truth regarding the great fish, the promoters of the Boardwalk show were again making the statement that the creature was wholly unknown to science. Truth may be stranger than fiction, but it is doubtless not considered so profitable by those who are exhibiting this interesting specimen.

GEORGE SFENCER MORRIS.

A GRINDSTONE that had not grit in it; how long would it take to sharpen an axe? And affairs that had not grit in them; how long would they take to make a man?—H. W. BEECHER.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

SAVED BY HONEST LEATHER.—As Prof. A. P. Coleman and his companion, Frank Stever, were embarking at Beavermouth for a canoe trip seventy miles down the Columbia River,

Old Uncle warned them of an eighteen-mile cañon, and told them that only one man, of many who had ventured, had ever come through it alive. That was not exactly encouraging, writes Professor Coleman in his book, The Canadian Rockies, but their traps were in the canoe, and they pushed off. Old Uncle's parting words were, "Well, so long, boys! I wish ye may come back safe; but I wouldn't risk my life in that boat."

That afternoon was one of enchantment. The great river swiftly took us out of man's disfigured world, where axe and fire had done their wicked work, into the mysterious world of the mountains. Old Uncle's warnings were absurd, and our expedition looked very prosperous. Then we began to hear a faint roar in the distance, and I noticed that the mountains crowded together a mile or two ahead in a way that looked ominous. All at once the trees parted to the left, and disclosed a downward swoop of water between walls of schist, and beyond that spouts of foam. It was Surprise Rapids.

We saw that it would not be safe to run any part of the rapids with our small canoe. Why not build a strong raft and run swiftly and without labor down to Lake Kinbasket? There was plenty of lumber in the driftwood stacked up by the eddy. In some runaway boom logs there were iron spikes, which we chopped out and used.

With much hammering we fastened the timbers and planks together, and then tied the glacier rope round each end of the raft to make it doubly strong.

We made no haste in paddling across the eddy, for who knew what was beyond? Presently the current caught us, and I would have given much at that moment to go back, but it was too late.

One pitch followed another; the waves half smothered us at every leap. And now, right ahead, was the worst point of all—what the Ottawa raftsmen call a "cellar." There was a strange sensation of sinking into the depths and then a deluge of water that leaped and trampled upon us. The raft struck heavily, and was nearly dragged from under us.

The next moment we were above water again, half-stranded but alive; we were sure, however, that the packs underneath the raft must have been torn from their fastenings. The current now moderated, and we gradually drew near the right bank. Frank caught an overhanging bough, and we soon moored our craft near the shore.

Then we began to realize that without blankets, rifle, frying-pan or axe life would not be a comfortable thing. In the midst of our inebrious forebodings, Frank caught sight of something black swaying in the water under the raft. There were the packs—till encased in the water-proof, barely held at one end by the trap! We blessed the honest leather of that ancient hawk-trap and no longer felt like ship-wrecked mariners on a desert island. Youth's Companion.

MARTIN'S SUMMER HOME.—Martin has made their summer home in the loft of a stable in Pottstown, Pennsylvania, for the past fifty-six years. They are regarded as infallible weather prophets as they never return until the warm days have begun to be felt. The flock numbers about two hundred and is the best kept and most profitable one, modestly by the boys' own efforts.

It is noted that Dr. Price has returned to this place for so many years, and to the kind treatment given them by the medical staff, as reported in The Dutch Canal.

WATER IN THE EAST.—Perhaps the most charming of all Isabella Miller's work is The pronunciation and autobiography "The Archaic Modes," a story of Indian life in which the soul of the red man is more sympathetically figured than in any other book, and is a contributor to The Humanitarian in London.

Take this passage:

"I said to the old chief one day, 'Your language is very poor; it has so few words.'

"We have enough. It does not take many words to tell the truth," he answered.

"Ah, but we have a hundred words to say one."

"Well, you need them." . . . The old Indian rose as he said this, and gathered his blanket about his shoulders. His dog lay with his nose on his two paws, and his eyes raised to his master's. "You have not words enough in all your books to give a single look from the eyes of my dog."—Our Dumb Animals.

THE EFFECT OF DIVINE GRACE ILLUSTRATED.—Many years ago (in 1834), two Friends formed a partnership in a profitable business in Philadelphia, and employed several men, most of whom belonged to the Presbyterian society. The elder of the two partners over-saw the manufacture of their product, while the other attended to the financial end of the business. Both of the firm were philanthropic and generous in dispensing their charities and were desirous to make rules for their employees for their general uplift. One rule was that under no circumstance would they employ any man who used intoxicating drinks, no matter how important he was to their business. After a time a strong, powerful man was employed, whose services proved most valuable, but he had the drink habit and frequently gave way to it. Both of his employers pleaded with him to discontinue it for his own good, as well as for the sake of his family and his employers, who did not wish to lose a valuable employee. But, sad to relate, the habit grew, and many times he would leave thousands of dollars' worth of their product in such a way that it had to be worked over, entailing much pecuniary loss. Both of his employers labored long and faithfully to restore him, often going to saloons the man frequented and dragging him out to be sent home. Finally fearing that their influence over the rest of the men would be lessened by continuing this man in their employ, they concluded to take a drastic stand, and told him if it occurred again his services would be dispensed with. The partner who had the oversight of the factory, in going his rounds, found the man again somewhat under the influence of liquor. He immediately went to the office and made out his wage account, sent for the man and informed him that owing to his continued persistence in not taking the advice of the firm he might consider himself discharged from their employment, paying him his wages and presenting him with ten dollars in gold. This so angered the man that he spat a mouthful of tobacco juice into his employer's face. Although the Friend was a man of quick temper, it was so governed by Divine Grace, that he was able to control it under these aggravating circumstances, to the admiration of his partner, who often acknowledged he feared he would not have been able to do so.

W. S.

ANECDOTE.—An English Friend tells the following incident concerning Samuel Morris:

While traveling in Wales in 1890 he visited a certain village, where a small meeting was located. A woman not a member of our Society sent for him to call on her, as she was partial to ministerial work. On entering her house he was soon asked by her to make a prayer. He sat in silence for awhile, then said, "I think we can hardly invite the Lord to come to so untidy a home as this." The Friend who accompanied S. Morris said, as they left—"Oh, thou hast offended our hostess by that remark." "It did seem severe," he replied, "but that was the message given me for her." And so it proved, for he sent for him soon after, apologized for the looks of her house and herself, and he offered a prayer on his second visit that satisfied her deepest needs. She became more careful in many ways and an example to her neighbors.

NEVER spend your money before you have earned it.

For "THE FRIEND."

THE TRUE ANOINTING.

JOSHUA P. SMITH.

"But the anointing which ye have received of Him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you; but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in Him."

Dear friends, how encouraging is this language to Christ's followers. This anointing from the Holy One is what we all need to be taught and guided by. We much need to be found in that child-like, teachable state that nothing may rob us of the reward at the end of the race. May it never be said of us as of some of old, "Ephraim, he hath mixed himself among the people; strangers have devoured his strength, and he knoweth it not," but has not blindness in part already happened to our Israel, or to some under our name? When we hear of departures from the simplicity of the Truth so long professed by faithful Friends it causes sorrow of heart. This is no time to lower our standard or to compromise the truth; but by the help of the God of Israel to know wherein our strength lies, which is in receiving the unction from on high, and, in love for Him and for all mankind to "earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints." If this is done in that love which would gather all into the heavenly enclosure, although we may see but little fruit of our labors at present, it may be as bread cast upon the waters, found after many days. We reverently believe there are some in various places in whose hearts the Truth as professed by faithful Friends is precious; which is Christianity revived in its ancient simplicity and purity. May such everywhere be encouraged to persevere in the good old way. When anointed by the Divine power, a way is often made when there seems to be no way.

As we thus walk by the same rule and mind the same thing, we will hold the Truth in an even balance, with a full belief in the Holy Scriptures and of all that our Saviour has done for us without us—a propitiation for our sins—and also what He will do for us by his Holy Spirit in our hearts, if we are only willing to be taught and instructed by Him; and let his love have first place in our hearts.

The Bible does not say, "The anointing teacheth some things;" but "The anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth and no lie." So how can any reason that these precious truths could be improved upon or taught more effectually by man's wit or ability only, without waiting for the Divine anointing? The Psalmist says: "My soul, wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from Him." Man with all his intellectual ability can never garnish the Christian religion nor add any luster to the truth as it emanates from the fountain of truth Himself. This is the faith that many have suffered for. True, we may be and often are helpful one to another, and so may education also be very helpful if rightly guarded and kept in its proper place, and the heart sanctified and changed from a state of nature to a state of grace. Such a religion is what the world needs to-day, and it is encouraging to see some seeking for it. If any minds are honestly turned toward us may they find the good they are looking for among us and not be disappointed. The world needs us—our mission is not yet fulfilled. We still need the sword of the spirit, and it is encouraging to believe that some of the professing Christian nations are coming to see the need of the same spiritual weapons. We love them and hope to help turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, and yet not love all their ways and doings, nor partake of their evil deeds, and thereby lose our own strength. Our dear Saviour said, "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd." Some professing Christians may be tired of a superficial religion and are hungering and thirsting for the true bread and water of life, that will nourish their souls, and go with them beyond the grave.

We do not believe that this people, once highly favored, are forsaken by the great Head of the Church, although we may sometimes be permitted to suffer with the suffering seed: for Christ has said, "Where I am there shall also my servants be;" and is He not turning the hearts of sons and daughters more and more unto Himself and raising up "judges as at the first and councillors as at the beginning," even among those in younger life? These we believe are chosen vessels in his hand for usefulness, whose trumpets give no uncertain sound, which is cause of rejoicing, and are not as sounding brass or tinkling cymbal, void of life, as may sometimes be the case with another class under our name, who may have a zeal but not according to knowledge, and need to abide a little longer under the preparing hand. The Apostle says: "I was with you in weakness and in fear and in much trembling; and my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom but in the demonstration of the spirit and of power." It was not a silver trumpet that caused the walls of Jericho to fall, but it was blowing only a ram's horn after encompassing the city seven days. Neither was it Gideon and the few that were with him alone that prevailed against the hosts of the Midianites; but it was "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon." These things were written for our instruction. We may feel our weakness and fewness of numbers, but if faithful this language may be applicable, "Fear not little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

We need to uphold our principles and testimonies as well as doctrines, they should go together, nothing to lose, and not go back into what we as a people were brought out of by a high hand and by the true anointing. When any of these are allowed to fall, does it not weaken our hands in upholding the others? Nothing is to be lightly esteemed that is called for by the great Head of the Church. They that are faithful in the little shall be made rulers over more; but they that despise the day of small things shall fall little by little. True, none of us have anything to glory of, and some feel poor in Manasseh and can say: "I am the least of my father's house"—nothing to glory of save in our infirmities—yet we believe that mercy has long been extended to us, but it is by no merit of ours. Dear friends, both older and younger, brethren and sisters of the same household of faith, is it not by abiding under this precious anointing, that we are drawn more and more into the love of our Heavenly Father and into fellowship one with another, the same that gathered us to be a people? If this is our inspiration and you and I wait for the right anointing then we may say to others, by example and precept, Come and have fellowship with us, for truly "our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son, Jesus Christ."

EIGHTH MONTH, 1913.

THE China Agency of the American Bible Society reports issues for the first six months nearly or quite reaching 1,000,000 Bibles, Testaments, and portions (905,416 in all, with two depots yet to be heard from). If this rate of issues continues during the year, it may be expected to reach 2,000,000 copies.

The agent adds, "Notwithstanding the sending out of this enormous number of Scriptures, we were unable to supply all that were called for."

Amid wars and rumors of wars which the newspapers now record, such facts are the more extraordinary. It would seem as though thus far the disturbance in China had fallen out for the furtherance of the Gospel.

NEVER let your thoughts dwell on a matter in which another has made you sore. If you do, a hundred aggravating circumstances will spring up in your mind, which will make the slightest offence swell up to the most formidable dimensions. Try to realize God's presence; the realizing it ever so little has a wonderfully soothing and calming influence. "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest."—GOSPEL-BURN.

POCONO NOTES.

The latest discoveries of Babylonian tablets, during the third and fourth centuries, B. C., were explained and interpreted by Dr. Albert Cowley of Yale University to an appreciative audience at one of our Sixth-day afternoon gatherings.

It is interesting to find that many of the legal forms in use in Babylonia have come down to us today. The expression "more or less" was "less or more" in those days. The wife was always asked in private whether her husband had coerced her into selling any piece of property he wished to part with, somewhat as still obtains in legal transfers.

Hebrew and Greek names are found on these tablets, preserving an indisputable evidence of the Greek invasion and the part the Hebrews took in the commerce of Babylonia. In some respects the moral code in vogue then compares favorably with that of later generations but the principles of democracy have raised the life of the common man immensely.

On another occasion Dr. Froelicher of Goucher College, Baltimore, explained to us by a first-hand experience of life in Germany, as his early education was in that country. He explained their educational system, policy of government and attitude of thought—correcting the cleverness of Dr. Collier, who is not always truthful in his recently published book, "Germany and the Germans." Through the scholarship of the universities, gymnasiums and lower schools a most thorough literary and technical education is given to their youth. The paternal attitude of the emperor and his government most sharply differentiates the German from our democratic institutions. Dr. Froelicher thought the oft-postulated conflict between Germany and England quite probable if the unification of Germany and the increase in armaments continues.

The Pocono plateau gives unusual opportunities for walks through beautiful woods, as the land lies in a generally level plain until the southern edge is reached, when there is a sudden fall of 300 to 400 feet to the valley below. Big Pocono is the highest and most conspicuous promontory, overlooking this valley, which is bounded on the south by the Kittatinny Mountains. Its elevation is 2225 feet above sea level and from its summit one overlooks all the surrounding country. As the terminal point of a pass on each side of this mountain headland, it seems quite probable that its peak stood as an island of rocks above the great sea, which extended to the North Pole and to the Atlantic coast, covering N. Y. harbor.

On the 11th inst. a party of thirteen essayed to spend a night on Big Pocono and had the most satisfying experience. Blankets were rolled up so they could be carried across the shoulder and the pilgrimage began by a canoe ride of two miles, with a tramp of another mile before taking the train from Pocono Lake Station to Coolmore, a distance of ten miles.

The route up the mountain of two-and-one-half miles to its summit was the strength of the older members of the group but the top was so close to the sunset, pleasantly. The atmosphere was perfectly clear and the view to the East on the horizon twenty to thirty miles distant, of the well wooded, red-tanned valleys hundreds of feet below. Wood was abundant and a most attractive fire built for cooking supper and for the light, as we used an hour or two before retiring, and for the night.

Henry Cartell has kindly built a stone cabin on the mountain for such pilgrims as can obtain the permission of the Mountaintop Protection to those who preferred to sleep in the open air under the conditions of that night, was preferable to the shelter.

The fire was kept up all night, at least until 3:30 a. m., and the group rose to the mountain top with the exception the summit on the mountain peak and the valley in a way one cannot easily describe.

After the first night we returned to the mountain in a way one cannot easily describe.

After the first night we returned to the mountain in a way one cannot easily describe. After the first night we returned to the mountain in a way one cannot easily describe.

After the first night we returned to the mountain in a way one cannot easily describe. After the first night we returned to the mountain in a way one cannot easily describe.

The elk once ranged through our State and there is a movement on foot to restock it with this noble game from Yellowstone Park, and there is no reason why, in a few years, it should not inhabit our forest reserves in considerable number. Venison might become a staple article of diet and other products of the deer find a ready market. Much land, now otherwise unproductive, might thus become a source of income. The forest reserves, under the care of the State, are scattered through twenty-six out of sixty seven counties and afford excellent protection for our larger game. The State Game Commission has formed five game preserves, in the midst of these larger tracts, which now include nearly 1,000,000 acres. Heavy wire fences enclose these inner preserves—within which hunting of every kind is prohibited. Quite a large colony of beavers are located not far from Stroudsburg in this (Monroe) county and a law prohibits killing them.

The greatest advance ever made in protecting birds of all kinds—both game and non-game species—was an act passed by Congress on the fourth of Third Month last, by which the Secretary of Agriculture was authorized to fix the closed season for migratory birds. It has been suggested that a Bird-day should be added to the school calendar, not only to instruct children concerning the value of our native birds and the best means of protecting them.

POCONO LAKE, Eighth Month 20, 1913.

J. E.

FRIENDLY NEWS.

The death of Timothy B. Hussey at his home in North Berwick, Maine, Eighth Month 19th, removes one very widely known in the Society of Friends. In New England, and beyond its borders, especially in Palestine, he has had most valuable service for many years. He had a radiant joyous personality that commended Christianity to all with whom he came in contact.

A VISITOR to Western Quarterly Meeting, at West Grove, last Sixth-day, reports a fuller attendance than at some previous visits. His impression of the meeting was that it was one of unusual interest and life, and that the propositions regarding the proposed new building at Fourth and Arch Streets awakened a considerable degree of interest in the business meeting. No particulars regarding the vocal exercises in the meeting for worship have been received.

TUNESASSA'S NEEDS.—The alterations in the buildings at Tunesassa to provide for the increased manual training and domestic science teaching (so much desired by the pupils) were discussed at a recent meeting of three sub-committees of the Indian Committee.

Walter Smedley reported that a work shop, a weaving-room, a sewing-room, and an experimental kitchen can be provided at a comparatively slight expense.

Information was received that a member of the Committee has undertaken to secure most of the necessary equipment, and that Leslie Pennell (the manual training teacher) will assist the boys in making work benches and closets.

The desirability of a central heating and lighting system to replace the numerous and dangerous stoves and lamps was also carefully considered and fully approved.

It was stated that $2500 would be required for purchasing and installing the steam and heating plant, and at least $1500 for the changes in the buildings, to accommodate the new industrial work and for the plumbing and other much needed improvements.

For the Committee,

ANNA WALTON.

WILLIAM BAYON EVANS, Treasurer, 205 E. Central Ave., Moorestown, New Jersey.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A PROMINENT member of Dublin Yearly Meeting, in a personal letter to the editor, says: "Whilst writing, let me say how much I enjoyed reading the Philadelphia FRIEND. There is a true, sound ring in its columns respecting the mystical yet so real union of the Divine and the human in the person of our blessed Lord—and the need and preciousness of His atonement, which is not always to be noted in 'Friends' publications on this side."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—A despatch of the 21st from New York says: "The first of five of the largest locomotives in the world has been completed and is being given a final test at the plant of the Lima Locomotive Works before being formally turned over to the Erie Railroad to be used for passenger service between Jersey City and Susquehanna. The engine was built at a cost of $10,000. It is of the Pacific type, and is built for a speed of 100 miles an hour."

It is stated that Secretary Bryan's peace plan will be laid formally before the conference of the Interparliamentary Union at The Hague, by Senator Burton of Ohio. He is also one of seven members of a special committee, representing Russia, Germany, Austria, France, Belgium, Greece and the United States, charged with planning a permanent Hague Court. Secretary Bryan's peace plan, under which nations would bind themselves to submit all grievances to arbitration and defer preparations for war meanwhile, will be laid before the special committee and later before the Parliamentary Union.

The twentieth Universal Peace Congress was opened at The Hague, 950 delegates representing all civilized nations being present.

A despatch from Buffalo of the 20th says: "Foreign delegates to the Fourth International Congress of School Hygiene, which will be held here next week, are beginning to arrive. Among them are representatives from Sweden, Argentine and Chile. The Congress, which it is expected will be attended by approximately 5000 delegates, will discuss all problems relating to the health and efficiency of school children. More than 300 speakers are listed on the programme."

A meteorite supposed to weigh about half a ton lately fell at Cata-sauqua, Penna. It is stated that the meteorite was buried five feet in the ground and the heat could be felt several feet away.

Edward Payson Hall has lately walked from New York to Minneapolis. Although seventy-six years old, he made this trip, a distance of 1,546 miles, in four days less than two months. The object of this trip, as he explained at the start, was to show to the public that want of exercise kills more men than exercise does.

A despatch from Portland, Maine, of the 21st says: "Weather Bureau officials could see no break to-night in one of the longest droughts in the State. Since First Month 1 the deficiency in rainfall has amounted to 8.35 inches, while records show that the year has been 200 degrees warmer than usual. The most serious results of the prolonged dry period have been the destructive forest fires, especially in southwestern Maine."

In a recent address in this city Booker T. Washington said: "There are already 350 drug stores and 60 banks in the larger cities owned by colored persons. The colored population of this country, numbering 10,000,000, could sustain 1000 more drug stores and 150 additional banks. In addition to places for 900,000 independent colored farmers, he said there are openings in the South for 1000 more saw mills, 1000 brickyards, 2000 drygoods stores, 1500 shoe stores, 1000 restaurants and hotels, 1500 millinery stores."

FOREIGN.—A despatch of the 19th from The Hague says: "Nearly a thousand delegates have arrived here for the 20th Universal Peace Congress which will begin to-morrow. The programme will include discussions of international law, the events of the year connected with peace and war, the enforcement of international law by means of an international police force, limitation of armaments and what the press might do in the cause of peace. The chief work of the opening session was the adoption of three resolutions dealing with disarmament. The first contained a request that the restriction of armaments be included in the programme of the next international Hague conference. The second protested against the sinister influence of persons interested in armament industries. The third recommended consideration by peace societies of the draft of a general treaty for gradual disarmament, of which Professor Quilide, of the University of Munich, is the author, in order that the next conference shall be in a position to discuss the subject with full information at hand."

A despatch from Ghent in Belgium, of the 18th, says: "The first international congress of the deaf and dumb was opened here to-day. All the proceedings were conducted in the sign language."

In a recent voyage the battleship Illinois received messages when 2,600 miles from New York by means of the wireless service.

It is stated from Bergen, Norway, that the coast land of western Norway is almost devoid of forests, except where protection is afforded from the set winds. The bulk of the forests, consisting of pine, birch and spruce, are found farther in the interior, at the heads of the fiords and in the valleys. The Bergen Tree-planting Society was founded in 1900 to rehabilitate the rapidly dwindling forests and maintain additions made from time to time with the society's slender means. Since the society started thirteen years ago 26,000,000 young trees have been produced, of which more than 26,000,000 were planted on 10,000 acres within the borders of the two Bergen counties. The annual report shows that there are now 14 tree-planting societies in these counties, which last year planted 4,276,000 trees.

It is stated that more than 100 citizens of the United States have been killed in Mexico since the inception of the revolution against the Diaz regime. Hundreds of Americans have been forced to abandon their possessions and flee to safety. According to estimates, the property loss to American interests amounts to $150,000,000.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 87.

Mary Ann Jones, for Myra W. Foster, Pa.; Charles Wright, N. J.; A. L. Hoyle, N. J.; Charles Leech, Calif.; J. A. Holloway, Agt., O., $14, for Wm. L. Ashton, Mary J. Conroy, A. G. Holloway, Edwin F. Holloway, Emma Holloway, G. W. Stratton and Abel Walker; Jesse M. Otis, N. Y.; M. M. Reeve for Wm. C. Reeve, N. J.; Ruth K. Smalley, F.K.T.D.; Hanson Holdsworth, N. J., to 14, v. 88; Mary W. Pharo, Phila.; Daniel G. Garwood, Agt., N. J., for Walton B. Leeds; Edward S. Lowry, Phila.; Sarah T. Williams, O.; S. Mason McCollin, Pa.; O. J. Bailey, Agt., O., $53, for A. C. Bailey, L. P. Bailey, Allen Bailey, J. D. Blowers, D. C. Bundy, Thos. P. Cope, Thos. Deveses, Mary P. Dondra, Friends' Boarding School, 2 copies, Rebecca W. Hall, W. T. Hall, Jas. Henderson, W. C. Hirst, Jos. S. Hoge, David Holloway, Chas. Livezey, Barclay Penrose, Perley Pickett, Robert Smith, Robert H. Smith, Wm. H. Sears, Samuel C. Smith, D. H. B. Stanton, Jos. C. Stratton, Louis J. Taber and Jas. Walton; L. M. Brarkin, Agt., O., $14, for himself, Edmund Bundy, J. Rowland Haines, Jacob Maule, Oliver S. Negus, Lindley B. Steer and Nathan Steer; Amos E. Kaighn and for Wm. Martin, M. D., N. J.; Wm. C. Warren, G'tn; Anna M. Webster, Calif., to 14, vol. 88; Anna M. Deacon, Calif.; M. and S. Dondra, O.; Samuel Emlen, Phila.; $10, for himself, Geo. W. Emlen, Walter Penn Shipley, John T. Emlen and Samuel Emlen, Jr.; Charles Perry, R. L. $16, for himself, Lydia F. Nichols, Thomas Perry, Mary E. Foster, Lucy W. Foster, Phoebe W. P. Buffum, Harvey C. Perry and Anna A. Gardner; Lloyd Balderston, Pa.; J. Borton Hayes, N. J.; Eunice B. Clark, R. I.; Sallie A. Armour, Del.; John P. Sharpless, Pa.; Abigail L. Evans, N. J.; Beulah E. Cope, Phila.; Edward F. Stratton, Agt., O., $26, for himself, Albert W. Starbuck, Joseph Masters, J. Morris Ashbed, Sarah J. Bonsall, Mary H. Stratton, Wm. D. Starbuckwaite, Albert M. Cope, Chas. P. Morlan, James H. Jessup, Wm. J. Blackburn, Ashbel Carey and Joseph R. Stratton; Casper T. Sharpless, N. J., $6, for himself, Ephraim Tomlinson and J. Edwin James.

Remittances received after Third-day noon will not appear in the receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

THE Committee appointed by Concord Quarterly Meeting have arranged for a public meeting for Divine worship at Middle-town Friends' Meeting House, on First-day afternoon, Eighth Month 31, 1913, at three o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

FRIENDS' SELECT SCHOOL, 140 N. Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, reopens Ninth Month 22, 1913. Catalogues and complete information may be had on application.

WALTER W. HAULAND, Principal.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL, 1913-14.—The School opens for the reception of pupils on Third-day, Ninth Month 9th. New pupils should present themselves for classification and assignment of rooms, etc., in the morning or early afternoon of that day. It is desired that all the pupils will arrive by not later than the 4:30 P. M. train. Regular recitations begin the following morning.

THOMAS K. BROWN, Principal.

HADDONFIELD and SALEM QUARTERLY MEETING to be held at Me-ford, N. J., Ninth Month 11, 1913, at 10 o'clock. Special train leaves Philadelphia at 9 A. M., Camden, 9:09, stopping at Collingswood 9:19. Had-

South 9:25, Springdale 9:55, Marlton 9:59, arriving at Medford 9:50 A. M. Returning by regular train leaving Medford 1:30 and 5:10 P. M.

MONTHLY MEETINGS NEXT WEEK—Eighth Month 31st to Ninth Month 6th:

Coynohel, at Norristown, Pa., First-day, Eighth Month 31st, at 10:30 A. M.
 Kennett, at Kennett Square, Pa., Third-day, Ninth Month 2nd, at 10 A. M.
 Cloverfield, at Trenton, N. J., Third-day, Ninth Month 2nd, at 10 A. M.
 Chester, N. J., at Moorsstown, N. J., Third-day, Ninth Month 2nd, at 7:30 P. M.
 Bradford, at Coatesville, Pa., Fourth-day, Ninth Month 3rd, at 10 A. M.
 New Garden, at West Grove, Pa., Fourth-day, Ninth Month 3rd, at 10 A. M.

Upper Springfield, at Mansfield, N. J., Fourth-day, Ninth Month 3rd, at 10 A. M.

Haddonfield, N. J., Fourth-day, Ninth Month 3rd, at 7:30 P. M.

Wilmington, Del., Fifth-day, Ninth Month 4th, at 10 A. M.

Uwchlan, at Downingtown, Pa., Fifth-day, Ninth Month 4th, at 10 A. M.

London Grove, Pa., Fifth-day, Ninth Month 4th, at 10 A. M.

Burlington, N. J., Fifth-day, Ninth Month 4th, at 10 A. M.

Falls, at Fallsington, Pa., Fifth-day, Ninth Month 4th, at 10 A. M.

Evesham, at Mt. Laurel, N. J., Fifth-day, Ninth Month 4th, at 10 A. M.

Upper Evesham, at Medford, N. J., Seventh-day, Ninth Month 6th, at 10 A. M.

DIED.—At her residence in Philadelphia, Fifth Month 29, 1913, MÆRCE S. MASTERS, aged sixty-six years; a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia for the Northern District.

Eye
Comfort
Guaranteed

by glasses that suit, that give clear, easy vision. Fitting glasses to Old Eyes is a specialty with us—and to Young Eyes, too.

C. A. LONGSTRETH
 Specialist in Eye Testing
 222 Market St., Philadelphia

Plant Peonies and German
Iris at this season of the year

Peonies are as perfect in form and as varied in color as Roses. German Iris come in many shades, grow easily and flower abundantly. Our illustrated catalog, that is mailed for the asking, describes a long list of each of these and almost 2000 other varieties of Perennials, Trees, Shrubs and Vines for lawn planting.

THE WM. H. MOON CO.

NURSERYMEN

Room H, Stephen Girard Bldg.
 Philadelphia, Pa.

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
 10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

NO MATTER

WHAT YOUR BUSINESS IS, IT NEEDS GOOD PRINTING. TO PROPERLY REPRESENT IT.

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,

PHILADELPHIA.

1010 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

W. B. WEAVER
Undertaker & Embalmer

550 52 N. 5th ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL ACCOMMODATIONS FOR FUNERALS.

BELL 'PHONE. ESTABLISHED 1880.

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 56 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

ROOMS AT ITHACA, NEW YORK—YOUNG MEN intending to enter Cornell University, next year, can secure comfortable and reasonable rooms, about ten minutes' walk from the Campus, at 238 Linden Avenue, EDWARD WOOD, Ithaca, New York.

FOR RENT—NEW BUNGALOW AT POCONO LAKE. A comfortable and complete equipment, with bathroom. A large tent will be furnished if desired. Rent includes road stove boiler. Address J. L. Engle, 516 Ludlow Street, Philadelphia, or Egbert S. Cary, Pocono, Pa.

A FRIEND, RESIDING NEAR FORTIETH AND Market Streets, West Philadelphia, has two pleasant third story rooms to rent, furnished; bathroom on second floor. Nice for two or three teachers; private family.

Address C, or
 Apply at office of THE FRIEND.

From Bondage to Freedom, by Isabel Shipley, 2nd Edition, 2 cts. Christianity Symposium, 1905. What 16 young Friends thought when they were 8 years younger, 2 cts. Christ in all the Scriptures, by A. M. Holquist, 60 cts. Haydock's Testimony 50 cts. } by L. C. Wood
For a Free Conscience $1.00

ALL POSTPAID

J. B. WOOD, PINE POINT PARK, CAMDEN, N. J.

POCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevation 1800 feet, commanding extensive mountain and valley scenery. Address

J. W. HURLEY, Manager,
 POCONO MANOR, PA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
 WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Satisfied

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
 (Marcellus Balderston)

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. 518 NORTH NINTH ST.
 BELL 'PHONE PHILADELPHIA

Subscribers patronizing our advertisers will assist THE FRIEND, especially by mentioning our paper in correspondence.

New & Interesting Books

MARGARET FOX
OF SWARTHMOOR HALL PRICE
By Helen G. Crossfield Postage Paid $1.20

JOHN G. WHITTIER Postage Paid
By Georgina King Lewis $1.20

ROBERT BARCLAY Postage Paid
OF URY 75 Cents
By M. Christabel Calbury

SOCIAL SERVICE Postage Paid
ITS PLACE IN THE 55 Cents
SOCIETY OF FRIENDS
By Joshua Rowntree

FOR SALE BY
Friends' Book and Tract Committee
 144 East Twentieth Street
 NEW YORK

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER
 S. W. COR. 16th & RACE STREETS
 Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
 BELL 'PHONE BRUCE 6646

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL.

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
 MANUFACTURERS
 PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
 PHILADELPHIA

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, NINTH MONTH 4, 1913.

No. 10.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.
Associate Editors, (J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSTHEE.

Make remittances payable to
EDWIN P. SELLEW OR THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a
notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

THE UNIQUE POSITION OF PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING.

One hears comment on Philadelphia's "unique position" in such widely separated Friendly circles as London and California. Usually the representation is made that this position is one of separateness in which there is an element of exclusiveness if not of censoriousness. Quite recently there is an added note in the general comment to the effect that there has actually been a service in this unique position, but that the time has come to abandon it, lest the good it has done shall be thwarted.

The origin of the Philadelphia position is generally well known, having been frequently recited. This recital carries us back about fifty years to a separation in Ohio when Philadelphia found its sympathies with the opposite body in Ohio from that which London decided to recognize. In the dilemma Philadelphia "temporarily" suspended all official correspondence, and this situation has persisted to the present. At the end of fifty years the conditions are not less complex than they were at the beginning. Four or five varieties of Friends are in the field, and are organized so as to make as many distinct bodies. It might be possible to find individuals who believe that all real Friends are confined to one of these bodies, but the much more general sentiment would be that there are some real Friends in all of these bodies. It was a common saying after the painful separation of '27 that enough salt went with the separatists to preserve them. If such a confession could be made in the face of the bitterness of that time, what might not be said of the separations since then!

The principal difficulty with the complex situation that at present confronts us is the fact that regular correspondence carries with it an official status. Its effect is not principally measured in terms of fellowship. In almost every instance correspondence counts for more against those who do not share it, than it can possibly count in favor of those who do. It becomes an instrument of separateness and exclusiveness in quite as distinct a degree as has the suspension of correspondence in the case of Philadelphia. Indeed, correspondence or the lack of it may be a merely formal matter and have a merely formalizing effect.

These observations are presented in this form as an introduction to a point of view of Philadelphia's unique position which seems to be growing in some quarters. Under this view separateness and exclusiveness are also deprecated as inconsistent with the Gospel attitude. The claim, however, is that separateness and exclusiveness are not only unnecessary to a position apart from official correspondence, but that such a position affords the best possible means of avoiding them. It puts Friends as they come and go, in intervisitation, on the basis of personal merit. If they are evidently living epistles, if they have undoubted power in their service, it matters little what credentials they carry in their pocket—what meeting in fact they belong to. This at once must be recognized as a position of freedom, and under it a very wide fellowship is possible. If it seem narrow on the outside, at heart it has the possibilities of sincere breadth.

Has, then, the Philadelphia position worked to any good degree in this way? Any of us with a knowledge of the facts may be able to cite instances where it has failed to so work. The point of the question is, however, has it worked this way enough to make such breadth of fellowship easily possible under it? If so, is there any other plan with greater possibilities?

One can hardly mention concrete illustrations of the working of such a position without trespassing on delicate ground. It might be possible to give instances in such a way as to make them appear personal, and to reveal merely individual and local interpretations of the general position. The instances themselves may be real, but they may be such as the Society in an organic capacity in Philadelphia would condemn. All that can be said as a rejoinder to such thoughts is that a position may easily be better than the use made of it by individuals or by meetings. We should wish to be found pleading for the best that is in men or in the positions determined by men. To begin then with concrete cases, what can be said as to the body which we in Philadelphia look upon as first separated from us? Does our position in any way keep us open toward them? In the meeting where this article is written, for many years one of the ministers most frequently welcomed to the gallery was a member of that body. She preached the Gospel with undoubted power. Probably no one ever gave a more clear evangelical note amongst us. Her standing in our meeting, where she was so frequently called, was not a mere community feeling. It reflected the judgment of elders in that meeting closely in unity with their Quarterly and their Yearly Meeting. There may not be many instances similar to this. We at least have knowledge of some others. It represents a possibility in this consideration of no little significance.

So quite similarly in the so-called ultra conservative bodies there have been ministers and other members all the time during the past fifty years who have felt abundantly at home with us. Their meetings might record protests intended to reflect upon our "inconsistent" position, but the Friends themselves who came in a loving spirit found a welcome fellowship in our midst.

With the larger wing of the Society, the so-called progressives, one might feel in Philadelphia that such radical differences of practice have been developed as to exclude this possibility of association. The past fifty years have many instances of full and free acceptance of Friends from practically all of these meetings with freedom for service in Friendly lines. In fact, in all cases from the widely different meetings the question has not generally been one of official relationships at all. It has been a question of attainment on the part of a visitor under consideration in the life that makes a Friend, with natural expectation of variety in the living product. A separated situation as regards correspondence has thus proved to be a position of flexibility, and unless we are mistaken, a position of growing fellowship as well.

What more and what better than this need we expect under any system? Much more of course. By no means are any of us using our flexible position for all that is in it. But can we, on the other hand, expect a better result merely from a change in our position,—from official connection, for instance, with a chosen group of two, or at the best, three out of the five kinds of Friends? Does a Yearly Meeting with such official correspondence witness a growing fellowship in receiving Friends in all the bodies and in going to them? Some flexibility and some freedom doubtless are possible in both situations, but there are important points as indicated in the foregoing in which the Philadelphia position is one of decided advantage.

Flexibility and freedom, however, may be very well established as possibilities of a position taken by a religious body, while the body itself fails almost entirely in its organic relationships with other groups of the same family. Active fellowship amongst Christians is a test of life and of faith. Such active fellowship, as evidenced in epistles and intervisitation, have not been entirely lacking in the past fifty years, as we have indicated. An epistle to "All who bear the Name of Jesus," another to those descended from Friends, a recent letter to Australia and the reception and response to a salutation of London, are an index that our unique position is not one of actual isolation. There are instances, also, some eminent in rank of personal religious visits during the period we have been considering. These facts all indicate that we are not actually hampered by our position. Whether therefore we account for it (some gladly do) as a remarkable stroke of wise foresight, or otherwise, let us embrace its possibilities in a more earnest exercise to know the Divine leadings of individuals and of a body.

J. H. B.

THE QUAKER MESSAGE.

For a Word of Peace to the World through Free Fellowship, see the Story of the Quaker Message, by
 J. H. B., in the Messenger,
 Vol. 1, No. 1, p. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000.

—DOROTHY H. PRATT, In the Friends' Messenger.

EXTRACTS FROM DIARIES AND LETTERS OF RICHARD B. BROCKBANK.

(Continued from page 99.)

15-8-1869.—Last First-day Theo. Harris was here; he supplicated in our afternoon meeting. To-day N. R. and M. B. were at Moorhouse in the morning,—afternoon not a large meeting, about thirty-five, but to me a favored one,—bent the knee in prayer and just as I was resuming my seat, "I have heard of thee with the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth thee," vividly impressed my mind and I had to stand up therewith. Again I had to bow the knee in thanksgiving and praise as well as prayer. No one else engaged vocally, but they were felt near in the precious life. After tea went to N. Ritson's. M. Wilson, Jane Percival, Mgt. Brayton, N. R. and her mother,—a deeply interesting and instructive time. We read 65th and 67th psalms. A few words on prizing the visitations of Divine love first broke the silence commencing, "What is man that thou art mindful of him and the son of man that thou visitest him." N. Ritson, Jane Percival and M. Brayton all bowed the knee in supplication, thanksgiving and praise. I also followed, it was a time to be remembered, a time when the precious presence of the Lord was felt in our midst, contriving our hearts before Him. I have to record that I have not been forsaken. This morning at Moorhouse, "Thou shalt have no other Gods before me" brought me to my feet in testimony. Again in our afternoon meeting and three times this day I was enabled vocally to draw near in prayer, thanksgiving and praise, and fill my heart with gratitude to the Author of my being and of my spiritual life for his mercy and goodness and for his wonderful works to this one of the children of men.

On this day two weeks, the first of Eighth Month, 1869, we, my dear wife and self, attended the funeral of dear Emily Robinson, daughter of Cousins W. and E. Robinson of Whinell Hall, who died at Altonby on the Fifth-day previous. It was a solemn season. Theodore Harris was sweetly engaged in prayer and testimony, after which "It is I, be not afraid" impressed my mind so vividly and without seeking on my part that I found it was my place to stand up and point out that like the disciples in the boat, tossed on the stormy wave at night, we, in times of deep trouble, had difficulty in recognizing our Master, but his voice with these few simple words enables us to realize who it is.

We had left our little meeting in faith and not without previous misgivings. It was a great comfort to me that after we had some refreshment Cousin Sarah asked us relatives to go in and sit down before the Lord. I looked at my watch and found it was just 3 P. M., this being the time of our little afternoon meeting at Burgh. I was much comforted to sit down and wait upon the Lord at the same time and deeply was I engaged on their behalf and my prayers were answered. They had a sweet, solemn, silent meeting, about forty present. N. R. also was away for her health. So that they were quite left, and yet not left but gathered and comforted.

1-1-1870.—Our afternoon meetings at Burgh are still kept up and still owned by the precious feeling of the presence of the Lord. Praise be his holy name. For the last four or five weeks they have been held in my kitchen, the room at the barn being too cold for this season of the year. M. B. has regularly attended our meeting at Moorhouse besides the afternoon ones. Last First-day she bowed the knee in a few simple words of supplication. N. R. and J. P. also come regularly when well enough, but they are both delicate. The attendance since we commenced in the kitchen has not been quite so large, say twenty-five to thirty, but the weather and colds have a good deal to do with it. We cannot but regret that the attendance on the part of our men is so meager. Many hindering things succeed in drawing them away from that state which can sit down before the Lord in humble dependence on Him and Him alone.

Our meetings have been very much favored, and I do humbly hope that some have been drawn nearer to their Saviour. How can it be otherwise? Great evidence have we had that the Lord has been present with us both by visitations of his love to our souls individually, and by sending his servants to proclaim his continued love towards us.

Jan. Owens was here from Iowa recently—an afternoon meeting at 3 in our kitchen and one at Moorhouse at 7, both favored seasons, the former specially so.

16-6-1870.—R. Doeg had a public meeting appointed in our granary meeting-room at Burgh. During the meeting I felt it much on my mind to invite all to come on Fifth-day evening at half past seven, the same hour, to wait upon and worship God. Beginning with "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren," I had to remind them that under a feeling of this great truth a few had been led to draw together on First-day afternoons in this place to wait upon and worship God, that some who really came for this purpose had felt these seasons to be times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Whilst others whose eyes and expectations had been outward had been disappointed and had turned away. My desire was to invite all to come from their work in their working-clothes to wait upon the Lord under a full belief that He would not disappoint any who came truly to wait upon Him.

I have felt this a very serious step, for although N. R. and J. P. have both expressed a similar desire, coming upon me as it did in this meeting, I felt afterwards as though I might be introducing Friends into some difficulty in the matter. In this respect it was a relief to me to remember that both Robt. Doeg and H. Scott were there and approved of both the matter and the manner. And in addition and most important peace to my own mind was the result of this further stepping in faith.

4-7-1870.—Since then two evening meetings have been held, and though I have gone to them in much weakness they have been seasons of profitable exercise to me, and my soul has been prostrated in humbled admiration before the Lord for his condescending love and mercy therein. How fervent are my desires that I may be preserved from marring the Lord's work in myself or in others. How I do daily need the care and guidance of Him who alone can thus preserve me.

7-8-1870, First-day.—Daily, yea hourly, lessons are granted me that mercy and truth are following me. This morning, walking on the front with my dear wife and little ones, my mind was drawn towards a young man in the village, J. P., and I felt inclined to go and speak to him. Going towards the gate, he and two others were coming down the road. I spoke to him by his name and he stopped, and though I did not feel that I had much to say to him I told him that I felt that he knew and was often shown that he should seek the Lord and spend his First-days differently than he now did. He at once admitted the truth of this, and then I had to tell him the danger of slighting these visitations of the love of God in youth, and that we may see so many instances about us, that when people get further advanced in years they only find it more difficult to give up to what is good, and get hardened in their sins. This too he acknowledged the truth of. Small as seems this little service, I felt the tender love of my Master extended to me after in a way that convinced me that even this was not beyond or beneath his notice. Oh that He may turn this youth to himself to his own glory! I had to tell him that I often felt that he and other young men in the village missed much that was for their good by the careless way in which they spent their First-days, and how I desired that they would come and wait upon the Lord.

10-2-1871.—Our meetings both on First and Fifth-days are still held, though often small on account of the weather, etc., in the winter. This afternoon there was a considerable number, twenty at least. Being held in our kitchen in winter, (the granary being too cold) I don't think people come quite so freely, or it may be the weather, which is very trying for old people and delicate ones. This afternoon, going as I often, indeed generally, do under a feeling of great emptiness, my soul was filled to overflowing with a sense of the goodness and mercy of God in Christ Jesus, and of the insensibility that often prevails even in religious meetings, and had to stand up with "He marvelled at their unbelief," and in a searching and awful manner to my own feeling was led to point out that if we did believe in this Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph, as He of whom Moses the prophet spoke, we should believe his words that where two or three are gathered in His name, He is there in the midst of them, and that without Him we can do nothing; and deeply in earnest we should be in pressing through the crowd to touch, it might be, but the hem of his garment. And if any were disposed to ask, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" we should answer, "Come and see." How soon Nathaniel had to acknowledge Him when he heard Him say, before Philip called thee when thou wast under the fig tree I saw thee. This proof of his Divinity, of his all-seeing, all-powerful vision, was enough for this Israelite in whom there was no guile. And if we, in these meetings, realized his presence opening secret things which we had done before the view of our souls, and giving us eyes to see our condition in his sight, and revealing to us his presence and power, bringing down our souls into humble prostration before Him, what responsibility was brought upon us. Were we not comparable to the cities of Judah, which saw his mighty works whom the men of Nineveh should rise up and condemn in the day of judgment because they had repented at the preaching of Jonah, and beheld a greater than Jonah is here? I did not want them to come and hear me, but to come and see and realize for themselves the power and presence of the Lord. Great was my sense of the awfulness of this language, and great my exercise and fulness of feeling on behalf of myself and those present that each one should realize for himself or herself, so that they might say with Job, "I have heard of thee with the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth thee," and be as he was, brought down to repent in dust and ashes. That we should then realize our need of a Saviour and be enabled if we were in earnest to taste and see how good the Lord is, and to know the blood of Jesus to cleanse from evil. That we should not forget, but like the Israelites bring up stones of memorial from the place where we had seen the display of the Lord's power, that we and our children should know who had delivered us, etc. Much more, a full clearance and a baptizing season it was, both in testimony and when my knees were bowed in prayer. I record, "Praised be the Lord who has been, and still is, my Helper and my God."

13-6-1872.—I often feel how much more frequent my memoranda ought to be—were I to record all the Lord's dealings with, and mercies to me, I should have to keep a daily, yea hourly, record.

I have this year for the first time since 1861 attended the Yearly Meeting. There was much of deep interest and much to feel as to the present state of our Society. I went with no preparation, only a few days previous could fix to go, and needful arrangements occupied my mind much during those few days. On the third day I joined our dear friends R. and M. Hall and their two daughters, Jane and Sarah, they branching off at Wilsden for Hampstead Heath and I going on to Euston and to Jos. Armfield's. Next morning meeting for worship, and afternoon first sitting of Yearly Meeting. I have penned a pretty full account to my dear Jane R. (his wife), therefore I need not go over the same ground.

There was a feeling with me of shrinking from being recognized as one of those who were grieved for the afflictions of Joseph the precious son of Jacob, whose life his brethren sought, cast into a pit, drew him out only to sell him into bondage, found favor in his Master's eyes, was tempted and withstood the tempter, falsely accused and thrown into prison, was there remembered of the Lord, brought out and made a saviour of many and even of his brethren, and all his father's house, to keep them alive in famine. Under this feeling I wished to go down as an impartial judge so that I might consider for myself how I should act. I still felt something of the burden which I had borne more or less since 1861. But I did not wish to be prejudiced, I wanted if I could to feel my brethren near to me in the precious love and unity of the Gospel.

(To be continued.)

For "THE FRIEND."
ENTHUSIASM FOR JESUS.

MAX L. REICH.

We have somehow to account for the existence of Christianity in the world. Whatever be our attitude towards it, whether we regard it in a friendly or unfriendly light, the fact of Christianity is too stupendous to be ignored. It has at all times been impossible for men to leave this subject alone.

Like the river beheld by the prophet in his vision, growing in volume in its onward flow without requiring to be fed by tributary streams, Christianity has been flowing through the centuries, irrigating nations and races far from its original source. We might well ask for the secret of its origin, tracing this mysterious river to its hidden spring.

To obtain an answer to this inquiry we are necessarily shut up to the records which are known among us as the New Testament. These books of surprisingly brief compass are the only literature which professes to throw light on this subject. I do not ask at this point that the inquirer should accept the divine inspiration and authority of these records as a priori argument. It is enough for the moment to approach them with an open mind, and in the spirit of an explorer who is keen on tracing a mighty river to the source which gave it birth.

(1)

"This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith," are words found in a document which is understood to be a treatise written by the apostle John about the year 90 of our present era. Regarded simply as an historical statement they arrest attention. Should modern scholarship deny their Johannine authorship and bring these words down later in the history of Christian literature, they only make them the more remarkable. They are a challenge. What is this world-conquering faith? Accepted at the lowest computation it had already been in existence some sixty years, or two generations. How did it originate?

(2)

The Christian faith according to its own account of its history claims to have originated in enthusiasm for Jesus. The synoptic Gospels give us the story. They relate in simple words how faith in Jesus first awoke in the hearts of men. They did not arrive at it through study. It was a spontaneous, enthusiastic leaping forward of heart confidence to a Person. It was an experience, a spiritual emotion. The instincts of broken, puzzled, lost and despairing men and women turned to Jesus as a dove to its mate. Theology apart, the Gospels present us with the irascible figure of One who as He moved about in Galilee and Judaea somehow inspired withered and weary hearts with faith in His Person, with a confidence that laughed at the impossible. They brought to Him, they felt they could, an affection that has certainly never been felt for any one else either before or since in the history of mankind. In this new feeling for Jesus they brought their sick and obsessed to Him, as well as their heart hunger and world-weariness. Ask them to give an account of this enthusiasm? Who is this Jesus to inspire such feeling? I doubt whether their answers would have satisfied our theologians. But in the presence of Jesus everything was different. Sadness, sin, sickness vanished before his face as bats and owls before the rising sun. They experienced with Him an exhilaration and purification that lifted them out of want into the region of the free. Then Him self declared that He was able to "redeem their body," spiritual or physical. Because of their faith in Him, "his faith" saved them. "He told the woman whom He had recovered to purify and spiritual health. " Thy faith hath made thee whole." He said to another woman who could not be liberated the divine virtue in Him for the healing of her malady.

It was not that a new creed had come into the world, or a new philosophy, or new ethics merely. The faith of the earliest disciples was, reduced to its simplest elements, heart-attachment to a Person—confidence in his ability. Gradually they were led on to know Him. Their intercourse with Him was a succession of surprises. They went from light to light. Their faith was not an "article" but an experience. It was a fire kindled by Jesus in their hearts. It had opened the door into a new world for them, in the light of which their old world was no longer the same. They were as the children of the bride-chamber. Poor, lowly, ignorant—the most of them were peasants and fishermen, tax-gatherers and excommunicate, women whose sin had outclassed them—but now they were in the very kingdom of heaven. Let them define their faith? They had something deeper than definitions. They did—some of them—confess Him to be the Christ, the Son of the living God. But their confession had its roots in their experience. The creed did not produce the experience, but the experience the creed. Faith and enthusiasm for Jesus were synonyms to them.

And this "faith" was the genesis of Christianity in the world.

(3)

But this faith received a rude shock. Each one of the four recorders dwells on the collapse of the disciples in the presence of the crucifixion. To them it appeared as a terrible tragedy. It quite extinguished their enthusiasm. It left them a dispirited and disappointed band.

It is not easy for us to quite enter into their feelings. Jesus has changed for us all our values. He has transformed for us the badge of shame into the symbol of glory. But to his first followers the cross spelled disaster and defeat. It meant that they had been the victims of a delusion. True, He had carefully prepared them for the inevitable. He had even told them of the rising again after the death on the cross. But probably they had understood the Master's words in a mystical sense alone, like so many other of his deeper teachings. When the blow fell it broke up their fondest hopes. They awoke out of their messianic dream. The irony of the crucifixion destroyed the delusion they had hugged.

(4)

But a marvelous thing happened. A few days only lasted this dejection, this eclipse of faith. A few days of melancholy and then their enthusiasm burst forth again in a lustre and intensity greater than before. The scattered band reformed its ranks. What had taken place? Something tremendous must have transpired to have effected such a miraculous change in the feelings of the disciples. How shall we explain it? We have their own word for it—they have sealed it with their martyr blood—their Lord had come back to them: He was risen again; the grave was robbed of its prey; they had seen Him. He had spoken to them, breathed on them, given them "many infallible proofs" of his victory over death—the Magdalene, the two on the way to Emmaus, Simon Peter, the eleven, Thomas, the seven on the lake of Galilee, 500 brethren at once—all unite their testimony: "The Lord is risen indeed." That is their explanation of the phenomenon of the recovery of the enthusiasm for Jesus they had before men had nailed Him to a felon's cross.

Would a subjective vision, a fancied apparition due to an hysterical state of mind have produced such an effect? Was their resurrection faith based on a ghost story? Were they deceived if not exactly deceivers? These questions have been asked and answered over and over again during the last nineteen centuries. One thing we do know—their faith, their enthusiasm for Jesus more than re-asserted itself. If the greatest test, the crucifixion of their Master, could not annihilate it; if it succeeded in rising superior to this contradiction; what other terrors were there in the heights or in the depths, in things present or things to come, that their faith could not conquer? The darkest night of sorrow had changed into the morning of unclouded joy. The Bridegroom had come back to them, and their joy no man should take away again.

And thus, if what they had first found in Jesus had kindled their faith, the resurrection of Jesus rekindled it, and gave them an enthusiasm and a message which had in it a principle whereby they were able to overcome both the allurements and the terrors of the world.

(5)

But one more test their faith had to surmount before it could be launched upon the world of humanity: the final disappearance of Jesus into the unseen. They saw Him last on Olivet's brow. With uplifted hands of benediction He was parted from them. But this second bereavement left them undisturbed. The resurrection appearances had been fully tested by them and proven trustworthy. The most cautious and skeptical of them had fallen adoring at the feet of the Risen One calling out: "My Lord, and my God." They returned to Jerusalem with great joy and were continually in the temple praising and blessing God. Back to the very city where their Lord had been hounded to his death. It might be their turn next. There to wait for the mantle of their Master by which He had done his mighty works to fall upon them, the promise of the Father, the endowment and baptism of the Holy Ghost. Thus only could they effectually witness to the most astounding event in the history of humanity, the record of universal death broken by One who, if He was indeed alive again, must have the power to save to the uttermost all who turn to Him in their hour of need.

Hitherto they had kept their discovery a secret, but ten days after the final disappearance into the invisible world of their Lord, their enthusiasm burst forth in an all-devouring flame. It could no longer be contained. They were set on fire by it and Jerusalem came together to see them burn; thousands of the spectators themselves catching the heaven-born flame. The Holy Ghost had come, Christ's spiritual parousia had taken the place of his former outward presence. Their very characters underwent a marked transformation. The Christ who had before lived and worked and spoken before them, now lived and worked and spoke within them and through them.

And this explains the intensified enthusiasm of the post-pentecostal days.

(6)

And it was no mere flash in the pan. Long after, when the first experiences with Jesus in Galilee, the rapture afterwards of his resurrection, and the subsequent pentecostal effusion, had become a sacred memory, the enthusiasm these three stages of experience had kindled burned on with undimmed brightness and undiminished intensity. Christianity did not prove a nine days' wonder. The apostles declared that they had not really lost Jesus. They had not to look back upon the history of the past to realize something of his reality. Not only on the throne of the universe was He, but with them, in Jerusalem, Samaria and the regions beyond, He walked as truly and blessedly, yea more so, as in those far-off idyllic Galilean days.

Wonderful enough they succeeded in imparting their enthusiasm to multitudes who had not seen what they said had been beheld by their eyes, nor heard the music of that voice which had become to them the guiding voice of the Good Shepherd. The disciples of the second generation were brought into the same faith. They were by no means an inferior order of Christians. They could be written to in language such as this: "Whom having not seen ye love, in whom though now ye see Him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." The spiritual presence of the Christ had the same effect as the outward, yea was more effectual because of its inwardness. It burned to white heat in the Jew Saul of Tarsus and made him a vessel to carry Christ about, the apostle of the indwelling Christ, as the first apostles had been eye-witnesses of his humiliation and resurrection. The revelation of the Son within him was as vivid to him as the revelation granted to the first apostles on the mount of transfiguration. And he succeeded in making Gentiles see in his Lord the wisdom and power of God, to whom the story of Jesus would otherwise have only appeared as the utter failure of a Jewish artisan to be a successful religious reformer. He was not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ when in Diana—worshipping Ephesus, learned Athens or licentious Corinth. He carried into the welter of the Roman empire, sick of its inventions, mad upon its lusts, drunk with its military pride, the precious secret in his own heart. Beneath the garb of poverty that blessed Christ-intoxicated man traveled about sharing with others his secret—how to find rest, holiness, victory, eternal life, the knowledge of God, righteousness, peace and joy, liberty and heavenly dignity as sons of God, in that Christ who could kindle in their hearts that same enthusiastic faith which He had produced in those who turned to Him with their diseases and sorrows in the days of his flesh. On what hypothesis can we account for his epistles? What was at the back of his letter to the Philippians? What must the Christ have been to that man who poured out his heart in such glowing descriptions of his glories—human and divine! And what must He have become to that Gentile company to whom those outpourings were addressed, unknown and unseen as He was in the flesh!

(7)

The secret of a world-overcoming faith to-day lies in the fact that we have more than a tradition of the origin of that faith, more than a history of its rise. We have more than a recorded Jesus, the echoes of whose sayings have come down to us through the corridors of time. We need the record; we are more than grateful for its preservation. We have no fear what the most exacting criticism may make of it. Whatever new discovery may yet leap to light that record never shall be shamed. We feel it has given for all time a portraiture of our Saviour and Lord we can gaze on with adoring faith and love. But that which makes us understand the enthusiasm for Jesus its pages speak about, and which was the historical start of that beneficent river of life and love which in greater and greater volume is pouring itself over the continents, is that the self-same faith has been kindled in our own hearts from the self-same Furnace of Divine love incarnate whom we confess before the visible and invisible world as our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

"This one morning we reserved to refresh the readers' memory upon the subject of prayer for ministers, and we do most earnestly implore every Christian household to grant the fervent request, 'Brethren, pray for us.' (1 Thessalonians, v. 25.)

"Our work is solemnly momentous, involving weal or woe to thousands; we treat with souls for God on eternal business, and our word is either a savor of life unto life, or of death unto death. A very heavy responsibility rests upon us, and it will be no small mercy if at the last we be found clear of the blood of all men. As officers in Christ's army, we are the especial mark of the enmity of men and devils—they watch for our halting and labor to take us by the heels. Our calling involves us in temptations from which you are exempt, above all it too often draws us from our personal enjoyment of truth into a ministerial and official consideration of it. We meet with many knotty cases and our wits are at a non plus—we observe very sad backslidings and our hearts are wounded—we see millions perishing and our spirits sink. We long to be useful both to saints and sinners, therefore, dear friends, intercede for us with our God. Ask again and again that we may be the earthen vessels into which the Lord may put the treasures of the Gospel. In the name of Jesus, we beseech you 'brethren, pray for us!'"—CHARLES H. SPURGEON in Morning by Morning.

LEAVEN THE WHOLE LUMP.
Bread not off thy life a piece for heaven,
Or large or small;
But pour the soul of service in for leaven:
And raise it all.

—FREDERICK LANGBRIDGE.

A LETTER FROM THE WALDENSIAN VALLEY.

II.

BY HERBERT WELSH.

In beginning my second letter from this beautiful mountain valley of northern Italy, I look back over the experiences of almost one month's residence here. The slight shower that fell on the afternoon of my night arrival here has had no successor, much to the distress of hillside farmers. Their potato crop is said to be a failure, while wheat, also, has suffered from the prolonged drought. But how beautiful are these golden bands of the wheat fields, which gleam in scattered patches high up on the mountain side, surrounded by the dark, rich green of the chestnut groves, or, higher up still, by the rugged jutting of purple rocks! Above are the vast solemn lines of the mountain peaks, so varied in aspect, according to the weather, or the time of day or night under which they are seen. They produce a marked effect on the imagination and feeling, and are continual reminders of the tragic events in the centuries gone by, of which they were the theatre and the witnesses. In taking, one evening, a stroll in the valley with my friend and host, B. Gardiol, the Waldensian Pastor of Bobbio, he pointed out to me a ledge of rocks, perhaps two hundred feet up the side of the mountain, close to the village, where, in the great persecution (and the last, happily) of 1686, many of the Waldensians had been hurled to death by their enemies, some of the poor people caught on the branches of trees during their fall and lingered there in misery for several days. Another time, when we were walking quite at the head of the valley, where the highest mountains shut it in, B. Gardiol pointed out to me a long, precipitous line of cliffs where the Waldensians took refuge during the winter, and where they were able to maintain themselves against the troops of Marshal Catinet, commander of the French troops of Louis XIV. The Waldensians dug holes and caves in the earth for shelter and warmth.

The thought has been constantly in my mind, during my stay here, that use ought to be made of this rich and fascinating historic past in some well-arranged and sustained effort to attract to these valleys, for brief excursions or for summer residence, the best class of English and American tourists. The sites of these great events of the past, if clearly marked by an inscription cut in the rock, or by a tablet, would certainly be of great interest to visitors. But as it is at present, unless one had a well-informed guide, like my good friend, Pastor Gardiol, to point out the objects of local interest, he might wander about endlessly, admiring indeed the beauty of the scenery and rejoicing in the stimulating mountain atmosphere, but ignorant of the deeper historic interest attached to the very spot on which he stood. "Le rampart de Cranswell," for example, the solid stone wall, iron-clamped with iron rods, the road transversely not a hundred yards from the house. There is nothing to explain its meaning to a visitor. The Great Protector had built at the instance of a delegation of men from Bobbio, who went all the way to London to visit him, after a great inundation had done much harm. The wall was built to deflect the water, in case of a similar disaster, into the lower part of the valley. It is also an interesting illustration of how close must have been the sympathy existing in those days of fierce religious antagonism between the widely separated little groups of democratic sects, and the foundation for the kind principles of religious and political freedom of England and France. Roman Catholic aristocracy, and the despotic power of Charles and State in its determination to suppress the Waldensians, had to be met by opponents.

There is an excellent hotel here, "The Michelin," pretty and attractive in its exterior appearance and surroundings, and well equipped by its proprietor of that name, and his wife and daughter. The tables are excellent. But this season if by any means notably had few visitors. There is also another hotel, "The Flora," and to be very well kept. It would be of great benefit to the valley, with its mountain population of poor, and, I fear, often imperfectly nourished people, if these valleys were to become popular with English and American tourists. They have not only the historic interest to recommend them—by no means—but there are endless excursions on foot, on mule back, to make appeal to trampers and climbers. My month's residence here has been a very quiet one, passed almost wholly in daily artistic work, but that has given me a good chance to see certain parts of the country to which I have gone with sketching materials and camp-stool. One of my favorite haunts has been "Le Vallée des Charbonniers," or, in plain English, "The charcoal-burners valley." It takes about twenty minutes of quick tramping to get to it. One crosses the little wooden bridge over "The Torrent," following down our valley toward Tour Pellice, for ten minutes or more, and then the road mounts the high hill running through a group of old slate-roofed Waldensian houses. After a short, stiff pull, one finds himself in this wild, beautiful valley of the charcoal-burners. The mountains rise up, richly clad with chestnut trees on the lower slopes, and bright here and there with the familiar little wheat fields, to a great height on either side. The narrow road, at its highest point, looks down through grassy slopes, rapidly descending, shaded by great chestnut trees, or, at points over precipices of sheer rock, to a magnificent mountain torrent, clear, sparkling, which boils and foams over and under giant boulders. In the distance, and in the direction where the road loses itself, the valley seems to be hemmed in by three imposing lofty mountain peaks, one of these, that to the extreme left, is on its summit streaked with snow. Crossing the stream by a tiny shepherd's bridge, so as to have the full shade of the trees for my work, I passed here morning after morning of these sunny days. A most satisfying spot, where the music of the stream never ceased, and where its rapid current attracted an unfailling breeze!

The First-day morning services here in the old church are delightful. B. Gardiol, a man of strong, simple character and of learning, who has passed thirty-five years of noble effort among these mountain people, is a really eloquent preacher. He is eloquent, not in the sense of florid oratory, but with conviction, earnestness and evangelical truth. The congregation, small at this season, for so many are away in the mountains with their cattle, is always interesting—the women, young and old, in their black and grey dresses and becoming "coiffures" and the men sunburned and hardy. In the afternoons at three o'clock there is a simple and most attractive service on the hillside, under the shade of the great chestnut trees.

But enough for the present; in a third letter I hope to tell of a visit made last week across the mountains to the neighboring valley of Prall, and of other things and thoughts suggested by this most interesting visit to the Waldensian country that I am about to leave.

FAITH.

O the things of time, the things of time, how they steal the heart away
From the lowly walk, and the humble trust, and the spirit's steadfast stay;
We strive and seek, and we long to keep the door of the inner part,
But the tempter waits, and he offers his baits, and betrays the yielding heart!

Then what will keep, O what will keep, in temptation's bitter hour,
When the willing soul would fain resist, but the flesh hath not the power?
Say what will keep from the downward path, and the error the spirit hates—

From the things we would not, and yet we do—from the sorrow that sin creates?

O, there is a faith ('tis the gift of God), which can fetter the stoutest will,
Which even can break the tempter's might, and the rising tumult still—
It is not in pomp, it is not in words, it is not in sounding deed,
But it cometh in secret power to aid the soul in its greatest need.
It is when apart from all human trust, we sink into contrite prayer,
And ask of the Father of spirits his help—our staff of support is THERE.
And it quickens the soul when its strength is small, and it feels no might of its own.

For it shows us indeed, that our safety and light, must come from heaven alone.

Then the things of time, the things of time, will not lead the heart away
From its steadfast love, and its lowly hope, and its trust in God, its stay,
But its idol joys, and its dearest joys, will be laid in weakness down,
And the incense shall rise from the altar of Faith, before the heavenly throne.

—The British Friend, 1853.

EXTRACTS FROM THE JOURNAL OF SAMUEL MORRIS.

(Concluded from page 75.)

Tenth Month 10, 1893.—The reign of Lunalilo was short, and while displaying many good qualities, he had imbibed a craving for intoxicating drinks that seemed uncontrollable. His efforts to break the habit were sometimes touching to witness, shutting himself in close confinement for long periods, and with so much success that his friends hoped he had mastered the evil. On some public occasion, however, one of his so-called friends insisted that the king's health should be drunk, in token of his goodwill for the people. The poor fellow protested earnestly, but finally yielded to the pressure. The craving returned with all its power and his death followed soon after.

P. M.—Amos Jones called, and towards four o'clock Wm. Thomson with his little daughter Alice on horseback, and a horse and saddle apiece for us, were at the door, to invite us to ride with them. We thus had an enjoyable scramble by bridge paths up the "Punch Bowl," and along the ridge, till we reached nearly the summit of "Tantalus," whence we had a grand outlook over the city and surrounding country, with a glorious sunset in the ocean beyond. Amos Jones and Walter Lee spent the evening with us very pleasantly.

11th.—I laid in a stock of Hawaiian photographs, while Jonathan made some needed arrangements for our departure.

Quite a throng had gathered at the quay, and to give the Australia a parting salute a full brass band did its part; several of our newly-formed friends had come to say a last farewell and give us their best wishes, and as we swung into the harbor and approached the handsome man-of-war Philadelphia, her band played for us "Auld Lang Syne" most sweetly, and the marines, of whom there are upwards of 400, saluted us as we passed.

Further on lay the unfortunate Miocera, still floundering upon her rocky bed. The captain and crew gave their old comrades a lusty cheer, to which there was given a hearty response, yet we could but feel sympathy for the poor fellows thus left behind, and not the least for the captain, who has probably commanded his last ship, and must for the rest of his life deplore his own imprudence.

We soon encountered rough seas which told upon the ship's company generally, ourselves included. A couple of soda biscuits were enough for my dinner, and even these the stomach would not long accept.

14th.—I was pleased and edified with the clear views expressed by Dr. Frazier as to the position of the Holy Spirit, and His work upon the hearts of men. He was emphatic as to the need of a fuller recognition of these by the professing Church, saying, "It is spiritual power and guidance that are greatly wanting in the present day." Our old friend, the Oceanic, passed us on her way to Honolulu. The evening grew quite squally, though I had succeeded in doing some writing.

15th, First-day.—Very rough sea. We and our fellow passengers generally half sick throughout the day. No profitable religious service seemed practicable, although Dr. Frazier, ourselves and other serious persons had desired otherwise.

18th.—My faithful companion being anxious to reach home as early as might be, in order to attend the marriage of his son John to Alice Evans, it seemed needful for him to take the earliest train east. I, on the other hand, feeling that some little service for me at Santa Clara and its neighborhood was yet unaccomplished, inclined to remain two or three days longer in California.

19th.—The returns in fruit are marvelous. Apricots have been already gathered, and the bulk of the prune crop has been dried, but we were interested in seeing something of the latter process. This consists in simply dipping the fruit slightly in thin lye, and then spreading on large trays upon the ground, where it is turned from time to time to the fuller benefit of the sun.

20th.—With Hannah Bean, and Eliza Mills, who is a sister to Joel Bean, I visited the "Leland Stanford, Jr., University," near San José. This is the outgrowth of a munificent bequest by the late Governor Stanford of California, who designed it as a memorial for his deceased son. The full value of the estate devised for establishing and maintaining the institution is scarcely known, but is estimated to be immense.

The buildings and grounds have been planned on a most extensive and liberal scale. A comparatively small part of the ultimate design has as yet been carried out, but the work is steadily progressing, and the faculty have been selected with a view to making it one of the leading centers of learning in this country. Not only are liberal salaries paid the officers, but facilities of various kinds are afforded whereby worthy students of small means and both sexes may receive the benefits of the university at a very low cost.

Returning to College Park, the afternoon was partly occupied by a simple birthday entertainment for one of the dear little girls at the home of Chas. Cox, which adjoins Joel Bean's, and thus the fond parents are enabled to have their daughter Cathrine who is married to C. Cox close beside them, to their mutual happiness. The evening was passed quietly, Jas. Bean joining our circle.

22nd, First-day.—At our meeting this morning some sixty persons came together. I was led to revive the query of the apostle, "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or nakedness, or famine, or peril, or sword?" To this he promptly replies—"Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors, through Him that hath loved us." While our faith is not tested as was that of the early Christians, it is nevertheless often tried by close proofs of our love and allegiance. These may, and perhaps most frequently, come from the side of the world toward which we are so strongly yet almost unconsciously drawn. Against its seductive influences the disciple of to-day needs continually to watch and pray, for his Master has emphatically declared, "My kingdom is not of this world," and again the "Prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in Me." He needs, too, to withstand a harsh, censorious spirit within the Church itself, that tends to coldness toward the brethren, indifference for the cause of Christ, and finally estrangement, if not separation from Christ and his love. Here the enemy of all good finds entrance, and readily foments discord and strife among those who should be standing shoulder to shoulder in the work of the Lord, and bound to one another in the hope and fellowship of the Gospel.

Joel Bean had good service, and Burt Davy, a young Friend connected with a school at Oakland, offered a few lively remarks. Our meeting felt to me a refreshing season.

Dined by invitation with George Jones and his wife, Wilhelmina. The former is a son of Benjamin Jones, who makes his home with his children here, but is in fast declining health. The loss of his acceptable services in the ministry as well as his tender, loving spirit, makes his withdrawal from the little meeting keenly felt. Geo. and Wilhelmina Jones are evidently filling a useful place among their brethren, and keep an open door for the stranger who may come among them. Anna Vallee, an interesting, thoughtful young woman, Burt Davy and others were my fellow guests on this occasion.

Took supper with Samuel Brun, Jr., his wife and now widowed mother; Samuel Brun, the father, having deceased since I was last under their roof. The family were originally from Fontanes in the south of France, the parents having come to the States to join two of their sons who had settled here. I had some word of Christian sympathy and cheer to leave with the sorrowing ones, which seemed to their comfort.

23rd.—At the close of our morning meal, I was sweetly led into a little Gospel service, tending, as I trust, to strengthen the faith and courage of my dear hosts in their work for our common Master.

Taking leave of the inmates of the two homes in near love and unity, I went with Joel and Jas. Bean to attend a conference of Evangelical ministers to be held at San José, the purpose of which was the furtherance of the higher interests of the community, and the suppression of certain evil influences which it is to be feared have of late been gaining ground. Joel Bean here read a thoughtful and carefully prepared essay, which seemed to find special favor with several of his hearers, while some of its points were sharply criticized by others. Upon my being introduced to the company, way was very freely made for me to express a few thoughts and feelings that had sprung up in me as I sat amongst them. These seemed to meet with a cordial response from several of the brethren.

Joel and Jas. Bean now accompanied me to a hasty lunch, when I took the 12.40 train for "Frisco." The early afternoon was spent in starting my luggage and securing tickets by the 3 p. m. train for the Atlantic seaboard.

25th. By early morning we had reached Ogden, on the borders of Utah, where we halted while a good breakfast was disposed of. All day we were crossing Wyoming, a hot, uncomfortable ride. The car windows were two thicknesses of glass, about two inches apart, as 'twas said, to keep the dust out of the car, but the outer pane was so grimy that objects beyond were scarcely discernible. For the same reason no windows could be opened, and I observed the dust from below working its way in little whiffs through the joints of the car floor, as hour after hour we whirled monotonously along. Such traveling is wearisome in the extreme, but I comforted myself with the thought that we were nevertheless speeding eastward, and thus the night found me a day's journey nearer home.

26th. Nebraska. The ride of to-day contrasted very pleasantly with that of yesterday. Broad fields of ripened corn stretched on every side and great herds of cattle roamed over plains of rich grass land. All was suggestive of one of the more important centers of food supply for the growing millions of the American continent, if not the world.

27th. The sights I now most longed to see were my own "Sweet Home," still a thousand miles away, and the loved ones there. Weighed against the wonders of "the Columbian Exposition" the latter faded into insignificance, so, with a heart and happy heart, at five o'clock, I took the "Chicago Limited Express" of the Penna. Railroad for Philadelphia. The very name of the train sounded sweetly familiar.

28th. Good Pennsylvania towns were now passed in quick succession. Scarcely had I set foot on the platform at Broad Street Station when our dear George was at my side; a few steps brought us to a happy group, consisting of the beloved wife, daughter and sister, with brothers Elliston and Charles, none of whom were again dimmed as they had been when on this 27th. I parted from the same loving hearts so long ago, but the sweet tears of gratitude and joy, we soon reached the home that to all the world I feel which I had never seen so much seemed to be my own.

APPRECIATION WITHOUT RITZ. The appreciation of the late Dr. Thomas Hooker which appears in the current Commonwealth by Harold Anson, M. A., co-editor with Canon Scott Henderson of that magazine is of considerable interest to Friends, and especially. The writer says:

There was a man who had never known the Sacrament of Baptism, but who was beyond all manner of doubt "born again," and seeing every day the Kingdom of God, here was one who had never partaken of the Eucharist and of the Fellowship of the Heavenly Bread.

The hearty recognition by a strange churchman of the fact that there are other means of grace as efficacious in this instance as those provided by his own system for the upbuilding of the individual character is not limited to one exceptional instance, but is a general one, that the simple and unadorned, but profound spiritual vision common to the Friends of all ages, the same radiant love of education, the same frank and unfeigned utterance, the so simple and beautiful common sense, the same freedom of one's individuality, the sturdy English character, the same respect for the individual as such; they do not fear England what St. Jerome says to the Latin tongue; they show us the child of one's own kind, honestly free transformed by the indwelling of Christ.

—The Friend (London).

FROM SALT LAKE TO PHILADELPHIA.

In its early days the Denver and Rio Grande R. R. was not considered by timid travelers a very safe one. Sometimes, especially in winter, the rocks would come crashing down onto the track and stop the trains. But it is different now. It is a very safe highway, particularly considering how wild a territory it goes through. For hundreds of miles it winds between great canyon walls and up and down heavy grades. There is no cessation to mountain views. Great rocky natural fortresses, scrub-oaks, gentle wild flowers, and troops of pine trees, tiny meadows, and stupendous peaks glittering in the sunlight and crowned with eternal snow delight the tourist hour by hour. No transcontinental trip is complete without including this railroad in the itinerary, for one direction at least.

My trip from Salt Lake to Colorado Springs by this route was uneventful. The usual alternately happy and nervous tourists abounded. The scenery seemed finer than ever. There are one hundred and fifty-five peaks over 13,000 feet high in the State of Colorado and you catch glimpses of not a few of them from the train. The great "Collegiate Range," made up of peaks over 14,000 feet high, and named after some of the large American Universities, always presents a splendid front. The "Royal Gorge" has been so often written about that it need not be described here. But the eager, rapid river, dashing over huge boulders beneath the railroad bridge, which here runs lengthwise over the stream in the narrow pass, and the massive walls of rock two thousand feet high on either side, overlooking all, makes an impressive scene.

What shall we say of Colorado Springs? My family always make fun of my love for that beautiful city. Nestled close by Pike's Peak, under a generally sapphire sky, surrounded by charming scenery, with miles of attractive homes and broad streets, it constitutes a rare unit in urban excellences.

I spent over two weeks here. It is a grand place to rest in. Probably my chief enjoyment was found in solitary rambles around the Garden of the Gods and its locality. Neither is Mushroom Park to be despised. They do not grow mushrooms there. That weird section takes its name from the numerous huge rocks, generally bright red in color, which are shaped like mushrooms, with narrow stems and broad, flat tops. Day by day I acquired fresh vigor wandering, or reclining, on the hard red surfaces of stony ground, and inhaling pure ozone, whilst the purples, reds, blues, and greens of bountiful nature delighted the eye.

There have been so many people physically "made over" in Colorado that they cannot help but love it. Tuberculosis and many nervous affections have often been deprived of their terrors by a timely emigration to that favored part of the continent. The world offers no more delightful land to live in, to my mind.

The trip to Philadelphia was hot. We were a very juicy, dirty lot of travelers. Coming through Indiana and Ohio we saw some remnants of the fearful devastation wrought by the great flood a month before. As we crossed one river I saw some big, 100,000-pound capacity, steel coal-cars out in the stream, lying on their sides or turned upside down, quite a distance from any railroad track.

As you leave Colorado east-bound, the country becomes greener and greener. The modest farm-houses develop into larger homes, the cities grow in size, the flower gardens are richer in color, the lawns are better cared for. The older the country the greater the evidences of wealth. After passing Pittsburgh a radical change is observable. The country life gives way to innumerable cities with great steel-mills and long rows of workers' houses, all covered with dark smoke that settles in the valleys or lazily rests against the neighboring hillsides. The far-famed "horseshoe curve" looks just like a bit of rough country to anyone accustomed to the rugged and vast mountain fastnesses of the far west. We slide down the Allegheny mountains and spin by the romantic Juniata. The prosperous cities, the lovely hills, the swift little river with its euphonious name, look most gracious and beautiful to the wayfarer from the more arid lands. Harrisburg is soon left behind and the Pennsylvania railroad, the best equipped and disciplined in America, affords two hours of rare rural and suburban scenery. This hundred miles offers an ideal of peace and plenty. Solid, old stone farm-houses, great, generous barns, stately trees, winding hedges, richly colored fields, and softly sloping hills delight the eye. The grain dances and plays to the south wind in the early summer sunlight across the broad sweep of hill and plain. The soft-eyed cattle, in great flocks, browse knee-deep in winsome meadows. We rush past beautiful little suburban stations, surrounded by charming gardens. All about are lovely homes where the city's wealth is poured into the lap of bounteous Mother Nature. Then comes the clang of engines, miles of houses, a view of big, ten and twenty-story skyscrapers, and we are in the fine old city of Penn.

Philadelphia is rapidly approaching the two million population mark, and is hard to excel in many ways. My only criticism regarding it is respectfully applied to the climate.

It is always interesting to go back to the old home. Your friends generally make more fuss over you than if you lived close by them all the time. Other people forget you. Changes are good to look on because they mostly are for the better. For instance, in Philadelphia, the middle-aged man says to the youngster by his side as they stand, say, at Broad and Chestnut Streets, where the big city-hall and huge office buildings predominate and where throngs of busy people rush up and down the streets as in no city west of Chicago, "When I was a young fellow all this locality was a quiet, respectable residence district, where trees lined the brick sidewalks, and the honest people sat out on their doorsteps hot summer evenings." I sometimes think that municipal changes are greater in the east than in the west.

Two or three things particularly impressed me on this visit. One was, how Rittenhouse Square has changed. All about that green opening there had lived for many years the wealth and aristocracy of the city. Walnut Street especially is changing hands. Many "For Rent" or "For Sale" signs desecrate those once socially sacred precincts. Fashion is fleeing before the relentless march of trade. Another thing observable is the rapidity with which taxies and motor-cars whisk down the streets. Anyone who has been so silly as to believe the malicious tales about "slow Philadelphia" has need in many ways not only to sit up and take notice, but also to walk around very briskly when there. Our western folk do not permit speeding on their streets as we see it here.

Philadelphia has one trouble, she and her suburbs have always been too modest. Here is a single illustration. Not far from the city I went, by trolley, the other day through a lovely country, where meadow, hillside, babbling stream and woodland made a succession of exquisite pictures. If we only had that same bit of beauty in California, we would have alluring folders printed depicting its charms. Magazine "ads." and excursion rates would draw thousands of tourists from many thousands of miles to enjoy it, and to divide their money with us. But the Pennsylvanian is a modest man. Some of the steady old farmers who drive through that lovely land no doubt think little about it or of its sordid commercial value. Very likely they clip their horses with a stubby whip and wished that they lived in California.

WM. C. ALLEN.

Good things do not come of themselves. They must be sought, many a time struggled for. "Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given you." Such was the statement of God to Israel. The land was given them. Yet it had to be fought for! God's gifts are not bestowed without something on our part of effort to secure the gift. But what a promise attends the entering upon the struggle! "I will be with thee; I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee; only be thou strong and very courageous."

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

THE MIRACLE

A baby seed all dressed in brown,
Fell out of its cradle one day;
The West Wind took it with loving arms
And carried it far away.

He hid it down on a bed of leaves,
And hid it with blankets white;
And there it slept like a weary child,
Through the long, dark winter night.

It woke at last, when the springtime came,
And stretched its arms on high,
And it grew and grew through the living day,
Toward the sun and the clear, blue sky.

It drew its food from its Mother Earth,
And it drank the cooling shower,
Till the small, brown seed was changed at last
To a sweet, wild wayside flower!

—Exchange.

THE STORY OF A TRILLIUM.—The friend from whom the story came lives in the dusty heart of the city. Therefore I was surprised to find on her table one morning a solitary trillium. Its delicate petals gleamed as fresh and fair from the wee water-cup that held its fragile stem as if it had not been borne many miles from its quiet birthplace. On the table, beside the little cup of water, lay the remains of another trillium, crushed and withered.

"Where did you find the lovely stranger?" I asked, touching a snowy petal with my finger-tip. "It is a far cry from this dusty street to the nooks where trilliums grow!"

My friend motioned me to a seat. I saw what I once heard called "a telling" in her face.

"I really believe," she said, "that God sent that flower and its poor dead little mate to be his messengers to me. A really wonderful thing came to pass through them."

"Tell me all about it," I urged. My friend is one of those blessed people who go about with eyes and ears continually expectant. She really watches for "signals from heaven," as she calls them. It is not those who are forever intent on their own gettings and goings who find "tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, sermons in stones, and good in everything."

"Well, here it is: I was fairly rushing along Main Street yesterday. It was bargain day, and I thought I had to have a bargain. All the city seemed to be of the same mood, for I could scarcely make my way through the crowd.

"I was thinking of things far from fields and flowers, when a spot of light at my feet caught my eyes and halted me. There, on the stone pavement, lay those two flowers as you see them now, one unharmed, one crushed and spoiled.

"I used to live in the country. When spring came we watched and waited for the wild-flowers. We knew every nook where they grew. The trillium was scarce, and happy was the child who found the first blossom and bore it home.

"At the risk of being pushed over by the crowd, I picked up the flowers, and walking slowly along was a child again, my sunbonnet hanging down my back, a little basket of moist mosses on my arm, and the first trillium of the springtime reposing in state on the green pillow.

"Then, by what flash of association I know not, save to feel sure it was all of God, I found myself thinking about a girl, one of the clerks in Merton's department store.

"She is a girl I have several times bought notions of, a thin, pale-faced, haggard creature. The last time I was in the store she awoke my sympathy to such a degree that I almost forgot what I wanted to buy. I ought to have forgotten!

"But there I was, on the busiest corner of Main Street, holding a wild-flower in my hand and seeing this girl's face.

I stood still beside a shop-window for a moment to catch the drift of it all, if there were any drift, and then a Voice spoke in my heart. It said: "She is my flower, too, you know. You will take my trillium home and give it a cup of cold water. What about my immortal flower?"

"I knew there was but one answer to make. Straight to Merton's I went. She was there. I bought some notions and made excuse to speak with her. I was none too soon. She would not have been there the next day. She was ill in body, anxious, unhappy, poor. She was on the eve of doing some reckless thing. Now she is—"

"L'pstairs in your best chamber," I ventured, "and you are ministering to body and soul."

"How could you guess so well? We will send her to the country by and by. No, it will not cost much—not nearly so much as the silk waist I was thinking about before I found the trilliums."

"Give the story a wider hearing. Tell God's people to keep their eyes open for his flowers, the precious souls that are in danger of being trodden under foot of sin and selfishness."

I looked long into the trillium's heart. By the loving care of a passer-by, it was living out the God-meant measure of its sweet life in a cup of water. No water could revive the crushed maid beside the cup.

We stole upstairs and looked upon the sleeping girl. It was her first safe, sweet rest since she had left her country home. As I stood there it seemed a simple thing and a sublime to hold to dying lips a cup of Living Water.—ADA MELVILLE SHAW, in N. S. Times.

A BOY'S READING AND THE FUTURE MAN.—The father of A. C. Dixon, now of Spurgeon's Tabernacle, was a farmer-preacher and served one church in North Carolina for fifty-six years. During his ministry he held many meetings that proved to be great revivals, and organized sixteen churches. One of his visits to his son in New York this farmer-preacher supplied the pulpit of a leading church of Brooklyn. It is said the brethren were delighted and crowded around him and praised him because he quoted so much Scripture. The sermon created so much interest that the Brooklyn Eagle sent a reporter to interview him. In the course of this interview he was asked as to the books he had studied, and he said that his library consisted of the Bible, hymn book, Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," and Spurgeon's sermons. It turns out now that the son of this preacher states that Spurgeon's sermons, read by him as a boy, under God, made him a preacher. And now the country boy, son of the North Carolina farmer-preacher, a successor to the great London preacher as pastor of the Tabernacle Church and he is having a remarkably successful ministry, and is recognized as a successful soul-saver in two continents.

Now suppose that father had put in his library the light, happy, religious, love-making, sentimental, sensuous stuff of this twentieth century would the son have found time and inclination for Spurgeon's sermons? And if he had not fed on this good food, but had lived on the trash that leaves souls lean and minds without holy purpose, would the son have been the stalwart Christian man he is in the world, influencing men for good?

And if the reading of Dixon influenced his life, will not the reading of our child do the same? How much attention will he give to the other fellow, pay to the reading material of the world and our homes? Baptist Alliance.

W. F. F. S. Why. Some young folks love to ask "Why?" And perhaps some have wondered why such boys and girls clipping even below should be chosen for the service. Why should we read about the cruel things that are going on in the world. For no reason at all unless we are soon to be the straiten of body, mind and spirit which is seen in our country. To be in the wrong. We do not want our young folk to be such knights as was poor old "Don Quixote" who rode at windmills because he thought they were maidens in distress. We want them to set at their task with a clear eye and mind; and do such work as shall tell. A late magazine article is called "The Public the Criminal's Partner," and shows how careless people may, without intending it, make it easier for others to do wrong. In such a matter, as the one of which our clipping tells, where a cruel thing is done for the sake of making money, we may be sure that when enough people protest against it, the thing will not be done any longer. Public opinion, as we sometimes call it, will be listened to, when it speaks decidedly for the right.

And we want our Younger Friends to be ready to help in this. The clipping from The Youth's Companion follows:

"The meanness to which men will stoop for the sake of a little material gain is almost beyond belief. Agents of Chicago humane societies have lately discovered that it is a regular practice among horse dealers to put out the eyes of horses, in order to sell them under a guarantee that they will not shy or run away. They pass a needle through the eye in a way that leaves no scar. To all appearances the horse is sound, but he will never see again. The condition is especially common among peddlers' horses, for peddlers must have an animal that will stand. In one day the agents found fifty horses thus blinded."—F. T. R.

HARD THINGS FIRST.—"Auntie," said a girl who was watching an old lady at her ironing, "I'm surprised at you. You're doing all those big hard tablecloths first."

"Well," said the old lady, "that makes every one of the other things easier. I used to do the handkerchiefs and towels first, and every time I'd start at one of them I'd think, 'O, dear!' To think I have got to do those big tablecloths yet! So the work of those tablecloths was scattered all over the ironing: for every handkerchief or towel I ironed was handkerchief or towel plus work over tablecloth."

"I see," said the girl, laughing. "I think I believe in that." Then she sat thinking it over—an example worth following.

"THE voice with the smile wins." Thus runs a sign in a telephone exchange where many persons work. Its usefulness is not confined to telephone operators.—Youth's Companion.

FRIENDLY NEWS.

CONSERVATIVE YEARLY MEETINGS this fall (1913):

Ohio, at Stillwater, near Barnesville, O., Seventh-day, Ninth Month 13th, at 10 A. M.

Western, at Sugar Grove, near Plainfield, Ind., Second-day, Tenth Month 6th.

Iowa, at Paulina, O'Brien Co., Ia., Fourth-day, Tenth Month 15th.

Kansas, at Emporia, Kans., Sixth-day, Tenth Month 24th.

North Carolina, at Woodland, N. C., Seventh-day, Eleventh Month 1st.

SINCE printing in a recent issue of THE FRIEND a list of the Conservative Yearly Meetings yet to be held this year, a Friend has written that Iowa Yearly Meeting decided last year to deviate from its rule and meet at Paulina, O'Brien Co., in 1913, instead of at Earlham, as was stated in our notice.

The same correspondent says: "We were pleased to hear that Esther Fowler has been granted a minute to visit Iowa Yearly Meeting, Hickory Grove Quarter and some other service as Truth opened the way."

At the present writing, THE FRIEND is advised that three ministers of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting have the prospect of attending Ohio Yearly Meeting, commencing on the 13th inst., and held at Stillwater, near Barnesville. On Second-day, the 25th ult., Benjamin Vail was granted a minute by Chester Monthly Meeting, Pa., to visit the Yearly Meeting and some of its subordinate meetings, and also to appoint some meetings.

On the following Fifth-day, the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia approved of a prospect to visit Ohio Yearly Meeting, laid before it by Edwin P. Sellow and his wife, C. Virginia Sellow. A minute was made liberating them for that service, and for any religious labor which might open for them on their way going and returning.

FRIENDS' BOOK SUPPLY, of Wichita, Kans., which is the Book and Tract Committee of Kansas Yearly Meeting, has recently published a fifty-four page pamphlet with the title "The Declaration of Faith of The Society of Friends in America." The Declaration is introduced by an "Explanatory Note," which says that it "meets a long-felt demand for a comprehensive authoritative statement of Friends' doctrines." This statement is in three separate sections, the first being "Some Essential Truths" adopted in 1900, 1901 and 1902 by all the American Yearly Meetings constituting the Five Years Meeting; the second the "Richmond Declaration of Faith," adopted and issued by the "Richmond Conference" in 1887; and the third section the famous and familiar "Letter of George Fox and Other Friends to the Governor of Barbadoes" in 1671. The "Note" also says: "Owing to their different origins there is much difference of style and repetition of thought in the three declarations of faith; but such an evident unity runs through them all together that they really constitute one Declaration of Faith." It further states that George Fox's letter "was constantly associated with the Richmond Declaration of Faith in the acts of the Yearly Meetings in 1900, 1901 and 1902 when each adopted the Constitution and Discipline." [Uniform Discipline.]

The pamphlet may be obtained from Friends' Book Supply, Wichita, Kans. Price ten cents, or six copies for fifty cents.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—Vaccination as a preventive of typhoid fever is now recommended by physicians who have observed its effects. Alexander M. Wilson, Assistant Director of the Department of Public Health and Charities, has pointed out that the virus is being used as a preventive in many large cities and that it was a common practice for physicians to render intimate members of families in whose household a case of typhoid fever exists. It is said that persons who are especially exposed to typhoid fever in institutions, or who intend to travel or change their residence, should be vaccinated with the anti-typhoid virus.

President Wilson has lately sent a message to Congress on Mexican affairs in which he says: "All Americans will be urged to leave Mexico at once and will be assisted to get away by the United States Government through all the means at its disposal. The shipment of arms and other munitions of war from the United States into Mexico will be forbidden and the strictest neutrality between the contending factions will be observed by the United States."

A despatch from New York of the 26th ult. says: "The beginning of the heavy autumn passenger traffic from Europe brought more than 12,000 passengers to New York on eight transatlantic liners that made port between yesterday's sunrise and last midnight. The number is one of the largest ever recorded here for a single day. More than 3,000 of the travelers were of the cabin class."

It is said that the first cargo of beef ever imported into this country from Argentina has just been placed on the Eastern market. It sold in Washington for about a cent less than Western beef on the average. This experimental shipment was brought all the way round by Liverpool.

As a result of the recent drought, 38,000 cattle were received in the Kansas City stock yards, in one day lately, the greatest single day's receipts in the history of the yards.

Lewis C. Wessels, ophthalmologist for the Philadelphia Board of Health, lately said in reference to the defective eyesight of children: "Medical inspection of school children has revealed the fact that at least 25 per cent. of all children attending school have defective vision or eye-strain sufficiently grave to require the constant use of glasses. The Department of Public Health and Charities has solved this problem in Philadelphia by establishing a division of ophthalmology under the Bureau of Health, where poor children can be refracted and furnished with glasses free. We are now refracting nearly 2,500 cases a year."

In reference to parcels post service, John C. Roper, first assistant postmaster general has lately stated that the changes in rates and weights promulgated recently by the department are operating with entire satisfaction. These rates will permit every farmer, as well as manufacturer, however small, to become a real mail order house. With a very slight change in the form of the baskets now used by peach growers for marketing peaches, this service will be available, and also for every other character of produce. A milkman will have a great advantage in this service by utilizing the parcel post for distributing his milk.

It is stated that the University of Pennsylvania proposes to establish branches in the various smaller cities of the State where men and young men may be given a thorough business training without giving up their regular employment. The instruction will be given at night and three years will be required for completing the course. This will be a scientific business course, and not an ordinary business college course.

A despatch from Topeka, Kansas, of Eighth Month 27th, says: "Kansas-to-day experienced another heat wave, some places in the State reporting temperatures as high as 111. No rain was reported anywhere. In Topeka the Government Weather Office recorded a maximum of 103."

A bulletin of the Pennsylvania Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, points out that tuberculosis is a contagious disease, and is not hereditary. The disease is contracted, it says, by association with afflicted persons. When a consumptive is lying he is more liable to infect others than at any other time, and therefore should be removed from his family and placed in a hospital.

FOREIGN.—It is stated that one thousand persons were killed in the great typhoon which recently raged over Japan.

A despatch from London of the 31st ult. says: "The riots in Dublin in connection with the tramway strike were renewed to-day with greater fierceness. Mounted police were called out to-night, after the fighting, which was the most serious seen in Dublin since the wild days of the Land League in 1883, had lasted 30 hours, and succeeded in restoring some order. Two men have been killed, and it is estimated the persons injured will total 500. Thirty of the injured are constables. About thirty arrests have been made."

A despatch from Panama of the 31st ult. states that the last remaining barrier at the Pacific end of the Panama Canal was blown up by dynamite on that day. In a few days it is expected a practically complete channel will be established at the Pacific end, and that the dredges will begin on the second of Ninth Month to remove the last barrier of the Atlantic channel. When this is done, it is stated, that ships may navigate to the locks at both ends of the canal.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 87.

B. V. Stanley, Agt., Ia., $10, for Bronson D. Sidwell, Milton J. Shaw, Joseph S. Heald, Wm. P. Young and Samuel Embree; Nathan Pearson, Ind.; Susanna Reynolds, Ind.; Louisa J. A. Keely, W. Va.; Alice C. Rhoads, N. J.; Esther M. McMillan, Mich.; Wm. C. Lowry, Phila.; Helen R. Bacon, Phila., and for Mary D. Shonover; Samuel Bibble, Pa., and for Mary D. Shonover; Susanna E. Ramsey, Ia., and for Abner E. Newlin; Catharine W. Morris, Pa.; Susan M. Thomas, O., per L. M. Brackin, Agt.; Morris Linton, N. J., per D. G. Garwood, Agt.; Norris J. Scott and for Norris A. Scott, Pa.; Joseph J. Coppock, Agt., Ia., $6, for Jane Dylor, Clinton E. Hampton and Wilson T. Sidwell; David Brington, Pa.; W. P. Stokes for Eliza W. Reeves, Pa.; George P. Stokes, N. J.; Henry S. Drinker, Pa., to 14 v. 88; Jesse Neque, Agt., Ia., $15.08, for Lester Chamness, Mary M. Edmundson, M. A. Fawcett, Mary Mattinson, Anna M. Walker, Iowa State University Library and Sima A. Rich $3.08; Matilda W. Warner, Pa.; Joshua Brantingham, Agt., O., $6, for Rachel G. Cope, Edwin G. Price and James E. Bailly; Mary E. Hazard, N. Y., $10, for Hazard Library, Alice D. Mitchell, Albert H. Batten, Wm. G. Guindon and Francis T. Guindon; Sarah Richie, N. J., $6, for herself, Sarah Ann Conant and Hannah D. White.

~~Remittances received after Third-day noon will not appear in the receipts until the following week.~~

NOTICES.

FRIENDS' SELECT SCHOOL, 140 N. Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, reopens Ninth Month 22, 1913. Catalogues and complete information may be had on application.

WALTER W. HAVILAND, Principal.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA., will be open from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from 2 to 5 P. M.—Seventh-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. only.

HADDONFIELD AND SALEM QUARTERLY MEETING to be held at Medford, N. J., Ninth Month 11, 1913, at 10 o'clock. Special train leaves Philadelphia at 9 A. M., Camden, 9.09, stopping at Collingswood 9.19, Haddonfield 9.25, Springdale 9.33, Marlton 9.39, arriving at Medford 9.50 A. M. Returning by regular train leaving Medford 1.30 and 5.10 P. M.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL, 1913-14.—The School opens for the reception of pupils on Third-day, Ninth Month 9th. New pupils should prices of hotels for the classification and assignment of rooms, etc., in the morning or early afternoon of that day. It is desired that every one who will be at the School, 6 a. m. Those coming by train from Philadelphia should leave no later than 4:30. Regular reunions begin the following morning.

THOMAS K. BROWN, Principal.

MARRIAGE.—At the Friends' Meeting House, Edinburgh, Scotland, JAMES P. RAMSAY, son of James and Janet Ramsay (the former deceased), to ISABELLA B. LAWSON, daughter of Robert and Margaret Lawson, and granddaughter of the late Archibald Crosbie.

DEATH.—Fifth Month 2, 1913, GEORGE KEELY, in the seventy-fourth year of his age; a member of Chester Monthly Meeting of Friends, Penna. He resided near Charleston, W. Va.

—, Eighth Month 4, 1913, at the home of his son-in-law, Charles W. Gamble, near Winona, Ohio, NATHAN WHINERY, in the seventy-seventh year of his age; a member of New Garden Monthly Meeting of Friends, Ohio.

—, sixteenth of Eighth Month, 1913, at her residence, Jarrettown, Montgomery Co., Pa., MARTHA T. SHOEMAKER, wife of the late Richard C. Shoemaker, in the seventy-fifth year of her age; a member and elder of Horsham Monthly and Abington Quarterly Meetings of Friends.

—, at the Augusta Hospital, Chicago, Ill., Eighth Month 21, 1913, MYRA H. EMBREE, daughter of Samuel and Mary Ann Embree; a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, for the Western District.

Rhoads Nonkink Hose

It is a pleasure to use Nonkink Hose because it is so smooth and light. You need fear no leaks from making short turns, for it does not kink and break as ordinary hose, because the rubber is forced through the cotton fabric and vulcanized into a solid wall.

We furnish it coupled without extra charge in any length desired up to 500 feet.

It costs less in the long run because it wears so well.

Another good hose at a lower price is our Corinth.

With hose let us supply your needs in Nozzles, Sprinklers, Reels, etc.

J. E. RHOADS & SONS
12 N. Third St., - Philadelphia
102 Beekman St., - New York

*Plant Pæonies and German
Iris at this season of the year*

Pæonies are as perfect in form and as varied in color as flowers. They are easy to grow and grow easily and flower abundantly. Our illustrated catalog, that is mailed for the asking, describes a long list of each of these—about 2,000 other varieties of Pæonies, Trees, Shrubs and Vines for lawn planting.

THE WM. H. MOON CO.
NURSERYMEN
Room H, Stephen Girard Bldg.
Philadelphia, Pa.

Nurses at Mercerside, Pa.

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 56 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

From Bondage to Freedom, by Isabel Shipley, 2nd Edition, 2 cts.
Northfield Simpson, 1865. What 16 young Friends thought when they were 8 years younger. 2cts.
Christ in the Scriptures, by A. M. Hodgkin 60 cts.
Haydock's Testimony 50 cts. } by L. C. Wood
For a Free Conscience $1.00

ALL POSTPAID

J. B. WOOD, PINE POINT PARK, CAMDEN, N. J.

JOS. B. SCATTERGOOD

HOUSE, SIGN AND DECORATIVE
PAINTING

Orders Solicited Bell 'Phone

275 S. FOURTH STREET

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
(Marcellus Balderston)

802 SPRING GARDEN ST. 618 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL 'PHONE PHILADELPHIA

W. B. WEAVER
Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5th ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN
TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT
OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL
ACCOMMODATIONS FOR
FUNERALS.

BELL 'PHONE. ESTABLISHED 1880.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL.

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16th & RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE BRUCE 6646

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST COMPANY OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.
Accounts Solicited Deposits by Mail
Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET

FOURTH AND CHESTNUT STREETS

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Aves., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

MAKE IT

Anti-waste-basket—your advertising literature.
See that it gets the proper printing.

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,

EDWARD T. BIDDLE,

1010 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

POCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevation 1800 feet, commanding extensive
mountain and valley scenery. Address

J. W. HURLEY, Manager,
POCONO MANOR, PA.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, NINTH MONTH 11, 1913.

No. 11.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FOESYTHE.

Make remittances payable to

EDWIN P. SELLEW OR THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

THE MOTOR SIDE OF THE QUERIES.

In the twentieth century, motor activity is not only a means of education, it is very generally accepted as a test of education as well. Under the impulse of Froebel's well-known saying, "We learn by doing," the practical age in which we live is now holding schools and schoolmasters to this touchstone, "Show your learning by what you can do." It is easy enough to point out that this may become a standard of mere materialism. The thing that we are, even in the affairs of life, is often of more importance than the thing that we can do, but men of affairs will still say, "We judge the thing that you are by what you can do."

In the religious life so far as Christianity is concerned this motor activity was the Master's test from the beginning. "If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them." "For whosoever shall do the will of God the same is my brother and sister and mother." When one thinks of it, it is surprising how often in education and in life (they are in part synonymous terms), the world must be called back to the foundation principles made so clear in the teaching and ministry of the great Teacher. A certain inertia in human nature rests upon words and forms, and upon thoughts and feelings about life, and not upon life itself. In the Society of Friends this inertia is well illustrated by the transformation of the Queries. Originally they were designed to show us something we should be, and to give us something we should do. Now too often they are a mere form of introspective searching in which the something to be alone is active. So much is this so, and so formal has the process of answering queries sometimes become, that it is not surprising that a rising life in a meeting should propose to dispense with them. It may be profitable therefore to pass in review the motor function of the Queries, the part that would give us something to do, and to examine a little how well this aspect meets the Master's test of efficient instruments.

It is probably no exaggeration to say that in their origin the Queries were almost entirely an effort to make it imperative upon Friends to realize the Scripture ideal, "we are members one of another." The Society had been led out of priestcraft. A very fresh sense of the shrinking of human nature from the personal responsibilities involved in expressions like "the priesthood of believers," and the "communion of life," must have been in the minds of Friends for years afterward. Believers can accept these ideas under the fervor of a great revelation, but how can they practice them generation after generation? It is so easy to say, "if we employ some one gifted to keep in brotherly touch with a congregation the work will be more efficiently done than we can do it," or "if a special gift in the ministry of the word is committed to a brother, we cannot better assist that ministry than by financial support." In this reasoning the atrophy of our own gifts seems obscured to our minds under a cloak of modesty. We certainly do not realize how closely this modesty may be akin to pride. Now the Queries in their method and their scope are not more wonderful in any respect than in their capacity to develop the gifts of individuals, so as to make a positive protection against the inroads of ecclesiasticism on the one hand, and of mere machinery on the other. This view of their usefulness is not a general one but some explanation may make it more clear. First, then, as to the method of the Queries, what does that imply for the individual? Overseers are called together to prepare answers for the Monthly Meeting. If they do not have their printed list of members with them such list is at least actively in memory. Each answer as it is considered brings to mind what each overseer knows of the faithfulness or lack of faithfulness of the individual members. At the conclusion of the effort the minds of overseers are well charged with a new impulse to lend themselves to the encouragement or exhortation or correction of their fellows. Something to do as well as something to be has been put upon them. Were this activity confined to the circle of overseers we should still have a system in some measure tinctured with ecclesiasticism. The Monthly Meeting, however, is next called upon to enter into a similar exercise. The point in the Monthly Meeting often seems to be no more than some refinement of accuracy in making an answer. If it is actually no more than that, one cannot wonder that the custom of answering queries is condemned. The rich privilege of the occasion—the intended purpose of it—is that the whole membership of a meeting should be stimulated into activity on one another's behalf. The meeting may act as a whole in response to this exercise of answering queries, it may issue an epistle to its members or to others, it may appoint a committee for some special service or effort, but each member of a Monthly Meeting, each time the queries are answered, is face to face with a personal duty toward fellow members, toward great principles (the principles of Truth) toward the world at large. No other device in Church government of which we can think places a more direct responsibility, not upon officers, not upon committees, not upon the meeting at large but directly, distinctly upon individuals. Nothing short of what in modern terms is called a "motor response," can in any worthy sense fulfil the demands of such a situation. The functioning of the body in its organic capacity as noted above is plainly possibly under our system to a Monthly Meeting. As the Queries and answers, however, are carried forward to Quarterly and Yearly Meeting, this organic functioning becomes particularly active. This is what we hear called group activity. At this writing one Quarterly Meeting has three committees under appointment as a result of exercises thus engendered. The whole question of safeguarding our system from the direction of an individual, or of a set of individuals, may thus be seen to be inherent in the appeal made to a whole membership by the challenge to answer queries. We may at every hand by our weak practice outrage the rich possibilities of the system. If we can be awakened to its responsibilities and its privileges we shall quickly be of those "who learn by of and." Our progress in the Christian life will be assured, if the method of the Queries has a universal side in its application to members of the Society, so the scope of the Queries has a universal side as regards the interests of mankind. The world hardly needs any effort for its betterment that may not be prompted by the Queries, and if such prompting is under Divine guidance no limits can be set to the usefulness of Friends or of meetings. The past history of our Society in this direction is full of instruction. Many a time meetings have not seemed prepared for the concerns of individuals, but as these concerns have been urged with the patience of real humility they have taken hold of meetings in a most remarkable way. The experiences of Anthony Benezet and of John Woolman in these particulars should inspire one with confidence in the Society as a working (and workable) instrument for good.

Formality, lifelessness, may belong to one system of church government more than to another. In any system, however, there are methods that are fundamental. If every member of a meeting is to face personal responsibilities as a minister, a pastor, an elder, an overseer—if we are not only to believe as a theory in the universality of gifts but are actually to practice this universality we shall do well to maintain the methods that best insure these ends. Thomas Hodgkin says in substance in his "Life of George Fox" that Quakerism was more unique in its methods than in its message. It is useless to plead that machinery cannot be improved, but the Queries have almost unlimited resources for training a high type of Christian. These resources need to be developed. The process demands sacrifice, courage, service of the highest order. Friends in modern times have not seemed to realize what a facile instrument they have in the organization and methods of the Society. Modifications, intended of course for improvement, have been made. Some of these have been so radical that the religious press outside of Friends has characterized the change as "the adoption of the Presbyterian form of government." In one large centre the meeting of Ministry and Oversight has been dropped from the system, the central function queries, if they are continued, are no longer an after-thought and pondered, thus in part ruling out the main object of their usefulness. We can easily credit Friends with an honest striving for a better way in these efforts. An evident objection to these changes should at least have its place in the plans for the revival of faith in the system we have developed in the two centuries of our history. It may remain for Philobdolphia to demonstrate that this system has all needed flexibility that lived up to—we make no claim that it has been lived up to in the past, it is calculated to bring the individual face to face with his responsibilities in a way so direct that he cannot shift the burden to another.

J. H. B.

A LETTER FROM THE WALDENSIAN VALLEY.

III.

BY HERBERT WELSH.

I enjoyed First-day at Bobbio Pellice. I am inclined to think, more than any other; partly because it was really a day of rest after the fatigue of week days, occasioned by steady artistic work morning and afternoon, but still more because the religious services, very simple in character, were so pleasant. All the days were bright and sunny—there were no rainy ones among them. At 10.30 in the morning the first service was held in the old church building, which is separated from the presbytere by a narrow lane. The building is simple and unadorned, rectangular, with plain wooden benches on the ground floor, and a modest gallery at the far end, opposite the old-fashioned high wooden pulpit and clerk's desk. The church building, I should say at a venture, is capable of holding about six hundred people. The men sit on one side and the women on the other, reminding one vividly of Friends' meeting. There is a modest, quaint beauty about the women's dress, which charms one more and more. That, also, reminds one of the Friends. The dress for "best"—holidays and state occasions—is gray or black, the "coiffure" or fluted muslin cap—bluish white in color—and a yellowish-white little shawl thrown over the shoulders. The latter the younger women wear. To this may be added some trifling, inexpensive ornament in the form of a necklace or ribbon around the throat, which supplies a touch of color grateful to the eye. This strikes a pleasant note against a mass of sober tones. But it is the spiritual character written on the faces of these Waldensian women that, in the last analysis, forms their chief attraction. It is not in vain that their race has learned the lesson of the Gospel, from the pages of a Bible held open at the cost of unparalleled persecution for four centuries; or that it has been obliged to struggle so hard for a bare living, gleaned from the soil of their protecting mountains. Many complexions are fresh and ruddy under the sunburn, as those of a peasant people are wont to be. Their manners have in them native gentility. They are reserved, frank, self-respecting and dignified. But the more I have seen and studied Waldensians the more am I convinced that they have in them fine elements of character as a result largely of the teaching of the simple Gospel, and of their prolonged peculiar experiences in witnessing to its truth. Those people at Bobbio, with whom I am acquainted, have also had the advantage, during a period of thirty-five years, of the ministrations of a devoted man and woman—Pastor Gardiol and his wife. Under general influences and conditions here comes in a strong personal equation, that also very positively tinctures the religious services which I attended each First-day during the three weeks of my stay in the valley. These services are in their outward form much the same as those held in the Reformed or Evangelical church of France, Switzerland or Italy. They are ordinarily held in the French language—all those that I attended at Bobbio were so, although they may, upon special occasions, be in Italian. Both languages are understood and spoken by the people. They also speak a patois, which, so far as I could gather, is a mixture of French and Italian and a corruption of both. In the service some two or three simple Gospel hymns are sung by all the people. There is no paid choir. The hymn-singing was hearty and inspiring; this was interspersed by two or three extemporaneous prayers offered by Pastor Gardiol, who, according to old usage and general custom, wears, when conducting the service, a short black gown, with white beads at the throat. There is a Scripture reading by the clerk, who happens to be the Waldensian schoolmaster of Bobbio, M. Martel. Pastor Gardiol's preaching is strong, simple and impressive. One cannot go to sleep under it or be indifferent to it.

I came to the conclusion, after considerable reflection, that it was largely his personal character, shown by the sort of work that he has done in his extended mountain parish at Bobbio for thirty-five years past, that gave to this service the power and the interest that it undoubtedly possesses. The man has a deep conviction of Evangelical truth as a Divine remedy for the sin, sorrow and ignorance of humanity. This conviction works out in many ways through a generous, courageous heart, a gentle nature, a well-trained, orderly mind. There is the fire of the true preacher which rings out in clear trumpet tones from under the sounding board of the old pulpit on First-day morning, and again at the still less formal service held in the afternoon in the open air on the lower slopes of the mountains, in a park-like glade under the boughs of the ancient chestnut trees. But it is not in preaching only that Pastor Gardiol has made himself felt during an exceptionally long ministry, but in increasing care for all the different members of his parish who need it; shown by innumerable visits to scattered and remote hamlets and chalets. Pastor Gardiol finds a devoted and accomplished helper in his wife, a cultured, unselfish woman, who is an inspiration and guide to the young women of the local Christian Association. These have now, happily, a home and centre of their own in the Salle Chrétienne, recently erected at Bobbio. To this many good people at home kindly contributed. Madame Gardiol also shows constant hospitality to many strangers, who come mostly from Great Britain and America to visit the Waldensian Valleys and who thus include a hurried glimpse at Bobbio. In this connection, it is pleasant and suggestive to be able to say that the present king of Italy, who is well known, among his other virtues, to include an excellent domestic life, has five young Waldensian women as caretakers for his children. The first of these was selected by Madame Gardiol from among her girls at Bobbio, at the request of the Queen, and the choice had so happy an outcome that in due time the others were added.

It is a fine bit of poetic justice that the House of Savoy, which in old time, under pressure of Spain, Rome and France so persecuted the Waldensians, should, in these last days under the guidance of an enlightened and high-minded representative, make amends for the wrong done by committing the care of his children to young women of the race which it once sought to exterminate. May I conclude this my third letter with a simple suggestion to those who would like to help the Waldensians in their work of Italian enlightenment? It is that those who can do so should themselves visit the valleys at Piedmont. It is a good way to pass at least part of a summer. Contact with the people themselves will stimulate their life and will give to those who visit them a vivid realization of Waldensian history and of the mission still to be performed of these people to the world.

SALZBURG, AUSTRIA, Eighth Month 10th.

We think of the words of the first Elijah, who spoke with a strong, tender, consideration for one who had been a faithful follower through many wanderings, and the companion of his solitude—"Ask what I shall do for thee before I be taken away from thee"—and the answer, "I pray Thee let a double portion of Thy spirit be upon me." Is not that what we should be asking for, as we watch our Master pass upward to where the legion armies of God are awaiting the return of the Conqueror-King?—the marks of our redemption still visible in his sacred body, a pledge of his deep personal love for you and for me. "If thou see Me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee." So we should stand beside Him on the Mount of the Ascension with the prayer upon our lips and in our heart, "that we may also in heart and mind thither ascend, and with Him continually dwell," returning to our daily labors and difficulties strengthened and calmed, full of the joy of expectation that He will in very truth pour upon us such an abundant measure of his grace as can make our wills conformable to his Divine will, and open unto us the gate of everlasting life.—G. M.

EXTRACTS FROM DIARIES AND LETTERS OF RICHARD B. BROCKBANK.

(Continued from page 111.)

London, 30-5-1873.—The Yearly Meeting was mostly engaged in considering a proposition of the Meeting of Ministers and Elders to separate a large committee to visit all the meetings in the kingdom. It was finally decided to appoint one.

Upwards of ninety names were nominated to be considered this morning, both Daniel Pickard's name and mine are on the nomination. I feel very unfit for any such work.

The discussions on the General Epistle were longer than I liked. I would rather sit down under a lively expression in simple faith than put it into the crucible of a scholastic theology and eliminate all the life out of it. However, I am not fit to criticize my brethren and I desire not to do it, and only desire in the love which beareth all things, that they as well as myself may keep from doing harm to the precious cause of Truth.

Oakfield Cottage, 11-8-73.—As we walked in, I asked the way of a young woman and she was going the same way; so I walked on with her and told her I was going to the Friends' Meeting. She asked what body. I said the Friends, commonly called Quakers. Oh, she had heard of them, but we were not a large body; there were more of us in the village in which she lived when at home. I then explained to her something of our views. She seemed deeply interested and then told me she was going to the Wesleyan meeting. She thought confusion would arise in our meetings from there being no regular service. I told her of the public meeting to be held that evening at the Morrisonian Chapel, and invited her to attend. She mentioned something about worship in connection with a service. I said that preaching or hearing a man preach could scarcely be called worship, with which she at once agreed, but prayer and praise were. This I agreed to, and pointed out the necessity in these acts of worship of the direct influence of the Holy Spirit. She said how did we do about singing. I told her that we did not think it right to join in congregational singing as two persons, the one converted and the other unconverted, singing the same words to the Almighty could not be true. She at once agreed and said she had often thought of that. Then you would let one sing as he felt alone. I said it was not usual in our Meetings to sing vocally in measured time and with human skill. But that our hearts and at times our voices were lifted up in prayer and praise.

She went to her meeting and I to mine. I do long for her and for all to come off from man to the pure and holy guidance of Him who can alone lead us unto all Truth. At meeting M. Rogers was engaged in prayer early and then R. D. and I. N. R. and M. R. in exhortation and I. N. R. and R. D. in the order named in prayer.

William and Margaret Gray have a most interesting family, Henry, Edith, Nelly, who asked specially after the children, then a young son, Woodville, a solid little Bertram, and a sweet little baby girl with the boy Willie and two girls Mary and Flo at Wigton make up their flock.

It was a visit of deep interest; we all sat together, and I cannot say that I object to that under the circumstances, but can very readily see that Friends visiting families under religious concern would require to be very careful as to the grouping of others with families or even in some cases with the several members of a family. This visit was had after dining with W. and M. Gray and then a cup of tea and then the public meeting—a large congregation, 1000 to 1200 probably. R. D. first said a few words as to our simple mode of worship, then asked all for a season of silent worship. M. Rogers soon after on her knees and afterwards in exhortation, offering salvation freely to all just as they were. F. Frith next felt a fear that any should take up an idea that they could themselves take up when they chose and in their own will an intellectual belief in the truths of the Gospel which would be all that was needed. He showed that we must make no mistake and think that it was an easy thing to become recipients of salvation; he would not be doing his duty were he not to point out that we must be willing to give up our hearts fully unto the government of the Holy Spirit. We must be willing to give up all and take up our cross and follow Him who meek and lowly of heart if we would be his disciples. It was a word in season and R. D. said to me after that he was glad of it as without it what had gone before was incomplete.

J. N. R. also said a few words. R. D. in supplication, and then the people seemed to be getting up and R. D. said that the meeting was now over and thanked them for their attendance.

Oakfield Cottage, 13-8-73.—The meeting on Second-day evening was a weighty one. After a short silence our dear friend R. D. said that this was not strictly a meeting for worship, but rather for religious edification, going on to make a few remarks and closing with the remark that some of his brethren might have a few words to say, and therefore he would say no more at present. This did not accord with my feelings at all and I felt as though I could take no part in a meeting where this was the prevailing idea. After a very solemn pause F. F. rose and in a more weighty manner than I had heard him before warned us against superficiality in religion. This was rather a relief to me, and under a very weighty feeling the silence was deepened under the precious solemnizing influence of the Lord's own power, for the meeting seemed to deepen as we went on. My feeling was "unto whom much is given much will be required." As our eyes had been opened to see, great was our responsibility. After I sat down A. L. Fox said a few words and then M. Rogers, who had come in late, knelt down and supplicated very sweetly on our behalf. After this R. D. very nicely got up and referred to what he had said, and observed that he had not said what the meeting might become, and what he was thankful to say it had become, a meeting for worship under the solemnity of which we had been refreshed, or to that effect. It was a fit wind-up to a memorable day.

After that we had all together a sitting with R. and M., R. D. and F. F. had the labor. After the sitting broke up I told them how much we had felt the help they had given us both in kindly arranging the work for us and in going with us in sympathy, spiritual sympathy and feeling, and I did believe that the Lord had opened their hearts and the hearts of the dear Friends whom we had to visit to receive us all unworthy as some of us felt ourselves to be. Dear M. Smeal said that when we went out on the visits her heart just went with us, which was quite my feeling. After dinner R. D. and F. F. went to Kilmarnock, S. F. and I to Greenock and A. F. stayed at Glasgow. We went by the four o'clock train to Greenock, and found that James Hamilton had invited two ex-Friends who had given up their membership under the plea of going with their children but that in principle they were Friends still. Also a young woman named Williamson and his son and his wife with whom Jas. H. lives to meet us. It was a very wet afternoon and the time was very limited, and I am sorry to say that they were far too kind in the way of tea, beef, etc.; so that we could not satisfy them with eating enough and then we had a very short time for a sitting together; after which we went to the train. They are interesting people and the young man was very anxious about baptism and the supper and I did not believe them essential. I pointed out to him the true man and the essential baptism and we were just closing the matter when the other arrived. Mcclashan is the name of the two ex-Friends, they are honest-hearted, and I do not see that they are not where they are.

In the train we met with a Primitive Methodist from Sunderland, named B. T. O. He began with me by enquiring about G. D. and I, formerly of Axton, and we went on, he talking very freely of their doctrine, and I putting in a hint for them to get deeper, till finally I pointed out fully their error of leading their people to depend on man and educating their young ministers to expound the Bible instead of coming to sit down under the humbling, earth-ward, purifying power of the Holy Spirit, shewing him the impropriety of calling this, as he was doing, the preaching of the Word, etc., and of calling them the Word of God, whereas that name belonged to Christ alone, who is that living, creative, all-powerful Word, which was in the beginning, etc., and which is as Moses and Paul pointed out the Word nigh in the heart, and which alone could change the heart. I pointed out the necessity of being inspired by the Holy Ghost and called by Him to the work and not by man. He said that their young men all professed to be thus before being educated for the ministry.

A young man sitting opposite now struck in and told us how much he had been interested in our conversation, and how fully he agreed with what I said of the danger of training men in a creed or form of belief instead of directing them to the only true teacher and guide into all truth. He then said that he had gone to hear preachers till he was nearly driven out of his mind by the election and reprobation views to which I had referred as held by the Presbyterians. A woman with a baby in her arms then said that it was only the Free Church who held these views strongly. He at once admitted this and that they were all preaching them less, but that they all held them still—that he had been driven to despair by them under the idea that he was one of the reprobate, and he went in to Edinburgh to one of the Professors of Divinity there on purpose to enquire, as he thought he must know if any one did.

He told him how he was distracted and asked him the question, quoting the text wherein it occurs, if Jesus Christ had tasted death for every man, or only for every man of the elect. The professor told him only of the elect. He then told him, I have done with your religion, and from that time, said he, I have never regularly attended a place of worship, but sit at home and read my Bible, and I believe I have a God that loves me and a Saviour who died for me as fully as that professor does. And, said he, there are hundreds of young men in our country who are in the same position as I am. I told him if they would come together as I had been recommending without any dependence on man to wait on the Lord, they would feel his Spirit to contrite their hearts and He would raise up one after another of them to testify to his goodness and his great love in Christ Jesus, and they would have a true meeting of living worshippers, a true Quakers' meeting. We all shook hands at parting and I felt peaceful and thankful and full of prayerful desire for him—having to part thus hurriedly is trying, but we must go on directing men, not to ourselves, but to Christ.

Forsyth's Hotel, 10-8-78.—I think our meetings yesterday were favored with the Divine Presence. The one in the morning was larger than last year, both sides of the meeting-house usually sat in being full. In the evening the house with the rooms laid together was full; there must have been over 300. In the morning R. B. and Ann Jackson and H. White had the weight of the service. In the evening we all had share.

Oakfield Cottage, 23-8-73.—I went to W. Miller's, who kindly went with A. L. F. and me to Leith to see a Friend named Mary Ann Ellis who has come out of Yorkshire to live there. Her husband is not a member and she was not brought up a Friend and is the only one in her family. She has a son about seventeen employed as an engineer. She said she had been at the meeting the night before and was much comforted. But oh, she said, what opposition there is to our views here! A friend of theirs has several times expressed his regret and amazement that she should go to the Friends' meetings. He was astonished that anyone should be so ignorant as to think Friends were in the right. They were very ignorant and were not fit to live. It was a pity any such people should cumber the ground. I asked her what was the religious body that he belonged to. She said, "The Ecclesiastical Theological Calvinistic Brethren." I pointed out to her that she might readily see how much more full of true love our profession was, as this brother would shut us out altogether, whereas we felt a love which extended to all, even him. She said she had felt that, and that he was not of a good spirit. I said that I supposed he would think that a correct knowledge of the Bible and its theology was necessary even to the extent of requiring every one to know the original and despising those who did not.

In the second meeting we had the certificates of the American Friends read, those of R. W. Douglas are remarkable for the aptness of their expression of the lively interest felt by them that he might be preserved in the right path and in humble walking therein.

Not long after F. Frith said that he would have to say a few words on a subject that had pressed on his mind in the previous meeting, and to which he had not given expression. He said that he did not think that the most conservative Friend that could be found wished to lessen the amount of true ministry, that we all desired and were often bowed in prayer to the Lord of the harvest that He would send more laborers into the harvest field. But that the exercise of many hearts was that the laborers might be truly qualified and sent forth with baptizing power, and that they might be preserved from going or doing or working in their own strength. He said that ten words under a living exercise were of more true value in this work than 10,000 without, that indeed we must feel that the latter were of no real value in the deep and holy work of the furthering of the Lord's work in the earth. It was very weighty and though I was a little sorry that our dear friend M. R. should not also have heard it, still even this might have its weight in showing them that he did not hastily stand up with his feeling, but that he bore it as long as he could and then gave up in much simplicity.

Surely these Friends will see what a concern they are bringing over the minds of those who love the Truth. John R. asked me after meeting when the Committees were to be at work in England, as R. W. D. had been thinking he had better go to Ireland during the time, so that he might not interfere with their work. If the other sub-committees all speak the same thing as we have had to do they may well want to keep out of the same neighborhood. M. R. also said that she was leaving Scotland at once, and it is a painful thing to feel much to the relief of our dear exercised Friends here. My surprise and thankfulness is very great to see how our dear friend F. F., as well as R. D. have felt drawn more and more into that which I have long felt, and as it were scarcely expressed. We have been much united and it is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes.

At the close of the morning meeting R. W. D. had asked to have a meeting at seven in the evening with as many as could be got together without at all wishing Friends to go to much trouble about it, as he knew the time was very short. Alex. Allen of Dublin wanted bills, etc., got out, but G. Cruikshank said it could not be done to do any good. R. W. D. would be content with what came. We dined at G. C.'s and took tea there. E. B. and his wife came in and had a cup of tea—they were quite pleasant. I went to the meeting in much trembling. R. W. D. spoke after E. B. had spoken in much the same strain as in the morning. R. W. D. began with a text about witnesses testifying. He illustrated the former part by a lawyer, an unbeliever but an able lawyer, going to a meeting in their land, and as many were brought to confess Christ with their lips, he took out his note book and wrote down their names till he had a list of twelve or thirteen. And he looked over his list and said, "With such a list of respectable witnesses and all testifying the one thing as they do, I could win any case." He said the witnesses and their testimony were both undeniable and he became a believer. I had heard him go over the same ground in London. The latter part he illustrated by asking if the witnesses were testifying. What would be the use of ever so good a witness or case if the witness were not testifying—said that the true meaning was to declare, and that he sometimes feared we were apt to put another meaning and so miss the true one—instead of bearing our testimony, we were to bear testimony. Open thy mouth wide and I will fill it—I take it this is for taking in, but he said it was for putting out—thus we differ.

I fear I cannot describe this meeting fully, but F. F. in a few weighty words took quiet, firm ground in the direction of the deeper work of Christ in the heart. Marriage Wallis also after F. F. spoke. R. W. D. asked any of the little ones to confess with their mouth and not go away burdened. Eliza Wigham prayed. R. Doeg had a few weighty words and a testimony from me to a very different experience than that described by M. R. who had also spoken. The meeting, with one or two prayers, settled and broke up very quiet.

Forsyth's Hotel, Aberdeen, 18-8-74.—E. Backhouse came and shook hands. I said quietly to him, "Thou set us altogether too high last night." He said how? I replied, when thou said that we were individually without spot or wrinkle or any such thing (I speak for myself; it was too high for me. He said it is so, Christ covers up all and he spread out his hands showing as it were how he did it, and presents us without spot or wrinkle to God. I said yes, I thought it was that imputation doctrine by which thou meant it, and I am sorry to hear thee preach it. He then got excited and admitted it and began to justify it by argument. I said that I had no wish to argue, that I had heard all the arguments on that side often. But I hoped that he would think it quietly over when he had opportunity. This rather quieted him and he said yes, I will, and I take it very kind of thee to mention it in freedom. We went into meeting and after a few weighty words from F. F. on worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness, he got up and preached us a sermon on perfection, etc., which I did not feel uneasy with. R. Douglas then spoke a long time on the text, "They shall go forth as the sun," applying the sun's light and heat going together to the light and love which must go together in the light which the Christian gives. Previous to this M. Rogers supplicated and others—I do not remember in what order.

There were more than the usual attenders there and I came away easy in silence, which is a favor.

(To be continued.)

For "THE FRIEND."

THOUGHTS SUGGESTED BY A VACATION TRIP TO NORWAY.

STANLEY R. YARNALL.

When one of the editors of THE FRIEND asked me some weeks ago to send him some letters about my short visit to Norway this summer, I had little expectation of complying with his request. In the first place, the readers of THE FRIEND recently had the opportunity of reading Charles E. Gause's delightful impressions of this country, and in the second place, my stay here is all too short for my opinions to be of real value with regard to the people and the life that lies below the surface skimmed by the tourist.

First impressions, however, are apt to be vivid, and it is the American way (too often) to trust to them. Without further apology or explanation, therefore, I shall try to record some passing thoughts, without any idea of writing a detailed account of a tour in Baedeker style, and I am prompted to do this chiefly because of an obligation that should rest on those able to enjoy a long vacation to share experiences with those at home, especially when travelers visit countries from which we in America have much to learn.

It is well for prospective travelers in Norway to cross the ocean on a Scandinavian ship. The ten days spent on the Hellig Olav, more comprehensible to English-speaking people if written St. Olaf, was in everyway a pleasant introduction to the northland. The ship, ample, staunch and well equipped, gave evidence, from captain to cook, that the sons of the Vikings are worthy of their sires. If the matter were put to vote it is doubtful whether the passengers would approve of placing the cook at the end of the ship's company. We could all join, if need be, in the chorus, "a tip-top cook had our gallant ship." The variety and excellence of the table was maintained from the first to the last meal of our ten days' voyage, and not one poorly prepared or unattractive dish was served in that time, which is saving a great deal when freshness, daintiness and good service may at critical moments make the difference between a successful gastronomic effort and the loss of self-respect and other things.

But however hard it is for pampered first cabin passengers to realize the fact, the kitchen and dining saloon are comparatively unimportant. The essential thing is to have a good captain and a well-disciplined crew of able seamen. In this regard the Hulic Oia was fully up to the standard. There was a cheerful, ready obedience and a business-like dispatch about the ship. The captain enforced discipline "with a smile," as our Lutheran pastor said in proposing a toast to him, and he added, "that is the right way to have discipline." The men down to the stewards did their work with an individual touch and with a sense of self-respect and manhood. The ship, even in dark corners, was as clean as scrubbing and shining of the hull.

There was an air of honesty and candor that inspired confidence. One came instinctively to feel that these things stood for substantial qualities in the Scandinavian character and that one would find on shore a people vigorous and simple, cheerful and democratic.

There is ample opportunity on board to become acquainted with the many Scandinavians who have made the United States their adopted home and who are returning for a summer visit to the old village and the old father and mother.

Loyal, sincere men and women are these, who have invested their intelligence and honesty and energy in our great land of opportunity, and have gathered a harvest, some forty, some sixty and some a hundred fold.

One could tell of a little group at one table, a New York stock broker who was returning to settle for good in the quiet atmosphere of Copenhagen, after his stormy career in making a fortune in the battlefield of the exchange; a successful Swede who had been nine years in America, and is now engaged in importing agricultural implements to the old country; a most elegant, capable woman of innate refinement, who is probably nurse or housekeeper. Half of the first cabin passengers are of this class. There is the Norwegian consul of the north-western section, returning from N. Dakota to place his two modest, intelligent daughters in a Swiss school for two years. A man of unusual capacity and untiring in his efforts to help travelers in Norway by suggestion and introductions; there is the American lady, niece of one of our greatest ambassadors of recent years, returning, with her fine little son, Fritz, from her biennial home visit, to her Norwegian land in Christiania, and there is the dear old lady of a warm-hearted, motherly, genuine to the core, with a few young nieces who are returning from the last visit, she has two married daughters in New England, proud to be the picture of the grand-children who will help to make America a better place, if they fulfil the promise of honesty and character in their faces.

Another one interested me very much. He is scarcely thirty years of age, bright-eyed, full of conscious power. Coming to America well equipped by an engineer's education, he rose to be the manager of a great trust-directed industry. His insight and experience he is now converting to serve Norway. Learning that Norway exports large quantities of raw material used in the industry, and then imports equally large quantities of the finished product made in the United States, he has taken it upon himself to persuade the Norwegians and is going with his family to live a while in their old home land.

There are many other things. Backbone of a new Norway and a great deal of energy in a position on the part of the United States to support home industries with their own raw materials. The Norwegians are full of confidence in the United States and will support her after power and its influence are established.

There is ample opportunity to observe the second-class passenger. For the most part the impression is that they were wholly Scandinavian returning home after successful careers in the States. The third-class passengers are much in evidence as one looks down from the upper decks. Usually the sight is one to be avoided, but here were a thousand or more nicely dressed, quiet, self-respecting men and women with a large sprinkling of children. They held their own Sabbath service, putting the rest of us to shame; they sang and talked and kept themselves and their children and their deck clean. They were good Americans, like the rest of us, who either did not have much money to spend on their passage or preferred to save it.

When the morning came to put away the rougher clothes brought for the voyage and don shore apparel, it would have been hard to tell the difference between the first and third classes. A few of our list might have found themselves more at home in the usual steerage, but we could but have benefited by mingling with many of the refined, quietly-dressed men and women who went down the other gangway.

By the time one has passed the north of Scotland and had a glimpse of John O'Groat and the cloudy islands where the Vikings gained their first foothold in Great Britain, one is filled with respect for the indomitable Viking spirit that has carried these young men and women to their new peaceful invasion across the sea. As one thinks of the courage required for boys to plunge from the simple life of quiet fiords and mountain sides into the complex business conditions of our country, and for girls, shielded by the quiet village life, to meet the dangers and temptations of the new world, one is filled with admiration at the rich freight of true manhood and womanhood they carry back to the fatherland.

Skaol to the Northland!

FIFTY YEARS OF NEGRO FREEDOM.

WM. ANTHONY AERY.

From the one-room slab hut to the well-built home with modern conveniences; from the secret place of worship in the pine brush to the comfortable church; from the log school-house in the forest clearing to the model class-room; from ignorance, superstition, and poverty to knowledge, enlightenment and prosperity; these are striking examples of progress during fifty years of negro freedom.

Through struggle, perseverance, faith in God, and the co-operation of the best white people, North and South, the American Negro has made most extraordinary progress—economic, social and religious.

Thousands upon thousands of Negroes have won success under most adverse conditions. It is, therefore, fair to assume that whatever is done now to give black boys and girls an opportunity of securing such training as will fit them for more useful and efficient service on the farm, in the home, in the trades, in the school-room, in business, and in the professions, will contribute very substantially to the wealth and prosperity of the entire nation.

Christian men and women should face with open minds and warm hearts the significant and vital problem of race adjustment which must finally be solved in justice to the black man. Ten million American Negroes now own 20,000,000 acres of land (this is about 31,000 square miles). They cultivate 100,000,000 acres of land in the South. They contribute annually to the wealth of the nation over $800,000,000. They have under their control, as farmers or renters, land and buildings valued at one billion dollars. They have in the public schools about 1,700,000 children; in Sunday schools, 1,750,000 children. They own $60,000,000 worth of church property. They have 300,000 trade workers; 35,000 teachers; 20,000 men and women in the other professions. They have sixty-four banks, capitalized at $1,600,000, which do an annual business of $20,000,000. These figures, based on the latest census, indicate some of the wonderful changes that have been wrought during fifty years of Negro freedom.

There are, however, difficult problems still to be solved. Booker T. Washington has said: "There are no difficulties to-day in the South which white men and black men, working together, cannot solve." Co-operation is the chief solvent.

Many rural schools in the South have terms which range from three to five months during the year. They are poorly lighted, badly ventilated, and sadly in need of repair. They suffer chiefly from the lack of properly trained teachers. Negroes, representing about eleven per cent. of the entire population, receive two per cent. of the money spent in the United States for education. Mob violence defeats the ends of justice and gives the Negro a poor idea of law and order. "Jimcrowsism" means separation of the races without giving the Negro value received for his first-class railroad fare, for example. The Negro death rate in the registration area, per 1000, is twenty-four, as against fifteen for the whites. Negro housing conditions in cities and towns, both North and South, are generally insanitary and are often closely co-related with vice and crime. Thirty per cent. of Negro illiteracy remains to be wiped out. Tuberculosis and infant mortality are robbing the Negro of valuable lives with almost unchecked hands. A nation-wide campaign for better Negro health and education, through the co-operation of white and black people, similar to that which is being most successfully carried on in Virginia by the Negro Organization Society, is needed.

Men and women, money and publicity, organization and fearless initiative are needed in the work for Negro progress. Newspapers are furnished with sensational reports of crimes committed by Negroes and against Negroes. Scarcely a word is given them concerning the thousands of successful and happy Negroes or the hundreds of Southern communities in which white men and black men are living together in peace and mutual helpfulness.

Publicity should be given to the facts of Negro progress for the benefit of the average white man who naturally knows little about the Negro as an individual, capable of development, and regards him as a "problem" rather than as a powerful factor in national advancement. The facts should also be published as an inspiration to Negro youth who are only too prone to accept their parents' dictum: "You never can be nobody, nohow."

Monroe N. Work, who has charge of Research and Records at Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee, Ala., and is the editor of the "Negro Year Book," has prepared an excellent summary of Negro progress from 1863 to 1913. Thomas Jesse Jones, of the U. S. Bureau of Education, has written a suggestive pamphlet on "Negroes and the Census of 1910." Both these publications may be secured free of charge by writing to Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va. They give in detail what is sketched here in crudest outline. They should interest anybody who is giving money to Negro schools or who is urging others to invest in Negro character building.

Since Negroes have done so exceedingly well, despite their handicaps and their constant battling with economic forces, should they be left alone now to work out their educational salvation, for example, without the hearty interest and financial support of their present friends and, above all, without the sympathetic touch of the generation now coming into active business life?

How can denominational and private interests in Negro education and welfare be so reorganized and consolidated as to avoid the present school rivalry, duplication of equipment and teaching force, and general waste due to overlapping fields of activity?

How can the present educational forces in the South be directed so as to help the masses of Negroes who so sorely need better homes, better schools, better churches, and who must wring their prosperity out of the red and black earth of the Southland?

How can the members of State Legislatures be induced to appropriate more money for Negro schools which must train intelligent leaders as well as law-abiding followers?

How can sufficient endowment be secured for the home and extension work of such schools as Hampton and Tuskegee, which have been so helpful in spreading the gospel of "education for life" by teaching young men and women how to be of service to their race in home-making and community building?

To what extent are the trustees of small Negro schools, for example, willing to give over to State control the institutions which they have guided from the founding?

To what extent is it desirable that private individuals, business men, let us say, should direct (usually from a distance) the schools which they could turn over to State school officials and thereby strengthen the State school system?

How can more well-trained white and Negro teachers, imbued with the true missionary spirit of service and self-sacrifice, be secured for public and private Negro schools?

The Negro and the white man in the South are solving in many, many communities the problem of race adjustment by remaining separate in all matters purely social and by standing together as one in all matters economic. As Booker T. Washington recently pointed out, there is no race problem in Gloucester County, Virginia, for example. There the white man and the black man understand and respect each other. Negro education there has meant better service in the daily walks of life. The jail is empty; the farms are well tilled; the country is quiet and prosperous. The white man and his neighbor, the Negro, recognize their interdependence and goodwill prevails.

Important agencies, co-operating with Negro farmers, teachers, and business men, are helping to solve the race problem in the South. To mention a few is to suggest what the present solvents are accomplishing.

The Co-operative Farm Demonstration Work is a joint undertaking of the U. S. Department of Agriculture and the General Education Board. It is directed by Bradford Knapp, son of the late Seaman A. Knapp, and is helping the Negro on the land to get a better living from tilling the soil and become more self-supporting. It is also showing the rural Negro how to improve and enrich his home, church and community life.

In the rural schools of Virginia, Kentucky, Arkansas, Alabama and North Carolina, under the direction of young Southern white men, industrial supervising Negro teachers are organizing classes in cooking, sewing, canning and useful manual training. Instead of working for a mere pittance for a few months in the year, it is now possible for a Negro teacher, trained in handwork or cooking and sewing, to be useful to several hundred rural children and receive decent pay for eight to ten months of service. The supervising teacher is becoming a county leader.

Then, too, the Rural School Fund; Anna T. Jeanes Foundation, ably directed by James Hardy Dillard, of New Orleans, a fine type of progressive and fearless Southerner, carries on rural-school improvement work in 135 counties.

The National Negro Business League, organized in 1909, and presided over ever since by Booker T. Washington, has stimulated the formation of Negro business enterprises. The annual meetings have become clearing houses of information concerning the success of the Negro in business. The League exerts a fine lateral influence.

Finally, the graduates of Hampton, Tuskegee, and other institutions, are showing white people, chiefly by example, that they are helping to solve their own problems by leading clean, Christian lives. They are promoting Negro usefulness and resourcefulness. They are assets of untold value to the nation. They are turning their disadvantages into advantages. They are reflecting the fine personalities that have been dedicated to Negro uplift during fifty years.

Negro freedom has meant real progress. The best custodian of Negro freedom and progress is a Negro who has been trained to serve God and his fellow-men.

"To be anxious for souls, and yet not impatient; to be patient, and yet not indifferent; to bear the infirmities of the weak, without fostering them; to testify against sin and unfaithfulness and the low standard of spiritual life, and yet to keep the stream of love free and full and open; to have the mind of a faithful, loving shepherd, a hopeful physician, a tender nurse, a skilful teacher, requires the continual renewal of the Lord's grace."

THE HIDDEN LIFE.

We live our inmost lives alone;
 At least we are but little known,
 And even those who know us best
 Have probed to find within our breast
 That secret place, that hidden source
 Of life's expression. But, of course,
 They probe in vain. The life lived there,
 No mortal soul may with us share.
 Deep in the confines of the heart
 Where all life's mighty issues start,
 There is a hidden sphere, unknown
 To others—there we live alone.

Alone! Alone!! We long in vain
 For sympathy to ease our pain;
 For sympathy that can understand
 His plan! How wisely God has planned
 To keep His center and His Throne
 Reserved to Him, and Him alone!
 We turn to God, and, seeking, find
 What friends, however good and kind,
 Give not. He understands and feels;
 He every bleeding heart-wound heals;
 The realm we occupied alone
 He fills: Our lives to Him are known.

—GRACE HOWE BERRY.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

NEW YORK TO ENGLAND.

We sailed this year from Hoboken. It is directly opposite New York, and is essentially a European city. Down by the piers it looks, smells and sounds "beery." Our ship was the Rotterdam of the Holland-American line. I have always liked this line—it is not so well known as some others, but like the other ships, and they possess every comfort or luxury a European can desire.

The Rotterdam is a magnificent vessel. Five decks, one above the other, are, amidships, devoted to the cabin passengers. They almost seem to have too much deck room. But of course you can always find something you would like to make better. In the beautiful dining saloon the chairs fit closely into each other like a mosaic. The first night out was very hot, yet our beds had about one-inch thickness of blankets over them and where to put those wretchedly superlative blankets we knew not. It was worse than the senselessly heavy covers imposed on perspiring humanity in a Pullman car on a rainy night. Anyhow we grumbled. Did the Atlantic roll over a rumbler when traveling? He learned in old days to be content. Meanwhile for some of the rest of the trip Peter Louis Stevenson's comment holds all too true, "Comfort is the traveler's pastime."

Our water in the dining saloon was very green. We were given, however, excellent instruction in English and table methods and threw in a fee besides. My wife at first would, but in time, at luncheon, ask for quail and salad, and he would soon return with a large bowl of rice, a saucer of stewed fruit, and a big dish of oranges and bananas, followed immediately by cold cream. We finally learned to take what we could get and to accept it as it came, but otherwise the service was excellent and very cheap. The tendency the civilized world has to demand more and more for excellent service. The demand is not only increasing but it is being applied in most places.

As the ship is so crowded, she is affected by the enmit of the sea, and a great deal of sickness is suffered by the fellow-men. The sickness is not of the nature of the common sea-sickness, but of the nature of the common sea-sickness, and is caused by the motion of the ship. The motion of the ship is caused by the motion of the sea, and the motion of the sea is caused by the motion of the wind. The motion of the wind is caused by the motion of the air, and the motion of the air is caused by the motion of the sun. The motion of the sun is caused by the motion of the earth, and the motion of the earth is caused by the motion of the universe. The motion of the universe is caused by the motion of the God.

One morning we awoke to find that a summer gale was on. How the average landsman dislikes even a little storm! You step out on the floor of your stateroom and it wobbles more than ever beneath you. A general feeling of uneasiness is discernible right under the diaphragm. You say to yourself, "Will I hold together until after breakfast?" You struggle into the process of dressing and it proves a very big matter. You go to breakfast and order kippered herring, as being tasty. It is "tasty" but you do not taste it. Breakfast is a failure, so you go on deck. You sit in the steamer chair and watch other unfortunates stagger to their chairs and sink down with expressions of unutterable woe depicted on their countenances. You once in a while take a turn about the deck, but soon decide that the simple life is good enough for you. You nearly freeze under your warm rugs, and look enviously at the few agile bipeds clothed in light flannels who joyously promenaded up and down in front of you. They look so happy, and you are so unhappy and humiliated! The day wears on. The gusts of wind which make wild music about you, and the roar of the angry sea beneath, gradually die away. The boat steadies up. What is more important you steady up, too. And then you go to your narrow couch, tired, hungry, sleepy, but hopeful of another day.

The next day does not disappoint you. The ship is once more on an even keel. The decks are flooded with sunlight. The sea dances and plays beneath a perfect sky, and reflects it in the loveliest azures and ultramarines. Deck games are once more in fashion, and laughter and the sounds of hurrying footsteps are heard again over the ship.

The evenings are spent by different people according to their varying fancies. You look into the smoking-room about 9 p. m. and see there a crowd of men and women bidding on the pool connected with the gambling on the ship's run the ensuing day. As the nights go on the crowd increases, and you are sorry to see young folks inveigled into this giddy lure for gold. In the old days I have known of collusion between ships' officers and one or two passengers in connection with such gambling. The great mass were in those days, in plain English, robbed in their search for fun. It is claimed that now-a-days such collusion is impracticable and unknown, and possibly that is so. Meanwhile he is wisest who fights shy of efforts to get money without offering an equivalent. "Betting is a fool's argument."

Then you wander forward and look into the music-room. The fiddle and piano are working hard. Many men and women attired in evening dress sit around solemnly listening to the enticing strains. The dark mahogany and gilt walls, and stained glass windows and green furnishings all make a foil to the richly dressed company. Luxury abounds. My own thoughts lead me far away from the scene of pleasure before me. I think of the sorrowing poor in the hot city we have so recently left behind us. I think of how the money and affection bestowed on jewels and gowns could be applied to helping others. I think that pride and the enjoyment of God's best gifts may lead us to forget the Giver, and fall short of a real enjoyment of the real sweetness of life. Yet possibly some of those present give more of their time and money to the less fortunate than we know.

The morning of "the Sabbath Day" little indicates that it is different from any other day. Worship is held in the large saloon of the second-class passengers. Some two hundred gather, and their serious faces and sober dresses indicate that they are not living for this world alone. They are a cosmopolitan group, representing every denomination, including Hebrews. And I think they go away comforted in God.

The Dutch servants on these Holland ships learn American and not English. The two languages are not exactly alike, although similar. Thus our stewardess when calling a passenger under her care to the morning bath says, "Leddy, the bath is ready." She does not say, "bawth," as the English do. And we note that she unconsciously falls into a funny rhyme as well.

WM. C. ALLEN.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

MOTHER'S MOTTO.

I give you a motto, my little child,
To take with you everywhere—
Into the play world, into the real world,
Into the world of care.

"Not the things that I like to do,
But the things that are right to do.
Not everything that I want to do,
But whatever I ought to do."

This is the way to be good and great;
This is the way to master your fate;
This is the beautiful, blessed way
That will make you glad at the end of the day.

"Not the things that I like to do,
But the things that are right to do.
Not everything that I want to do,
But whatever I ought to do."

—GRACE C. LITTLEFIELD, in Christian Register.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

ADJUSTMENT.—If a saw is to make a straight, smooth cut, the points of the teeth on each side of the saw must be in a line. The teeth must be bent a little in alternate directions, so that the space cut in the wood will be a little wider than the thickness of the solid part of the saw. These matters must be attended to when the saw is sharpened, so that each tooth will do its share, and so that the saw may work smoothly and efficiently. This may be expressed by saying that not only must each tooth be sharp, but each must be adjusted in length and position to match the others.

The saw is an example of what may be called permanent adjustment. When it is sharpened and set it does not need to be adjusted further until it needs to be sharpened again. If we wish to saw something for which a particular saw is not suitable, we do not adjust the saw, we take a different one. Some tools, including the plane, may be adjusted to some extent to adapt them to particular uses. Such a tool is said to be "adjustable." The more complicated tools called machines involve a greater amount of adjustment in the first place to make them work properly, and they are often so made that they may be adjusted to take care of different kinds of work. A familiar example of this latter kind of adjustment is the mowing machine. It does not matter whether we live on a farm or not, most of us are familiar with the lawn mower if not with the larger machine. The farm mower can be set to cut a long or short stubble; so can the lawn mower. The farm mower may be made to cut grass which is "down" and tangled, by tilting the cutter-bar so as to throw the points of the guards near the ground. An important kind of adjustment in these and other machines is the tightening of bearings which have become loose by wear. Such adjustment is commonly provided for in building mowers and other machines that are especially liable to severe use and consequent wear. When the knives of the lawn mower are worn so that they do not cut well, we may turn some adjusting screws and so make the revolving knife meet the stationary one evenly all along. Even then the machine may not cut properly if the bearings in which the revolving knife turns are worn, for then when heavy grass is encountered the knife is pushed up and no longer meets the stationary one. Beside these two important kinds of adjustment, there is another even more important which has to be considered in putting the machine together in the first place. All the parts must be in their right places, and each fitted correctly to the other parts with which it comes in contact. When I was a boy, I took to pieces a striking clock which needed repairs. In the course of my work one of the wires of the striking apparatus was bent a little. Before that clock was ready to strike as a clock should, I had learned a good deal about adjustment. Quite recently I cleaned an old-fashioned tall clock, and when it was put together it struck at ten minutes before the hour. I found that the cog-wheels driving the hour hand had to be fitted so that certain particular cogs come together as they revolve, in order for the clock to strike when the minute hand points to sixty.

In the case of many machines, the difference between good work and poor work is very often the difference between careful and careless adjustment. It pays to study our machines so as to be able to tell what adjustments are needed to meet each kind of difficulty.

All these kinds of adjustment which have been mentioned, if properly made, may be depended on to produce the desired result of making the machine or tool work as it should for some time. We often meet with cases which need adjustment, which are very trying because they will not stay fixed. Doors are sometimes troublesome because they stick. When they have been planed off at the right place so as to shut freely, presently the house settles some more and the process must be repeated. Or perhaps the door had swelled in damp weather, and after being planed off, shrank again in dry weather, so that the latch would not catch. If the door were made of oak or maple, each time the weather changed the shape of the door would change, as well as its size, and the problem of adjustment would be discouraging indeed. Because of this strange behavior of oak and maple, when we wish to make doors to match finishings of those woods, we make the inside of the doors of soft wood, and cover this with a thin layer of oak or maple.

There was once a teacher who habitually said of teachers or pupils who did not get along comfortably with other people, that they lacked adjustment. I think this a very striking and serviceable figure of speech. Sometimes the lack of adjustment is due to the disarrangement of some mental cog which surgery or medical treatment may put right. The clocks with striking gear out of order are comparable to certain forms of insanity.

A more generally used form of the figure makes each individual a part of a machine, whose efficiency depends not only on the correctness of its pieces, but also on their proper placing. (This, I imagine, is somewhat the kind of picture that was in the mind of the teacher when he spoke of people being out of adjustment.) Very slight shifting of the escapement of a clock prevents it from running at all. If we imagine a machine in which each part has the power of self-adjustment, the difference between the best and worst results from such a machine would be very wide. This is well illustrated in playing ball. The boy who has not learned something about this adjustment, so appropriately called "team work," has not begun to be a good ball player. Team-work is just as valuable at home and in school as on the ball field. Even where there are only two on the team, the need for mutual adjustment is often very great. When the door does not shut properly, it is often the fault of the frame, but we are much more likely to plane off the door than to jack up the settling house. It is not fair to make the party who is doing his work well adjust himself to one who has changed for the worse.

Many people are affected by the weather and other changing circumstances, like doors that stick in the summertime. When one knows how a particular kind of weather is going to affect his team-mate, it is possible to meet the situation. Some people are like oak or maple doors, to which it would puzzle an india rubber door-frame to adjust itself. The only way to cure a disposition like that is to cut out the inside and fill in with something that will not warp. (These things teach that beauty is no sign of amiability, and that since a door may look like oak and not warp, it is not safe to judge by appearances.)

When one part of a machine is out of place or has a flaw, not only is the efficiency of the machine lessened, but other parts which come into contact with the defective one are injured. To be out of adjustment involves hindering the progress of our group, failing to do justice to ourselves, and doing active injustice to others.

Each of us is not only a part of one or more teams (home, impression on the hearers. The meeting was attended by about 150 persons, mostly non-members, whose words and manner expressed interest and satisfaction in the service. Besides Max I. Reich, Walter Moore spoke briefly. Several other Friends from near-by towns attended, including Friends from Bristol and Rancoeus, who came at no little inconvenience from the storm and the late hour.

CORRESPONDENCE.

IN THE FRIEND of Ninth Month 26th, a selected piece states that "no greater blessing could come to Britain than the mantle of George Fox should fall upon some prophet in the twentieth century." Friends are not as faithful to God as George Fox was, is the reason a like mantle does not fall upon one or more; for George Fox could see eye to eye with God in the great plan of salvation. God is just as able to raise up prophets in England or America or any other place as ever he was, but Friends cannot see eye to eye with Christ our Lord nor with one another, as George Fox did, to walk in the footsteps of our Lord and to keep his commandments. The Lord would bestow gifts of prophecy upon a man or woman in the twentieth century as he did upon Paul or Peter or George Fox in the seventeenth or earlier, but he knows that Friends would not all come out of the world and walk in the footsteps of God's Son as Friends did in the beginning. When the Lord raises up a prophet for his glory he expects that one to watch the pointing of his holy hand so He can show him or her how to become a fisherman such as George Fox was—a true fisherman to catch souls for the Lord. We see that there are many who go to fish for their Lord, but what do they catch? George Fox let down the net at the Master's word, and he drew fish for his Master, for he let down the net as the Lord gave him word. He never cast the net on the left side. How many Friends have cast the net on the left side and drawn nothing! The prophet that always wears the mantle of the Lord will catch fish for his Lord as George Fox did. If Friends had kept to their first love, they would have monopolized the world, but instead of doing that, they have worked their own overthrow as Israel did in their day, and brought shame and disgrace upon their own heads. The Lord can do no mighty works on account of unfaithfulness. Friends to a large extent could see eye to eye with Christ, they would come forth out of the world and separate themselves from it as Christ gave commandment and they would learn to walk in the dear Master's footsteps, step by step as He leads the way; then we would have prophets raised up like unto George Fox. But I fear that there would be some who would not accept the Lord's message, as it was with Joseph Hoag. It was said to him after a meeting he had, "We did not need that." If it had not been needed the Lord would not have sent his servant there.

H. T. HAIGHT.

NORWICH, Ontario, Canada.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—A despatch from Boston of the 2nd inst. says: "Thousands of 'children of the mills' and juvenile employes under sixteen years of age in manufacturing establishments in Massachusetts other than mills were thrown out of work to-day by the operation of a new State law, which prohibits the employment of any child under fourteen years in a workshop and provides that no child under sixteen years shall work more than eight hours a day or more than forty-eight hours a week. Fifty thousand employes are affected by the change."

A despatch from Chicago of the 2nd instant says: "A volunteer committee of public safety is to be appointed by Coroner Hoffman to try to lessen the number of deaths by automobile and street car and railroad accidents. The committee will be composed of representatives of railroads, traction companies, automobile associations, police and the Board of Education. Up to the first day of this month, there have been 107 deaths by automobiles, in 1913. Deaths, from accidents have increased here from 3482, in 1895, to 5274, in 1912."

On the 2nd inst. a rear-end collision occurred on the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, by which twenty-one persons were killed, eight of whom were from Philadelphia, and about fifty were injured. Of those injured, nine also were from Philadelphia.

A despatch from Chicago of the 2nd inst. says: "One hundred degrees was registered on the street level in Chicago to-day. In Missouri, Kansas and other Middle West States, the maximum was around 100."

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has lately pensioned a number of the employes who have been in its service for periods ranging from forty years to forty-eight years and upwards.

A despatch from Trenton, N. J., of the 4th inst. says: "Preliminary work in the enforcement of the recently enacted basket law, effective Eleventh Month 1, has been begun. The law requires the use of baskets that are of standard sizes, i. e., two, four, eight, sixteen, twenty and thirty-two quarts. For the sale of berries and small fruits baskets must hold one pint or one quart."

A recent telegram from Raleigh, N. C., says that during a recent storm, Ocrakee Island, on the coast, had been swept by a hurricane, and that not one of the nearly 500 persons of the island escaped. This belief was based on the high tide in Pamlico Sound and the ocean inundation. Moorehead City, Beaufort, Newbern, Washington, Bayboro, Melf Haven and dozens of smaller towns on the coast are reported as having great losses from the fury of the gale.

A despatch from Duluth says: "Engineers of the Lighthouse Bureau have finished installing new apparatus at Whitefish Point, and starting to-night mariners will be guided by one of the largest lights in the world. It has 3,000,000 candle-power and can be seen seventy-five miles."

Information from Kansas City, Mo., indicates that great suffering has occurred in that State lately from the absence of rain. In Kansas, the average maximum temperature was well above 100 degrees. At Junction City the mercury was 108. Lakes and streams in Geary County, in Kansas, are dry for the first time in years, and persons living near them have been compelled to dispose of dead fish to protect the health of the community. Mayor Pfeiffer, of St. Joseph, Mo., issued a proclamation appealing to the people to be careful with matches. Lawns are burned down, weeds are dried up and dead leaves cover the ground.

It is stated thirty thousand fires occurred in Texas between Twelfth Month 10 last year and Ninth Month 1, according to a report just issued by State Fire Marshal Wallace English. He gives an interesting analysis, showing that the ratio of preventable fires in dwellings to the unpreventable was 86.4. Of preventable fires the greatest number, 2282, or 16.7 per cent., occurred as a result of defective flues. Of the unpreventable fires, 679 were caused by lightning and 329 were incendiary. To unknown causes 2385 fires are ascribed.

FOREIGN.—Strike riots have lately been resumed in Dublin, many persons being injured. The outbreaks are ascribed by the British press, both Unionist and Liberal, to the home rule campaign. On the 1st inst. it was stated that the disorders to-night resulted in injury to many persons, 35 of whom were taken to hospitals.

A despatch from The Hague of the 2nd inst. says: "The plenary conference of the Interparliamentary Union in favor of international arbitration was opened here to-day. The chairman referred sorrowfully to the continued growth of armaments, while most of the peace conventions, he said, had remained dead letters. The Interparliamentary Union, he pointed out, would have to demolish the warlike traditions of the vested interests before the world could be revolutionized. The Dutch Foreign Minister in welcoming the conference was also inclined to be pessimistic. 'The aim of the union is as noble as it is difficult of attainment,' he said, but expressed the hope that the conference would mark an important step toward the realization of an era of good will and peace between the nations."

An international Zionist congress has lately been held in Vienna. The principal object of the Zionist is to re-establish a home for the unsettled Hebrews in the Holy Land.

A despatch from Peking of the 5th states that despatches received here from Nankin report that the northern armies completely sacked that city. The looting and other excesses lasted three days. The fall of Nankin to the Northern forces marks the close of the rebellion, as all the provinces are now reported to be quiet.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 87.

Mark H. Buzby, N. J.; Howard H. Brinton, Canada, to 14, vol. 88; Chester Mott, Ia.; Geo. R. Chambers, Pa.; W. E. Orser, Canada, to No. 27; Annie E. Kite, O.; Wm. D. Smith, for Joshua P. Smith, Ia.; Phiny Gregory and for James N. Gregory, Calif.; M. T. Stanley, Agr., Ind., for L. O. Stanley, E. B. Carter, to 14, vol. 88; Joel R. Macy to 27, vol. 86, and Harvey Pickett; Wm. B. Harvey, Pa.; Reuben Haines, Phila.; R. Louisa Troth, Phila., to 14, vol. 88; Rebecca C. W. Reeve, N. J., to 27, vol. 87;

Remittances received after Third-day noon will not appear in the receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

FRIENDS' SELLING SCHOOL. 140 N. Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, reports Ninth Month 22, 1913. Catalogues and complete information may be had on application.

WALTER W. HAVLAND, Principal.

FRIENDS' SELLING SCHOOL. 142 N. Sixteenth Street, Phila., will be open from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. on 2nd and 5th P. M.—Saventh-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. only.

WEST-TOWN BOARDING SCHOOL. The stage will meet at Westtown Station trains leaving Broad Street, Penna. R. R. Phila. at 6:32, 8:21 A. M., 2:18 and 4:00 P. M.; other trains will be met on request. Stage fares usually by cash only. To reach the School by telegraph, address W. C. 50, Bell Telephone, 1114.

W. M. B. HARVEY,
Superintendent.

M. T. C. MEETINGS—NINTH WEEK. Ninth Month 15th to 20th:

Fourth P. M. for W. 50th District, Twelfth Street, below Market.

Fourth P. M. Ninth Month 17th, at 10:30 A. M.

M. T. C. 10th and 30th St., Pa., Fourth-day, Ninth Month 17th, at 10 A. M.

H. C. 6861, Pa., Fifth-day, Ninth Month 18th, at 5 P. M.

TO ADVERTISERS—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT
made from the entire whole grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

NO NEED

To see a printer, to get a card, and printed matter of all kinds, call on

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,
122 N. 11th St., Phila.

1010 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

POCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevated 1800 feet, commanding extensive mountain and valley scenery. Address

J. W. HURLEY, Manager,
POCONO MANOR, PA.

Subscribers patronizing our advertisers will assist THE FRIEND, especially by mentioning our paper in correspondence.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.—The following books have recently been added to the Library:—

Blanchan—Birds That Hunt and are Hunted.

Bliss—Religions of Modern Syria and Palestine.

Butler—International Mind.

Carrington—Fresh Air and How to Use It.

Grant—Convictions of a Grandfather.

Penn Colonial Society.

Celebration of the Two Hundred and Thirtieth Anniversary of the Landing of William Penna.

LINDA A. MOORE,
Librarian.

Ninth Month 6, 1913.

DIED.—On the thirteenth of Seventh Month, 1913, MARY W. ROBERTS, of Moorestown, N. J., wife of the late Isaac L. Roberts, aged forty-nine years.

—, after short illness, Seventh Month 27th, 1913, at Hotel "Van-couver," Vancouver, B. C., Canada, WILLIAM KENNARD, in his sixty-fifth year; a member of Twelfth Street Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia.

W. B. WEAVER Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5th ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN
TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT
OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL
ACCOMMODATIONS FOR
FUNERALS.

BELL 'PHONE. ESTABLISHED 1880.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

Eye
Comfort
Guaranteed

by glasses that suit, that give clear, easy vision. Fitting glasses to Old Eyes is a specialty with us—and to Young Eyes, too.

C. A. LONGSTRETH
Specialist in Eye Testing
222 Market St., Philadelphia

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL.

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

From Bondage to Freedom, by Isabel Shipley, 2nd Edition, 2 cts.
Northfield Symposium, 1905. What 16 young Friends thought when they were 8 years younger, 2cts.

Choir in all the Scriptures, by A. M. Hodgkin 60 cts.
Hyde's Testimony 50 cts. by L. C. Wood
For a Free Conscience $1.00

ALL POSTPAID

J. B. WOOD, PINE POINT PARK, CAMDEN, N. J.

JOS. B. SCATTERGOOD HOUSE, SIGN AND DECORATIVE PAINTING

Orders Solicited Bell 'Phone
275 S. FOURTH STREET

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
(Marcellus Balderston)

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. 518 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL 'PHONE PHILADELPHIA

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER
S. W. COR. 16th & RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 6846

Plant Paeonies and German
Iris at this season of the year

Paeonies are as perfect in form and as varied in color as Roses.

German Iris come in many shades, grow easily and flower abundantly.

Our illustrated catalog, that is mailed for the asking,
describes a long list of each of these and almost 2000
other varieties of Perennials, Trees, Shrubs and Vines
for lawn planting.

THE WM. H. MOON CO.
NURSERYMEN

Nurseries at
Marsdale, Pa. Room H, Stephen Girard Bldg.
Philadelphia, Pa.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, NINTH MONTH 18. 1913.

No. 12.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
{ DAVID H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to

EDWIN P. SELLEW OR THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

MARGARET FOX.*

Were one to ask for a beginning for a series of books on women who have impressed themselves upon their generation, and the day seems to call for such a volume, I know of no better beginning than the life of Margaret Fell Fox. Not only upon her own generation, but upon all those that have followed, this woman has exerted an influence for good. The circle may have been a restricted one, but the volume in review just from the press may help to widen it.

It is a unique character that the author portrays; one equally true in the seclusion of Swarthmore, as the wife of a man high in political preferment, or again after the scene is shifted and Judge Fell has deceased, she becomes the wife of the founder of a religious sect, and becomes most intimately identified with its chief interests and concerns.

Just fifty years ago Maria Webb's "The Fell's of Swarthmore Hall," came from the press, it is now out of print, and the present volume is timely, besides it contains much matter that was not accessible until lately, and corrects certain minor inaccuracies that appear in the other book. Possibly the chief charm of the new book is that Margaret Fox is made to tell the story of her life herself.

The modern plan of writing biography through extracts from letters and journals may fail with those who place literary merit above that which Helen Crosfield and so many others have followed, but one certainly comes closer to the home life of this seventeenth century family through the letters that passed between mother and daughters, and through extracts from memoranda that are musty with age, than through any other channel. Nor is it less difficult to exercise the judgment one self in the selection than to retell the story in your own words.

What letters, etc., have been passed by we do not know, but they are doubtless numerous; those that have been selected give us the connected history that we have wanted and grant us an intimate acquaintance with the daily life at Swarthmore, and as clear a picture as one has a right to ask for of the trials and conflicts that beset the various members of the family as they yielded to their sense of duty and cast off allegiance to the church of their childhood and became converts to the new faith.

Fresh interest attaches to all that concerns Swarthmore Hall, because of the recent purchase of the estate by a lineal descendant of Judge and Margaret Fell, and the probable conveyance in the not remote future to Friends or their representatives. This has been alluded to more than once in recent issues of THE FRIEND. To all who are in the least familiar with George Fox's Journal, a certain charm attaches to the old Elizabethan Hall, and we are glad to feel that the beautiful oriel windows are once again to look out upon scenes as fair as those that George Fox so often enjoyed, that the large chambers richly paneled with oak are to minister again to the comfort of traveling Friends, and the wide hallway with the chief charm of the house, the winding oaken staircase, are to welcome as they did two hundred and fifty years ago the Friend who, it may be, has traveled from "beyond seas" to visit them. A few years ago the Hall presented anything but an attractive picture. Its owner cared nothing for it except as it yielded him an annual rental, and the farm, hired out year after year to a dairy farmer, had lost all semblance to the place as pictured in George Fox's Journal or in his wife's many letters. Some who visited it twenty years ago should return if possible to have the unpleasant memories removed.

It will be remembered that the north was the scene of greatest activity in the infant church, and Swarthmore Hall, though geographically isolated and rather inconvenient of approach, was the real centre of this activity. It served as a sort of a bureau of exchange with Margaret Fell and her daughters as the chief officers in charge. She had been endowed with a rare personality, and that which in many natures would have caused a shrinking from publicity, in Margaret Fox's case seems to have developed the quality which no Friend of the time so strikingly showed. She was a mother to her children in the truest sense of all that term implies; she ruled her household with diligence and economy. She welcomed the stranger to the hospitality of her roof, and even more to the tender counsel of her maturing judgment; she stood fearless for the right, and underwent abuse to the extent of long imprisonment that her conscience should not be sullied, and more than any other of her time, even William Penn not excepted, she seems through her personal charms to have gained access to those high in authority and to have won grants for release from imprisonment where others entirely failed.

When anything important happened she was notified of it. There comes a letter of the great "Threshing and Ploughing Meetings" in London, and from Edward Burroughs of his travels and trials in Ireland; the pamphlets issued against Friends find their way to her home, and she sends money to be used in printing rejoinders; a Friend asks that she will take two women under her roof for awhile, one to be returned soon with a companion as she is unused to travel, the other that "she be set and kept to labour" that her ways may improve. William Dewsbury writes to her concerning a Friend that needs a servant and James Nayler sends a wayward maiden to Swarthmore and asks "to let her stay awhile with thee, and show her the way of love, which is much lost in the height." There would seem to be no limit to the variety of letters that passed to and fro, from those that chronicled the sending or receipt of a package of rare cabbage seed or of some knives and inkhorns, to the letters couched in stately language and addressed to the rulers and their subordinates.

*Margaret Fox, of Swarthmore Hall, by Helen G. Crosfield; 250 pages; price, postpaid, $1.20; Friends' Book and Tract Committee, 144 East Twentieth Street, New York. Published by Healdy Bros., London.

Of letters of this last class it seems certain that she wrote four letters to Oliver Cromwell, several to the justices and magistrates of London, to the Queen Dowager, the Queen of Bohemia and the Duke of York, and seventeen to King Charles II; not a few of these she delivered in person, gaining at times access to royalty that was denied to others on like errands with her own.

Where in modern times can be found a biography that combines more of the quiet beauty of homely joys, and the stately pomp and worldly dignity that seems to belong to kings and their courts, than in the life of Margaret Fox?

The last section of the book, some fifty pages, is devoted entirely to letters that passed between various members of the family during the last twenty years of Margaret Fox's life, the last years of the seventeenth century; they give a wonderfully vivid picture of the age in which they were written, and are a valuable contribution toward forming that background of history which enables the modern reader to enter into sympathy with the spirit of those early days.

Such a life as Margaret Fox lived is a rich legacy, and the skill displayed in the portrayal of it in the volume under review makes a real contribution to our libraries. No time has ever called more loudly for the clear presentation of such a life than the present, and we gladly welcome and recommend it.

D. H. F.

ROBERT BARCLAY ON THE SCRIPTURES.—Robert Barclay and G. Keith had a dispute with some of the students of divinity (so-called) at Aberdeen, in which the following arguments were used, viz:

Student: "That which may beguile a man is fallacious. But according to the Quakers, the Scriptures may beguile a man, without the indwelling of the Spirit. Therefore, according to the Quakers, the Scriptures are fallacious."

To this, Robert Barclay answers:

R. B.: "I deny thy second proposition: for the Scriptures cannot beguile any man; although men may or have beguiled themselves by a wrong use of it."

Student: "Take notice, people; the Quakers say the Scriptures cannot beguile you."

R. B.: "Speak louder yet; for we do and have constantly affirmed it, and we hope it will help to clear us of those misrepresentations, as it we despised or spoke evil of the Scriptures." B. F., pp. 570-7, 1075.

A RECIPE FOR SUCCESS.—Keep your head cool—your feet warm—your mind busy. Don't worry over trifles. Plan your work ahead, then stick to it, rain or shine. Don't waste sympathy on yourself. If you are a gem, some one will find you.

Don't whine; tell people you are a failure and they will believe you. Talk and act like a winner, and in time you will become one.

A LETTER FROM THE WALDENSIAN VALLEY.

IV.

BY HERBERT WELSH.

On the occasion of my two previous visits to the Vaudois country, made in 1908 and 1910, respectively, I had not been able to visit any of the valleys adjoining that in which Tour Peller stands at the outlet and Bobbio at the head; the valley of Angrogue, Prall and the rest. This omission I was anxious during this last visit, to some extent at least, to supply by the device of a week's walking trip, starting from Bobbio in company with my friend, B. Gardiol. Even this modest plan I was obliged to curtail, but I succeeded in making a most interesting and satisfactory trip of two days' duration with my good host, on foot across the Cal Guilemo into the adjoining valley of Prall, following down its beautiful course to Pinerola and Perosa at its mouth, and then back again to Bobbio.

We left the Presbytere on the morning of the 24th, at 5.30 o'clock. The day was beautiful and bright, like the many that had preceded it, to the continued grief of the farmers in that locality, long afflicted with drought, but to our great satisfaction. Exquisitely beautiful was nature about us at that tranquil moment. The sun, though well risen in the east toward Tour, was faintly veiled in white mist above which the sky was unclouded. The opal tints of the early day rested on the depths of the narrow valley, with its innumerable little water-courses, upon the stately opulence of the chestnut groves, and upon the towering cliffs and peaks that rose above them. We walked for a few rods along the high road westward, crossing the "Rampart de Cromwell," beautifully fringed just then above its rigid grey stones with long undulations of over-ripe grass. Then we turned abruptly to the right into one of the narrow stone-paved sheep paths which led directly up the side of the mountain. For a considerable distance our path lay under the great chestnut trees, free from undergrowth, finer of bark, more stately of form than ours at home. Often the stones over which we slowly lifted ourselves upward were annoyingly wet with the many tiny springs that in every direction bubbled from the earth. It is a marvelously well-watered country, even in times of drought. Here and there a chalet, abandoned for the summer months by its occupants, who tend their cattle on the high Alpine pastures until the autumn, revealed itself nestling in a crotch of the mountains. After an hour or so of steady, slow pulling upwards, we were free from the chestnut groves, indeed from timber of any kind, and were out upon the bare rocky slopes. Then came experiences to me very unpleasant, but to which Pastor Gardiol, accustomed to such journeys from childhood, was entirely oblivious. Nor did it ever occur to him that they might be trying to his friend of the plain. Not that I at all blamed him for insensibility in view of his chamois training! The path, no longer a comparatively broad and stone-paved way as it had been at first, had become extremely narrow as it zigzagged around the shoulders and jutting of the mountain—on the right hand were broken ascending cliffs, while on the left was virtually infinity, had one's foot slipped, or had one yielded to that inexplicable temptation which seems to assail weak heads on giddy heights. But I soon found that summoning a little resolution and concentrating the mind on other things minimized, and finally pretty much overcame, the trouble. Soon the experiences of the precipices, like unpleasant episodes of the natural life, of which they seemed the symbol, were passed, and in their stead came an inspiration of the long and toilsome ascent. Shall I ever forget it? We were approaching one of those high Alpine pastures, where these mountain people find abundant herbage for large herds of kine or flocks of sheep and goats—beautiful green turf spread like a damask cloth between stern, forbidding, barren grey peaks that rise above it and shut it in. We turned to look back over the ground already trod and the heights surmounted. The sun was well up in the clear blue sky; beneath lay visible at intervals the grey-green depths of the valley of Bobbio, but large stretches of it were completely hidden by great masses of pure white fog, which slowly and silently, driven by a gentle breeze, made its way westward up the main valley. Would it turn to the left, mercifully sparing our magnificent view and bright sunshine, or would its pale folds swirl to the left and envelop us? Our fog waves were pitiful and did the former. We were left undisturbed in the presence of glorious mountain beauty. The upper surface of this moving stream of vapor was illumined by the rays of the sun, while above its vague and ever-shifting cloud-forms rose the firm serrated outlines of the many peaks that clustered about us. One immediately facing us, higher than them all, and completely dominating its companions, formed a magnificent pinnacle against the azure sky. The chasms that scarred its apex were white with glittering snow. But it was a pleasant change when these desolate splendors were followed by signs of humble but cheering Alpine life. We had reached the green pasture where a large herd of cows was peacefully feeding, making the air lively with the never-ceasing tinkling of innumerable bells. Shepherd dogs were darting from point to point, bringing the stragglers within safe limits. But, better still, there were cheerful friendly faces to welcome us, and outstretched hands to be cordially shaken, belonging to members of Pastor Gardiol's flock. There were women and children mostly, but we met a few men also. The contrast which this scene presented, with its animated accompaniment, was a delightful contrast to the lonely mountain defiles, destitute of any signs of life, through which we had just passed. Higher up the mountain still, and within sight of the final ascent to the Cal Guiliemo, we came to a sheltered resting place, consisting of a few chalets or stone cabins, where the people whom we met below find a home during the cattle-pasturing of the summer months. It was nearly noon when we reached this spot—the air was keen and bracing, the sunshine most brilliant. Near the door of one of these huts, where cheese-making was going on, a young Waldensian woman, Suzette Artas, who is a parishioner of Pastor Gardiol's, came forward to greet him and myself. She is strong and lithe of figure and movement, and has a handsome, open, intelligent face. Like all the Waldensian women with whom I have met she has that simple, frank degree of manner which is so attractive. She invited us into the hut, where we rested for a while. I enjoying a bowl of ice-cold milk, hospitably given me. But from this refreshment I noticed that my good friend, perhaps with a prudence bought by experience, refrained. Meanwhile both of us watched with interest Suzette's younger sister, Marie, a remarkably beautiful girl, unusually tall and larger and of a physical strength that would have put to shame many a man, making cheese. I shall not venture on the details of the mysterious process that went on under our eyes, save only to say that fire burned under an immense copper kettle filled with boiling water, and standing to the right of the young girl. To her left, standing on a rude bench was a larger wooden bucket filled with an inchoate white mass—the cheese in process of construction. Marie's sleeves were rolled up above the elbows. Spotlessly clean were the arms and hands thus revealed. A huge stone resting on the bench, of a weight which neither Pastor Gardiol nor I would have cared to tackle, was in an instant seized by her, and with a quick, graceful swing of the active body, lifted into place as a weight upon the cheese. The process, seemingly having reached a stage toward completion, the young girl rested from her labors, seating herself on a low stool near the door, the light of which fell full on her face, she left to her older sister the responsibilities of conversation. The clear noonday light from the doorway lit up a strikingly handsome oval face, large brown eyes, in which there seemed to be a touch of pathos. The impression of the character lying beneath was that of strength and seriousness.

It was not a long, but certainly it was a hard pull from the huts to the Cal Guiliemo. Of course to an Alpine climber it would be nothing, but I, a good walker on level ground, found it necessary to stop to rest and gain breath every thirty steps. But the summit once reached what a splendid noontide view of the valley of Prall met our eyes! Great mountains, closely pressing elbows upon each other, bare rocks above, penciled faintly here and there with streaks of snow, dark pine or larch groves clothing the lower slopes, and at the bottom clustering chalets, and a stream threading the ultimate depth. On the mountain side, alternating the glare of golden sunlight with cool violet, lay the moving shadows of clouds that a summer's breeze swept over the blue sky.

Bobbio, Seventh Month, 1913.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

Francis Thompson, the author of the following poem, was a physician, as is the new poet laureate of Great Britain, Dr. Bridges. Dr. Thompson has recently died, and this fact and the publication of his poems and prose works in three volumes have attracted renewed attention to his "highly eccentric genius." As an introduction to the poem, we print the comment in the Springfield Republican upon it.—[Ed.]

The poem most worth quoting in this entire collection is "The Kingdom of God." It is a fragment with a two-fold interest. It was found among Thompson's papers after his death and is obviously not as he would have left it had he been spared fully to fashion its thought to the standard of his art—it is as a splendid gem in the cutting of which the cutter fell asleep. But though the last two stanzas stand most in need of the refinement that would surely have been given, it has the interest of intimacy that belongs to all unfinished works of master hands, while the earlier stanzas suggest that it might have become one of the most perfect of the shorter poems in the language:—

O world invisible, we view thee,
O world intangible, we touch thee,
O world unknowable, we know thee,
Inapprehensible, we clutch thee.

Does the fish soar to find the ocean
The eagle plunge to find the air—
That we ask of the stars in motion
If they have rumor of thee there?

Not there the wheeling systems darken,
And our benumbed conceiving soars!—
The drift of pinions would we hearken,
Beats at our own clay-sheltered doors.

The angels keep their ancient places:—
Turn but a stone, and start a wing!
'Tis ye, 'tis your estranged faces,
That miss the many splendor'd thing.

But (when so sad thou can'st not sadder)
Cry:—and upon thy so sore loss,
Shall shine the traffic of Jacob's ladder
Pitched betwixt heaven and Charing Cross.

Yea, in the night, my Soul, my daughter,
Cry,—clinging Heaven by the hem
And lo, Christ walking on the water
Not of Gennesareth, but Thames.

THE CHURCH TO HER OWN MISSION.—There has not been a period in the history of the Christian dispensation when there were so many efforts to induce the Church to enter into competition with other organizations as now. It is a moment of crisis. If the Church can be kept to its own mission, then her victory is assured. If she answers the many voices which are now calling to her, and goes out into the world to compete with all sorts of human organizations in all sorts of work, then her power is declining, and will decline until she be brought back to her Lord's own appointed way and work. Methodist Recorder.

IN SICKNESS.

Child of God, is now thy portion
Hours of loneliness and pain?
Do thy labor and devotion
Seem expended all in vain?

Looking at the past or future,
Do the clouds about thee lower?
Past and future are the Father's,
Present only claims thy power.

He now gives thee just this moment—
Live it in his power and love,
Knowing that the next may find thee
In his glorious courts above.

Thou'st a blessedness in living
Just by moments day by day,
With the Holy Spirit giving
Sweet communion by the way.

Know thy Father; in thy Jesus
Is revealed his tender love,
And He longs to have thee trust Him,
And his loving kindness prove.

Let thy loneliness and heartaches
Prove the gateway to the throne,
In the audience-room—his Presence,
Thou must enter all alone.

Still thy voice of prayer and pleading!
Hush the sound of praise and song!
Listen to the Spirit's teaching,
Listen though He tarry long!

Oh! how sweet to know the Father
Governs all my days and years,
In the Saviour's loving presence
Hushed are all my foolish fears.

—ELLEN W. PAIN.

EXTRACTS FROM DIARIES AND LETTERS OF RICHARD B. BROCKBANK.

(Continued from page 125.)

1869-1871. Many things have taken place since the above was written, and much deep feeling gone through. I attended the Yearly Meeting, but must not attempt any remarks on that here, having in my letters to my wife given pretty full memorandum of my visit there.

Lane Percival was received into membership in Fifth Month and the Sixth Month Margaret Braxton has applied. Amidst much to cheer and courage these are gleams of comfort.

A few weeks ago I called on M. B. and found her and her mother alone. We dropped into silence and I had to address her mother very closely, telling her that she had had a day of visitation and knew how the tender mercy of God in Christ Jesus had been extended to her, showing her her condition, etc., and how dangerous it was to put off these times of visitation, etc. I do not remember all that was said, but I do remember that it was a very close exercise, and that I felt as though I had a fresh extension of Divine love to her then.

At the same time I remember that two days previous her mother had had a dream or vision that she had had a great exercise at a time of great weakness, wherein she was in the place of torment and the condition of lost souls after death very closely and clearly, and it seemed like a warning. She mentioned it to the nurse who told her it was just her weakness and made little of it, but it had evidently made a deep impression on M. Braxton's mind, and when it was renewed two days before my visit she told them that she had been at fresh thinking of it and she mentioned the circumstances as though fresh in her remembrance, and in a very serious manner.

After I left she said to Margaret, "Has thou told anyone what I said the other night?" "Yes," Margaret said, "I told Jenny P." "Aye, then she has told Nancy, and Nancy has told Mr. B., else he could not have spoken as he did," Margaret said she did not think so, but she would enquire. She asked Jenny, but she had never mentioned it to anyone. Margaret then told her that Friends were often led by the Holy Spirit to speak closely to the states of people about whom they had no outward information. She admitted that it must be so and that it was very remarkable how very closely I had spoken, as though I had known all the circumstances. She said that the future had often been dark to her, but that there must be a hereafter. Margaret said this was a great admission from her, as she has always been an unbeliever. She seems very much altered and does not talk against religion and religious people as she used to do. I record this to remind me that I have no need to lose faith in the guidance of the Holy Spirit or in the tender mercy of God in Christ Jesus, even in very unlikely cases. I felt when I was speaking that what I had to say was very remarkable to one whom I knew professed unbelief. I felt astonished at the flow of earnest love towards her which seemed to well up in me as a yearning warning, tender, earnest and solemn, as though almost final, or as it were the last one earnest striving visitation. It must be more than twenty years since the first warning, and to have it thus renewed and so soon after this spoken to by a poor instrument must be very remarkable to such a mind as M. B.'s, evidently is, and shows very clearly the tender long suffering mercy and loving kindness wherewith even, to our view, very hardened cases are treated. I should think religion has had no place there to outward appearance, but who knows the inward convictions that have been hers during these years?

30-10-1874.—Too seldom do I note down my feelings in this way. Yesterday, in our Fifth-day Meeting, I felt a fresh sense of heavenly love and the need of close searching of heart. My mind was tendered and a few sentences had to be uttered, very few, but I was peaceful and felt all the remainder of the time a sense of the nearness of Divine love and peace. Oh, may I never go before my master, but be content humbly to follow Him! It is indeed humbling work at times, but blessed be the Lord, He is also an abundant comforter, and giveth the true joy and peace to those who put their trust in Him.

On First-day last R. Doeg, T. J. S., Thos. Thomson and I went to Mosedale and Gillfoot, being on an appointment to visit our small meetings, Robt. D. also holding a minute had appointed meetings for the public at both places. It was an exceedingly wet morning and the waters were out so much that some of the fords were impassable and others dangerous. When we got to Isaac Young's at Bowscale, Caldew was out so far that it was dangerous to cross, the road in Mosedale having been washed by a previous flood. We could not get to meeting and the people would also be hindered, so we decided to put off the meeting to 1.30 p. m. instead of 10.30 a. m., as had been intended. We thus were enabled to do with our journey through [accomplish it], i. e., we took the carriage and went to the meeting at 1.30, had a solemn meeting and I trust, a favored one, with fifty or sixty people, and then went direct on to Gillfoot to the meeting appointed at 4 o'clock, where about 120 to 130 I should think were at meeting. I was glad to be there. I think dear R. D. was favored on both occasions. My service was in a few words in testimony in each meeting.

James Polglase walked with us towards Hesketh, he said there were more there than would be in attendance at all the places of worship in the parish that day. Oh, that they would come as freely to wait upon the Master and hear Him as they do in the hope of hearing a few words from a poor servant. Then would they be richly blessed, I do believe.

7-1-1875.—Since the above I have been twice at Hesketh, first, 1welfth Month 8th, J. R., and I with R. D. to visit Jos. Priestman and Barbara and Esther, his daughters, on their applications for membership, and again on the nineteenth with R. Doeg to Robt. Priestman's funeral at Whelpo, a favored time, then returned to Howbeck and had a relieving opportunity with the relatives after tea—roads like ice.

31-1-1875.—I am almost afraid to go to meeting this morning. Last First-day I was at Whinfell Hall and came back refreshed in spirit from a little visit to our dear cousins there. Oh, that I may be preserved in a humble, watchful frame of mind, and that the preserving power of the Lord may be in mercy granted, that nothing that I do or say may do harm to his precious cause. Surely his power is the same as it was "in the days of old and in the former years" and it is more needful now than ever it was. For never was there one more unfit or unworthy than I constrained to stand as a fool before the people to speak well of his Holy Name. Therefore I have no alternative, nothing to depend on but a humbler, simpler trust in his preserving power. There is no doubt a further work to be done in me. Oh, that I may be enabled in adorable mercy to abide the day of his coming, when He shall sit as a refiner with fire, etc. I have renewedly felt the need of this inward and purging work, that the offering may be "unto the Lord" and "in righteousness." "Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord as in the days of old, and as in the former years."

Going to meeting with the above feelings I felt much as though I should like to be excused speaking to the people at all. The smallness of my gift, my unfitness and want of ability to set the message of faith before them, and the want of acceptance that there seems in some to receive what I have to say, were all before me.

M. Ercroy after a time stood up with the account of the feeding of the multitude with the loaves and the fishes, and how the disciples reasoned that there was not enough, and yet when they obeyed there was enough for all and more to spare than they had at first. She went on, that it had always been so, that those who were called to do the Lord's work endeavored to excuse themselves, instancing Moses, how he said that he was not eloquent neither before the Lord spoke to him nor since, that he was slow of speech, etc. Also Jeremiah, how he said that he was but a child though he was assured that he was ordained to this service before he was born. She went on to say how some in this meeting may have excused themselves in a similar way and then went on to express her sympathy with them and her desires for their encouragement and faithfulness, believing that if they were faithful and obedient they would be enabled to say with the Psalmist, "He hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God. Many shall see it and fear and shall trust in the Lord."

My mind was brought into much tender feeling at this evidence of the Lord's love and compassion towards me, and after a solemn silence I felt it best to say that I had been more than usually unwilling to break the silence of the meeting, and was ready to excuse myself on account of my inability, but I had been reminded of the language of the apostle Paul that if I seek to please men I am not the servant of Christ, and that he who chooseth the service of the Lord must first count the cost, lest when he has begun to build he may not be able to complete.

We must be willing to be anything or nothing. Referring to what had been expressed amongst us by a dear sister in that meeting, that it had been for our encouragement that our giving up or obedience might be to his praise, quoting, "Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Zion, and unto thee shall the vow be performed," that as the heart was bowed before Him in humble obedience we should be enabled to quote or adopt this language of the Psalmist.

Thus are we gently led along in tender compassion and abundant love. Oh, that we, that I, may indeed "fear and trust in the Lord."

16-6-1876.—Removed to Crosby.

(To be continued.)

"OUR best fare here is hunger."—S. RUTHERFORD.

THE FORTUNATE ISLES.

You sail and you seek for the Fortunate Isles,

The old Greek Isles of the yellow birds' song? Then steer straight on through the watery miles, Straight on, straight on, and you can't go wrong.

Nay, not to the left, nay, not to the right,

But on, straight on, and the isles are in sight,

The old Greek Isles where the yellow birds sing

And the life lies girl with a golden ring.

These Fortunate Isles they are not so far,

They lie within reach of the lowliest door;

You can see them gleam by the twilight star;

You can hear them sing by the moon's white shores—

Nay, never look back! Those leveled grave-stones

They were landing steps; they were steps unto thrones

Of glory for souls that have gone before,

And have set white feet on the fortunate shore.

And what are the names of the Fortunate Isles?

Why, Duty and Love and a large Content.

Lo! these are the isles of the watery miles,

That God let down from the firmament,

Aye! Duty, and Love, and a true man's trust;

Your forehead to God though your feet in the dust.

Aye! Duty to man, and to God meanwhile,

And these, O friend, are the Fortunate Isles.

—JOAQUIN MILLER.

For "THE FRIEND."

AN AFTERNOON IN THE ROMSDAL.

BY STANLEY R. YARNALL.

Here this afternoon in the "land in which it seemeth always afternoon" I lie writing on a couch of warm, fragrant moss and grass. My only companions in this hidden little field-corner are the curlews down below solemnly having a Norwegian tea on a little sand spit among kelp-covered stones. Happily flies and mosquitos do not seem to exist in Norway. The valley is musical with the low murmur of distant waterfalls, white threads among the sombre ravines, and from the left beyond the screen of hazel bushes comes the laughter of harvesters, men and women, who turn the precious hay in this good weather, and the lusty song of the German marines, strong, clean-looking boys, with their firm throats and their dressy navy blue uniforms and white collars. Several hundred have shore leave to-day, and have left the Friesland and Thuringer, the cruisers anchored in the Isford, and are bravely taking the road back to the Romsdal in happy groups, singing as they swing along in true German fashion.

Yesterday afternoon several hundred more were on shore and it was a pretty sight to see the roads and paths dotted with them as they returned to the dock at their time to go on board. Most of them were big, hearty boys, happy in their exercise and quietly responsive to the subdued mood of the long Norwegian twilight.

Norway's fjords are the favorite places for the German Emperor to send his fleet in the summer. He himself stays some weeks each summer at Balholm, and all through the season several warships are scattered here and there in picturesque spots. Two years ago England also sent many ships here and the Norwegian parliament became alarmed lest the terrible battle that will never come between the two great naval rivals, would be fought in the beautiful fjords and among the dreamy purple mountains. They passed a law therefore that from thenceforth no foreign warships shall visit Norwegian waters unless by special permission of the government.

It seems a wise choice the Emperor has made in the place chosen for the summer outing of the navy. Norway is very progressive in her legislation on alcoholic drinks, and there is nothing in these quiet rural surroundings to demoralize in any way. The men come ashore and walk about the country with evident pleasure in this simple exercise. As I mingled with them but, excepting as they waited to take their places in the boats I thought them the most orderly, decent and cleanest lot of young men I had ever seen together in large numbers. With old-world sentiment and simplicity many were taking on board handfuls of wild flowers, meadow grass and berries. Bundles of purple berries to less fortunate comrades. A few men talked about arm in arm they reminded me of old college days with their good fellowship.

The officers, while equally quiet, suffered by comparison with the fine, simple young manhood of the rank and file. There was an assumption of position about them, an arrogance and offensive sense of importance that went against the grain and made an American wonder at the docile and unquestioning submission of the men. The hotel proprietors felt also of heavy drinking among them. If the German navy meant nothing more than mere wholesome vacation parties to thousands of young men, friends would have no quarrel with it. But one must remember the false ideals of patriotism constantly renewed by such a system, and realize that Germany, with its one-man system of Government conducted on a military basis, is to-day the great rock against which the waves of pacific influence break apparently in vain.

As I watched from the shore this morning the hundreds of young fellows in the very flush of youth going through their drills and exercises, I could not but remember German women at home doing the rough work of the fields and the heavy work of the factories, and I recalled also the fact that almost no Germans are traveling this summer in Norway, their great playground after the Alps. The hotel proprietors say that the new military taxes have frightened them and that things look dark in Germany. The German army and navy are unquestionably great schools, but they are expensive, and one wonders that that great country will realize that the same results can be reached by other methods.

The song of the sailor-boys has led my pencil far astray from the present theme—a description of the indescribable—a Norwegian fiord in the afternoon light. Here in the Romsdal (the Valley of the Rom or Raum) one is surrounded by mountains, some rising to more than six thousand feet. In this northern latitude fields of snow still break the dark summit and high slopes. The mountains are virile and noble in form and outline, and the silent fiord that lies along at their feet heightens their dignity and beauty. A mantle of dark Norway pine and fir extends to the top of the lower mountains and gradually fades away on the higher shoulders in green, on a slope that pass into the bare rock. Down by the fiord here and there are little farms, vividly green, surrounding the cow barns and stables, and the log or frame houses of native and imported timber.

There, there seems to be enough air striking the water to give the surface a rippled appearance that shades off in the distance to a silvery grey. The simple life of the farm employs men, women and children these long days of hay making, and there is no summer life on the fiord which has in consequence a sabbath-day peace. Once in an hour one may see a row-boat in which an old man or woman is coming to the little village of Amdalhaas on some necessary errand.

The sense of absolute rest and repose is here and this deepens as the afternoon slowly, very slowly, fades into evening, and the sun sinks into the short shimmering night. This is so soft and so calm and so at rest in the purple valleys. The water is a deeper green with a richer and more velvety bloom, and the reflection of the sky that the noon vivid color has passed and the shadows deep, the sounds of day are hushed and the whisper of the water on the shore tells of a calm that is ever nearer. It is, as so I write, and there is a glow and a soft half hour, as I take the field path from the quiet fiord, surrounded by its circle of mountains that look at us from the deep, waters stretching along at their feet.

FORESTRY IN PENNSYLVANIA.

BY JOSEPH ELKINTON.

The passing of three important laws, affecting the growth and taxation of timber by the Penna. State Legislature, this summer, is the culmination of effort on the part of the Penna. Forestry Association for a quarter of a century. As this Association has been the pioneer for State legislation on this subject in the United States, some account of the progress made may be of interest to all who appreciate the value of trees. Dr. J. T. Rothrock, Secretary of the Penna. State Forestry Reservation Commission, has recently made a very comprehensive and illuminating report on the successive measures adopted in Penna. to stay the ruthless hand of the lumberman and the ravages of fire.

Exclusive of Wm. Penn's wise provision that for every five acres of forest removed, one acre should be allowed to remain in timber, the earliest productive act toward the conservation of our natural resources was passed in 1871. Richard J. Haldeman, representing Lancaster Co., Penna., in the Forty-first and Forty-second Congresses, made a very enlightened appeal to the National House of Representatives in 1872, outlining the principles of forestry and their importance to the entire country.

Dr. Franklin B. Hough reported in 1877 to Congress on the best methods for the preservation and renewal of our forests, and again in 1886 and 1882.

These reports showed a very careful and capable grasp of the need, existing in all parts of our country, to preserve the forests and laid the foundation of the modern conservation movement.

In 1886 Dr. B. E. Fernow, a trained forester and a most zealous and competent man, was made chief of the division of forestry in the National Department of Agriculture. Both Dr. Hough and Dr. Fernow contributed directly to the movement in Penna.

Before 1886 the amount of hemlock cut did not equal the quantity of white pine and hard wood rafted to Williamsport, which was the centre of the lumber industry in Penna. Since then hemlock has taken the leading position and indicates what serious inroads have been made in the white pine forests of our State.

If we recall the original growth of trees in the virgin soil of Penna. that part of it which lies south and east of the Blue Ridge was chiefly covered by deciduous trees. These were removed primarily in order to obtain farms, and some of the most productive farms in the United States are found in this section—covering some 5000 to 6000 square miles.

Enormous quantities of logs were burned to get rid of them in those days. The southwestern counties of Penna. are distinguished for their farms and mineral products rather than for their lumber interests since 1860.

Had the early settlers located in the central counties instead of in the eastern and southeastern, doubtless they would have removed much of the forests there, just as they did in Lancaster and Chester Counties, and the timber, so terribly wasted, would have remained for the lumberman of the nineteenth century. It is a comfort to know, however, that the value of woodlands in the older settled sections constantly increases and, under the protection of the new laws, the beauty of the landscape also increases.

Two Philadelphia women, being deeply impressed by the danger of exterminating the white pine and other valuable trees, thirty years ago, were active in organizing the Penna. Forestry Association, and one of them is still an earnest worker. The directors of the Girard Estate have attempted to practice forestry on a portion of their lands since 1877.

In 1887, Governor Beaver appointed a Committee of five experts to examine into and report upon the conditions of forest culture in Penna. This Committee made a careful study and report to the Legislature, with the Governor's recommendations, and was then released. In 1893 D. Smith Talbot, of Chester Co., introduced "An Act relative to a forestry Commission and providing for the expenses thereof." This became a law and Wm. F. Shunk, with Dr. J. T. Rothrock, were appointed Commissioners. Their first report made a volume of 300 pages, with valuable plates and maps to illustrate the text, and 34,000 copies of this report were printed. A campaign of education has since been conducted over the State by forestry leaflets and illustrated lectures. Forest Leaves has been published once in two months for twenty-seven years by the Penna. Forestry Association. The State Department of Agriculture was created in 1895 by the Legislature. In it there was a division of Forestry, and Dr. J. T. Rothrock was placed at the head of that division as Commissioner of Forestry, with the able assistance of Robert S. Conklin. In 1897, Governor Hastings signed "An Act authorizing purchase by the Commonwealth of unseated lands by non-payment of taxes for the purpose of creating a State Forest Reservation," and another Act "To secure State forest reservations and providing for the expense thereof"—both of which have seemed important and productive, as 1,000,000 acres have been so reserved during the last fifteen years.

It's easier to be a line an' act than to act like one.

The first land purchased for non-payment of taxes was in Pike County, at seven cents an acre. This section had been fire-swept repeatedly and had been lumbered off bare. Under State protection it is beginning to produce valuable timber. The State allows two cents per acre for road purposes and two cents for school purposes out of the State Treasury to the local district where these reservations are situated.

The appointment of fire wardens and constables, with authority to call out citizens to suppress forest fires, was a forward step, as well as directing County Commissions to ferret out those who created forest fires; yet the public is still too indifferent to the needs of forest protection, as a number of vicious fires have been started this year by natives and others. Some 101,000 acres were burned over in 1897, entailing an estimated loss of $304,000, not including the soil, which was partially injured, and which will require decades to reproduce. This was less than the average yearly loss.

The Forestry Commission in 1898 purchased 40,000 acres each on the waters of the Allegheny, Susquehanna and Ohio Rivers. In 1899, Gifford Pinchot gave an illustrated lecture in Philadelphia on the National Forest Reserve, which was most helpful in stimulating interest and assisting the work of forestry in our State. The purchase of 15,000 acres at Mont Alto in 1901 opened new possibilities by establishing a training school for rangers and foresters. In 1906 the first class of six foresters was graduated. The students are admitted annually to its three years' course, after a severe mental and physical competitive examination. There are usually from fifty to seventy applicants for admission to this school. The lumbermen, who at first strenuously opposed the effort to conserve the forests, are now among its most ardent advocates.

For many years it has been apparent that the citizen land-owner could not undertake to raise timber trees at profit to himself under the existing system of taxation—which practically confiscated the timber before its maturity. Efforts have repeatedly been made to correct this national injury but not until this summer have these efforts been effective.

A year ago, President Henry S. Drinker, of Lehigh University, was appointed chairman of a Committee on forest legislation by the Pennsylvania Forestry Association at its annual meeting; and largely through his unremitting and wise leadership has the present law been passed—providing that all private auxiliary forests shall be placed on the same basis as the regular State Forest Reserves, and thus fixing the assessment at not more than $1.00 an acre, so long as the requirements of the State Forestry Commission are fulfilled by the owner.

Lehigh University has a course of popular lectures on forestry which supplements the more technical instruction of Mont Alto and State College, and is a factor in shaping the national forest policy. Dr. Drinker freely circulated among school children of the United States millions of fire circulars, graphically showing the causes and results of forest fires. It is gratifying to record that last year there was less loss from this cause than ever before in the history of Pennsylvania.

During the administration of Governor Stuart a far-reaching woodland law was signed—"To permit the acquisition of forest or other suitable lands by municipalities for the purpose of establishing municipal forests and providing for the administration, maintenance, protection and development of such forests."

In this connection, it is well to note that the State Forest reserves have become year by year more utilized as outing grounds, especially by hunters and fishermen and camping parties. Family groups have sought the State woods simply for rest and health-getting, so that no less than 5000 citizens were allowed this privilege last year—after pledging themselves to rigidly observe the rules of the Forestry Department.

While Pennsylvania was not the first to establish forest reservations, it was the first to establish scientific forestry on its reservations and to establish a school of forestry in the United States.

New York State enacted into laws much that the Pennsylvania Forestry Association has long contended for and prepared for legislation. This Association has been a prime mover in the general conservation wave now so rapidly spreading over the country. Every lover of trees should co-operate in this work by joining the Association. Albert B. Weimer is Chairman of the Membership Committee to whom application should be made (at 1012 Walnut Street, Philadelphia). Two dollars per annum is the annual membership fee and twenty-five dollars life membership. The exhibition of every phase of forestry held under its auspices for one week this spring in Horticultural Hall, Philadelphia, was highly instructive and creditable. The Recording Secretary, F. L. Bitler (1012 Walnut Street, Philadelphia), will give any information desired.

The State Forestry Commission is working in full sympathy with this Association, and Dr. Jos. T. Rothrock is General Secretary of the Pennsylvania Forestry Association, as well as Chairman of the State Commission—which is planting millions of seedlings annually on the State reservations and greatly increasing the beauty and value of our forests as well as educating the public in so good a cause.

POCONO LAKE, PENNA., Eighth Month, 1913.

"IT NICHT HA' BIN WAUR."

When failures becloud the blue of your sky
And troubles begin in torrents to pour,
Just think of the floods which others have whelmed
And say to yourself: "It nicht ha' bin waur."
You're drenched but nae drooned; it micht ha' bin waur.

When out on life's sea your vessel is wrecked
Beyond the relief of a humanly shore,
Cling fast to the spar you have in your hand
And say to yourself: "It nicht ha' bin waur."
Some hav'n't a spar; it nicht ha' bin waur.

When Death with dread step comes into your street
And knocks with appalling hand at your door,
Hold fast to the hope you've got in your heart
And say to yourself: "It nicht ha' bin waur."
What if you'd nae hope; it micht ha' bin waur.

And when you shall stand before the Great Judge
Who'll open the Book and look your life o'er,
May He in his love forgive where you've failed
And say to your soul: "It micht ha' bin waur; Gang ye wi' the sheep. It micht ha' bin waur."

—JOHN FINLEY, in The Lull-pool.

COLLEGE OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK.

There was the atmosphere of revival, a living breath of the Divine Spirit, in Bethshan at that time, and Rondo soon came under its blessed influence. Not but that he fought it at the first. A dear girl was moved of the Lord to leave her seat in the meeting and "speak to that black boy." But to all her pleadings he only angrily replied, "Go away; I do not want your Jesus!" From that hour Rondo became the burden of that dear child's prayers.

Rondo's outbreak was the devil's last throw. The patient instructions in the way of life, which he had listened to from the time he connected himself with the missionary, had laid a good foundation in his soul. The fire was laid; it only awaited the application of a match to blaze up, never to go out again. Love conquered him; and if ever the Saviour was real and precious to a human heart, He became so to Rondo. He could not yet read the Scriptures, but he said to us, "The Spirit has shown me Jesus," and no one could doubt the truth of the testimony. Oh, how he adored the Lord and his atoning blood! I never saw a human life so marvelously changed in such a short time. His very features altered. His mental powers, as well as his spiritual life, unfolded day by day, like a flower in the sunshine. From that time he never gave us a moment's anxiety, and nothing but joy. The relationship between him and my dear wife was a truly beautiful one. She would give him a Scripture, and he would go and live it out. To a word of correction his invariable answer was, "Thank you, Mamie," and we never needed to take up that particular matter again.

His prayer-life was an inspiration to us all. Not only did his spontaneous prayers bring a fresh breeze from heaven into our meetings, but he was in the habit of retiring to his room for communion with God before every meal. When he was tempted to be a little lazy, my dear wife would not scold him, but say, "Rondo, had you not better have a little talk with Jesus." He would come back with a shining face, and you never saw floors bee's-waxed in the same thorough style. The silver-cleaning day was always a difficult one for Rondo. But after the love and joy of Christ had got properly into his heart, it became the brightest. He filled the kitchen with sunshine as he worked away. We can still hear his merry laugh, as one day he read in a little tract how Jesus was subject to his parents, and worked as a humble carpenter at Nazareth. The Saviour became his constant example.

If ever there was the love of money in Rondo's heart, it got completely cleansed out. He used to tell us how he had cried three whole days because his wages had been stolen from him on the Congo steamer. But now he declared, "I do my work for Jesus."

A beggar came to the door, and Rondo put all he had—sixpence—into his hand. The servants rebuked him for giving so much to a common street beggar. Rondo looked grave, and said, "I gave that money to Jesus."

If he came from a thievish tribe, we know he never put his finger on a reel of cotton, a shoe string, or a crust of bread not belonging to him. The Divine nature gave him the feelings of a gentleman. The power of God had laid hold on that dear black boy, and had stamped the beautiful image of Christ on his ebony face. His one ambition was some day to return to his people and spread the knowledge of his Saviour. He was always praying for Africa.

A missionary from Uganda begged him of us to take him in native costume to a missionary [meeting]. Rondo, to everybody's surprise, after the meeting had been dismissed, knelt down and prayed for all present, and for the different mission stations in Africa known to him. He began at Mombassa, and prayed for the tribes of his people right across the continent. He felt he had to obey the Spirit of God.

It was touching to hear him pray for the different countries that the missionaries resting at Bethshan came from. I never saw anyone so unselfish in his prayers. The night before he passed away my dear wife went up to his room, and Rondo prayed with wonderful unction and fervency, quite himself again for the moment, for all who had ever been kind to him, for the guests in the Home, the servants, the children, not forgetting baby Joseph. He never once prayed for himself.

It was a bleak winter day when we laid him to rest. The Master stood with us beside the open grave, and it seemed to us as if his pierced hand pointed far away, to the heathen world, to Africa, and to the uttermost parts of the earth. The grave of a son of Africa in our midst is Africa's mute appeal to us. A few days before Rondo fell asleep in Jesus, he was seen in tears. When asked to tell what was wrong, the hot tears welled up afresh, as he cried, "O Africa! Africa!"

The love of Christ was breaking his heart for his poor country. The Spirit carried that cry to the very throne of God!

In Rondo we have a sample of what grace can do with the most unpromising material. There are no color lines in the new creation. We are all one in Christ Jesus. We wept as we stood beside his bier. But there was no sting in his death, and there will be no victory in his grave, and, therefore, we bless the Lord!—MAX I. REICH.

First Month 27, 1908.

SYMPATHY is one of the great secrets of life. It overcomes evil and strengthens good. It disarms resistance, melts the hardest heart, and develops the better part of human nature. It is one of the great truths on which Christianity is based.

POCONO NOTES.

The privilege of listening to Max I. Reich at our meeting for worship on the 24th inst. was appreciated by 250 persons. He dwelt upon the spiritual appearance of Jesus Christ in such a clear and almost realistic way we felt as if we had been in the very presence of our Lord. Again on the 31st inst. the crowning of our gathering in the grove was felt in the precious silence. Daniel Oliver had spoken on the passage: "My son, if thou wilt receive my words and bide my commandments with thee; so that thou incline thine ear unto wisdom and apply thine heart to understanding; yea, if thou criest after knowledge and liftest up thy voice for understanding; if thou seekest her as silver and searchest for her as for hid treasures; then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord and find the knowledge of God." Henry Sangree had enlarged upon the declaration "Lo! in the roll of the Book it is written of me I come to do thy will, Oh! God," while Dr. Stearns brought most feelingly to our attention the difficulty the Saviour had in communicating his teachings and spiritual insight to those about him. Parents often feel something of the same difficulty when trying to convey their deepest life experiences to their children. A deep elyond was struck which to many hearts felt a ready response.

On the 28th inst. Daniel Oliver gave us a very interesting account of the mission work of Friends in Syria. He spoke of the educational work in the schools on Mt. Lebanon, where Friends have thirteen primary schools and two high schools—one for boys and one for girls. A most uplifting and enlightening work has been done and is still going on, which has had a tremendous effect in changing the life and character of thousands during the years this work has been in existence. Many young men who have been pupils in these schools are now residing in South and North America, South Africa, West Africa, the Sudan, Egypt and Australia, and are living lives of usefulness and prosperity in consequence of the training they have received.

His efforts in behalf of peace were particularly interesting. The open-hearted Syrians have many admirable traits of character, and are among the most lovable people on the face of the earth. This is illustrated by their readiness to forgive each other and give to one another the kiss of reconciliation, while they drink the cup of coffee—which is the seal of peace and goodwill. He spoke of their temperance work, which is very encouraging. He also gave a graphic account of the medical work done by himself in Ras el Metn, and that at the hospital in Brumana, which is the central station. The great need of medical work in the Lebanon touched the hearts of all who heard it. It was most interesting to learn that a hospital has been established for thirty-six years in this district and that they have a skilled physician, assisted by two English-Libyan missionaries, who are trained nurses, as well as by three Syrian nurses. With in-patients and out-patients, about 2500 persons are treated an-ments, trade union reports and working compacts in central cities throughout the United States from 1907 to 1912.

It is stated that American crops in general will this year show a great falling off as compared with last year on account of abnormal weather conditions during the last month. The falling off is heavy in apples, potatoes, hogs, spring wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye, buckwheat, flax, cotton and vegetables. Rice and wheat are the principal crops showing an increase, and the wheat crop promises to be the largest the country has ever produced. The falling off in other crops is expected to add to the cost of living. A study of prices made by experts of the Department of Agriculture shows that during the last month the prices for staple crops increased in an unusual degree. The cost of living on Sixth Month 15 was approximately 60 per cent. higher than the average between 1890 and 1900, more than 3 per cent. higher than it was a year ago, and nearly 15 per cent. higher than it was two years ago. Fifteen articles of food were investigated and compared with the average prices between 1890 and 1900. Every one, except sugar, showed a marked advance; bacon advanced 128.5 per cent.

It has lately been stated that while the student world in the United States numbers not far from 200,000 persons, there are nearly 17,000,000 in the common schools of the nation. For every student in our universities, colleges and professional schools there are 80 in our public schools. The need of the nation is not for intelligence or mental culture in her citizens, important as these are, but that they shall be men and women of good moral character.

A despatch from San Francisco says: "Falcon and Hope Islands, of the Friendly or Tonga group, in the South Pacific, with their inhabitants—several hundred natives and a few white men—have disappeared. One of the regular trading ships between Sydney and the Tonga group reported the sinking of the islands. Just prior to this the instruments at the Sydney naval station showed that several violent earthquake shocks had taken place about 2000 miles northeast of Sydney."

A despatch from Kansas City of the 8th inst. says: "Heavy rains, which fell over a large territory in Kansas, Oklahoma and Missouri to-night led the local government forecaster to express the opinion that the long drought which has oppressed the three States has been broken. The Kansas River, usually a lively stream, is at its lowest record. At some points between Topeka and Lawrence the river is only one foot deep."

It was stated from Kansas City on the 9th inst.: "Further rains reported from Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma to-day added to the relief brought yesterday when general rains broke the worst drought in years. The heaviest precipitation reported was at Galena, Kan., where three inches of rain has fallen."

A despatch from Olathe, Kan., of the 11th says: "A strange phenomenon, as yet unexplained, has brought unexpected relief to a number of farmers near here. There has been a mysterious filling of their wells with clear water in the midst of the drought. It was first noticed in Olathe itself, where a well in the rear of a general merchandise store, which had been dry, gained 20 feet of pure water in two days."

The Government's late crop report indicated the smallest yield of corn since 1903, but that of wheat was estimated to break all records, exceeding the year of 1901 by 6,000,000 bushels.

Director Neff, of the Department of Health in this city, in a paper recently prepared announced that the filtration of the entire supply of this city had reduced the local typhoid death rate to a small percentage.

It was stated from Washington on the 10th inst.: "The Department of Agriculture to-day estimated the total production of all cereals this year would be 111,484,000 tons, or 20.1 per cent. less than last year, 1.4 per cent. more than 1911 and 6.9 per cent. less than 1910."

FOREIGN.—It was stated from London on the 9th inst. that the meeting of the British Association, in Birmingham, is unique from the prominence of women who will take part in its discussions. For the first time there is a woman presiding over one of its sections.

A despatch from London of the 11th says: "The Imperator sailed to-day with the largest number of persons ever aboard a ship, a total of 5,019, including passengers and crew. There are 3,619 passengers aboard, 828 first cabin, 683 second cabin, 614 third cabin, 1,494 stowagers. The crew, which includes 200 extra stewards, numbers an even 1,400."

It was telegraphed from Paris on the 11th inst. that the announcement of Dr. Hideo Noguchi's discovery at the Rockefeller Institute of the germ of hydrophobia has aroused extraordinary interest in France. It is the one subject of discussion at the Pasteur Institute, Paris, where Metchnikoff has given out a statement that the discovery is another milestone in bacteriological history. One result of Noguchi's work, however, is that the treatment of hydrophobia, now long and painful, probably will be shortened. Metchnikoff has given statistics heretofore unpublished showing that in 1912, 550 people were treated for a cure at the Pasteur Institute in Paris and not a single death occurred. This is the second time in twenty-seven years that such a record has been achieved.

Asiatic cholera is reported to be spreading in Russia. Eight provinces have been declared "infected."

It is stated that "for the first time in more than seventy years, according to official reports, the population of Ireland shows an increase. The census returns of Fourth Month 2, 1911, make the total population 4,390,219, viz., 2,192,048 males, 2,198,171 females, being a decrease from the prior census of 68,556, or the smallest since the decade 1871-1881. Ireland has suffered a heavy loss from emigration. The drift away her population in this direction during the last five years averages 300,000 annually. The larger proportion of these emigrants were between the ages of 19 and 35 years. Remunerative employment in Ireland for men and women will help largely to check this drain upon her population."

It is stated that a Hungarian has invented an instrument that shows instantly the amount of interest due on any sum for any period at any given rate. To operate the instrument, of simple construction, made in the size and shape of a watch, the hands are placed in the proper position on the dial and the exact amount of interest is given on the face of the instrument. It is said to be inexpensive. The inventor has applied for an American patent.

An earthquake was felt at Kensington, on the island of St. Vincent, on the 8th inst.

A Milan despatch to the Daily Chronicle describing a recent descent into the crater of Vesuvius says: "He and his two companions reached a depth of 1200 feet, which constitutes a record for such an enterprise. They spent an hour making scientific experiments on the brink of a great funnel at the bottom of the crater, which they were able to sound to a depth of 200 feet. The funnel is 500 feet in diameter and was created by the sudden subsidence of the old crater floor last month. Since then the flames which were visible at night have vanished owing to the temporary obstruction of the chimney. The explorers found inside the funnel an enormous fiery cavern. They lost their thermometers through the steel rope on which they were suspended becoming fused by acids and the terrific heat. They, however, obtained a registered temperature of 626 degrees Fahrenheit before the mishap occurred."

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 87.

James W. Oliver, Mass.; Edith Sharpless, Pa.; Daniel D. Test, Phila.; Phoebe Ann Hazard, Pa.; Edgar T. Haines, Agt., Pa. $4, for Sarah M. Walter and Priscilla H. Hughes; Mary W. Young, Phila.; A. Herford Cooper, Pa.; Sara W. Heston, Phila.; B. V. Stanley, Agt., Ia., for Geo. T. Spencer; Samuel L. Smedley, Phila.; Lewis R. Whitacre, Phila.; Anna Hilyard, N. J.; Rebecca Nicholson, N. J. $10, for Sarah Nicholson, Rebecca N. Taylor, Isabella W. Read, Hannah J. Prickett and Louisa W. Heacock; Mordecai F. Starr, Canada, $6, for James D. Lyda Moore and Lydia A. Clayton.

Remittances received after Third-day noon will not appear on the receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

THE appointed time for holding the next meeting at Mount Holly, N. J., will be next First-day, Ninth Month 21st, at 3.45 P. M.

FRIENDS' SELECT SCHOOL, 140 N. Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, reopens Ninth Month 22, 1913. Catalogues and complete information may be had on application.

WALTER W. HAVILAND, Principal.

MONTHLY MEETINGS NEXT WEEK (Ninth Month 22nd to 27th):
Philadelphia for Northern District, Sixth and Noble Streets, Third-day, Ninth Month 23rd, at 10.30 A. M.
Frankford, Philadelphia, Fourth-day, Ninth Month 24th, at 7.45 P. M.
Philadelphia, Fourth and Arch Streets, Fifth-day, Ninth Month 25th, at 10.30 A. M.
Germantown, Philadelphia, Fifth-day, Ninth Month 25th, at 10.30 A. M.
Lansdowne, Pa., Fifth-day, Ninth Month 25th, at 7.45 P. M.

THE MEETING HOUSE is to be held at Abington Meeting-house (S. E. 20th St., North Month 20th, at three o'clock, under the care of the Abington Chapter of Abington Quarterly Meeting.

JOHN S. LITVAK, 142 N. Sixth Street, Phila., will be open from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from 2 to 5 P. M.—Seventh-lays from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. only.

Rhoads Nonkink Hose

It is a pleasure to use Nonkink Hose because it is so smooth and light. You need fear no leaks from making short turns, for it does not kink and break as ordinary hose, because the rubber is forced through the cotton fabric and vulcanized into a solid wall.

We furnish it coupled without extra charge in any length desired up to 500 feet.

It costs less in the long run because it wears so well.

Another good hose at a lower price is our Corinth.

With hose let us supply your needs in Nozzles, Sprinklers, Reels, etc.

J. E. RHOADS & SONS
12 N. Third St., - Philadelphia
102 Beekman St., - New York

POCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevation 1500 feet, commanding extensive mountain and valley scenery. Address

J. W. HURLEY, Manager,
POCONO MANOR, PA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends is only followed

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
(Marcellus Balderston)

802 SPRING GARDEN ST. 218 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL 'PHONE PHILADELPHIA

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

WANTED—A YOUNG WOMAN TO ASSIST WITH the care of small children.
Address MARTHA W. BALDERSTON, Bennett Square, Penna.

A FRIEND RESIDING ABOUT TWO SQUARES above Market and 40th Streets, has two pleasant third-story rooms for rent, furnished, bath-room on second floor. Private family.

Apply to C. Office of THE FRIEND.

ROOMS WANTED—A FRIEND DESIRES FOUR rooms and bath in Germantown.
H. Care of THE FRIEND.

JOS. B. SCATTERGOOD
HOUSE, SIGN AND DECORATIVE

PAINTING

Orders Solicited Bell 'Phone
275 S. FOURTH STREET

A MILLSTONE

Around your neck. That's what poor printing is to any business man.

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,

EDWARD T. BIDDLE,

1010 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST COMPANY OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.
Accounts Solicited Deposits by Mail
Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LITERATURE

FOURTH AND CHESTNUT STREETS

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER
S. W. COR. 16th & RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 8548

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.—The stage will meet at Westtown Station, trains leaving Broad Street (Penna. R. R.) Phila. at 6.32, 8.21 A. M., 2.48 and 4.30 P. M.; other trains will be met on request. Stage fare twenty-five cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, address West Chester Bell Telephone, 114A.

WM. B. HARVEY,
Superintendent.

W. B. WEAVER Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5th ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL ACCOMMODATIONS FOR FUNERALS.

BELL 'PHONE. ESTABLISHED 1880.

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Aves., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

From Bondage to Freedom, by Isabel Shipley, 2nd Edition, 2 cts. Northfield Symposium, 1905. What 16 young Friends thought when they were 8 years younger, 2cts.

Christ in all the Scriptures, by A. M. Hodgkin 60 cts.
Haydock's Testimony 50 cts. } by L. C. Wood
For a Free Conscience $1.00 } ALL POSTPAID

J. B. WOOD, PINE POINT PARK, CAMDEN, N. J.

Plant Pæonies and German Iris at this season of the year

Pæonies are as perfect in form and as varied in color as Roses.

German Iris come in many shades, grow easily and flower abundantly.

Our illustrated catalog, which is mailed for the asking, describes a long list of each of these and almost 2000 other varieties of Perennials, Trees, Shrubs and Vines for lawn planting.

THE WM. H. MOON CO.

NURSERYMEN

Room H, Stephen Girard Bldg.
Nurseries at Morrisville, Pa. Philadelphia, Pa.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL.

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

Subscribers patronizing our advertisers will assist THE FRIEND, especially by mentioning our paper in correspondence.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, NINTH MONTH 25, 1913.

No. 13.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, (J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to
EDWIN P. SELLEW OR THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

Editorial Correspondence.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING (CONSERVATIVE).

A glance at a map of the United States shows not only that the state of Ohio is contiguous to that of Pennsylvania on the west, but also that Barnesville in the former is substantially in the same latitude with Philadelphia. Until flying machines become a more general mode of travel no "bee" or "air" line is likely to be constructed between these two places, owing to the mountain ranges which cross Pennsylvania in a northeasterly and southwesterly direction. Even the great Pennsylvania Railroad is compelled to follow a tortuous or serpentine route. If our railroads were government-owned, or at least government-controlled, the Pennsylvania and Baltimore and Ohio would use the same station in Pittsburgh and the trains would be run so as to make reasonable connections. Under existing conditions the danger of missing connections in Pittsburgh decided our choice of the B. and O. All the way from Philadelphia, as no other road enters the pretty little city of Barnesville near which Ohio Yearly Meeting holds its annual gathering.

On the 11th inst., the writer and his wife left Philadelphia to attend the Yearly Meeting. In getting from our state into its western neighbor our line of travel deviated so much from the direct that we first go more south than west, and later in the direction of almost every point on the compass, except perhaps due east. It struck the writer as remarkably indicative of the circuitous route pursued, that we passed out of Pennsylvania into Delaware, then into Maryland and the District of Columbia; from Maryland into Virginia and back again into Maryland, then into Virginia and West Virginia and back again into Maryland; from Maryland into the state from which we started, and then again into West Virginia, crossing the Ohio River into the state bearing the same name, at Bellaire, Belmont County. Most of these state boundaries were crossed during the night causing no conscious jolt, unless the junction of two rails of the track may have occurred exactly on one of them. The B. and O. "folder" advertises this as "The Scenic Route of Eastern America," because of "the magnificent scenery of the Allegheny Mountains" and "the grand views of the Blue Ridge Range"; yet the only thru train to Barnesville and points further west appearing on the schedule was a night train. Of course we regretted not seeing the "magnificent scenery" and the "grand views", but were thankful to be safely carried to our destination nearly on schedule time. An automobile in waiting soon conveyed the three visitors to the Yearly Meeting to Friends' Boarding School adjoining the meeting-house property. Welcome words and looks greeted them and they were soon comfortably and pleasantly quartered for the week before them.

In any comparison between Ohio Yearly Meeting and that of Philadelphia, in the matter of the numbers attending, two considerations need to be regarded by the visitor from Philadelphia: first, that their membership is not so large as ours, and then that they are not geographically so compact a body, many of them living remote from the place of meeting, which is not itself as accessible as a railroad center would be. Owing to the numerous steam and electric lines entering this city, the larger part of Philadelphia Friends can leave and return to their homes each day, as many do; but in the case of Ohio one of its Quarterly Meetings, and that the largest, is in the distant state of Iowa, with a large Monthly Meeting in California. Only two of the Quarterly Meetings are so located that their membership can readily reach the place of Yearly Meeting which is not in Barnesville, but out in the country. Considering the sacrifice in time and money required to attend this annual gathering the considerable number of Ohio Friends who are present shows that many of them have a lively concern for the promotion of Truth, for the welfare of our religious Society and for the carrying out of the good order of church government prescribed by the Discipline.

The Meeting of Ministers and Elders on Sixth-day, the 12th inst., read and minuted the minutes of visiting ministers who had been liberated for attending the Yearly Meeting and who were present. Three such Friends from Philadelphia were there and two others without such credentials. At the adjourned sitting at eight o'clock Second-day morning a minute was read for Elwood Carter, a Friend nearly ninety years of age and a minister of Plainfield Monthly Meeting, a subordinate meeting of Western Yearly Meeting, who attended all the sittings of the Yearly Meeting except that of the Ministers and Elders on Sixth-day. The other Friends having minutes were Benjamin Vail, Edwin P. Sellew and C. Virginia Sellew. Three other ministers from Philadelphia attended without minutes, viz: Elizabeth C. Cooper, Susanna Kite and Nathaniel B. Jones. All of these visitors had vocal service in ministry on different occasions during the week.

The method of answering the Queries in the Meeting of Ministers and Elders varies from our own in one respect. Instead of reading summary answers, previously prepared, when the replies from the constituent meetings are read, the Ohio Friends read only the latter at the first sitting and then a minute is made requesting the Clerk of the meeting to comprise these answers in a summary and produce it at their adjourned sitting. This course appears to place the whole responsibility for the correctness of the summary on the Clerk, as so much time elapses between the hearing of the several answers and the summary which is to embrace them that the meeting can hardly judge if the Clerk has overlooked or failed correctly to express any point or points covered by the several answers which he has endeavored to comprise in one.

The writer was not able to attend the closing sitting of the Yearly Meeting, Fifth-day morning, the 18th inst., but the business at the other sittings was conducted in an orderly manner and under a good measure of religious exercise as well as with sufficient expedition to avoid dullness and at the same time not evince undue haste. Jonathan Binns and Carl Patterson, the Friends who have efficiently served the meeting at the Clerk's table for a number of years, were reappointed to the service.

The report of the Boarding School Committee for the past year disclosed a very satisfactory condition of that institution, which reflected credit upon the Superintendent and the Committee, and at the same time indicated the loyal support which had been given to the institution by the whole membership of the Yearly Meeting. An increased attendance at the School had produced an increase in revenue, so that the financial part of the report showed a balance of about $800.00 in favor of the School. The Committee is a large one—larger than our Westtown Committee—but as with us the details of management are largely attended to by a number of small sub-committees. At their request a reappointment of the General Committee was made this year.

One of the most interesting and profitable features of this annual gathering are the evening collections in the Assembly Room of the School. These are virtually daily meetings for worship, opened by the Superintendent reading a chapter in the Bible and they afford an opportunity for the expression of religious exercises on the part of exercised Friends, some of which might otherwise occupy the time of the business sessions, so it seemed to the writer. The collecting-room will probably seat about two hundred, and it was often nearly filled, many of them young people. The social intercourse between old and young at the School is one of the most helpful of the privileges of the week and also a very promising outlook for the future of Ohio Friends.

The public meetings for worship are held First-day morning and afternoon and Fourth-day morning. In addition to these Joshua P. Smith requested the appointment of a meeting Fourth-day afternoon especially in the interest of the younger Friends. The request was approved and the meeting held, the younger people being well up in the front seats. The attendance on First-day, especially in the afternoon, was said to be larger than for several previous years. The morning meeting was large and the afternoon brought together a company that more than filled the house. Between two and three hundred persons, some of whom could not find seats within, and others who had no desire to enter, were gathered out of doors for a meeting, the holding of which had been approved by the Yearly Meeting, after the prospect of holding it had been placed before both men's and women's meetings by the writer of this account. A large committee of men Friends, among them one minister and two or more elders, to preserve order on the grounds and to assist in holding the outside meeting, was appointed.

The Barnesville Enterprise has so full and accurate an account of the Yearly Meeting that, at the risk of some repetition, a considerable portion of it is reproduced in this issue, under the head of "Friendly News".

The retrospect of our visit affords a good degree of satisfaction, and it is especially precious as it brings to mind the privilege it afforded of close religious fellowship and communion with many who are truly exercised for the promotion of Truth and the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom.

E. P. S.

IF I look to our own time, we scarcely know how deeply our common life is saturated with falseness. Our very language is false. We address one another as if plural—it would be considered an insult to any one to address him in the singular number; we write to one another, signing ourselves "humble," "faithful," "devoted"; we accept the social falsehood of permitting it to be said that we are "not at home," because we are, perhaps, too tender to the feelings of our friends plainly to say so; they are to be occupied or too unwell to see them, and so on. There are, indeed, no absolute falsehoods, but they are on the border of them, and our standard comes at last to measure sins by their possibilities, and not by their turpitude; and then comes the cry, "Behold and be ye like the prophet when the vile man is called liberal and the cruel and to be beautiful." We start at the vice of the poor, while among the rich, licentiousness is denominated by the tender name of wildness; we say it is a bad habit contracted in youth. O brethren, it is notorious that the standard of our society is not that of the life of Christ." FREDERICK WILLIAM ROBERTSON.

"KEEP the pattern in view, lest thou repeat thy own errors."

EXTRACTS FROM DIARIES AND LETTERS OF RICHARD B. BROCKBANK.

(Continued from page 137.)

Edinburgh, 16-S-1878.—We went to Kilmarnock with Ann Jackson. It is A. F. Jackson and the husband, Thos. Jackson—the Lamont's were very kind and we had a nice public meeting—about forty or fifty in their usual meeting-room. The people were very solid, the Truth was preached and the Master's presence and power felt. I believe.

Ann J. and H. White had gone yesterday to have a meeting with M. Steele's mill girls last evening, and they intend being at the meeting to-night. The Jacksons have six boys and one girl, and are going out to New Zealand next month. I am afraid they will have much of trial before them in the way of hard work, etc., in commencing farming out there.

Oakfield Cottage, 16-S-1880.—A. Lamont and I went to Motherwell last evening, and had a meeting with those looking to Friends and interested in their views. There are seven who meet as Friends, and I can almost give their names—Robt. Hendrie, the father, Jos. Hendrie and Robt., his sons, Thos. Macmillan, Andrew Gray, Thos. Maskie or Maskbie, and another whose name I do not remember. At the meeting last Fourth-day, when Eliza Wigham and Nancy Ritson and Robt. Smeal were there, there were eighteen present, this time there were about thirty-five in all.

It was a very solemn meeting, the silence was most impressive, and in mercy great freedom was given me in declaring the Truth, every word seeming to find a welcome in hearts opened by the Lord, and though there were some there who had not attended before—they also seemed under the power of Truth. Jos. Hendrie knelt in supplication awhile after I sat down, and after a further solemn period of silence they broke up the meeting in the usual way. Six of the Friends accompanied us to the station, and we had their most pleasant and interesting company for most part of an hour. They are circulating Friends' books and are in clear unity with Barclay's Apology and the early Friends. It is remarkable, seven men and no women. I think any one would be interested to meet with them, so quiet and firm and simple and earnest in their hold on the Truth. Little children and yet strong men. I do desire their preservation in this day of many views.

Aberdeen, 15-S-81.—The Mackies and I intend going to Kinnuck to a public meeting to-morrow night, and after that our path is not laid out.

Yesterday the two meetings were not so relieving to me as at Glasgow, though the morning meeting was somewhat so. Cousin S. B. S., M. W. A. Bryson and I went under A. Cruikshank's guidance to Agnes McLelland's to tea, met the Smiths there. Cousin S. was done up with the walk and I think attempted quite too much. However, she got back to meeting. All the Friends here have enquired after thee, and it is evident that I have left my better-half at home.

Aberdeen, 13-S-81.—J. P. told me he thought I was much enlarged in the meeting, he had never heard me speak so before, and seemed quite satisfied and said it was a good meeting. I was glad I was not felt to be out of place, as I was only in the place of one who had not joined in calling the meeting, though after it was done I felt it was my place to be there.

Bath, 16-S-81.—Thou wouldst be surprised to find we had gone north from Aberdeen, but before I left home I had this coast before my mind for some time, but did not see how it was to be taken in hand without a companion.

At the meeting at Aberdeen, I told Friends that my service was very similar to F. Mackie's, which he had described, and that I thought we might be of use to each other. He at once joined in with it, and afterwards told me privately that he was looking towards the north rather than the south at present, and made some enquiry about Shetland. I gave him what information I could, and then found him asking Jonathan Grubby. He seemed to have satisfied him that it was not very suitable now, and I told him that there were three Friends there at present, and that I did not see my way there at present. I then told him of my feeling towards this coast, which seemed quite a relief to him, and he united at once. I told G. Cruikshank and said that we felt it would be right to come on here and feel our way as to meetings. He quite approved.

When we arrived here I went out at once, F. M. putting on his boots again to go with me, and we fell in as I told thee as to the County Hall here, and arranged for the meeting to-night at eight. This morning after seeing the town crier and hearing the meeting announced to the beat of a drum and going about to show ourselves and giving a few notices ourselves, Rachel A. Mackie, who had been writing, joined us, and we went over to Macduff, a fishing town and Royal Burgh on the east side of the bay, about one-and-a-half miles away. There we found that Seventh-day at seven-thirty was a good night for the fishermen, and three in the afternoon on First-day for the public generally. We arranged it that way and only have four shillings to pay for both in the Town Hall, whilst here we pay twenty-one shillings and gas. The town crier took it up most warmly and is thoroughly with us, and his wife more so. She could hardly contain herself with delight that the Lord had inclined our hearts to come. She is a Surrey woman and was brought up at a Friends' meeting-house, which her parents had care of.

We asked the way of a shoemaker in the street. He said he was glad to see us, he had seen the notice in the papers of the meetings at Aberdeen. His wife was very much interested in Friends, as her father had married one who had lived servant with two Friends at Culto, near Aberdeen, and she had the highest respect for them—R. and J. Gray. Thus we are made way for, and are moving onwards gently, and I trust under the Master's direction.

It is quite clear to me that Friends are holding the very doctrines which are wanted throughout Scotland, and I do most earnestly desire that when the Lord's children, awakened little ones, ask bread of them, they may not give them a stone.

Oh that we were individually what the Lord would have us to be, then I am satisfied that He would give us power to sound the Gospel Trumpet and gather his little ones to Him. The inventions of man in religions have been largely tried in Scotland, the P. B.'s. have also been tried, and the people are awakening to the Truth, and find that their practices are like their doctrines, false, and cannot stand or bear the light. Nothing but the pure truth of God in Jesus Christ will stand, and this must be come to and submitted to before people can walk in the Truth.

Portsoy, 22-8-'11.—I have given thee the particulars about the meetings up to Seventh-day night or First-day morning. We three sat in our own room and at three P. M. went to the meeting. The room was fully two-thirds full and as they say it will hold three hundred, we should have had at least two hundred present. It was a very solid meeting and I think the small meeting the night before was an advantage, as it tended to open the way with those that had attended it to a solid and weighty waiting upon God. We had been asked to have another meeting at eight in the evening, and having weighed the subject, we gave notice that we were willing to meet with them again at eight, but directed them not to look to us, but to wait upon and worship the Lord.

Some of the deputation had a meeting the same hour on the quay, but having heard of ours finished soon and a number, more than what first assembled, came in about eight-thirty. Still, it was a very good meeting and nearly as large as the afternoon, and we were warmly shaken hands with at the close, and the desire expressed that the Lord would lead us that way again.

We left by the first train this morning, and came on here. We have got in at the Commercial Hotel to lodge, and as we shall go on in the morning to Cullen, it will do for one night, in fact I expect we shall have to be content with hotels where we only stay one night. The plan here is to get the town crier to call the meeting, and we get a few notices put up as well. Think of me as looking from this rocky, breezy coast across the Moray Firth to the dim but clear outline of the distant Caithness hills, it is very fine, and though we have had some showery days, we have been greatly favored. This day is very beautiful.

Cullen, 23-8-'11.—I wrote thee yesterday from Portsoy. The town crier was out in the Firth fishing and kept me in a fidget during the afternoon. We got his wife to put up a few notices about the harbor and F. M. and I went up and down the streets and invited the people and left notices to be put in the windows, and about six o'clock the crier went around with his bell and gave very good notice.

The Hall called Unity's Hall belongs to a draper called Unity, and is let to the Volunteers. Their secretary told me we could have it for twelve shillings, and he would tell the sergeant to have it ready. At eight o'clock we went and found the door locked, the sergeant soon came and said his orders were that we had to pay the money before we went in. He had written out a receipt which he held in his hand, and though he had one of our notices he had made it out for the Friendly Society. I told him it was clear we were not known here and handed him twelve shillings, and asked him to correct the receipt, which he did, and gave it me after the meeting.

I had felt somewhat discouraged and tired with being so much on my feet before tea, and this seemed the climax. But singularly enough I felt well when we got into the Hall, and I believe the reason he had got the orders he had was that the Secretary of the Volunteers had made up his mind that we would have no meeting worth while and might refuse to go on and pay.

However, we went in and sat down, and in a little time a few came in, and a most impressive sweet silence reigned over us, giving me such a feeling of peace that I felt that even if no more came we at least were in our right place. After a little time I said that it might be queried why we were here at all—that we had met in Glasgow and come on to Aberdeen attending meetings there and felt our minds drawn northwards, had come on to Banff and held a meeting there and three at Macduff, and had come on here to this place where they seemed looking outwardly to be amply provided, and yet we were willing to sit in silence as fools before them waiting upon the Lord, that He might show us what He would have us to do. After a further pause F. M. spoke at some length and then my mouth was opened freely and openly to declare the true foundation in the freedom and authority of the Truth. It is I think a place that is greatly under the power of the ministers or priests, and there seems at least five buildings with spires on. The people seemed afraid almost to speak to us, and yet my feeling of peace throughout was most encouraging, and our dear Friends, the Mackies, had the same.

(To be continued.)

This institution is intended to prepare the young men placed in its charge for a useful and honored life so that when they are released they may enter the ranks of good citizenship and make good. To accomplish this, skilled instructors have been employed, and all the necessary equipment has been provided, but it must be remembered that these will avail very little unless there is a desire, determination on the part of the inmate to make the proper use of these splendid opportunities, for after all has been said and done, the reformation of the inmate depends, in a great measure, upon himself. He is the one who must put forth honest, earnest efforts to obtain an education and a trade, the instructors can point out the way, but he must grasp the instruction and profit thereby or it will all come to naught. Think about this, boys, and realize to the full extent the responsibility that is placed upon you in order that you may enter the world of freedom fully equipped for life's battle.—Glen Mills Daily, Eleventh Month 22, 1912.

Each hour has its lesson, and each life;
And if we miss our life we shall not find
Its lesson in another.

—E. H. KIRBY.

I HEARD the voice of Jesus say,
 "Come into me and rest."
 Lay down, thou weary one, lay down
 Thy head upon My breast;
 I come to Jesus as I was,
 Weary and worn and sad;
 I found in Him a resting place,
 And He has made me glad.

I heard the voice of Jesus say,
 "Behold I freely give
 The living water,—thirsty one,
 "Stoop down, and drink and live!"
 I come to Jesus, and I drink
 Of that life-giving stream;
 My thirst was quenched, my soul revived,
 And now I live in Him.

I heard the voice of Jesus say,
 "I am the light of the world;
 Lo! into Me, thy mourn shall rise,
 And all thy day be bright."
 I looked to Jesus and I found
 In Him my Star, my Sun;
 And in the light of life I'll walk
 Till travelling days are done.

—H. BONAR.

FARM LIFE IN NORWAY AS A SUMMER TOURIST SEES IT.

STANLEY B. YARNALL.

Norway is a land of farmers and fishermen. The cities of Christiania, Bergen, Trondheim and Stavanger are the obvious centres of political, intellectual and business life, and a few smaller cities, such as Christiansand and Aalesund, are developing as rapidly as the requirements of collection and distribution demand. All of these places have in the past developed at the natural gateways to the country behind them, or at convenient points of entrance to trade from other lands. Their growth has been slow because the people have been largely self-sufficient and their needs of contact with the outer world have been few. Of manufacture in the large meaning of the word there has been none in Norway, and only within the last ten years have any considerable plants or industries been installed. Just now there is much enthusiasm over several plants to extract nitrogen from the air, and one concern of this sort is said to utilize a water-fall of 600,000 horse power and is really promising to be of world-wide significance, both because of the originality of its methods and its enormous out-put. I have been told, too, by an enthusiastic Norwegian of a great hydro-electric plant, very far to the north that is being worked by the latest electrical devices, where in a few years a substantial town has been built for the operations, in which the houses are lighted and heated by electricity and where many practical household applications of it are also made.

And certainly Norway is just on the threshold of an important commercial development in which electricity will play the leading part. What is needed is capital, which the people cannot themselves supply, but which may come in comparatively small sums from successful Norwegians in North and South America who will form companies to develop the resources of their mother country. Ample concessions in some instances have been made to attract foreign capital, chiefly British and German, but of late the Norwegians have become suspicious of these gift-bearing Greeks, and I am informed that laws are now in effect requiring water power and all improvements of it to be developed by foreign companies to revert to the State in the event of a change of ownership. This is a wise national policy, and the State, no doubt, means Norway for the good of the people, and the best order, the day of increased wealth and of the better life.

For the part of every of the traveler, and probably for the people of the country, and entertainment of a simple, hardly possible, but a development is desirable. Him seem very much to be there. And all this brings me back to the statement that Norway is a land of farmers and fishermen. Of the fishermen I cannot speak, for I have seen little of them, but the farms lie before one like an open book, whenever one takes the road, or looks from the deck of a fiord steamer, or pauses on some point of vantage for a view down the valley.

Wherever there is a patch of fertile soil, big enough to dry a pocket handkerchief, provided it is not so steep that it will slide off into the sea, or into a ravine, there one will probably see a little farm. Some of these are so remote and so unpromising that one is amazed at the courage and the dogged persistence required to endure such isolation and to keep up the struggle for a bare subsistence.

Such places are usually seen along the great fiords, where a tiny foothold of cultivated land emphasizes the sombre magnificence and purple grandeur of towering cliffs and dark fir-clad mountain sides. One wonders how the inhabitants of the lonely little cabin keep in touch with their fellows, for a steamer will not touch at their door and no road penetrates to them over the granite walls, and they are often several miles by boat from a village. Probably such farms are merely supplementary, and their owners are employed partly in hunting and partly in cutting birch wood for fuel or pine for lumber, for one often sees near the shore neat piles of fire-wood ready for shipment, and higher up the white barked trunks of small trees that have lodged part way down a rocky slide of two or three thousand feet, where they have evidently been shot over from a wooded plateau invisible from the level floor of the fiord.

It is not these places, however, that I would have you picture as typical of Norwegian farm life, for they are exceptional—but the smiling, happy valleys with green fields, now wide and now narrow, extending back irregularly to the rocky canyon-like walls of the mountains, or running up into the fir forest that clothes the lower slopes. Down the valley flows a little river with deep dark pools for the salmon and the big trout, with foaming rapids and occasional milky waterfalls. Night and day it fills the air with a music that mingles with the whisper of the pine and the rustling of the birch and alder.

Set in the meadows or in higher nooks against a background of green and gray are the farm-houses, the barns and the numerous log cabins that serve for additional stables or hay lofts. The older buildings are nearly all strong log cabins with sod roofs that blend perfectly with the landscape like old mossy and lichened rocks. The houses of the newer type are always of frame construction with high stone foundations, as are the new barns. The houses are either allowed to weather naturally or are painted a quiet shade of green or white, while the universal color for the newer barns is a pleasing red that looks warm and cheerful against the almost universal green.

In the long summer days, the life in these valleys seems idyllic. The men, women and the older boys work happily in the fields together at the harvesting, while the younger children play quietly near the houses or in the fields near their parents. The older girls are away up on the high mountain pastures at the saters with the cows, but of them anon.

Every home has its small enclosure full of gooseberries now hanging a rich deep red, raspberries, the biggest and best in the world, currants a sight for the eyes, and also black currants. Small orchards of apple and pear trees are common, and without spraying or scientific pruning the fruit looks to be of a high order both in form and in richness of color. Berries, however, are the especial pride and joy of this country and the strawberries, a rich deep red, ripe to the core, are a feast never to be forgotten when served with the frothy cream for which Norway is famous.

Apart from the hay, the most important crops appear to be potatoes, oats and barley. The potatoes are not troubled by bugs or insect pests and they are a beautiful sight, the tops perfect in their development and the blossoms of white and pink now in full bloom. The barley is growing yellow in the patches on the hillsides and along the levels and the oats is just being cut. It is a picturesque sight to see the grain harvesting. The women cut it with quaint, old-fashioned sickles, and bind it into small sheaves which they fasten to tall poles set in the ground. Each pole holds about twelve sheaves, which are all turned with heads to the south so they will dry quickly. The poles are set up without any arrangement of lines, but the direction of the sheaves gives a sort of irregular regularity to the field, and the poles with their burdens look like gigantic hooded Esquimaux or blanketed Indians, or sometimes in the late twilight like an army of bears on their hind legs in silent conclave.

The hay harvest is the great work of the summer, for on it depends the life of horses, cattle and sheep in the winter. The first harvest has long been over and now we are in the midst of the second cutting. Even the first growth must be tender and delicate, when compared with the high, rank covering of our clover and timothy and hay-fields at home, but this second cutting is the very poetry of hay-making.

During the past three weeks I have often stood looking at the tender beds of grass, each blade so perfect and delicate and green, and have wondered whether it was not more beautiful than the watered valley below, or the mountains above it. I seem never to have seen grass before. It has grown about six or eight inches long, and makes a carpet around the houses and along the roads and over the meadows as soft and rich as our most perfectly kept lawns would be if allowed to grow under the best conditions of rain and sunshine.

Very, very seldom in wide, favored valleys one will see a one-horse mowing machine, but ninety-nine per cent. of this harvest is cut by hand, not with regular scythes, but with remarkable little one-hand instruments, neither scythe nor sickle. The blades, which are kept sharp as razors, vary in length from two feet to about fourteen inches and the handles from three feet to eighteen inches. The men use these with wonderful rapidity and skill and cut in and out and up and down among thick alders and close to rocks, and wherever a handful of hay may be gleaned in places where a self-respecting cow in one of our luxurious pastures would not trouble to trust her muzzle. Just now, therefore, the farms look like beautiful parks. All along the roads and around the buildings the grass is cut almost as closely and evenly as if the best Philadelphia lawn mowers had been at work followed by careful gardeners with shears and sickles. Each farmer has as many of these little scythes as a golfer has clubs. This is partly because it is well to start out each day with a number freshly sharpened, but also because some blades are adapted to certain conditions that others will not suit.

In a fine open stretch, a brassie scythe is in order for a sweeping stroke, but in rocky going a mashie or even a putter may be required. The work requires a quick eye and a facile wrist. I persuaded a man to let me try my prentice hand at it for a few minutes one day and found it to be a highly interesting form of exercise and I wished I might have spent the day with him. Our short conversation conducted in dumb show left us good friends. The women follow the men with wooden rakes and roll the tender grass down hill from under the hazel copses and from around the rocks, or gather it into small haycocks in the meadows and more open places. Then it is made into bundles and carried on their backs or drawn down hill on wooden sledges to the drying racks where it is hung up for a number of days until it is ready, sweet and fragrant, to be packed away in the mows and lofts. These racks are seen everywhere along the roads, beside the houses, in the fields. Birch rods are stuck in the ground at intervals of about four feet, and to these other rods are attached by bits of bark or pliant twigs, and on this frame-work is built up a wall of future hay about four or five feet high. The work of filling the racks goes on even in rainy weather, as does the mowing and raking for that matter, and there is the grass safely placed where it will dry in good time without further handling and where the air gets through it sufficiently to keep it from spoiling no matter how long or how hard it may rain. This work in the fields seems perfectly proper and wholesome for the women. It has nothing of the sordidness and grinding, debasing toil that seems to characterize the rough work of the women on the German farms. Here the tasks are comparatively light for the strong, sun-browned women and the sharing of the outdoor activities of the men in the open air of beautiful valleys must be beneficial to those who have little sunlight so many months in the year. The happy, contented faces do not indicate any rebellion at their lot.

Meanwhile, the cows are making milk and cream with all their might miles away up among the clouds and mists of the high mountain pastures, where they are driven as soon as the snow melts away sufficiently to make pasture for them. There to the sound of twinkling waterfalls, the seter girls tend them and milk them once a day at eight o'clock in the evening when they gather in the small rock-walled enclosure that is the one liberty man takes with nature on those high meadows. Once a day one of the farmers who shares the responsibility of the seter comes and takes the milk and cream down to the village, or if it is too far away for that, it is made into butter or cheese on the spot. The girls come down in groups now and then for flour, and eggs and berries and other necessities and then climb up again to their summer home among the clouds.

These seters differ very much, depending upon the number of cattle and the liberality of the group of farmers represented, but usually they are regarded as happy, wholesome places, and the girls look forward to their summer life in them as our girls do to a camping trip. They have an ideal combination of work and play amid scenery and natural conditions that men go half around the world to enjoy. In time of storm the rude log cabins must seem lonely enough, but these girls are used to a strenuous life, and company and a cheery fire under a sod roof are a good protection against wind and rain. The chief dangers come from falling and rolling rocks that are loosened by the spring floods. One farmer told me that at his seter three of his cows and five belonging to a neighbor had thus been caught and killed this summer. He never heard of girls being hurt in this way, however, for the cows come to the milking place of their own accord each night and the seter is located where there is no danger from above.

So much for the summer with its long, sunny days and its dim twilight for so many hours when it is neither night nor day. But what of the winter? Is it a happy life then and what is there to do? I wish I might answer this as fully as the little knowledge I have on the subject permits, and that I might write of many subjects that are of interest—the little individual mills for different kinds of work, the changes in ownership of land, and how they are affecting conditions, the great improvement in buildings and the number of new houses and barns one sees—but the golden hours are slipping by and in a little while I must be starting on to connect this evening with the first railroad I have seen for fifteen days.

Last week I asked an intelligent farmer about their winter life in the Oldendal, one of the especially favored localities, and he said in substance: "Yes, it is a very happy life here and we have many things to do in the winter. There are the horses and cattle to attend to; there are many implements to repair and new things of wood to make and the butter and cheese to care for; then, too, there are the shoes to make. I can make my own shoes and the shoes for my family better than I can buy them, and I sometimes tan the leather myself and sometimes I keep especially good hides and send them to be tanned for my family's shoes. Then, too, the women have many things to do that your women do not do. They spin the wool and knit the stockings and my wife wove the cloth and made the suit I have on," and he pointed with pride to a heavy, dark woolen suit that I had been secretly admiring for some time.

The little white church building, with its steeple pointing heavenward so honestly and simply that even a Friend cannot call it in question, is within reach of all by road or by boat, and hither the country-side gathers whenever the pastor comes to them, probably once every three weeks, for most pastors have three churches to shepherd. Every one who can get there or be spared "goes to church," I am told, and "those who stay at home with the old folk, and the children and the cattle must read the Apostle, or what you may call it. I am good system of arranging before meal time for all passengers to take table d'hôte meals at different hours. Each passenger is previously furnished with a ticket for his sitting and a seat is reserved for him. He is notified when everything is ready and thus is saved the struggle for a precarious meal so often annoyingly experienced in our crowded trains.

For the first fifty miles the views near the Devonshire coast are most charming, and, after that, the combed and brushed rural scenery of England delighted us. My twenty-third crossing of the North Atlantic had been generally pleasant. Two clever girls, warm friends of ours in San José, had written two ship letters couched in witty verse, which we had received upon boarding the ship at New York. They wished us all manner of good things and I will quote from one, although not knowing which to use, because they both were so good. Here is an extract very typical:—

"Dear friends: I sit and think of you
 Out upon the ocean blue.
 I hope the waves are smooth and flat
 And you are flourishing and fat.
 May you find friends of charm and wit
 Wherever you may chance to sit.
 From day to day there'll be no dearth
 Of weighty talk and lightsome mirth.
 We hope no slightest qualms you'll feel,
 But sit erect at every meal,
 As well in tempest as in calm,
 Upon the steamship Rotterdam.
 Our wishes for a happy trip
 Are sailing with you on your ship."

All these wishes were quite realized except, alas! twice the writer some slightest qualms did feel, he did not sit erect at every meal!

HAGUE DAY CELEBRATION IN TOKYO.

The following report of the Hague Day Celebration in Tokyo, written by T. Miyaoka, Japanese Correspondent of the Carnegie Peace Endowment, is of special interest to the friends of Gilbert Bowles. The allusion to the trend of Count Okuma's speech is also of unusual interest.

"The Hague Day was celebrated by the Japan Peace Society and the American Peace Society of Japan conjointly by holding a public lecture meeting at Y. M. C. A. Hall, Kanda, Tokyo, on First-day afternoon, Fifth Month 18th, from one o'clock. The hall was filled beyond the seating capacity before the hour fixed, every inch of the available space not only on the floor but in the galleries being occupied by the audience that numbered above eight hundred.

"The able manner in which Gilbert Bowles acquitted himself of the duties of the presiding officer as well as the perfect command he showed of the Japanese language, should also be noted.

"I remember years ago when foreign residents of this country had as a rule no knowledge of proper Japanese language, oral or written. Now the time has changed; but it is nevertheless refreshing once in a while to meet a foreigner who can discharge the onerous duties of the chairman of a large meeting in so able a manner in the language of this country.

"Count Okuma's speech was very humorous and he elicited much laughter from the audience by pointing out the remarkable similarity between the circumstances under which the anti-Japanese agitation in California is now carried on and the condition of things that prevailed in this country half a century ago when he and his friends like the late Prince Ito and the Marquis Inouye in their youth agitated to drive the foreigners away."

HUMAN words, remember, do more than convey bare facts; they convey the tone of the mind from which they come.—
 KNOX LITTLE.

A LETTER FROM THE WALDENSIAN VALLEY.

V.

BY HERBERT WELSH.

It was shortly after mid-day, if my memory serves me well, when Pastor Gardiol and I began our descent from the Cal Guiliemo into the Prall valley. Oh! the beauty, freshness, and surprise of that scene, and how I wish that those who take it second-hand through my words could have enjoyed it by means of an immediate personal experience. Perhaps they will do this if coming years bring a popularity of travel to these valleys which Switzerland has so long enjoyed.

The surprise lay in the fact that Prall is so totally different in its essential features from the Valley of Bobbio which we had just left. In an instant everything seemed different. It was almost as though a few steps carried us from one climate and its physiological features to another. Prall was so much more Alpine. The luxuriant stately chestnut tree its groves suggesting an English park—had given place to the dark rigid pine and the delicate graceful larch. The valley, also, was narrower and more abrupt, less gradual in the shape of its interior dependent hills than Bobbio. The wheat fields that we saw, in narrow ribbons, far below us, near the base of the mountains, had not yet reached that maturity of color—cadmium or old gold—that the eye had for weeks delighted in at our home. On the near side of the Prall Valley it is true toward the close of our day's journey, we saw the reapers at work, but on the far side the wheat fields were mostly unripe and green. One feature of our downward climb gave me un-mixed satisfaction. Our path skirted no more precipices. In the beginning of the descent the path for a while practically ceased to be, and we made our way over loose, broken, torrent-tossed stones, but there were no yawning gulfs to left or right, to be looked away from—a great comfort. Frequently during our downward journey, though the day was one of brilliant sunshine, we heard distant ominous sounds like thunder reverberating against rocky walls. It was no doubt, as my friend explained to me, Italian mountain artillery at practice. Rival national frontiers converge here within close range. France with her mountain soldiers at summer drill—"les chasseurs des Alpes." Italy busy in the same way, her "soldati Alpini," and Austria not so very far off, where her domain touches the Italian line similarly occupied—all ready at a moment's notice, if war should break out, to dispute, with the most modern of death-dealing weapons, backed by the most highly trained intelligence, the command of mountain passes that are gate-ways to the fertile plains beneath. We saw much, during this walk, of the Italian Alpine soldiers—young men—quite boys some of them, busy with mules, mountain cannon, forage, etc. This prompts many thoughts as to the whole military question—but of that perhaps something may be said later.

When we were about half-way down the mountain we stopped for a few moments' rest and refreshment under the scant shade of a grove of larches. It was a beautiful spot, quite near to which in a gully of the mountain side lay quite a large snow bank which might last, notwithstanding the Swiss heat, well into or perhaps through the summer. I carried a ruck sack on my back and from it during this halt I was able to make a change from my heavy walking shoes—high in the ankle—to a light pair of russet-colored low shoes with rubber soles. I have found great comfort and relief during long marches in this practice. Then, too, the rubber soles seem to be a great safe-guard from slipping, as one goes over slippery stones. When we got well down into the valley, Pastor Gardiol met several old friends—men who were inhabitants of Prall Valley, working in the fields by the roadside, or standing at the doorways of their houses. It was pleasant having a few words of conversation with these people. It was nearly two o'clock in the afternoon before we reached the village of Prall, and were able to have the cheer and refreshment of our mid-day meal. The sight of Prall is picturesque and charming. It lies well down in the lap of the green valley, and near the fine mountain stream which waters its soil. The houses are of the Swiss chalet type. As they nestle quite closely together, either on the lower part of the slopes of the hills, or on great cliffs, they offer to the artist excellent sketching material. I wished I could have remained there long enough to have availed myself of their tempting offer. My friend told me that Prall alone had furnished no less than seven portraits to the Waldensian ministry, in comparatively recent years, as I understood him. In the fifteenth century, during one of those ebullitions of fierce persecution that, through so many centuries, visited the Vaudois Valleys, one of the Dukes "Savoie" sent an army to Prall Valley to destroy its inhabitants, but instead of its so turning out, the people were too much for their enemies, and succeeded in destroying them all but a single soldier, whose life was spared that he might carry back to Turin the news of the disaster. The Waldensians, in these years of conflicts with their persecutors, seem to have been able usually to hold their own, excepting in those cases where they trusted to the good faith of the noble Lords, Dukes, Kings, or Popes who wished to exterminate them. Then they had good reason to rue their misplaced confidence. These rulers seem to have acted on the principle that one is not obliged to keep faith with heretics use, quite similar to that which governed the dealings of the Duke of Alva, and his son, Don Frederick, in dealing with the revolted Netherlands. We found comfortable accommodations that night in the little hotel at Prall. We slept the sleep which was, I trust, that of the just. It resembled it at least in soundness, for we had climbed one side of a high mountain and had descended the other, and had tramped for nearly eight hours.

For "THE FRIEND."

PEACE AND ARBITRATION.

FRANCIS R. TAYLOR.

Peace meetings among Friends and peace articles for Friends may to some seem to be unnecessary. "Certainly I am a peace man," is our involuntary, almost mechanical reply. But to what extent? In what one of the numerous varieties of peace men, self-constituted and otherwise, from Navy Admirals to Peace-at-any-price men, does our Quaker peace man belong?

If the truth is acknowledged, I fancy much of our peace sentiment needs educating. We have a vague and comfortable impression that Friends have always stood for peace, and therefore I do too; but when peace is defined, and its problems raised, how little intelligent interest are we really prepared to take in it! How many of us can outline Secretary Root's Peace Plan, still less, tell how it differs from President Wilson's Peace Treaties which failed, where it seems likely to succeed? And yet not only as Friends but as Christians we should know these things. Granting that it is an age of enlightenment, and that we have our Peace Society and its committee to look after on our behalf, our pacific interests, can we, by the mean, monotonously divest ourselves of care and responsibility, and so blithely on our way, secure in the reputation of the "Good Old Quaker, as Honest as His Name!"

We read in these columns a few weeks ago Wernle's estimate of the early Quaker dynamic: "There is no great work of humanity and mercy in which the Quakers have not had their share, and they finally are not ruled in that which Fox recognized as the power of the Seed of God!" A bit abstruse, mayhap, but according to language the social revolt of early Quakerism was a revolution to cover things which, when tried, were found to be unworkable. The test to which existing institutions and institutions were brought was the Seed of God, and when the human side if opposed to that—existing institutions, institutions were the remedies and the common good and right, which lie to the core, overlapped the light of God, and it is to be with a Divine and implicit sanction the "must" and "will be." So did he temporize.

To him the fact that others did not conform their actions to his ideal did not relieve him from the necessity of so doing. He conformed, though it set society ajar with a spoke in the wheel of convention. Thru persecution and death he persisted in passive resistance, until the ideal which had been his object was borne in upon the conscience of society. While the casuist temporized till society was fit for reform, the Quaker, whether named Penn, Woolman, Fry or Bright, set himself to the vastly more difficult task of molding society to the event.

A Divine faith in the ought to be upheld and actuated their efforts, and it was such a faith, in the truly Divine sense, as Paul defined it—"the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." It was a faith in which Penn saw beyond the rapine of European warfare to a "Plan for the Peace of Europe," or in which Woolman traversed the American wilderness afoot, rather than partake of that bondage which he denounced. The terrors and depravity of Newgate and the Old Bailey were in the light of it, surmountable to Elizabeth Fry, and strengthened by it Bright fought his good fight against the iniquitous Corn Laws. In each instance, however, the existing circumstances, supported by privilege, or entrenched in impregnable social indifference, were overcome by faith alone in the power of the Almighty to right the wrong thru human instrumentality.

There was never a time when there was more need for this faith than the present. The complexity of the problems of to-day in any line of philanthropic effort, and especially in that of peace, give unlimited scope for exercising it.

The peace advocate is succeeding with increasing rapidity, but mainly along the economic line. Since it has been clearly demonstrable that war is an economic evil weighing heavily upon all, and heaviest upon the poor, great strides have been made in the cause. The enormous graft uncovered in subsidized newspaper war scares, and armament contracts, has opened the eyes of the man in the street who foots the bill.

The educational plea is another method of attack frequently and effectively used to-day. The economic argument, while effective, is of low order because rooted no deeper than the strong box; the educational plea is nobler because it resents war's prostitution of the intellectual vitality of the people.

But how vastly superior to both is the religious power in philanthropy—conceived in faith and maintained by it. The purse and the intellect may suffer violence by war—but how much more the soul, and therein lay the impelling force of the early Quaker philanthropic effort. Property and body they held in despite, but for the eternal welfare of the immortal soul they were ready to do battle to the death. By that same faith they overstepped the apparent impossibilities of the intellect, and sought the ideal by demanding it for the present.

Such was the conviction and method of the early Friends, and such should be ours to-day. Is peace impossible, while the shippards buzz with the riving of armor plate? Then demand it now. Be of those whom Roosevelt characterizes as "the foolish fanatics always to be found in such a movement and always discrediting it—the men who form the lunatic fringe in all reform movements." Our Quaker attitude on reform has accomplished the impossible in ways of which the politician can know nothing who would so characterize the prophets of reform. Those were not lacking who classed Whittier and all other abolitionists among the "lunatic fringe" in the days when Pennsylvania Hall was burned—but who so rash at this day?

At a time when the highest aspect of the question needs more emphasis than ever, our Society must not be found wanting. The lofty idealism of Copley's little book, "The Impeachment of President Israel," is expressive of the attitude of our Hebrew brethren. The Protestant churches are woefully behind in peace sentiment, simply because they cannot bridge the gap between existing fact and the pacific ideal. Nothing can bridge it save faith—the faith of a Christian, of which the Friend partakes, the faith which our Lord inculcated, which Paul exalted, which thro'out the Christian era has been the beacon light of reform, both spiritual and social, because it was the "substance of things not seen."

POPOSO MANOR, Pa.

CHINA.

While our home papers are asking if London is becoming pagan, it is astonishing to receive from China, which has been so inveterately heathen in its character, an official request for Prayer by the Christian Churches of the West. That request made a marked impression, and received considerable and hearty response. It ought to open the eyes of Westerners to the marvelous work of God in China. In this country the Missionary is too often ignored or despised, but in China, and many another distant land, he is recognized and honored. But no man has opened China as she stands welcoming the Gospel to-day—nothing can account for a reversion so radical and so vast but the Spirit of God. We are witnesses, if we will but see, of God's mighty power, working as He works in nature, unseen except by its wonderful results.

We may hope that Great Britain's crime of the Opium trade with China has now been ended; but it is humiliating to remember that the honor of grappling effectively with this evil belongs to China and not to "Christian" England.

While the sale of Bibles in this country is falling, that in China has reached the record total of 3,000,000 copies and portions, and the spread of the Holy Scriptures in that land is no doubt contributing largely towards the changed outlook of the people.

An American recently visiting China on business asked a group of the cleverest men of the land: "What does China need most?" fully expecting the answer to be "Money," "Recognition," or "Trade." Without hesitation came the reply, "Christianity of course"; and these commercial men illustrated their meaning thus: "Up in Shantung there are gold mines along which, to use an Americanism, Klondyke would look like 'thirty cents.'" But we cannot work those mines because as the boat-loads of gold would come down the Grand Canal to the coast, every petty official en route would exact his share of toll, until, when the boats reached the ports there would be no gold left, and indeed, we should be lucky to get even the empty boats. If China is to prosper as a nation she must have a national conscience, and to have that she needs men of moral integrity, and to get that she needs Christianity."

As we behold the awakening of the East, and its search for Truth, we may reverently and joyfully exclaim: "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes."—S. F. HURNARD, in Friends' Witness.

A CLOUD lay cradled near the setting sun,
A gleam of crimson tinged its braided snow,
Long had I watched its glory moving on,
O'er the still radiance of the lake below.

Tranquil its spirit seemed and floated slow,
Even in its very motion there was rest,
And every breath of eve that chanced to blow
Wafted the traveler to the beautiful West.

Emblem methought of the departing saint
To whose white robe the gleam of bliss is given,
And by the breath of mercy made to roll
Right onward to the golden gates of heaven,
Where to the eye it peaceful lies,
And tells to man its glorious destiny.

—1838.

FRIENDLY NEWS.

FRIENDS' YEARLY MEETING.—The one hundred and first annual gathering of the Ohio Yearly Meeting of Friends opened on Seventh-day the thirteenth of this month. As is the custom, the ministers and elders and the members of the Meeting for Sufferings came early and held meetings on Sixth-day the 12th. That day was a very rainy one, but the next dawned clear and bright and an average attendance for the first day was noted. Benjamin Vail offered a prayer soon after the meeting convened for business, and after some more speaking by various members the opening minute was read, also the names of the representatives. All of these were present. Hickory Grove Quartet reported that on account of the death of Samuel Cowgill that Pasadena Monthly Meeting was without a correspondent. There were three members of the Meeting for Sufferings to be chosen, due to the death of Joseph Baley, Samuel Cowgill and Nathan Blackburn. The Representatives were instructed to report names to fill those vacancies as well as to report the names of Friends to serve the meeting as Clerk and assistant and also names to serve as messengers to Women's Meeting. The Epistles from the six other Yearly Meetings were read and a committee was appointed to essay replies to them if way opened for it. A committee was appointed to audit the treasurer's accounts and to report the name of a Friend to serve the Yearly Meeting as treasurer the coming year. The following Ministers were present from a distance with credentials: Benjamin Vail, of Media, Pa.; Edwin P. Sellow and C. Virginia Sellow, of Paoli, Pa.; Elwood Carter, of Plainfield, Ind. Another minister, Nathaniel Jones, of Masonville, N. J., was present. A committee was appointed also to act with a committee of the Meeting for Sufferings to have an oversight of the crowds at the public meetings and also to assist, if need be, Edwin P. Sellow, in the afternoon of First-day when he went to speak to those outside. The above-mentioned person said in the meeting for business that he had felt for some time a concern that he should perhaps have something to say to the non-members who were unable or did not wish to go inside of the building on First-day afternoon. The meeting gave him its consent to speak at that time if he felt called upon to do so.

In the morning meeting First-day there was about a house-full of people, though the galleries did not have many in them. At this meeting there was speaking by a number of Friends, some of whom were Benjamin Vail, Jacob Maule, Mary B. Test, Elizabeth Cooper, Nathaniel Jones and Edwin P. Sellow. Later the crowd swelled to one of the largest seen on the grounds for years. The meeting was packed to its capacity both upstairs and down in the afternoon. Among those who spoke in this meeting were Joshua P. Smith, Elwood Conrad, Esther Fowler and Mary B. Test. Elwood Carter and Elizabeth Cooper appeared in supplication. On the outside of the house Edwin P. Sellow stood up on the platform east of the south porch, when the throng outside formed a circle of their own about him as he began to speak. After a considerable time of close attention he was followed by his wife, C. Virginia Sellow, whose tender sympathy for humanity gave her their most careful attention. She was then followed by her husband, in supplication. Harry E. Moore closed the opportunity in testimony, the company remaining for a time in silence as though reluctant to disperse from so interesting a meeting. There was better order observed on the grounds after this religious opportunity than has been known for years.

On Second-day morning the Representatives reported the name of Jonathan Binns to serve as Clerk and Carl Patterson as assistant Clerk for this year. They also reported the names of Pearson Hall and James Waeton as messengers to Women's Meeting. The reading of the Queries and Answers from the various Quarterly Meetings, or the consideration of the state of the Society as it is called was then taken up and all of them were read and summarized.

Third-day morning dawned without the sun, and with a considerable amount of rain though not a heavy downpour. . . . The meeting convened at ten o'clock (sun time, standard time probably being too long in getting there for them), the first business being to consider proposition made by Joshua P. Smith to have a meeting for the young people appointed on Fourth-day afternoon. The request was granted, and the meeting was accordingly appointed. After this the names of the elders who have deceased within the past year were read. They were Samuel Cowgill, of Pasadena, California, Esther Housris, also of Pasadena and Martha Llewellyn, of Pennsville, Ohio. This was followed by the reading of the report of the Boarding School. From this report it seems that the School is in a very flourishing condition, both as to attendance and as to finances. The attendance was about seventy-one in the winter and fifty-six in the spring. Altogether the School, in spite of the fact that the combined tuition and board is only four dollars per week, had a ledger balance of over $800. This account is of course largely due to the good management of the superintendent, though the good attendance is essential. The committee reported that it wished a reappointment to be made of the committee, which suggestion was acted upon by the meeting, and a large committee was nominated to bring up names to the next business meeting, held on Fifth-day. There was a proposition from the same source in regard to a trolley line through the farm. A committee was appointed to act in conjunction with the trustees in giving the right of way.

Fourth-day morning was a rainy morning, though the rain did not actually come until after the meeting had convened at ten o'clock. This ocracy"; dividing his subject into four general heads: Rank, Wealth, Learning and last and best, Goodness.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—It is stated that hurricane warnings issued by the United States Weather Bureau have caused a marked decrease in shipwrecks in recent years, despite the great increase in shipping. This is the assertion of the Department of Agriculture, which has called attention of mariners to the fact that this was the height of the season in which hurricanes might be expected on the eastern coast of the United States.

A despatch from Chicago of the 15th says: "Beginning this week, Chicago will enter upon a safety crusade that, from point of number of those enlisted, will far surpass any similar movement ever attempted. H. L. Brownell, safety inspector, has had 10,000 copies of a pamphlet giving instructions in crossing streets and traversing the congested districts, printed, and these will be distributed in the schools. In speaking of the frightful loss of life in Chicago, Coronor Hoffman said: 'During my tenure of office as Coronor, less than eight years, I have held upward of 38,000 inquests. Accidents of all kinds are constantly on the increase. I found, after doing everything I could, that I was unable to cope with the situation alone.'

It is stated from Georgetown, Del., that "Reports from the oyster beds of the Nanticoke, Broadkill and Mispillion show an almost unlimited supply of the finest quality, a direct result of the stringent oyster tonging laws that have been in force the last few years. The natural oyster beds were in great danger of becoming extinct when laws were passed and enforced governing the amount that could be tonged by one man in one day. The result is the large natural growth that is just coming in bearing. Oyster packers are looking forward to a busy season."

A despatch from Washington, D. C., says: "A bulletin just issued by the Bureau of Labor statistics shows that the profit on the sale of sugar to the consumer over the actual cost of producing refined sugar from the raw product ranges from a little more than one cent a pound to less than one and two-third cents a pound. The profits of refiner, jobber and retailer are included."

During this year it is expected that 150 miles of new street paving will be laid in Chicago. Next to asphalt, creosoted wood blocks are in most general use. This type of pavement is more costly at first outlay, but combines with smooth surface much greater durability under heavier travel. Brick comes next in popularity.

A despatch from Woodbury, N. J., of the 19th says: "A course in domestic science has been introduced in the schools of this city, and the first lessons were received yesterday and to-day. Beginning next week, there will be three classes each day and even with this number, the applicants cannot be accommodated. A model kitchen has been arranged in the basement of the high school, fitted up with every modern convenience. A class of 18 can be taught at the same time."

It is stated from Sacramento, Cal., that ladybugs are largely used here to destroy insect pests. The ladybugs are gathered in large quantities in the Sierra Nevada mountains and shipped to Sacramento.

A despatch from New York of the 15th says: "Distribution of the first large consignment to this country of Argentine chilled beef began to-day. Two carloads and several vanloads were sent away to their local destinations. The meat was sold at one or two cents a pound less than the price charged for the domestic beef. In shipping circles it is expected that meat imports from now on will become a regular article on the cargo list of ships from South and Central America, especially in view of the more favorable language of the tariff schedule granting free entry to meats from abroad."

It was stated from New Village, N. J., on the 15th, that: "An industry was opened here this week for the wholesale manufacture of concrete telephone poles. The new poles, thousands of which will be put in use at once, are said to be practically indestructible and in experiments have stood the severest tests. The poles can be manufactured in any length. They are molded with a hollow centre and have a concrete shell about an inch in thickness. It is believed that in quantities they can be manufactured at little more than the cost of the wooden poles, and it is predicted that they will eventually supplant all others on telegraph, telephone and electric service lines."

Great heat has been felt in California on the 17th. Los Angeles reported a maximum temperature of 108, while in San Diego and San Luis Obispo the mercury rose to 110. On the 18th it was 127 at Silver Lake, Cal.

It is stated that the largest water-power dam in the world has lately been arranged for at Keokuk, Iowa, by the construction of a large dam on the Mississippi River. The falling water is expected to produce 300,000 horse power. This power will be turned into electricity, and carried on wires for use as far north as Burlington, Iowa, and as far south as St. Louis, Mo.

A despatch from Portland, Oregon, of the 19th says: "The first ruling to be rendered under a compulsory minimum wage law in the United States, for adult women workers, was made recently by the Oregon Industrial Welfare Commission. The ruling, which will become law in sixty days, is in accord with the recommendations of a recent conference in all its three points: That the working day shall be limited to nine hours, with fifty-four hours as a maximum week's work. That the minimum weekly wage shall be $8.64. That the noon lunch period shall not be less than 45 minutes in length."

FOREIGN.—A despatch from Dublin of the 15th says: "The labor situation has assumed a more serious phase and the city is affected to a greater extent by this strike than any in its history. To-day 5,000 builders went out after refusing to sign a declaration proposed by the employers that they would not join with or support the transport workers' union, which started the original strike. Two thousand farm laborers and 600 dock workers are also out. Four steamships loaded with grain are unable to discharge. Food is running short and the poor are beginning to suffer."

On the 17th it was stated that the difficulty of getting provisions into Dublin has become so great that it is believed the markets there will have to close their doors. On the 21st it was stated that the number of men either on strike or locked out is about twenty thousand.

It was stated from Paris on the 15th that a remarkable flight, establishing a new cross-country record, was made to-day by the French aviator, Ernest Guillaux. With a passenger he covered 118 miles, from his home at Savigny-sur-Braye to Paris, in 50 minutes. This was at the rate of nearly 142 miles an hour.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 87.

J. Thomas Copeland, N. Y., to 14, v. 88; James H. Moon, Pa., 88, for himself, Everett Moon, Rachel T. Moon and Henry S. Conard; Milton Mills, Ia.; C. R. Branson, Ind.; Ephraim Robe on, Canada, to 27, v. 88; Frank W. Wood, N. J.; Jos. C. Sharpless, Pa.; Lydia D. Worth, Pa.; Ezra C. Engle, N. J., 84; Ella T. Gause, N. J.; Edward M. Jones, Phila.; Walter E. Vail, Calif.; Wm. W. Bacon, Gtn.; Wesley Haldeman, Pa.; John G. Haines, Pa., 86, for himself, Thos. S. Cox an I Wm. E. Staff.

Remittances received after Third-day noon will not appear in the receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA., will be open from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from 2 to 5 P. M.—Seventh-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. only.

The visitation committee of Abington Quarterly Meeting has arranged for a public meeting for Divine Worship to be held at Friends' Meeting-house, Swede and Pine Sts., Norristown, on First-day, Ninth Month 28th, at 3 P. M. All who are interested will be welcome.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.—The following books have recently been added to the Library:—

Clark—Browning and His Century.
Collier—Germany and the Germans.
Henderson—Art Treasures of Washington.
Lindsay—Camp Fire Reminiscences.
Schultz—Sinopah.
Wallace—Saddle and Camp in the Rockies.
Warne—Immigrant Invasion.

LINDA A. MOORE,
Librarian.

Ninth Month 20, 1913.

The Committee recently appointed by Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting, to visit its subordinate meetings and in other ways endeavor to strengthen the spiritual life of the membership, have appointed a Meeting for the purpose of electing Mr. Leonard Evesham) on First-day, at 28th and 30th Streets, to which the public and interested persons are cordially invited.

W. S. W. BALDWIN, SCHOOL.—The stage will meet at Westtown School, Friends Meeting Place, Street, Penna. R. R. Phila. at 6.32, 8.21 and 10.21 A. M. and other trains will be met on request. Stage fare 50 cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, address W. S. W. Baldwin, Telephone, 1144.

WM. B. HARVEY,
Superintendent.

MONTHLY MEETINGS NEXT WEEK (Ninth Month 28th to Tenth Month 4th)
Gwynedd, at Norristown, Pa., First-day, Ninth Month 28th, at 10.30 A. M.
Chadds Ford, Media, Pa., Second-day, Ninth Month 29th, at 7.30 A. M.
Gwynedd, at P. Pa., Third-day, Ninth Month 30th, at 9.30 A. M.

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

WANTED: A YOUNG WOMAN TO ASSIST WITH the care of small children.
Address: MARTHA W. BALDERSTON,
Bonnett Square, Penna.

A FRIEND RESIDING ABOUT TWO SQUARES above Market and 4th Streets, has two pleasant and airy rooms for rent, furnished, bath-room on second floor. Price reasonable.
Apply to C.
Office of THE FRIEND.

ROOMS WANTED: A FRIEND DESIRES FOUR rooms and bath in Germantown.
H. Care of THE FRIEND.

DOCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevation 1800 feet, commanding extensive mountain and valley scenery. Address

J. W. HURLEY, Manager,
POCONO MANOR, PA.

JOS. B. SCATTERGOOD

HOUSE, SIGN AND DECORATIVE

PAINTING

Orders Sought Bell 'Phone

277 FOURTH STREET

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER
S. W. COR. DOWNING STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE BRUCK BRASS

Eye
Comfort
Guaranteed

by glasses that suit, that give clear, easy vision. Fitting glasses to Old Eyes is a specialty with us—and to Young Eyes, too.

C. A. LONGSTRETH
Specialist in Eye Testing
222 Market St., Philadelphia

W. B. WEAVER Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5th ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL ACCOMMODATIONS FOR FUNERALS.

BELL 'PHONE. ESTABLISHED 1880.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
(Marcellus Balderston)

802 SPRING GARDEN ST. 518 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL 'PHONE PHILADELPHIA

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

WANTED: AT ONCE, A SUITABLE FRIEND AS School at Philadelphia to the Superintendent of the Indian School at Fort Leavenworth, one who will favorably consider succeeding him next Spring.

Woodbury, N. J., Third-day, Ninth Month 30th, at 8 P. M.
Solon, N. J., Fourth-day, Tenth Month 1st, at 10.30 A. M.
Abington, at Hordsham, Pa., Fourth-day, Tenth Month 1st, at 10.15 A. M.
Birmingham, at West Chester, Pa., Fourth-day, Tenth Month 1st, at 10 A. M.
Goshen, at Malvern, Pa., Fifth-day, Tenth Month 2nd, at 10 A. M.

MARRIED.—At Friends' Meeting-house, Moorestown, N. J., on Seventh-day, the 20th inst., MOSES ROBERT, son of Joseph and Anna Howland Brinton, of Glen Rose, Chester County, Pa., to HELEN H., daughter of Walter L. and Elma Harvey Moore, of Moorestown, N. J.

DIED.—At Crosswicks, N. J., on the eleventh of Eighth Month, 1913, HARRIET H., wife of Joseph S. Middleton, in the eighty-third year of her age; a member and chbr. of Chesterfield Monthly Meeting of Friends.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

From Bondage to Freedom, by Isabel Shipley, 2nd Edition, 2 cts
Northfield Symposium, 1905. What 16 young Friends thought when they were 8 years younger. 2cts
Christ in all the Scriptures, by A. M. Hodgkin 60 cts.
Haydock's Testimony 50 cts. by L. C. Wood
For a Free Conscience $1.00

ALL POSTPAID

J. B. WOOD, PINE POINT PARK, CAMDEN, N. J.

Plant Paeonies and German Iris at this season of the year

Paeonies are as perfect in form and as varied in color as Roses.

German Iris come in many shades, grow easily and flower abundantly.

Our illustrated catalog, that is mailed for the asking,
describes a long list of each of these and almost 2000
other varieties of Perennials, Trees, Shrubs and Vines
for lawn planting.

THE WM. H. MOON CO. NURSERYMEN

Nurseries at
Meriville, Pa. Room H, Stephen Girard Bldg.
Philadelphia, Pa.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL.

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

Selling More Goods

IS NOT A HARD PROPOSITION IF YOU USE
GOOD PRINTING.

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,
EDWARD T. BIDDLE,
1010 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

Subscribers patronizing our advertisers will assist THE FRIEND, especially by mentioning our paper in correspondence.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 2, 1913.

No. 14.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, (J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to
EDWIN P. SELLEW or THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a
notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

A THREE-FOLD ASPECT OF EDUCATION.

Sometimes it seems that modern psychology makes little headway in its preaching of the "unity of life and of the soul." We may recognize that there are "no water-tight compartments" in our being, that spirit, soul and body are welded into one in our consciousness, that perception and feeling and will are not translatable except in terms of one another, but we go on thinking and teaching and writing just as though the old distinctions had force, just as though the world of being were a duality or even a trinity, just as though our lives were at one time social, another time ethical and another time religious. The old way of treating these subjects has at least too much convenience about it to be abandoned at the behest of science. If it betrays us into error we are insensible of the error and go right on.

These observations come to mind in considering a recent educational deliverance that seems to make use of the old form of words, but has in it, apparently, the very essence of the aim of our best educational systems. The late meeting of the National Education Association at Salt Lake City put on record certain statements and declarations intended to formulate the highest attainment of our public school system in educational theory and practice. These declarations serve many good purposes. They make the object of our system clear to the workers. They suggest tests by which the results attained in any schools can properly be measured. They make comparative study with other private or national systems quite easy. They disclose defects to all constructive workers. The particular one of these statements to which we would invite attention, slightly paraphrased, reads as follows: "Courtesy is the virtue of the social life, dependableness, the virtue of the ethical life, humility, the virtue of the religious life." Courtesy, dependableness, humility—these three virtues must be the evident fruit of our school training if that training is to meet the demands of the twentieth century. Immediately one is forced to observe that this unity of attainments leaves out of account, apparently, the question of intellectual training or acquirement. A careful reading of the whole statement shows that this omission is not accidental. So at once we perceive that the new emphasis in public education is on character. Secularized education—mental equipment apart from proper social, ethical and religious ideals, has failed to satisfy the age that we are perhaps too ready to characterize as materialistic and money-mad. Possibly no token of the progress of the world is more hopeful than this changed (or changing) emphasis in education. Such character ideals put into the schools are sure in a very brief time to tincture the whole nation. Indeed, the tincture is already felt, so that even political parties frame their platforms with reference to these high social, ethical and religious standards. We rejoice at such signs of progress and are glad to have our eyes upon a vision of hope.

In the Society of Friends it will naturally be felt that these ideas of character-building have inspired our educational efforts from the start. Training in courtesy, dependableness and humility have been much more our aim, than the development of mental acumen or the production of scholars. It is very well, however, particularly at the beginning of a school year, that we should orient ourselves in regard to these essentials, so that our aims may be kept alive and our success in attainment made most sure. Before doing that it may be in order to observe that correct mental training is in essence closely allied to the virtues of the social, ethical and religious life. The psychologists are right. Life is a great unity. Harmonious development of the whole is the only safe means of securing our aim. This is recognized in the statement from which we have quoted, although that statement is a plea for a new emphasis and a definition of what the new emphasis involves.

The choice of terms, courtesy, dependableness and humility is a happy one. They are all of them words of large content. Courtesy means "favor or indulgence as distinguished from right." It represents a conquest of self-interest and self-will in favor of others. It may not be far wrong to say it combines the best that was in ancient chivalry with the unselfishness of Christianity. Friends will remember that William Penn characterized George Fox as "courteous beyond all forms of breeding." William Penn knew better than most what courtly manners in his day were. Doubtless he realized that they were not wholly hollow and unmeaning, but the courtesy he recognized in Fox transcended mere forms and stood for the essence of Christian relationships amongst men and women. It is courtesy of this kind at which we are to aim—for which we are to work in our homes and in our schools.

Similarly dependableness is not mere honesty in the ordinary sense. It embraces absolute accuracy of dealing of course, but it has reference to our relationships with our time (our own time or our employer's time) with our opportunities, with what we are and with what we seem to be. It is the old-fashioned word integrity in action. One may be dependable and fail in a duty or a task, but if so the duty or task has been beyond his capacity.

Finally, humility is the very essence of Christian attainment. It is not the shrinking sense of our limitations. Too frequently such a sense is nearly akin to pride. The basis of humility is a right understanding of God's infinite power and love. From this point of view, humility is closely allied to a sense of responsibility, and its natural outlet in our lives is service. The humble man or woman is not seeking to be excused in the presence of life's tasks.

So it is quite evident that the trinity of virtues embraced in the educational statement herewith quoted, tallies quite perfectly with the apostle's "furnished completely unto every good work." The question of moment to parents and to teachers is, how can such acquirements be assured in home and in school discipline? Is a new emphasis on these virtues enough to make them sure in the equipment of the rising generation? There are growing signs in the nation at large that the school product in these particulars falls very far below the ideal. To charge the failure either to the school or to the home leaves the difficulty unsolved. School and home together must combine to make a much more persistent effort to secure a better result. The old means of restraint and direction must be in some way restored. The new means of inspiration and of service must be multiplied. After all this is done and the best quality of made-to-order virtue is secured one realizes a great deficiency still. This deficiency is the recognized limitation of the public system. That system is obliged to forego definite religious instruction. Its limitation, however, is the great opportunity of our own private system. All that correct training can do, all that the regularity of home and school can enforce need to have a perennial spring in an active religious experience in children. Too much in the past we have dealt with this matter as a vague generality. We have put the religious flavoring in our home and school life and have trusted that it would come out in full-fledged religious characters. There is something very sweet in religious reticence. A heart experience is rightly regarded as a Divine visitation, but children must have the religious life definitely recognized and encouraged if it is to grow. We cannot, of course, give them the religious experience. We can very easily so shut it up to itself in their lives that it becomes abortive if it does not die.

It is a most happy circumstance to find the public school system bent on securing the virtues of the religious life. Will we regard it as our opportunity not merely to show that these are our ideals in education, but that we have a method that transcends the mere mechanics of school routine and discipline, out of ordinary home direction and restraint? It takes us on a new ground, it makes our calling as parents and teachers sacred. If we cannot face it in all its seriousness we shall never know half its joy.

J. H. B.

COMBAT thee in the sight of God, and of Christ Jesus, who shall judge the quick and the dead, and by his appearing and by his kingdom, preach the word; be instant in season, out of season, reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and gentleness. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but having itching ears, will heed unto themselves; their teachers, after their own lusts, and will gather about them a great number of disciples, and will turn aside unto fables. And they shall suffer hardness of hearing, so that they shall not be able to hold the ministry." (1 Timothy, viii.)

DEFENSE worthy not always that which is cut and squared for us, but that which comes as a claim on the conscience, whether it's nursing in a hospital or hemming a handkerchief. — ELIZABETH SEWELL.

EXTRACTS FROM DIARIES AND LETTERS OF RICHARD B. BROCKBANK.

(Continued from page 147.)

Buckie, 24-8-'81.—We were brought on here this morning by the landlord of the Commercial Inn at Cullen, and are comfortably installed in a new inn. We have engaged a new hall, the Volunteer Hall, for a meeting to-night at eight o'clock, and the bellman is now giving it out and has a supply of notices. The Dr. from whom we took the hall says it is not easy to get an audience now in the summer months, when the fishermen are away; it appears that they migrate to Peterhead and Frazerbury during this season, boats and all. There are upwards of two hundred boats and crews from here away at these places, so that the population is very much thinned, but of course our message is not for the fishers alone, but to all. We were told that there was another Hall at the Gordon Arms, and went to see, but found it a very small place, full of furniture and sale goods, so that we had not a choice but to take the Volunteers' one. May it be the means of making some of them consider and turn their swords into ploughshares. This Buckie is a place of between three and four thousand inhabitants, and has two harbors, one new, given by Gordon of Clunie at a great expense to him. He had seen a number of wrecks, etc., and made up his mind to give them a harbor. The old one is also a good, useful harbor, more in the old part of the town. A new Second Geography of Banff says: "Buckie, really a group of villages, 'Buckie up the Brae,' 'Buckie down the Brae,' 'Buckie this side the Burn,' 'Buckie that side the Burn,' 'Nether Buckie,' etc., possesses a greater value, over £100,000 of fishing materials, boat materials, etc., than any other port in Scotland, Wick ranking second." So that we have a sufficient number around us to fill a large meeting.

The meeting last evening was fairly attended, I should think over eighty. Four girls about sixteen to eighteen came in early and could not restrain their laughter for a time, in fact they did not behave well at all. The landlord who drove us said one of them had been brought up at a parsonage, which he pointed out, and ought to have known better; another was a banker's daughter. A few words were said as to our need of waiting for the help of the Holy Spirit, and after that there was a solemn silence for a little season. Then I stood up at some length, and then F. Mackie, and a few words of supplication from me and a short pause. When we broke up, the people were very cordial, several of them warmly shaking us by the hand. Our driver told us that there are many honest-hearted people there, earnest, seeking ones who were very much impressed with the meeting and said they would not have missed it on any account. And though, in consequence of the conduct of a few thoughtless ones, there was some unsettlement, still we were enabled to clear ourselves and direct the professors of the Christian name to the substance and reality of true religion, and the words of our driver were that we had left a splendid impression, the word splendid, of course, was used much as awful is in Scotland, in quite an exaggerated sense. We shall feel thankful if the witness for Truth is reached in any. He seemed to think that the meeting was altogether much appreciated by the serious people there. He said before the meeting people thought there would be a collection, they cannot understand our preaching free, and traveling at our own cost.

Fochabers, 25-8-'81.—We have got thus far by dog cart from Buckie, and have arranged for a meeting in the Temperance Hall this evening at eight. The crier has gone round once, and is to go again at six, on account of the workmen who are out in the country and return about then. The Buckie meeting was not large, about thirty-five, but it was a most favored time. After a time of weighty silence in the large Hall, which would have held ten times as many, I had to stand up with, "Without faith it is impossible to please God," and had to show the nature of faith, what it was, etc., and then whence it was, quoting, "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the Word of God," showing the confusion that arose amongst theologians and Christians generally by calling the Scriptures the Word of God, and showing that the spiritually dead could not hear till their ears were unstopped by Him who is the Word of God, and who alone can unstop them; showing that He was in the Beginning, etc., and in Him was life and the life was the light of men, etc., and how we were born again by Him alone who liveth and abideth forever. I was given great freedom in declaring the Truth, and afterwards F. M. had to press the subject of holiness of life. A few words of prayer and the meeting closed. At the close I felt it right to give a better explanation of what we as Friends had been led into, etc. In the afternoon we had walked out to a village, Portessee, and there met with a boat-builder at work in his yard. We told him our errand and showed him a notice. He asked when the preaching began, and this led to a conversation in which he professed that there could be no worship without some one spoke. We explained our views. He said he had read of the Quakers, and had had two in his house all night and they never prayed or spoke, and therefore they could not be right. He said to his son, "John, here's Quakers, ye'll have to put on yer coat and gang over." He said we should have a collection first before we spoke to pay our way, he thought every man should pay up to his income. He could not agree that the Gospel should be free. "Why," said he, "yer real Plymouths, you make the ministers no use, you would hev them all burnt." "Surely," I said, "they would not do that." "Yes, to be sure they would." He was very hearty and free, and as a traveler came up he shook hands heartily and said, "Some of us I be over."

After meeting, his wife and son and two daughters came to us and were most hearty. His wife said she felt she must come and had most hearty encouragement for us. An old watchmaker was with them. I asked the son who the Friends were who were at his father's house. He said they came out of England—about York, he thought. After their return they sent some precious tracts which were of great use, as a revival was on soon after. These tracts were distributed and of great value. The old watchmaker said that they who had had to do with revivals might learn much from what had been said in that meeting. It has been the great delusion that the devil had made use of to destroy the good that was intended in these revivals, making men believe that they were born again by the Scriptures. That it was the common practice to take a text of Scripture, point it out to the sinner and say, "Do you believe that?" If he said he did, "Then you're saved," and it was a delusion of the devil. They had seen at this meeting who is the Word of God, and how alone man can be born of Him, it was the very thing that was wanted amongst them. Dr. Duguid who let me the Hall said we had serious people from the Methodists and the three Presbyterian bodies, but not from the Roman Catholics, who have a great church, so-called, here. He told me he would walk with me and show me where a Friend lived, his name was Wm. Russell. I went on and found his wife, Mary Russell. Wm. was away at the fishing at Frazerbury. She was very tender and wept much, she said Wm. was a Friend, but she was not yet, she had a high regard for the Smeals, Robert and Mary. William had joined Friends in Glasgow. He is a mason, but had gone to the fishing for eight weeks and could not get home for two weeks more. A little girl had been ill, but was much better.

Another, Dr. Simpson's wife, was at the meeting, and she had spoken to the Mackies and they had promised to call in the morning. We called and she was very nice. She spoke also as seeing fully the danger of calling the Scriptures the Word, and said their shorter catechism was to blame for it. She had much felt what was said and spoke most feelingly, and said if nothing else had been done by our visit to Buckie, she had been helped to a more correct view. She had a sister who never went forward to the table. She had been at a meeting in Glasgow entirely silent, but she did not think it had been held in vain. Our little visit to her was a most comforting one. She said the boat-builders were Methodists named Geddes, and that the watchmaker was also a Methodist local preacher. We had a fine ride to here, part of it through fine fir woods of the Duke of Richmond.

Dr. Duguid referred as we walked to a quotation of mine from 1 Peter, 1: 18 to 23, and said that he had been at Strathpeffer, and heard a Scotch clergyman say that the elect were those who showed by the purity of their lives that they were living in Christ. An English Independent Minister had objected to this as opening the door too wide. He had gathered that I held the same and said many in this country are coming to this view. He was very kind and only charged five shillings for the Hall, and would have given it free if it had been his own. I should like to have heard the boat-builders going over the meeting with the old man when they got home. He is a fine man and very sharp.

(To be continued.)

WHAT IS PEACE?

What shall we say to the claim the War Leagues make that with them are the true workers for Peace? Only this: We ask for a definition. There are many things called Peace. We do not question the sincerity of those who give the word a meaning different from ours. But their kind of Peace may not appeal to us. We contrast the Peace of Force with the Peace of Law, the peace which is temporary—upheld by the strong arm or the balance of power—with the "Old Peace with velvet-sandalled feet," eternal, so long as it rests on the balance of justice.

For the leadership in peace to-day but one nation is prepared. She is hampered by no past history, by no present recklessness. Her national ideals need no change, only intensification and reconsecration. Our republic stands for the rule of civilian manhood, the dominion of Law and Order. Under the flag where hatred dies away, she is secure from all attack. She can safely lay down her arms; and to do this boldly, in courage, in confidence, in trust, in law and righteousness, would be to lead the way in which all Europe in a generation or two must perforce follow. For Europe's Peace of Force has failed. Her people, taxed beyond endurance, writhe in discontent. Her war-chests are empty, her states are mere "provinces of the Unseen Empire of Finance." To lapse into actual war, the Peace of Exhaustion, is inevitable. But that again is not peace. It is permeated by seeds from past wars, the germs of future disagreements. The only escape for civilization is through the Peace of Law.

DAVID STARR JORDAN.

WORLD PEACE FOUNDATION.

THREE GREAT BIBLE SOCIETIES AND THE CIRCULATION OF THE SCRIPTURES.—We are very pleased to report the circulation for the British and Foreign Bible Society for the last year as reaching the astonishing figures of 7,809,000 volumes. The Bible Society of Scotland for the last year of record, from the report just at hand, has a circulation of 2,350,685 volumes. If these figures are added to the issues of the American Bible Society, which have already been published as 4,040,610 volumes, a superb total of 14,308,595 volumes represents the missionary circulation of the Scriptures on the part of the English-speaking people all over the world. To this would have to be added the commercial circulation of the Scriptures by the great Bible presses—Oxford, Nelson & Sons, The International, and others, small and large—and the circulation of Continental Bible Societies which, at the present time, we are not able to give. It requires some effort of the imagination to see the significance of this vast sowing of the seed of the Kingdom in the field of the World.—WILLIAM INGRAHAM HAVEN, Corresponding Secretary, American Bible Society.

Our times are in God's hands, and all our days
Are as our needs, for shadow as for sun,
For oak as heat, for want as wealth alike
Our thanks are due.

—WHITTIER.

girls wore wide-rimmed hats of white straw adorned with a single feather in a sad, moulting state. Those who adhered to the simple, old headdress appropriate to their life—the fringed kerchief of black or dark blue silk or cashmere—certainly had the advantage both in appearance and in comfort. The face that might have had comeliness or even a degree of beauty with the graceful lines of the older style which leaves the brow uncovered and the front hair free, became hopelessly plain when extinguished by a large yellow mushroom, chilly, and threatened with speedy dissolution.

The few umbrellas were seldom used, apparently never by men. Women were privileged to use them, but there was a subtle feeling that one might lose caste by so doing or appear sophisticated or artificial. On one occasion when rain was falling fast and two women were having an animated conversation under an umbrella, the umbrella was lowered either intentionally or in pure absent-mindedness, yet the conversation went on without a break until the shower ended. Two old women and a man sat for half an hour in the rain when shelter was within ten feet of them. The coats and dresses grew perceptibly darker in shade, and the water-drops stood in their hair, but not by a turn of a hand or the twitch of an eyelash could one have told from their actions that it was not ideal summer weather. A mother had repeated difficulty to keep a little girl of seven or eight from sitting where the rain swept over her. Not even fear of fading her pink hair ribbons or of spoiling a soft blue woolen muffler seemed to influence this small daughter of Eve. The men were entirely indifferent to the weather and oblivious of it. There was no pose on their part. They simply moved about as it suited them, rain or no rain.

This habit of mind is duly admirable in a people who have to encounter weeks of storm. If they keep about their business, which is largely out-of-doors, without anxiety, fussiness or inward rebellion, they must be indifferent. In our dryer climes such indifference is a bit of youthful bravado that deceives no one, and should be regarded with tolerance, but in Norway it is a national achievement that bespeaks the philosophic mind. If it were not so the land of fiords and mountains would also be a huge asylum for the nervously prostrated.

Our cargo was as interesting as the passengers and it changed even more rapidly than they. Into the hold went bulky and perishable goods, but around the hatchway and on the forward deck was scattered a strange assortment of odds and ends, carefully watched by the respective owners, and by the alert supercargo, who checked the articles off on his list at each port of call. There was the little mill with the rough-hewn wooden tongue by which the horse was to make it go round, watched over by an old man in a red shirt, with grey whiskers under his chin; firkins of butter, eyed by tall, thin dairy women; cans of milk and cream, an occasional box of eggs; crates of blue berries; the wooden trunk of the big boy who was evidently making a new venture in the wide world, who took his box and his red cheeks and blue eyes and splendid young body ashore at Helle, which will surely be a better place for his vigor and enterprise. There were several of those curious wooden boxes characteristic of Norway. These are made by hand and are handed down as heirlooms and treated with becoming respect. Serving in lieu of baskets, they are of many sizes and shapes, and have the charm of individuality. The decoration is really a part of the art and primitive culture of Norway. It consists of conventional scrolls and flower marks, with the date worked in as part of the design, and the prevailing colors are blue, red and green. It is not uncommon to see these boxes, forty, fifty, or even one hundred years old, and one can imagine the air of distinction they give to a lot of miscellaneous freight.

At the landings the donkey engine was kept busy raising and lowering the heavier bales and boxes. Most of these had to do with the agricultural life along the fiord. There were big bags of potatoes and rolls of leather, and, at one place, where waterfalls were plentiful, a good deal of flour, put on board by the proverbial dusty miller. Occasionally an American mowing machine or hayrake went ashore, having the familiar names of Deering or McCormick, and to cap the climax, two stout, little, brown Norwegian horses were swung on board with commendable composure on their part. They were interested, of course, but not excited or undignified, and our good ship was equal to the occasion, for there beside the cook's galley was a snug little compartment especially prepared for equine and bovine passengers. If King Haakon and Queen Maud had suddenly appeared at some stopping-place, I believe our captain, with unruffled composure, would have shown them to an unsuspected royal suite.

Somewhere near Langesvad we came to fishing villages. At one place, particularly, everything smacked of the sea, and there was gathered on the dock a picturesque group of twenty brawny fishermen, dressed in high boots, blue jerseys and yellow sou'westers. Close by our side was anchored a fishing vessel, a subject for an artist with its many reels of fishing lines with their hooks securely fastened to the stout cord every few inches; its large, red net buoys, piled astern in artistic confusion, its boxes of red and white salted rock cod and its general air of tar and brine.

While we were shipping boxes, big and little, of halibut and cod and ice, a number of the passengers improved the time by bargaining with the fishermen on the little schooner beside us. An active trade sprang up and evidently we land-lubbers drove some good bargains. Soon the rail was decorated with several strings of sickly red and white fish which later were proudly carried on shore by their owners. The prize was drawn by a tall, dignified old man. He held up to an admiring circle the head and one-half the body of a large fish long deceased. There is no accounting for tastes. Certainly the tenderfoot did not envy him his purchase. But there was an evident gleam of triumph in his eye. He lingered fondly by the rail where his treasure hung, and was heard to murmur, "Fenty ore!" Which is, being interpreted, "Thirteen and one-half cents!"

So the long afternoon wore on and the physical discomfort was forgotten in the human interest aroused by the progress of our little boat. As we neared Aalesund the men became bigger and burlier, with heavy shoulders, deep chests, and curly beards, and an air that told of the freedom of the sea. Their coats were loose and heavy, of a closely-woven dark homespun. The conventional shirt of town and city gave place to the more primitive garment finished off with a narrow neckband, buttoned in the back. The bosoms were of unstarched linen and were sometimes decorated by insertions of heavy homemade lace or embroidery, and the neckbands were often neatly adorned with hand-stitching, occasionally in colors. This old-time touch in dress emphasized the humanity and simplicity of these men, and one somehow felt a comfortable sense of protection, as though one were voyaging with characters from "The Pilgrim's Progress."

The background of this day of new experience was the scenery of a wide fiord, commonplace if compared with the sombre majesty of the Neiranger or the serene and subtle beauty of the Sogne near Balholm, although almost any country but Norway would herald it as a national attraction. Mountains rose dim and shadowy in the distance, and the nearer views formed a changing panorama of dark, pine-clad slopes, on which clouds rested, and dawdled and lagged and sauntered all day long. Milk-white threads breaking the mountain-sides told of rushing streams; and not infrequently waterfalls plunged and roared close to the oases of green farmland that surrounded the landing-places.

Our course lay just inside that fringe of rocky islands that forms the last barrier against the Atlantic. Now and then the great swells broke through the reef and tossed our little boat roughly, telling of the mighty forces at work beyond the protecting granite walls. Sometime after seven we approached the thriving, newly-built city of Aalesund, with its compact blocks of concrete houses, its substantial business section and its busy quays, whence are shipped annually millions of gangs of fish caught by its large fleet of Iceland fishermen. As we entered the point and stole up to our mooring-place on one side of the square stone basin, filled already, as it seemed with steamers large and small, the dark mountains to the west were silhouetted against the steely clouds of a cold wintry sunset.

As I fell asleep that night snug and warm between double blankets, in a frigid, fire-proof hotel, my last waking thoughts were not of cloudy mountains and pine-clad slopes, with mysterious deep waters at their feet, nor of the little steamer with its individuality, its manifold life and the waves roaring about its keel, but of the true worth and dignity of the men and women with whom I had mingled for a few hours.

Having so little from the worldly point of view, how rich they are in the essentials of manhood and womanhood. Theirs is a great achievement—to possess their own souls in patience and quietness and to pass on to worthy sons and daughters a character at once kindly, hardy and free.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

AROUND LONDON.

I shall not attempt to write about the usual things one tells regarding London. The subject in general is too big. We all know about the Tower, and Westminster, and Houses of Parliament and Mansion House—at least we know about their architecture, and setting, and history. I shall talk about humdrum personal experiences.

Everytime I land in England I am particularly impressed with a few things. One is that there are no hideous town-lots as in American cities. You do not enter the towns through a fringe of uncultivated and ugly acreage held for speculative purposes. Instead, you are whisked straight out of the green meadows and lovely hillsides, or pretty suburbs, into the built-up sections, where smooth streets and endless chimney-pots immediately proclaim that you are fully in city life.

Another thing I always regard approvingly is the big, fat, and comfortable appearance of the draft horses. They are splendid, solid, gentle creatures, enormous in size, with kind faces and great hairy fetlocks.

Of recent years two-story motor-buses have largely taken the place of the old-style omnibus. They go very fast and carry passengers a long distance for one or two pence. The top is the best place from whence to view the London street. The fares are very cheap. In them you can go several miles, for say two shillings, or forty-eight cents, whereas in many of our cities the same distance would require two dollars or more. It is a great sight to see these, and innumerable other sort of vehicles, whirling rapidly up and down the crowded thoroughfares. Everyone seems to be in a hurry. The enormous traffic extends for miles. All of the congested street line of any of our American cities, excepting to some extent that of New York, would form only a small part of that of the world's metropolises. The longer you remain in London the more you are impressed with the magnitude of the city.

The way to see the fashionable equipages is to go out to the Marble Arch and near there watch the vehicles stream into Hyde Park about four o'clock in the afternoon. A few of the old-time London, with beautiful horses, driven by men in top hats, are still predominant. Even in mid-summer they are cool and do not look comfortable to people who are not used to the hot, steamy, and footmen with wooden faces, and the clatter of the wheels and hoofs. Inside sit the pleasure-seeking, society, and staidly bored. The men generally wear high top hats, but at other times white spats. You see numbers of the boys of twelve years of age, in these motor-carriages in high top hats, lion collars, drab spats, with a big buttoned leather bag and holding a cane. What will they amount to? Even the women have restful faces. You turn away from it all, and then observe the poor old creature whom you saw pulling a piece of bread out of a garbage-can that very morning. The social extremes in London are pitiable—they are horrible.

Covent Garden Market is a spot few visitors go to yet it is one of the most interesting in London. The markets in any city are the places to see the people as they really are. Here are pyramids of vegetables and fruits, and wildernesses of flowers, which offer their contribution to the needs of this vast population. By ten o'clock in the morning the show is over, and for blocks around the market there are to be seen shortly thereafter some boys or starved girls hurrying away with flowers that they have cheaply purchased at the last moment, and on which they hope to realize a profit of a penny or so before their wares wither. It seems a cruel way in which to try to earn a living.

Then, maybe, you thereafter wander up to Selfridge's, the American Department Store of London. It is in Oxford Street, in the heart of the fashionable shopping district; but things are not considered high-priced in it. I am told that the native Briton does not take kindly to our ways, yet there seemed a goodly number of people making purchases when we were there. It has an imposing front, not many stories high, and inside is a beautiful café, à la American. No gratuities to the waiters are allowed. The glory of the establishment is a fine roof garden on top of the building, with a pergola, flowers, and little seats, and tables, where the shopper can sit out in the open air, and enjoy the breeze and watch waving flags of all nations, and look over the vast city whilst lunching.

We came across a good many Americans during our stay in London. The handsome shops are well patronized by our countrymen, as is also the case in the larger continental cities that they frequent. I have for years been amused at the attacks made on the United States monetary system by Europeans, who confess that they hardly understand what the trouble is, but who seem to feel that somehow our finances are all wrong. But I observe that these good people are always ready to take as much of our despised money as they can get, just as we are ever willing to use theirs when opportunity offers. Some discerning writer has penned this delightful and genial criticism regarding shopkeepers abroad:

"Europe spends a busy summer getting American money and a comfortable winter telling how sordid it is."

WM. C. ALLEN.

PRICE OF GOVERNMENT MAPS INCREASES.—After First Month 1, 1913, the standard topographic maps of the United States Geological Survey will be sold at ten cents a copy or six cents wholesale, an order amounting to $3 or more entitling the purchaser to the reduced rate. These maps have heretofore been sold by the Director of the Geological Survey, under authority of Congress, at five cents retail and three cents wholesale, but for some time it has been recognized that this price has been too low. The constantly increasing refinement in the field work of the topographic surveys, the immense amount of detailed information which is put upon the maps, requiring the most expert and tedious drafting and copperplate engraving, the great care necessary in insuring the exact register for the three or four color lithographic printings, and the largely increased cost of labor and paper have made the increase in charge not only justifiable but necessary. As a matter of fact, ten or six cents for one of the standard fifteen-minute topographic sheets of the Geological Survey, which is in effect an almost exact reproduction of about 230 square miles of territory, is a merely nominal price. No comparable maps are issued by any private map-printing house, but if there were they would be sold at $1 to $3 apiece. The field surveying alone of some areas covered by a single map costs more than $5,000, and even $7,000 in very difficult country, while there are few maps which represent an expenditure for field work of less than $3,000.

All the maps are printed in three colors and some in four colors. The water features, including seas, lakes, ponds, streams, canals, swamps etc., are shown in blue. The relief—mountains, hills, vales, cliffs and slopes—is shown by means of brown contour lines, which graphically portray the shapes of the plains, hills and mountains, and also show the elevation of every part of the area. The works of man are shown in black, in which color all lettering also is printed. Boundaries, such as state, county, city, land-grant and reservation lines, are shown by broken lines of different kinds. Principal and inferior roads are shown by other kinds of lines. Houses are indicated by small black squares which in the densely built portions of cities and towns merge into blocks. Other cultural features are represented by conventional signs which are easily understood. Many of the maps show also forested areas, which are indicated in green.

The Director of the Survey at Washington will be glad to furnish an index map, covering any area desired, which shows the particular quadrangles, as they are called, which have been surveyed and the corresponding maps issued for sale. This index-map circular also contains a list of special maps of the United States, of States, and of national parks, mining camps, etc., with the prices, and a list of available geologic reports on any part of the area shown.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

THE PRAYERS OF CHILDHOOD AND YOUTH.

When childhood and youth are past there are those who remember with gratitude and thankfulness the God-inspired prayers of their earlier days, and none of us know how much we owe to those earlier movings and stirrings of God's spirit within us for the help and blessing that have attended us in the thorny and difficult ways in which we have wandered or into which we have been led. The remembrance of the secret and hidden places sought out, and the out-pouring of prayer from hearts overflowing with love and gratitude to God in Christ Jesus for his great mercies to us in pardon and reconciliation, and the earnest pleading for preservation out of the snares of the evil one, as also of yielding of ourselves body and soul to God's care and keeping, leave a sense on the mind as time passes along of how much we owe to the working power of Grace within, and also for those outward blessings brought home to us by the Scriptures of Truth, and for other helps and blessings that have encompassed our path in life, we feel to exclaim, great and marvelous are thy works to usward, who would not fear Thee and give glory to thy Name, for Thou only art holy.

In looking back over the life that has been so far passed, who is there that is not sensible of how far short we have fallen of the ideal set before us in early days and also in the ideal we too have set before ourselves. The sense of mellowing under the power of a gracious discipline is very present with us, and we see in looking back our own crookedness; Divine Goodness stands out more clearly before us to the praise of his grace. We still crave for more light and more truth to shine upon our path, and our cry is still for mercy to pardon and grace to help in every time of need. As the outward man decayeth we need renewing day by day, as well as in our days of vigor.

The feeling has arisen with me, have we lost the dew of our youth when our hearts and lives were so full that we could go anywhere in order to find our Beloved? And yet we knew Him close at hand, but there was with us the Spirit of sacrifice and nothing was too near or too dear to part with for his Name's sake who had loved us and had given himself for us. We were then touched with the Master's Spirit, He loved us and we loved Him. How is it with us now, have we lost the freshness and the fervor of our early days?

I have had awakened in my own mind a fresh sense of the godliness of the unslumbering Shepherd, and I feel to call to my brethren and sisters in Christ how stands the matter with us, are we fellow-helpers together in the Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ by word and deed, to draw all men unto Him? for you will remember this is what the Master said, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." We know He has been outwardly lifted up upon the cross, are we lifting Him up in life by word and deed so as to be epistles seen and read of all men?

I stand not forth as the judge of my fellows, there is One that judgeth us and He holdeth his inquisition in the bosom of each if we but heed and obey. It is the good old doctrine that the Apostles and George Fox and others in all the ages have taught; it is both old and new. There is one that is not idle, both outwardly and inwardly, the evil one, whose power is very potent to draw aside from what is right. Is there no service the Divine Master has called us unto, that is by us being left undone? My mind is not toward the showy works in which the creature is so readily manifest, as it is toward the hidden burdens He lays upon the hearts of his children. There are still the lame and the maimed, the halt and the blind spiritually, to be helped and this is not to hinder that material help that is needed, only let us seek God's guiding hand and not the praise of men, then I believe we will find the God and Saviour of young days our stay in middle-life, and the cheer and comfort of our old age.

I desire not to write for writing's sake, but as early experiences came before me, the flood-gates of my soul seemed opened in thanksgiving and praise with feeling to put on paper somewhat of the exercise of my mind toward my fellow-believers in Christ Jesus, who may have come through a similar experience, to stir up in such the pure mind in them, be they in middle or later life, so that the fragrance of the early flower may yet appear ripening into blossom to the glory of the Great and Good Husbandman, whose we are, and whom I trust we joyfully obey. To have the joy of being a door-keeper in the house of our God, spiritually, and to help any to the steps up to that Heavenly dwelling is a pleasure far beyond any earthly good that can be known here below. O for the fervor of those early prayers the one for the other and for our fellows the world over, for it is written, and in its truth I believe, He, our Saviour, would have all men to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the Truth. To live in the atmosphere of prayer is to know the springs of vice and evil dried up in our spirit, for love neither worketh nor thinketh evil of its neighbor. Blessed are they who are brought therein and are preserved therein by the love and grace of God!

CHARLES WATT THOMSON.

THE following clipping from the Eighth Month British Friend may not be without service as a warning in some religious circles on our side. [Ed.]

"Apropos of the report of C. W. Wendte, Secretary of the Congress of Religious Progress in Paris, on the increase of liberal religious sentiments in all the countries of the world, The Inquirer gives a very timely warning in reminding us that 'spiritual victories are not to be won by discussion.' The advice is so excellent that we are tempted to reproduce two paragraphs.

"At present the liberal movement has little difficulty in attracting the scholar and his satellites or the philosopher with his attendant crowd of sophists; but does the saint feel that within it he breathes his native air? Can it create a practical ideal of life and conduct which will lay its spell upon the hearts of men and bring back the vision of God to the poor and the disinherited?

"Our intellectual restlessness has little that is novel about it. It is a familiar symptom of spiritual need. And it cannot be satisfied except by the access of religious vision and power which comes with the discovery so familiar to Christian experience in all ages, that our highest freedom involves the lowliest submission to the Master of souls, with his yoke of discipline and his simple word, 'This is the way, walk ye in it.'"

CHRIST-LIKE is he who hoods
Man's want and sorrow, putting these above
All forms and phrases, in the name of love;
For words are mockery when the time want doods,
—PHILLIPS BROTHERS.

NEVER bear more than one kind of trouble at a time. Some people bear three kinds — all they have had, all they have now, and all they expect to have.—Selected.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

DUTY.

Give thy day to duty!
To that high thought be given
Thru every hour,
So shall the bounding heaven,
As from the root the flower,
Bring to thee the glad-soul beauty."

—RICHARD WATSON GILDER.

PLAY FIRST, AMBULANCE AFTERWARD.—The midnight ride of Paul Revere may have been a dazzling historical episode, but little Jimmy Overtree, a Western Union messenger of Indianapolis, Indiana, is somewhat of a thriller himself. Only Jimmy rode a bicycle.

The other day Jimmy was sent to answer a call to the State House. He mounted his wheel and swung rapidly around the square to Market Street. On he went until he came to Capitol Avenue. He slowed down to stop at the Capitol Avenue entrance to the Capitol. Just then a big automobile bore down upon him and Jimmy and his wheel went into the air. The boy was picked up unconscious. A woman who had been a passenger in the car, knelt beside him and fanned him while the driver went to call the City Dispensary ambulance.

While they waited for the ambulance, Jimmy began showing signs of returning consciousness. He opened his eyes and looked around him.

"Lie still, dear," the woman said sympathetically. "Lie still and wait for the ambulance."

The mention of ambulance brought the messenger boy to his feet.

"Ambulance!" he said, disgustedly. "The Governor wants me!"

And before she could restrain him he was off and into the State House. The ambulance came, the automobilists explained and the ambulance returned to the dispensary without a patient. The horses had hardly been out of their harness a moment before a call came for it to go to the Western Union office. Jimmy had got his message and, weak and sick, stumbled into the office with it. He fell just as he handed it to the receiving clerk. The ambulance took him home. He remained there three or four days and then returned to his job.

Western Christian Herald.

SELF-CONTROL. A recent writer tells the story of a famous horse trainer who had a particularly bad-tempered beast brought to him for subjugation. At the first act of ugly temper on the part of the horse the trainer paused, put up his hands and, and with a deep drawing of his breath: "Now, get it all before you get a real grip on myself." After that his master of the horse came not as an accident, but as a sequence. He is one who can master himself can master a horse by the use of his mind to it. "A great many young people are put in positions where it is of the utmost importance that they should be able to control and direct those who are in their charge, or in contact with them. Mastery is what they must learn, and the horse trainer's words show the way. "First of all let me get a good grip on myself." Power inevitably flows from self-control. The person who can aggravate or annoy is our master just that far. We can never master the master until our self-control is stronger than the power of the master to annoy him. If we would be strong of mind we must first get a grip on the bit and bridle on ourselves. We must have a good secret of mastery and success.

THE PEACEMAKER. A boy has been told of a little girl who, together with her mother, on evening: "I was a peacemaker."

"How was that, a girl her mother?"
"I know of nothing that I didn't tell," was the unexpected reply.

"Do we not all of us have frequent opportunities to make peace in this way?" Sunshine Magazine.

THE RIGHT STOCK.—She was small and frail, but sitting a few seats behind her I could not see her face. Soon a handsome, manly young fellow opened the forward door of the car and looked from one to another as though expecting to meet somebody. At once, on seeing the lady I have mentioned, he quickened his steps and a happy look came into his face. On reaching her he bent down and kissed her tenderly, and when she moved nearer to the window he deposited his coat and handbag and seated himself beside her. In the seventy-fivemile ride which I took in the same car with them he showed her every attention, and to the end exhibited his devotion by anticipating her smallest need for comfort; and once he put his arm around her in such a lover-like way that I decided they were a newly-married pair enjoying their honeymoon. Imagine my surprise on reaching Chicago to discover her to be old and wrinkled. But when I heard him say, "Come, mother," and saw him proudly lead her out of the cars and gently help her to the platform, banishing her anxiety and bearing her many packages, I knew there was not money nor romance behind the exhibition, but that here was a young man that loved his mother.—Our Dumb Animals.

COMFORTABLE PEOPLE.—"Fanny L— is the most provoking girl in our set," said a young lady, flinging herself on the couch. "You never can get anything definite out of her on any subject. This afternoon I wanted her to say that it was last Tuesday when we heard about Ruth's wedding, and do you suppose she would? Because several of the girls argued that it was Thursday she smiled in that exasperating way of hers and said she could not be positive. She knows and so do they that it was Tuesday, but she was afraid she might be unpopular if she was positive."

The irate young lady's mother went on with her sewing tranquilly, but presently she asked if Fanny L— was undecided on all questions or whether she merely declined to "take sides" in unimportant matters. The daughter was a trifle vexed at the straightforward question, but at last admitted that Fanny L— was positively stubborn in some things. When it came to a question of right and wrong nobody could budge her from her position, and she was always ready to defend her beliefs. "I thought so," said the wise lady. "Fanny belongs to the class of comfortable people, and it is a pity there are not more of them in the world. Daughter, when you are as old as I am you will find out that the really positive people are the ones who never mistake that word for stubborn. In the little things of life they are content to be comfortable and allow others to be so, reserving their words and their arguments for the essentials."

It took some time for the young lady to digest those truths, but when they were assimilated they resulted in much good. She took pains to minutely observe the conversation of young people and old and she soon discovered that the most tiresome men and women, the ones who had very few friends, were the ones who would fight to the last ditch over the most trivial incidents, while, on the other hand, the ones without "backbone," as she had once characterized them, were firmly on the right side of every great question, because they frittered away no time on the foolish ones. She discovered that two old gentlemen in her neighborhood had not spoken for years because of a foolish little dispute over a matter that did not involve ten-cents' worth of anything, and she found that two dear old ladies had only buried their girlish difficulties when death threatened to take one of them. They were able to laugh over the foolish thing that had separated them, because during the long years when they were content to be comfortable rather than foolish they had learned many lessons, but the soured old gentlemen insisted upon every neighbor taking sides in their trivial trouble. All at once she saw the sour old gentlemen and the dear old ladies as older people saw them who had known them from youth, and she knew that bad habits not rooted out in youth become ruling passions later in life. . . . —HILDA RICHMOND, in Sunshine.

A NEWCOMER'S IMPRESSIONS OF INDIA.

First and foremost must certainly be put the astonishing beauty of the country. For the space of an hour twice every day—at sunrise and sunset—the whole aspect of things is transfigured and glorified in floods of clear rosy light. Distant hills, the sky above, trees, houses, the very dust of the streets, seen in this light, glow with a rich loveliness that causes the newcomer from the rushing West again and again to give thanks to the Creator of all beautiful things.

Even in the heat of the day, when the glare of the sunshine is at its fiercest, one is constantly wooed to forget the weariness of it by the brilliance of the colors which it reveals. India is a land of gorgeous coloring redeemed from tawdriness by the clearness and delicacy of the light. Her most beautiful buildings owe their indescribable loveliness rather to their coloring, and to the light in which it is viewed, than to their form.

Not less remarkable than the beauty of the country is the charm of the people who inhabit it. Before a Westerner has been a day in India he has realized the grotesque ugliness of Western garb, and has wondered at the astonishing gracefulness of its Eastern counterpart. To see a party of women coming from the village well at twilight, bearing their great brazen waterpots on their heads, and clad in their brightly colored flowing garments, is to gain an entirely fresh conception of how graceful humanity can be: a conception that is mightily reinforced by a sight of the children that follow their mothers.

One is told that these people, who appear so charming, are inveterate liars, live lives in many respects little better than the beasts, and are a prey to all manner of depraved habits and superstitions. This may or may not be true, but one is prepared to forgive them a great deal just because they look so attractive, and smile so readily.

They have an extraordinary capacity for friendship. Show towards an Indian student the marks of friendliness which you would show towards any casual acquaintance in an English University, and he will respond with an affection which is apt to be almost embarrassing, and which will enable you, if you will, to exercise a very large influence upon his life. You have moreover gained a friend whose outlook upon the world and interpretation of the deepest truths in it are likely to have a lasting influence upon yourself.

No one can have lived for a few months in India and have preserved a more or less sympathetic attitude towards her people, without realizing her extraordinary social solidarity. We hear much in England of caste, and of the lamentably deep divisions to which it gives rise. Nor is it easy to overestimate its evils. But underlying all these divisions there is a fundamental communal solidarity rooted in the fact that Indian society, being less individualized than that of the West, preserves at its basis the unity characteristic of a single great organism.

In India a man is a member of his family, caste, district, race or nation, rather than a single self-sufficing individual. In a bee-hive the single bees, like the single cells in a man's body, are scarcely to be reckoned as individuals apart from the community in which they live: their existence depends upon and consists in their relationship to the whole. The same is to some extent true in India, especially in the smaller towns and villages. Let a Westerner enter such a community soon after sundown, when the people are back from the fields, or have left their workshops, and are gathered in the bazaar or round the great tree in the centre of the village. He will become conscious that the men and women around him are both something more and something less than those of the West. They are less of individuals, and more of community members. They are like the bees in the hive; and as one moves amongst them one is conscious of a communal spirit, almost of a communal personality, which is wholly alien to the West.

The existence of this social solidarity has probably never been sufficiently recognized and allowed for in Western efforts either to govern or to evangelize India. It forms a problem of the deepest interest and the most fundamental importance.

It goes far to explain many other problems, from that of the incapacity of the average Indian station-master, to that of the extravagant patriotism of the Bengal nationalists; the problem of caste itself is but one of its side-issues.

From the point of view of Christian Missions, one of the first things to impress the present writer was the evidence of a reaction in both Anglican and Nonconformist circles against what may perhaps be called the methods of the Edinburgh World Missionary Conference. There is a distinct feeling that we may have too much talk of co-ordination, centralization, and the "science of Missions," and too little attempt at literal following of Christ in simple service and in scorn of all that the world means by "leadership." At Edinburgh it fell the ablest Indian Christian present, a man who has since been signally honored by the church to which he belongs, gave courageous expression to his opinion that the Indian Church needed not so much expert European leadership, as men and women who, though of a dominant race, should yet be content to occupy positions of humble service in her ranks, and should train those amongst whom they lived by their quiet influence rather than by their brilliant abilities of organization and management.

Many missionaries seem themselves to be coming to the opinion that this is their true sphere of service, and that anything more than this is calculated to hamper and cripple the right statement of Christ to India.

The importance of the right development of the Christian community is constantly impressed upon one. In India, if anywhere, Christ must be expressed through his body, the Church, if He is indeed to appeal irresistibly to the whole great and varied continent. No one who has marked the contrast between the faces of the girls in Mission Boarding Schools and those of the child-wives outside, can doubt that the work has been well begun. Yet there are great dangers ahead. Perhaps the greatest is that of imposing upon the Indian Church too much of that individualized Christianity which has so markedly predominated in the West that most Westerners can conceive of no other type. There is need that John's lesson should be driven home, that they who do not love the brethren are not worthy of the name of Christ.

The corporate ideal, the definite realization of the presence of Christ in joint communion which marks a Quaker meeting held in power, and that happy fellowship in all sides of everyday life, which is so marked a feature of a true Quaker community (whether at Woodbrooke or at Pocono) should have an incalculable effect in the right statement of Christianity to India.—JOHN S. HOYLAND, in The British Friend.

IDEALS are like stars; you will not succeed in touching them with your hands, but like the sea-faring man on the desert of waters, you choose them as your guides, and, following them, you reach your destiny.—CARL SCHURZ.

FRIENDLY NEWS.

ABINGTON TEA MEETING.—Little Abington Meeting-house, near Osgoitz, was the scene of an afternoon tea meeting on Seventh-day, the 20th inst., in which about seventy Friends participated. The meeting-house was built in 1836. The trees then planted in its ample yard have grown to noble size, and lend that air of quiet peacefulness so dear to Friendly hearts. Two decades ago the wooden partition in the building was removed and the benches faced lengthwise of the room. The room was very comfortably filled by the Friends assembled. The lowering weather prevented an outdoor meeting, as planned, but indoors, cordiality and religious fellowship were unabated.

The meeting was held under the care of the Quarterly Meetings' Committee, several of whom are incorporated with Abington Monthly Meeting to aid it, in its reduced condition, in administering the Discipline. Though the membership of the Monthly Meeting composed of Haverhill and Abington Meetings is only thirteen, about two score Friends from other meetings live within its limits, and some of them are among the most faithful attenders.

Tea was served during the ingathering from 3 to 4 P. M., at which time

Second Safety Congress of the National Council for Industrial Safety. The motion pictures, according to H. L. Brownell, safety inspector of Chicago, who exhibited them, represented about 50 per cent. of actual accidents, taken by the Public Safety Commission of Chicago for about ten months. Virtually every kind of street car and automobile accident was shown. The pictures are to be used by Inspector Brownell in a fall and winter campaign among the 400,000 school children of his city."

It is stated that approximately one in every 400 inhabitants of the United States is employed by the postal service. Tabulations by the Postoffice Department show that on Sixth Month 30th last there were 58,021 postmasters; 115,415 assistant postmasters and postoffice clerks; 1454 watchmen, messengers and laborers and 30,920 city letter carriers. Other employes—railway mail clerks, rural carriers and department employes—make the total number about a quarter of a million. This makes the Postoffice Department the largest business department of the Government.

Popular lectures on disease and the care of the sick by distinguished colored medical practitioners of Philadelphia and other cities were lately delivered at the Afro-American Emancipation Exposition.

A despatch from Chicago of the 22nd ult. says: "To stimulate cattle-raising, in order to avert the famine they say is imminent, the American Meat Packers' Association in its eighth annual convention to-day voted to raise $500,000 with which to conduct a campaign of education among the farmers and cattle raisers."

A committee has been appointed in Media, Pa., to take steps against licensed saloons. It is stated that it will be the duty of this committee first to keep close watch upon the saloons in conjunction with similar committees in other sections of Delaware County, in order to assure a strict adherence to the license laws. Under field managers the committee will have charge of the campaign and the methods of procedure towards curtailing and eventually eliminating the sale of liquor.

The State fire marshal, Joseph L. Baldwin, has issued a bulletin addressed to housekeepers on the prevention of fires. In it he says: "Do you know it costs you $3 per year for yourself, wife and each of your children to pay the fire losses in the United States? Figure it out and see if you would not rather pay as Europe does, only 35 cents per capita. Help to reduce it in this country by keeping your building in good repair and free from all waste matter that might cause fires. The time for starting fires is now on and all chimneys and flues should be thoroughly cleaned. Act and get your neighbors to do the same."

FOREIGN.—A despatch from Berne, Switzerland, says: "The closing session of the international conference for the protection of workers was marked by the adoption of a resolution declaring that workmen and women should be allowed a nightly repose of eleven consecutive hours, which should include the hours from ten P. M. to five A. M. Another resolution opposes the employment of boys under fourteen years of age at night work. The convention was signed by delegates from Great Britain, Germany, Austria, Belgium, Spain, France, Italy, Norway, Holland, Sweden, Portugal and Switzerland. Other delegates, among them the Russian, decided to refer the convention to their Governments for signature. The United States was not represented at the conference."

It is stated from Berlin that an important deposit of uranium and pitchblend, from which radium is extracted, has been found on the German side of the Erzgebirge, a range of mountains between Saxony and Bohemia. The deposit is apparently a prolongation of that on the Bohemian side, which has hitherto been the principal source of supply. The find has created great interest on account of the demand in connection with the treatment of cancer. German cities and States have placed unfilled orders for uranium and radium amounting to $625,000.

A telegram of the 22nd from Halle, Germany, says: "The congress of scientists, which has been meeting here to test the efficacy of the divining rod in discovering underground springs of water and mineral deposits, decided to organize an international association before adjourning to-day. So many successful experiments were reported to the congress that the Executive Committee was increased by the addition of four members, in the expectation of increased activities in the future. Tests conducted under the supervision of the congress by divining rod experts resulted in the location of three potash veins, the existence of which was confirmed by maps of coal deposits and water courses. One expert found a leak in the city water main. The congress received authenticated reports that southwest African farmers are finding water regularly by means of the divining rod."

Six hundred Ulster leaders lately met in Belfast, adopted a provisional constitution, to go into effect on the passage of the home rule bill; formed a provisional government, with Sir Edward Carson as "Premier," and completed plans for military resistance to the decrees of any Parliament in Dublin.

It was stated from Paris on the 23rd that aviator Roland G. Garros-to-day crossed the Mediterranean Sea from Frejus, near Cannes, to Bizerta, near Tunis, and added another record to the list of French aerial achievements. Garros' flight ranks as one of the most notable feats in the whole history of aviation. His actual flying time was seven hours and forty-five minutes, his speed averaging about sixty-four miles an hour.

NOTICES.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, Phila., will be open from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from 2 to 5 P. M.—Seventh-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. only.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.—The stage will meet at Westtown Station, trains leaving Broad Street (Penna. R. R.) Phila. at 6:32, 8:21 A. M., 2:48 and 4:30 P. M.; other trains will be met on request. Stage fare twenty-five cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, address West Chester Bell Telephone, 111A.

WM. B. HARVEY,

Superintendent.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, Philadelphia.—It has been the custom of Friends' Library to send cases of books to be circulated in neighborhoods where there is no access to a regular Library. If any one desires such a collection of books for use in the community in which they live, please write to the Librarian.

LINDA A. MOORE,

Librarian.

The visitation and religious service committee of Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting has arranged for the holding of a Public Meeting for Divine Worship to be held on First-day afternoon, the 12th inst., at 2:30 o'clock, in the Meeting-house at Arney's Mount (Lower Springfield), about five miles east of Mount Holly, N. J. Those feeling a desire to attend this meeting, and having no means of conveyance, please communicate with William E. Durnell, Moorestown, N. J.

MEETING at LANESBORO—Under authority of a committee appointed by Concord Quarterly Meeting, a meeting for Divine Worship will be held in Paiste Hall, Lanesboro, Pa., on First-day afternoon, Tenth Month 5th, at three o'clock. All interested are invited.

WANTED.—At once, a suitable Friend as an Assistant to the Superintendent of the Indian School at Tunasassa. One who may favorably consider succeeding him next spring.

MONTHLY MEETINGS NEXT WEEK (Tenth Month 6th to 11th):

Kennett, at Kennett Square, Pa., Third-day, Tenth Month 7th, at 10 A. M.

Chesterfield, at Crosswicks, N. J., Third-day, Tenth Month 7th, at 10 A. M.

Chester, N. J., at Moorestown, N. J., Third-day, Tenth Month 7th, at 7:30 P. M.

Bradford, at Coatesville, Pa., Fourth-day, Tenth Month 8th, at 10 A. M.

New Garden, at West Grove, Pa., Fourth-day, Tenth Month 8th, at 10 A. M.

Upper Springfield, at Mansfield, N. J., Fourth-day, Tenth Month 8th, at 10 A. M.

Haddonfield, N. J., Fourth-day, Tenth Month 8th, at 7:30 P. M.

Wilmington, Del., Fifth-day, Tenth Month 9th, at 10 A. M.

Cwchlan, at Downingtown, Pa., Fifth-day, Tenth Month 9th, at 10 A. M.

London Grove, Pa., Fifth-day, Tenth Month 9th, at 10 A. M.

Burlington, N. J., Fifth-day, Tenth Month 9th, at 10 A. M.

Falls, at Fallsington, Pa., Fifth-day, Tenth Month 9th, at 10 A. M.

Evesham, at Mt. Laurel, N. J., Fifth-day, Tenth Month 9th, at 10 A. M.

Upper Evesham, at Millford, N. J., Seventh-day, Tenth Month 11th, at 10 A. M.

DIED.—Eighth Month 26th, ELIZA MOTT, widow of Gershon Mott, a beloved member of Pasadena Monthly Meeting of Friends, California; age seventy-nine years, lacking two days.

Rhoads Nonkink Hose

It is a pleasure to use Nonkink Hose because it is so smooth and light. You need fear no leaks from making short turns, for it does not kink and break as ordinary hose, because the rubber is forced through the cotton fabric and vulcanized into a solid wall.

We furnish it coupled without extra charge in any length desired up to 500 feet.

It costs less in the long run because it wears so well.

Another good hose at a lower price is our Corinth.

With hose let us supply your needs in Nozzles, Sprinklers, Reels, etc.

J. E. RHOADS & SONS

12 N. Third St., - Philadelphia
102 Beekman St., - New York

W. B. WEAVER Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5th St., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN
TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT
OF THE CITY, ALSO CHAPEL
ACCOMMODATIONS FOR
FUNERALS

Bell 'Phone. ESTABLISHED 1880.

JOS. B. SCATTERGOOD

HOUSE SIGN AND DECORATIVE
PAINTING

Orders Solicited Bell 'Phone

275 S. FOURTH STREET

DO NOT FORGET

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,
1010 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

ELKINS MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

MEMBERS OF
NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA
STOCK EXCHANGES

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

THE PRESENT LOW PRICES OF BONDS OFFER
UNUSUAL OPPORTUNITIES FOR INVESTORS. WE RECOMMEND THE PURCHASE OF HIGH GRADE BONDS.

WE SHALL BE GLAD TO SUBMIT A LIST ON REQUEST

REPRESENTATIVES:

WM. E. CADBURY PAUL W. BROWN JAMES P. MAGILL

To ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

A FRIEND RESIDING ABOUT TWO SQUARES above Market and 40th Streets, has two pleasant third-story rooms for rent, furnished; bath-rooms on second floor. Private family.

Apply to C.,
Office of THE FRIEND.

ROOMS WANTED—A FRIEND DESIRES FOUR rooms and bath in Germantown.

H. Care of THE FRIEND.

WANTED—A MOTHER'S HELPER IN SUBURBS of Philadelphia. For particulars address
MARY C. WHITAKER,
Cedar Grove, Sta. O, Phila.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST COMPANY OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.
Accounts Solicited Deposits by Mail
Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET

FOURTH AND CHESTNUT STREETS

POCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevation 1800 feet, commanding extensive mountain and valley scenery. Address

J. W. HURLEY, Manager,
POCONO MANOR, PA.

Subscribers patronizing our advertisers will assist THE FRIEND, especially by mentioning our paper in correspondence.

JOSEPH G. FOGG FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16th & RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE BRUCE 6848

WALL PAPERS—All Grades WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER

Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON (Marcellus Balderston)

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. 518 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL 'PHONE PHILADELPHIA

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

From Bondage to Freedom, by Isabel Shipley, 2nd Edition, 2 cts
Northfield Symposium, 1905. What 15 young Friends thought when they were 8 years younger, 2 cts.
Christ in all the Scriptures, by A. M. Hodgkin 60 cts.
Haydock's Testimony 50 cts. } by L. C. Wood
For a Free Conscience $1.00 }

ALL ORDER

J. B. WOOD, PINE POINT PARK, CAMDEN, N. J.

Plant Pæonies and German Iris at this season of the year

Pæonies are as perfect in form and as varied in color as Roses.
German Iris come in many shades, grow easily and flower abundantly.

Our illustrated catalog, that is mailed for the asking, describes a long list of each of these and almost 2000 other varieties of Perennials, Trees, Shrubs and Vines for land planting.

THE WM. H. MOON CO. NURSERYMEN

Room H, Stephen Girard Bldg.
Philadelphia, Pa.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL.

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 88.

FIFTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 9, 1913.

No. 15.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVID H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to
EDWIN P. SELLEW OR THE FRIEND,
NO. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

AN OUTSIDER'S TESTIMONY.

I read several months ago a discourse by a minister of another religious body in which he rather strikingly calls a halt on his congregation, and asks them if there is not in the fundamental principles and life of the Quakers a spirit which the present time demands. The address has called up three special fields wherein, it may be, we will have a powerful lesson to teach if we are faithful to our inheritance.

The early Friends advanced the doctrine of enthusiasm, which in its literal significance means filled with the Divine spirit, but which, alas, has become sadly perverted until it has almost no place of its own in our language. This enthusiasm was the corner-stone, as we often hear, of their teaching, not because their life and practice ignored other principles, but because they felt the great importance of this long-lost doctrine.

Filled with the Divine Spirit, they could ignore—and go farther, they could testify against outwardness in religion, and the congregation gathered for Divine worship in the silence of the flesh witnessed most powerfully for the efficacy of that spirit which directs and controls if opportunity is allowed it.

Those "ancient Friends" went to God direct in their meetings. It was more than a marvel to most about them. They waited for His outshining, and as the manifestation of this was in silence, so they waited in silence. They met with practical difficulties, but who does not? In their case this resulted in a strengthening of their faith, as is always the result where opposition is met and conquered.

To-day there are congregations in our largest cities and elsewhere that worship amid all the pomp and ceremony of rites that one could name, all the help that architecture, music and painting can offer at their service, and yet we know that some of these practice the "Quaker Meeting" for quarter of an hour of silence once each week; furthermore, we know it to be an acknowledged fact that concentrated silence in an assembly is conducive to mental effort, and this where the fellowship is honest engenders an atmosphere in which the spiritual is more easily attained. In other words, the opportunity for the Divine spirit to abound is greatly increased. No one pleads for a listless silence, in which there is no mental effort, where the mind follows a fleeting fancy. It cannot attain our end. No one pleads for an indifferent or man-directed ministry, neither does it accomplish our end. No one pleads for any of the outward adjuncts of religion if they lack in sincerity, for if they are wanting in honesty of purpose they entirely defeat their end.

It is a wonderful lesson to grasp, and a wonderful privilege to be identified with the teaching of it, this great lesson of the indwelling of the Divine Spirit in our spirits in its fulness. If at the end of two and a-half centuries we can have acknowledgments through the press organs of various religious bodies that the practice is growing with them of holding part of their meetings in silence, is it a time for us to be aping them in our prearranged service for meetings?

Another matter that seems to have called forth the admiration of the preacher was the way in which Friends in some places and at some times (would that it were more universal) have allowed this same enthusiasm to so possess them that they have broken loose from the ways of convention and have cut out for themselves new paths. It is easy as one looks back over the records of a reformer to see how his steps have followed in a regular succession; it is a very different matter with that reformer as he blazes the way himself. What avenues were not closed to the early Friends? Many indeed were barred and triple-barr'd against them. They had no share (with rare exception) in the law-making processes, and yet who has made a more positive impress upon the English-speaking race in the line of political and social reforms than a few Quakers, not gathered in groups, but isolated individuals? Who, in brief, has to a greater extent the rare gift of forecasting the signs of the times? Nothing short of a close abiding near the Divine Spirit can beget this.

The names of the men and women of the Quaker fold who have been conspicuously identified with reform movements are but few, and we do not claim for them a place above what they have fairly earned, but no one questions that there have been a few who have stood abreast of the advance rank in many reforms. They were not brilliant either by nature or by training, but they were filled with the spirit already referred to, they were enthusiastically devoted to the call, and they recognized in the call the Divine nature, and they submitted themselves to it, soul and body. This is the element that the preacher had in mind and to which he directed the attention of his hearers.

It was because of a close walk with God that William Savery could meet the opposition that some of his friends advanced and which would have kept him at home from England. Had he not followed on in trust, a different story would be told of the great battle for prison reform which dates from the awakening Elizabeth Fry experienced under his ministry.

Do Friends claim for themselves a closer communion with the Divine Spirit than others enjoy? I do not know that they do, but the preacher in question seemed to think that there was more in their lives than in others to strengthen this and less to weaken it. Of this we may feel sure that reforms are of slow growth; the pioneers must have clear vision—unbounded faith and unflinching courage, and there is but one Source from which these spring.

One other topic I have selected from the preacher's list that may well claim a thought. He acknowledges that the "early Friends" were men and women "of an intense faith," and fully satisfies us that he recognizes them as people of strong convictions and definite clear beliefs, willing, we know, to submit to the severest test, and yet he adds, "They shrank from over-rigid theological definition." No one can have read the first chapter in modern philosophy as it trenches on topics discussed in Quaker journals of the seventeenth century, and fail to have been impressed with the contrast the two afforded. The Quaker writer stuck close by Scripture for aid in his definitions, driven as he was, it might seem, time and time again, to the wall, he always had Scripture to support his position, and yet he never failed to place that in-shining light of the Divine Spirit above all else.

There is much of Quaker teaching in books that are coming from the press to-day, and there is much of George Fox's Journal in sermons that are being preached from all kinds of pulpits this very year. These that have been given are but three items that could easily have been added to. The Friends' ideal in none of them has been fully grasped, neither is the Friends' ideal lived up to by twentieth century Friends themselves; none the less the times call loudly for us to maintain our silent warfare and to keep up our courage, for if we are true to these various teachings, we shall not fail to make our convictions manifest, and convictions firmly held and manfully battled for have won the only victories that have been worth the winning.

D. H. F.

ANDREW CARNEGIE has taken issue with Lyman Abbott on the Peace Question in an article with the following title. We quote the opening paragraph: [Ed.]

THE LATEST PANACEA.

There are two ways of promoting peace—some by making our nation "strong," that is, "a cannon-fight"; the other "by making it so strong that it need not fight."—LEWIS ALDRICH.

The author of this astounding solution of the curse of war in our nations, the "chief remaining obstacle in the path of the progress of progress of man," could only succeed by convincing nations coming from war that they had reached one side or the other—either weak or strong. But the contrary being the case, as history abundantly proves, the new panacea that barren in results as the old adage, "When the sky falls we shall catch larks." Let us consider Europe for example, by far the most blood-stained part of the civilized world, an armed camp of nations, some small and weak, others large and strong, each class fearful and jealous of the other, and for centuries situated at times by the curse of war, but never reaching the indispensable requirement of the new panacea revealed by the author. Alas! to the contrary, the defeated nation incited the victor to conquer, a patriotic duty, the strong ever ready to begin their power to repel probable attacks, the weak the result of previous wars. "For what can war but kill? Do I see a million and never has an answer been forthcoming. The seed of war once sown, poisonous fruit comes forth, plant peace and what but peace can peace breed?" every plant after its kind. Until Lyman Abbott disproves this law of war flowing from war it is in vain he divides nations into two classes—those too weak to fight, others too strong to need to fight. The history of the world confutes him.

WEAKNESS AND STRENGTH.

Lord, make me to know mine end,
The measure of my days,
Just what it is;
That I may ever know,
What time I dwell below,
How frail I am!

Lord, make me to know my Friend,
The measure of his might,
How great it is;
That I may surely know,
In face of every foe,
How strong I am!

—JESSE THOMPSON WHITLEY, in The Sunday School Times.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

THE PERIL THAT CONFRONTS US.

"The Spirit of Tolerance" is the title of an article in The Friends' Quarterly Examiner [London] for the Seventh Month. It contains much that is well stated and deserving of approval, but the general tenor and what appears to be the purpose of the paper is not such as could have the acceptance of any orthodox church.

The writer seems to regard doctrinal belief as quite non-essential—where she bestows her sympathy and preference is very manifest.

On page 368 she refers to an orthodox meeting that is "literally dying for want of some of the intellectual strength, broader outlook, and interest in public affairs which distinguishes the body of Hicksite Friends." We may be slow to believe that any orthodox meeting that is "literally dying" can have its life renewed by any such infusion as she suggests.

On the following page, 366, she seems to deprecate any consideration "involving the application of the attributes of Deity and Divinity to the nature of Jesus." She recognizes "some tendency in certain quarters of the Society to revive" what she designates as "this ancient theological problem." A problem? Can that be called "a problem" which is accepted by Christians the world over as a fundamental of their faith?

The essayist asks "what have we to do with definitions of deity, divinity, or even of humanity?" "Disputes," she adds, "over these questions, which crept into the church through the theological teachings of Paul, only mar the vision of that life which has transformed and is still transforming not only individual lives but the whole course of history."

From some point of view this statement may be permissible, but does not warrant any under-valuation or disregard of the "theological teachings of Paul" than which there are no teachings more "profitable for doctrine" unless it be the teaching of the Great Teacher Himself.

Is not the Divine Christ the "Chief Corner-stone" on which the edifice of Christianity is built? Where that corner-stone is unrecognized there may be religion, but is it Christianity?

To treat the cardinal doctrine of the Divinity of Christ as a mere matter of opinion to be tolerated under the guise of Christian charity is an incentive to skepticism and promotive of infidelity.

Such teaching has already wrecked the faith of some, and is imperiling the faith of many more.

J. L. B.

PHILADELPHIA, Ninth Month, 1913.

"Our object in life should be not so much to get through a great deal of work, as to give perfect satisfaction to Him for Whom we are doing the work. There is usually much more time and strength forfeited by friction than by toil."—CANON ALKEN.

NOT slothful in business, fervent in spirit; serving the Lord; rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation, continuing instant in prayer. (Romans xii: 11, 12.)

THE PARENTS' AGE.

It is often said that this is the age of the child, as though parents might be divorced from their responsibilities. Of course, no one ever thought approvingly of such a divorce, but it has been very much a fact in very many cases. Indeed, some parents have thought it a merit to say, "We turn our child over to the school." The counter-movement has been put with much force by Editor Winslip of the Journal of Education. We are glad to abbreviate and adapt his article for THE FRIEND as follows:

A NEW MESSAGE FOR THE HOME.

At last, after centuries of misdirected energies, it has dawned upon some persons that the child will never be educated wisely and well until the parents do their part in the training of the child. The long-time answer that parents do not know how is no longer current coin of the realm. "They must know how" is the emphatic answer. It remains for the schools to educate the parents and it is now demonstrated that they can do this.

For several years there have been "Mothers' Clubs" and "Parents' and Teachers' Clubs" and often they have done noble service, but they have lacked adequate leadership and abundant means for the development of their ideals.

To-day in all parts of the country there is some scientific leadership of the parents. It is more or less crude in some places, a mere experiment, but in others it reaches to high science. The simplest form, but one of the most valuable is in Oregon and Wisconsin, where they have parents report on the home life and work of the pupil.

The next step up the scale is the requirement that the teacher shall visit each home and determine as well as maybe as to the reliability of these reports.

In Boise, Idaho, in the high school each student has a guiding teacher who does all he can to have the student's life out of school help, at least not hinder, his school life.

In Utah, Dr. Stewart of the Teachers' College and Dr. McKnight of the Training School of the Teachers' College plan to employ a man at a good salary to direct the home activities of the children.

In the South, the successful Girls' Tomato Clubs have been transformed into "Mothers' and Daughters' Tomato Clubs," in which mother and daughter raise and can tomatoes together under the guidance of the school, so that the mother is ready at school with her daughter.

Thus all along the line something has been done toward the achievement of this desirable end, but it remained for New York City to discover and demonstrate the scientific way to the skillful guidance of parents in the home life of their children. Six years ago Jane Day, a principal at New Albany, Indiana, came to the Hester Street district on the lower East side and under the advice and the co-operation of Julia Richmond, district superintendent, did intensive work in rescuing girls and boys through the utilizing of their out-of-school life. There were some famous rescues, but more and more was it borne in upon Jane Day that the greatest need is a complete mastery of home conditions and for two years she has been at work in an up-town district between Seventieth and Ninetieth Streets. Here are children from all kinds of homes, prosperous and improvident. Whenever any boy or girl is out-of-step, scholastically, aesthetically, or ethically, the teacher makes a complete study of the case mentally, physically, socially and domestically. Carefully and judiciously she confers with the mother, and when feasible with the father, and advises them how they can assist the pupil to get back into step. Thus without friction practically every child is saved from dangerous tendencies, is led to find himself, and is a joy to the home, a satisfaction to his teachers and a comfort to himself. Once a month there is a mothers' study hour in Public School No. 106. For half the year there are lectures on "The Right of the Child to be Understood." The topics month by month for these mothers are:—

"Why No Parent Knows Her Own Child."

"Why No Child Knows Its Own Parent."

"What Children Know About Each Other."

"What Teachers Do Not Know About Their Pupils."

"What No Pupil Knows About His Teacher."

The other half of the year the lectures are on "Environment."

Jane Day has two assistants, understudies, but even then the work is much contracted, is confined to a limited area.

An advance has been made possible by a combination of the Public Education Association, the City Club, and the College of the City of New York.

As a result of this meeting John H. Finley, president of the College of the City of New York, has been provided with $5,000, that he may place psychological specialists at the service of these workers that there may be prompt and adequate psychological study of every out-of-step child with scientific advice to specialists like Jane Day and all principals and teachers who interest themselves in the detailed study of children who are dependent, defective, or delinquent.

When New York has demonstrated the possibilities through such service for the parents and child other cities are sure to fall in line.

IN THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

WM. C. ALLEN.

For "THE FRIEND."

One of our interesting experiences this year was a visit to the House of Lords and the House of Commons while both of them were in session. Very few visitors to London, or English people, are privileged to see the former. Generally tourists are only permitted to visit the Houses of Parliament one day in the week, when there is a recess. My wife and I, therefore, prized this opportunity, particularly as to the House of Lords. Our participation in this sight was due to the courtesy of a friend of mine, a well-known member of Parliament.

The buildings cover eight acres and are built in the extreme Gothic style of architecture. The soft stone is crumbling beneath the rains of England and has an appearance of age which the date of construction does not warrant. Visitors calling for members pass through a long corridor lined with statues of celebrated statesmen. You then enter a splendid rotunda, and there I sent in my card by a page to the member with whom I had an engagement. All the interior work of this most expensive building is of a style and beauty that would put to shame most public buildings throughout the world. Art has been lavished everywhere in magnificent carvings of wood and stone and frescoes by celebrated painters.

The hour was almost six P. M. and we were immediately invited to tea. A slight shower precluded the possibility of taking tea out on the celebrated terrace which on summer evenings is, at that time of the day, one of the great social sights of London. But indoors the occasion was most interesting. My wife poured tea whilst we talked with our kind host regarding matters of mutual interest. Then we were conducted to the Chamber of the House of Lords, which had been in session about two hours.

Some twenty-five years before I had been in the House, through the courtesy of a Peer, during a debate, and much enjoyed the recollection of it. But that scene had not been so imposing as was the present one. Then the dim daylight filtered through the great windows, and only the usual number of possibly fifty or sixty men were present. This last visit happened at an unusual and historic time. The soft, bright red cushioned seats of the chamber were almost all filled. Hundreds of peers from all over the United Kingdom had come up to the debate on the Irish Home Rule Bill and to vote thereon. The issue was great and the feeling intense, and much public comment was being daily made in the newspapers as to possible civil war in that country.

"The House of Peers is sumptuously decorated in the richest Gothic style"—to quote Baedeker's. The beautiful stained-glass windows, the walls decorated with heraldic emblems, the great throne of the King at one end of the chamber, with the lesser thrones of the Queen and Prince of Wales on either side of it, the Lord Chancellor sitting in front of them on the woolsack, in his robes and with an enormous wig falling down over his shoulders and the crowd of noblemen all about him, made an impressive picture.

The beautiful chamber was lighted by electricity. The carved and gilded wood and stone shone with added lustre over and under the brilliant light. The Peers sat before the few spectators eagerly listening to the speech of the Marquis of Lansdowne, who was opposed to the Bill. Many of them had their high silk hats on. They were all well-dressed men, of all ages, and of all sorts of physical and facial characteristics. Many of them carried buttonhole bouquets. All listened with well-fixed air to the orator, and, sometimes when he made a point faint cheers or "hear, hear" would arise.

The single-seated gilt-railed peereses' gallery, around the chamber was well filled with peereses who hung on every word. They were a well-gowned group of women, some dressed simply and others extravagantly according to my unqualified masculine judgment. Their plumes and silks made a striking picture against the background of carvings and gold.

My wife was so fortunate as to have a good seat among the very few ladies who were accommodated in the visitors' gallery. Probably only about one dozen seats are provided for women visitors and none are permitted to stand. There was also standing-room for probably about fifty men spectators. As I stood I could not help thinking of the vast extent of the power of the men who assembled there and how their influence permeated to so many corners of the earth. Lord Lansdowne spoke from a few notes deliberately, sometimes almost hesitatingly, and in an almost conversational voice. He is a tall, slender man, and is leader of the opposition in the House of Lords.

After awhile we left the brilliant scene, which had its educational value as well as its association with the generous hospitality that made our enjoyment of it possible.

Under our democratic form of government the exterior evidences of aristocratic or hereditary personal privilege are unknown, and we may hope that the tendency toward it may not develop in America. But it is interesting to see how others do. It is also well to respect, if we do not follow, the traditions of a great empire which, in spite of its monarchical government, has done much to improve and conserve human liberty. But the House of Lords has not contributed its share towards this. If it fails to do so it is doomed.

EXTRACTS FROM DIARIES AND LETTERS OF RICHARD B. BRÖCKBANK.

(Continued from page 139.)

Sossismouth, 27-8-'81.—We are again in private lodgings, and find peace of mind in staying over this week-end. We found on our arrival at Elgin that I did not feel quite as ready as usual to engage a hall and give notice of a meeting, and went to the post-office, got quite a number of letters, one of thine, date 22nd, sent on from Macduff to Portsoy and then on to Elgin and one of J. W.'s the same—one of J. W.'s addressed to Elgin, one dated 23rd and one 24th of thine. I sat down and wrote the needful business letters, and a short note to thee and one to J. W., with a cheque for £20 which I expect you will have received this morning, for I found when I got down that I had in 1 one-half an hour till the midday post left at one-third. I then made some enquiry about a hall, and found we could have one, but there was a great political meeting last evening and on consulting with the Mackies, we felt best attached to come on here and have a meeting last evening, which we did. And now feel peaceful to remain till Second-day, not so far, looking to a meeting to-night, but waiting for guidance and clearness as to our steppings, both for this evening and to-morrow. We have left notice for a meeting at Elgin for Second-day evening, and shall return there in the afternoon in time, and then go forward as way.

I should like to see so that any letters that may come from you will be picked up on Second-day, and shall leave orders to the waiter to bring them when we leave. It may be if we go on to the 23rd that we can call at Elgin on our way back. The meeting at Portsoy was small and was a little disturbed by a member in coming, and looking in and calling out to the 23rd, and then another. A few serious men tried to get them to go away, and finally succeeded, and the meeting ended well. A kind word of encouragement was given us by several, and regret expressed that we had been disturbed, as what we had said was the very essence of religion, etc. I suppose there were about thirty present. It was four when we arrived here last evening and Alexander, the town crier, did his best and came himself, a most intelligent man, but we did not think there would be more than thirty. A fish-curer named James Maconochie was recommended to me by Thos. Smith, bookseller, Elgin, as interested and having a hall. He kindly let us have his hall, a long, low room, well seated and suitable enough. I have not seen him yet to see if we can have it to-morrow. He was at the meeting and will know how he felt. I expect a man who came in with him was his pastor Free Church. As they neither of them stopped to speak, I know not how it is with them. I learn from our hosts that he has recently lost his wife and has no family, and perhaps he felt as though he ought to ask us to stay with him and did not like to.

F. Mackie has been having a chat with Alexander this morning, he told me last evening that he almost worships one man in our Society, J. Bright, and to-day, when F. M. told him that I am a farmer and fruit-grower, he was wonderfully astonished at it, and more than ever when F. M. told him we got nothing for preaching. He said that ought to be known. He told F. M. that an evangelist had been here recently, say a year or two ago, and made a great stir, and thirty-nine were said to be converted and joined some of the bodies here. A minister had told him lately that they had not stood their ground, and that as church members they would have been better without them. It may be that such are hindrances when such as we come round, making serious people afraid of us. I shall have to go and see Friend Maconochie and thank him for the hall and see if it is free for to-morrow sometime.

The meeting was very solemn and impressive last evening, and I felt quite peaceful after it, and can leave the result with Him who doeth all things well.

Sossismouth, 28-8-'81.—We had a meeting last evening here at seven-thirty, and another this afternoon at two-thirty, both favored seasons, the last largely attended, I should think over one hundred and twenty. The daughter of our host says that the silent meditation has been very much spoken about and admired by serious people here, they feel that far too much is done in their meetings which distracts their attention from the true object of worship. Some of the fishermen had said that it would be a great benefit if their meetings were begun in the same way. The Lord has made way for us remarkably in reaching the witness for the truth in the hearts of the people, and I do hope that He may continue to bless them and bring them to a living dependence on Himself, so that they may sit down to wait upon and worship Him in spirit and in Truth. I felt this afternoon low and as though I had no life left in me. F. M. spoke first and then I had some freedom in testimony. I felt when we came out that anything that we had done was in much weakness of the flesh. But it pleased the Lord to open some of the people's hearts to say a few words of appreciation of the meeting, and that it was the essence of religion which had been put before them.

It is quite clear to me that there is a preciously visited people along this north coast of Banff and Morayshire, or Elgin, as it is now mostly called. The day before yesterday there was a great storm from the north and many of the boats were in great peril. But so far as we have heard no great loss has been sustained.

We have a meeting arranged for at Elgin to-morrow night at eight, which has been longer advertised than any meeting we have had. I feel very desirous that we may be favored and no harm be done to the precious cause of Truth, which I am satisfied many hearts have been so far prepared for that they have no difficulty in appreciating in a good degree our humble testimony to its power.

Elgin, 29-8-'81.—I think that thou wilt have gathered from my letters that we are getting on nicely, and that there is some appreciation of our service. Oh, that they may find the need of looking to our beloved Master, and that they may indeed cease from man and worship and wait upon the Lord alone. Some of the pious fishermen have said that our views are the very thing they want, they have looked too superficially at conversion. And as to worship they greatly admire our silent meditation as they call it.

Burhead, 30-8-St.—Here we are at the most unpromising-looking place yet. We have gone about and distributed notices freely in the town and intend going to some villages this afternoon nearby. The Free Church school-room is the only place to be had except a Drill Hall out of the town with a great cannon in it.

Forres, 31-8-St.—Here we have arrived and engaged the Mechanics' Hall and filled up a lot of notices and sent the bell-man around.

We have always done so except at Elgin, where we left it to Thomas Smith to distribute and stick up bills on the Sixth-day for a meeting on the second, and we had but a small number, so we have just taken the direct plan, a meeting this evening, etc.

Last evening we had not a large number, say twenty to twenty-five, but the Free Church minister and another came—the former took out his Bible and began to read to himself, but after I stood up he shut it and was very attentive. After I sat down a man, the worse for liquor, stood up and spoke in approval of what I had said; all kept quiet and in a little time he sat down, when F. M. was favored in testimony and after a few words in supplication from me the meeting closed with a feeling of solemnity. The two ministers were very cordial in expression after wishing us God-speed in our clear statement of Gospel Truth and testimony to Christ. One of them said, "I believe it will do us all good." We referred him to our Master as the only source of good.

The man turned out to be a drill instructor and came from Cirencester and knew Samuel Bowley and Samuel Alexander. I told him I was afraid he had not taken their advice, which he admitted. He spoke very approvingly of the meeting, and gave him some good advice.

Scotland, Dundee, 5-9-St.—We attended the usual meeting yesterday morning, increased by several who had been attracted by a notice put at the bottom of the advertisement of the public meeting in the evening that the morning meeting was open to all also. I think there might be twenty in all. In the evening there were about one hundred. It was a relieving meeting, but the feeling is very strange in such a large town to be able to reach so few.

Agnes Burrill was there and asked us to go to the Poor-house to see the sick; she is head-nurse there. We found that Mary Barry lived in Asylum Lane, near the same place, so we went and called upon her. Her sister, Elizabeth Alcorn, is in Melbourne. She is a poor old woman and seemed delighted to see us. She said that before her father's death, Elizabeth, her sister, told him her home was not there. She had seen a people and described them, but it was far, far away. When she described the plain, simple, truthful people she saw there, her father said, "Why it must be the Quakers you have seen." He was a pious man and had traveled a good deal. Now she is a Friend in Melbourne and her sister seems to look on it as the fulfilment of what was clear to her as a young woman. She and Janet Allen together had been in the habit of meeting to worship before they heard of Friends.

We also called on Agnes Burrill at the Poor-house, but did not feel it our duty to go in and see the patients—our message was to her. One of her children is at Aytun, the one that was at Wigton is a pupil teacher and doing the work of the house, etc., and the father is at Ulverston and has been very unsuccessful and has given way to drink, etc. Poor woman, she is doing what she can to keep them, but seems much tried.

We have James Steel away at Carnoustie giving notice of a meeting for to-night. To-morrow we hope to call upon the Fenwicks and get on to Stirling and see Alexander Stephenson. Thence next morning on to Glasgow in time for the marriage meeting.

(To be continued.)

For "THE FRIEND."

GOING THREE THOUSAND MILES TO TAKE DINNER

ALFRED LOWMY, JR.

"What are you going for?" was the question put continually to us up until the very morning of our departure, and "Why did you go?" has greeted us on every hand since our return. Yes, we would have only about three-and-a-half weeks on shore; yes, most of us had been in England before and were already reasonably familiar with its attractions and beauties. Nor were we going under a "concern" in the ancient, serious use of that venerable word. That is to say, we went because we wanted to go and knew it would be worth while to us to go, rather than from any sense of "oughtness" in the matter. It came about in this way.

As many readers of THE FRIEND will remember, there was a visit to this country early last summer (1912) of a company of nine or ten young English Friends who went about to different meetings, week-end—and Quarterly Meeting—conferences, summer schools and the like; seeking to understand conditions in American Quakerdom, to draw the different elements of the Society on both sides of the water into a more closely-knit body and to make us feel that we were part of an organism very much alive still and with a great work yet before it to do. They delivered valuable addresses on various occasions, their truly unappointed service in our meetings will be remembered on account of its deep earnestness and undoubted power. But more than all this was the inspiration and contagious enthusiasm of their consecrated spirits as they moved among us, strengthening our sometimes wavering faith in the possibilities of our little Society and filling us with fresh courage. We found there was something they had which we needed, and we wanted to know them better and the conditions in England which had helped to produce such a band of souls all on fire with the love of God. We wanted to be with them longer, to visit them in their homes, to attend their meetings, to inspect their social, educational and philanthropic activities, and, more than that, to show them that we desired to be one with them as they had made themselves one with us. So that when it was suggested that a few young Friends from this country return with them to England for a short stay, some of us, who happened to be free to go, accepted with alacrity. And that is why we went.

The Washington Avenue pier, Philadelphia, on the morning of Seventh Month 27, 1912, presented a scene not far different from a meeting-house yard at Yearly Meeting time. There were twenty-one Friends to sail on the Merion that morning—seventeen of them in our party—and many others were there to see us off. It was a warm, beautiful day as we steamed slowly down the river and proved a forecast of the twelve that were to follow before we sighted land again—a time quiet and uneventful outwardly but knitting us very close together by the evening we reached Liverpool.

Our English Friends had been whisking about to conferences, etc., sometimes attending five or six meetings a day; just about as rapidly as trains permitted, and some of the rest of us likewise welcomed the opportunity to get "slept up" after a pretty strenuous early summer. So, as we sat strung out in a long line on the deck, we rejoiced at the good weather, the steadiness of the boat, and the fine drowsy sunshine which favored us most of the voyage. Our daily program was about as follows: Every morning before breakfast we would all gather in the little library, "and when we had closed the door," have a meeting for about half an hour. Sometimes two or three of the other passengers would feel like meeting with us, and these times were often occasions of real refreshment and deep worship—bringing us nearer to each other and to Him upon whom we were quietly waiting together.

Then came breakfast and our own devices until ten-thirty; when, usually up near the bow, we would come together again, to discuss earnestly (though not at all solemnly) conditions among Friends everywhere and the problems accompanying them. A summary of what was perhaps the most significant of all these discussions, that upon the real meaning of the term "Light within," appears in a recent number of the Friends' Fellowship Papers—the organ of the Young Friends' movement. One of the English Friends read one day his impressions upon visiting the battlefield at Gettysburg. This has also been published—in the pages of the Quarterly Examiner.

After lunch we would generally read, write, play with the extraordinarily interesting children on board, or toss each other in blankets, as the fancy struck us. In the evenings we often read aloud or recited poetry varying from the sublime to the ridiculous and back again. Upon one occasion various of the missionaries on board—there were those to represent China, Africa and India—interested us with accounts of those countries.

The second First-day out we advertised "a meeting for worship held after the manner of the Society of Friends," in the dining-saloon at three-thirty p. m., and, though I believe Anglican, Presbyterian and Roman Catholic services had already been held that day, some forty of the cabin passengers attended, making a total of nearly sixty. We felt the meeting to have been held "to the honor of Truth" and to have been a valuable opportunity for witnessing to the reality of a spiritual worship. Many seemed to think it had been good to be there, for which we were glad and thankful. Our twelveday voyage was a wonderful opportunity to start to do just what we had come to do—to learn to know each other in a real and thorough fashion.

Though we landed about nine o'clock at night, there were several on the wharf to meet us and our whole party was invited to be the guests at the railway hotel of those most cordial hosts, Isaac and Mary Snowden Braithwaite. We separated next morning—the American visitors going off by twos and threes in order to seem less like a descending swarm of locusts and to be able to accomplish certain particular visits upon which various ones of us had set our hearts.

Our time had been pretty carefully arranged for us before we got off the boat—so armed with our schedules (pronounced "shed-yul" over there), we departed in different directions. Some went directly up to London, Henry J. Cadbury and Carroll L. Brown visited relatives in Birmingham, and Ernest J. Dewees and myself went down into Somerset in the company of our friend Stephen Hobbouse, who had kindly invited us to visit him at his home not far from Wells. Passing through London we had the opportunity of visiting the beautiful new edifice dedicated to silent worship and open all day to all who feel like coming in from the busy streets to rest awhile.

Arrived at Castle Cary, we walked up from the station in the late afternoon light with Stephen Hobbouse's father, Henry Hobbouse, who was in Parliament for twenty years and is now President of the Somerset County Council. We found him a twentieth century Squire Bracebridge, who talked most interestingly to us of conditions in the county. With him we entered the two thousand acre estate, where are to be found I believe as beautiful gardens and as magnificent trees as anywhere in all England. I specially do I recall the perfect beeches, with their lower branches coming down to the grass, which are grouped about the old Georgian house. Parts of this house have indeed been standing for more than three centuries. Here we were more than kindly entertained in that comfortable English country fashion of which we had so often heard but of which we had before actually experienced nothing. Everything was as it should be from the way we found a four-bar unpacked when we went to bed (though we were to be there only one night), to the "bath" which the maid prepared in our room the next morning and the "hot-water dibble" on the table-board at breakfast. It was interesting to note that, though the oldest son had just returned from a trip across the Atlantic, yet in true British fashion, no more was made of it than if he had been visiting a night or two in the next county. We wandered about the gardens next morning, and took some photographs when the sun came out. Then, after lunch, in company with our host, we left Hadsden House and came on via Wells (where we stopped to see the very fine cathedral, containing the old Swiss clock believed to be the one mentioned in Dante's "Divine Comedy," and the Close, where the candidates for "holy orders" dwell) to the sleepy little town of Street, where we were scheduled to spend the week-end at the hospitable home of Roger and Sarah Bancroft Clark. Here Stephen Hobbouse (who, according to recent report, was recovering from scarlet fever in Constantinople) left us. We did not have time that evening to do anything more than get thoroughly acquainted with Bancroft, Priscilla and Hadwyn—aged ten, six and four respectively—but next morning, "in spite of the rain"—in England one would never get on if one weren't always doing things "in spite of the rain,"—we rode our wheels over to Glastonbury, to see the ruins of the wonderful old Abbey where King Arthur is believed to have been buried. In earlier days the sea came miles nearer than now and we were shown the hill where Joseph of Arimathea is said to have landed and where still grows a peculiar species of thorn-tree that flowers twice in the year—at the regular time and again at the time called "Christmas."

In the afternoon we enjoyed a picnic, which included practically all the Friends of Street and served to introduce us to the meeting membership. We found, of course, that all advances would have to be made by us, but people did not seem at all to object to being buttonholed by unknown foreigners and we had a most pleasant time.

Next morning (First-day) we attended our first English Adult School, held in a committee-room of the meeting-house. An earnest group of men had a live Bible class and then listened to an excellent address on Social Hygiene by a Friend from Bristol.

The regular meeting for worship followed shortly after—the most vivid memory of it being the children who came barefoot. We dined with the parents of our host Roger Clark, where we saw autograph letters of Abraham Lincoln and John Bright, and spent the afternoon wandering about in another glorious garden.

Visiting people we found very much different and very much better than the mere visiting of places, with which the traveler usually must needs content himself.

Towards tea-time Wilfrid Hinde (whom some will recall meeting when in this country a couple of years ago) called for me on his motor-cycle and took me riding comfortably behind him over to Yeovil, where a First-day evening meeting had been started some nine months previously, in a room rented for the purpose. There were about ten present besides the two English Friends who felt the burden of the meeting on their hearts. I was deeply interested in seeing what might be termed a Friends' meeting in the making. We found this to be one of the two prevalent types of meetings held largely for those not yet members of the Society, and, to the American visitor, at least, this was certainly the preferable type. There are two distinct parts to this sort of meeting. During the first, which is openly teaching in character, addresses are given on Friends' principles or some Friend's book is read from. At this meeting at Yeovil they were reading from John Woolman's Journal.

Then followed the meeting for worship, with nothing which could in any way mar our pure testimony to a waiting ministry. Those present, though few in number, seemed somehow to get down to the bed-rock of true worship and there was experienced there a degree of that "precious covering," so valued by the Early Friends, which I have not often felt exceeded even in long-established meetings where the congregation was virtually made up of Friends. Such occasions are encouraging in no ordinary manner to those who believe in the living truth of our principles and that there is a future work for our Society in manifesting this truth to all who are weary of surface-things.

After a highly interesting visit on Second-day morning to the Clark rug and shoe factories, we came on via Worcester—where we had a five-minute look at the cathedral—to Malvern Wells. Here at Wind's Point we were to spend nearly a week as the guests, at a large house-party, of the Hoylands, of Kingsmead, Selly Oak. The house is charmingly situated in an abandoned and transformed quarry, looking out upon the Worcestershire Beacon (one of the old signal-fire hills used at the time of the coming of the Armada, and on various other occasions). One can easily discern the traces of the old earthworks thrown up by the Britons when Caractacus was attacked by the Romans and the walks out over the Malvern Hills brought to mind vividly the author of "Piers the Plowman." Quite nearby was the turreted castle of that active temperance worker, Lady Henry Somerset. Here, playing tennis, or bicycling, or the lingered-over meal-times, or the readings aloud, etc., in the evenings, made us acquainted with the less serious side of the younger English Quakerism. And in the half-hour meetings before breakfast, which the English Friends seem to be always able to enter into naturally and without anything either forced or restrained, we came to know better and better their deeper side as well. It may seem unusual to chronicle this sort of doings, but we were then accomplishing, as thoroughly as at any time of our trip, just what we had come for. We were getting to know the very bone and fibre of the younger element of London Yearly Meeting, and beginning to realize why they are what they are. The house-party was fairly kaleidoscopic, inasmuch as people were arriving and departing almost daily, but that only afforded a wider circle of acquaintance. After our five glorious days at Malvern we journeyed up to London, to stay with Edwin and Emily Bigland. While quite as interesting to us, few incidents mark this part of our trip which would distinguish it from many another visit to London. On First-day we attended a most cheerful adult School down in Hoxton, one of the smallest slums in the world, and then the meeting at Bunhill Fields, where George Fox lies buried. The large and apparently flourishing meeting is composed almost wholly, we were told, of members who had come into the Society through the Adult Schools. One cannot fail to be impressed with the increasing place that this movement has in the life of the English workingman—a movement now of really national importance. This meeting at Bunhill Fields was to me only another demonstration of the fallibility of that frequently advanced doctrine that Friends' principles will appeal only to a "spiritual aristocracy" (as if any aristocracy could ever be deeply spiritual!). The minister sitting at the head of the meeting added and abstracted his "h's" in true Cockney fashion (referring once, if memory serve, to "Our 'eavenly' ome towards which we are hall 'astening'—or something nearly like it) but his ministry was sound and well-suited to those to whom he ministered, and I believe we had a good meeting. I felt to insist to them that the life of a meeting does not at all depend upon the speaking, but vice versa.

That afternoon we were invited to a meeting of the F. C. F. U. Committee—Friends' Christian Fellowship Union—which is an important manifestation of the Young Friends' awakening.

That evening we attended meeting at Hampstead. The "tube" station here, it may interest some to know, is the deepest in London and probably in the world—two hundred feet below the street. The meeting proved a very different type of "teaching meeting" from the one at Yeovil—and not to my mind a good type. Hymns, prepared address and meeting for worship were all jumbled together. It seemed to me that, if we were convinced of its rightness, our faith in our kind of public worship ought at least to hold over from morning until evening, and I felt it right to tell them so. In discussing these "threshing meetings" with several young Friends, I was glad to discover a well-defined sentiment of dissatisfaction with this type and in favor of the Yeovil method.

Space forbids the chronicling of all the pleasant gatherings we were continually being invited to, or of the many courtesies constantly being shown us during the whole of our stay.

American pilgrimages, both to Jordans and to Milton's cottage at Chalfont St. Giles, are of such frequent occurrence that I hesitate to dilate upon ours. An evening visit to the Hoxton slums was not quite so thoroughly in the beaten track. The late street-markets were interesting, the pushcarts being illumined by flaring gasoline torches. It was here, too, that we made the acquaintance of old Tom Avery and his "little tin parson"—a one-string fiddle, with a dinner-kettle as a sounding-box. He had another home-made fiddle, manufactured from a table-leg and afforded us quite a concert in the tiny old house his wife's parents had occupied decades ago.

From London we set our faces towards Birmingham and Woodbrooke, where a summer-school was in progress, intended principally for those "on the fringe" of the Society interested and concerned "attenders," who had not yet been received into membership. We could only spare a couple of days for our visit at Woodbrooke, but our trip would indeed have been incomplete had it failed to include a glimpse into the life of this institution, which, under Dr. Rendel Harris and Isaac and Mary Snowden Braithwaite, has had such a profound influence upon young Friends in England, Australia, in this country and elsewhere. We heard some good lectures—one on "Science and Religion," by Leonard Doncaster, another on the "Eschatological Savings of Jesus," by H. G. Wood—but these in each case were but single lectures out of a series, and we could not therefore appreciate them at their full worth.

Our visit to Woodbrooke happily included a trip to Bournville and the Cadbury cocoa works—one of the most memorable events of our whole trip. In this "factory in a garden" some five tons of chocolate (candies, cocoa, etc.) are manufactured per day by the 6,000 employes. Everything possible has been provided for the comfort and happiness of the men, women, boys and girls employed—from night-schools to swimming-pools, and from hockey-fields to dentists and summer excursions. Actuated by philanthropic motives, the firm were resolved to assume these tremendous expenditures for the benefit of those in their employ, but they find, we were told, that it has proved a paying proposition in spite of themselves—more work and better work resulting from the improved and satisfied conditions of the workers. We were shown over practically the whole factory. From my jotted note-book: "Beyond the interest of the processes and all that was being done for the employes, we were all struck by the radiance and contentment in the faces of the hundreds of girls we saw. Felt afterwards as if we had been to a good meeting."

Our next stopping-place was Fritchley. Carroll T. Brown had joined us at Birmingham. Here, lodged at the comfortable home of our ever-hospitable Friend, Lydia B. Sargent, we were glad to renew the warm bonds already existing between ourselves and these beloved Friends, many of whom, either by their visits among us or by their contributions to this paper, are known to readers of THE FRIEND. It was my fourth visit to Fritchley, which is, to my mind, in many ways, the ideal community of Friends—conservative in all our vital principles; genuinely simple in their lives and in their standards of living, yet thoroughly alive to all modern problems; of a quiet but profound and far-reaching influence throughout the whole country-side; with meetings that are held in the power of God, and in which the waiting is upon the Lord and not upon his ministers; with a gradually increasing "convinced" membership, recruited from the ranks of deeply interested attenders; above all, with a spirit of harmony and love and interest that seems somehow to dispel all gloomy clouds of discouragement and anxiety, and makes your heart leap for joy when you come among them.

In the morning meeting, First-day, Jesse Darbyshire spoke weightily. At three o'clock the three American visitors, by request, gave brief addresses, "which," so reads my note book, "were patiently listened to." A good afternoon meeting followed, and then supper at Thos. Davidson's.

Second-day, Eighth Month 20th, Ernest Dewees and I journeyed to York in a driving rain. After visiting the very large and imposing minister, we went through the Bootham School buildings—vacant, of course, in holiday-time. A good equipment and well laid-out grounds, but there was lacking the open country of Haverford, Westtown or Barnesville. We spent the night at Lancaster and reached Kendal Third-day-morning. Here, at the Stramongate School-house, we found gathered the group who had come together for the "Kendal Tramp."

To many the English "tramp" idea is already familiar, for those to whom it is not, an account of what we did will be more satisfactory than any attempted definition. At ten o'clock, or almost immediately after our arrival, we came together for a "devotional," the same sort of earnest little meeting we had had before breakfast on the Merion coming over. Following this came, in the Kendal meeting-house, the first of a series of lectures by William Wilson, a lecturer at Woodbrooke, on "Our Peace Testimony and Some of its Implications." Then shortly after lunch we set out in companies, by bicycle, for Grayrigg and Preston Patrick, both famous centres in the early days of our Society's history. It was my good fortune to go to Preston Patrick. On our way we visited two old farm-houses—the homes of John Audland and John Camm, two of the "first Publishers of Truth"—and also, later, the "steeple-house," where "G.iff." preached. We had stopped at all the cottages along the way and notified the country-folk that we purposed to hold a meeting in the meeting-house that evening. We found our tea at the meeting-house (date 1601) more than ordinarily welcome after our ride and sight-seeing. A brief "devotional" in an upper room followed, while the people were quietly gathering into the meeting-room proper. It was, I believe, a truly good meeting, well attended and well "got down under." To more than one it seemed a powerful demonstration of the truth expressed during the course of the meeting that "they that wait upon the Lord, shall renew their strength." We bade farewell to the people who had met with us and a pleasant ride home followed. The women slept in the Stramongate school-house, the men on cots in the gymnasium.

The next day (Fourth-day) we listened to William Wilson's second lecture. Took a fine walk in the rain, and were entertained at tea by Isaac and Mary Snowden Braithwaite at Ghyll Close. In the evening, we attended the regular midweek meeting in the Kendal meeting-house. Fifth-day morning there was no regular lecture, the Britisners having expressed a desire to hear from the Americans. I spoke upon the value of intervisitation among Friends, of which I was, by this time, certainly most thoroughly convinced. Henry J. Cadbury followed with some thoughts on the future work of our Society. We then all rode out to the Misslet meeting house (closed) where we had lunch and then divided as before, some going to Galdhouse, the rest of us to Patterdale, on Ullswater, a twenty-two mile ride across the Kirkstane Pass, and past the Brotherswater, to attend Penrith Monthly Meeting. The "first meeting" commenced as soon as we had arrived; it was very uneven and to some of us rather disappointing after our glorious experience at Preston Patrick. We rode back in the rain after tea, reaching Kendal a little after ten, quite ready for the soup and cocoa which awaited us.

Sixth-day, after the devotional meeting (which I would have no one believe differed in any way from a regular Friends' meeting), the tramps left for Ulverston and Swarthmore Hall. Our duties on this side of the ocean, however, forced Eric and Dewey, and myself, to take the London Express, when we could not have stayed on to the conclusion of the tramp (also, the most glorious part, according to all the veteran reports). If the program continued to be followed as consistently as it had been, a meeting for worship was held that evening at Ulverston, and on Seventh-day the concluding lecture was given and meetings held at Bingleyflat and Leavet. For First-day it was planned to revisit in small groups, as way opened, the various meetings in and near Kendal, and to conclude the day and the tramp with a Trampers' Meeting at the school-house.

We all felt grateful, I think, for the privilege of participating in this tramp experience. The idea seemed to work out most happily and to be entirely in accord with our principles. Would such a "tramp" be practicable over here, with our very different conditions and greater distances? was the query of the American visitors. I may here add that a beginning on this line was made up at Somerton, Penna., early in the Seventh Month.

Upon our arrival at Euston Station, London, we found Friends to welcome us and speed us on our way. C. T. Brown returning from a similar tramp at Leominster, joined us on the 9.50 from Waterloo to Southampton and Le Havre, and we left our faces were turned homeward. On the steamer we had ample time to think things over, put in order our impressions, and discuss our experiences. We had traveled three thousand miles to take dinner—to get acquainted with our English Friends, who now are friends as well, to see what they had to meet and how they went about it, to bring them interest and sympathy from Friends over here. As we sat in our steamer-chairs, looking out over the foggy ocean, we felt that we had accomplished our purpose and been well repaid.

POCONO LAKE, PA.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

THE HABIT OF DOING WITHOUT.

There are habits formed that are hard to break,
For their bands are green and stout;
But I have a habit I choose to keep—
The habit of doing without.

It cost me nothing, but wins me gold,
And is handy to have about;
For whatever I cannot well afford
I can always do without?

There are some who whine for the joys they lack;
But I raise a ringing shout
Over what I haven't, for it belongs
To the things that I do without.

Many long for fame, and are pained to lose
The praise of the motley rout,
But these don't trouble a mortal wight
The man who can do without.

There are costly tastes that are hard to please;
But I their pleasures flout,
For sweet content is a richer find
In the realm of Do Without.

The epicure may wine and dine,
And may nourish cramps and gout;
But the combination charms me not,
And I'd rather do without.

Do not pamper self, or a long regret
Will scourge like a Russian knot;
Better make a list of the luxuries—
And then learn to do without.

If you see a prize that you cannot gain,
Quickly turn your face about,
For there follows close the secret power
To be happy and do without.

Then do not lament for the things you've not—
It will do no good to pout,
But be doubly thankful for what you have
And for courage to do without.

It's a rare old gift to control one's self
And be free beyond all doubt;
So the habit to form and not to break
Is the habit of doing without.

—W. F. McCauley, Lit. D., in C. E. World.

THE HUMANITY OF LAFAYETTE.—The incident I am about to relate occurred in 1824 during Lafayette's last visit to this country. Forty years had elapsed since his promise to Washington to return as his guest. He was now nearly seventy years old, but his heart beat as warmly for his adopted country as in those earlier days when he had fought for its liberties.

A brilliant reception was under way. A slowly-moving line of stately guests passed by the Marquis, who greeted each with courtly grace. Presently there approached an old soldier clad in a worn Continental uniform. In his hand was an ancient musket, and across his shoulder was thrown a small blanket or rather a piece of blanket. On reaching the Marquis, the veteran drew himself up in the stiff fashion of the old-time drill and gave the military salute. As Lafayette made the return signal, tears started to his eyes. The tattered uniform, the ancient flintlock, the silver-haired soldier, even older than himself, recalled the dear past.

"Do you know me?" asked the soldier. Lafayette's manner had led him to think himself personally remembered.

"No, I cannot say that I do," was the frank reply.

"Do you remember the frosts and snows of Valley Forge?"

"I shall never forget them," answered Lafayette.

"One bitter night, General, you were going the rounds of Valley Forge. You came upon a sentry in thin clothing and without stockings. He was slowly freezing to death. You took his gun, saying, 'Go to my hut. There you will find stockings, a blanket and a fire. After warming yourself, bring the blanket to me. Meanwhile I will keep guard.'"

"The soldier obeyed. When he returned to his post, you, General Lafayette, cut the blanket in two. One half you kept; the other you presented to the sentry. Here, General, is one half of that blanket, for I am the sentry whose life you saved." FANNY E. COE, in Our Dumb Animals.

HOW IT WORKS.—It was a hot summer day. It was also dusty. One hundred and fifty men were riding from town to town in Central Kansas, in autos, on a trade extension tour. They were Kansas men—merchants, lawyers, doctors, editors, clerks, mechanics, bankers, farmers. From time to time they stopped at thirteen towns during the day's run.

No one in the crowd spoke of beer. No one had any beer. No one at the thirteen towns offered anyone any beer. At most of the towns there were great, deep, stone jars of iced lemonade on the sidewalks with bright tin cups hanging from the jars, and a sign up, "Welcome, Emporians." There was no whiskey, beer or wine in the crowd.

No one missed it. No one spoke of it. For these men, ranging from thirty to sixty, had lived in Kansas thirty years under absolute prohibition. Most of them had never been in a saloon in their home town in their lives. Booze was as remote from their consciousness as carbolic acid. Booze is not in the Kansas scheme of things. No one thinks of it. Its presence or absence is not considered by the Kansas mind.—W. A. WHITE, in the Emporia Gazette.

POCONO NOTES.

The autumn has charms which no other season can rival. The changing foliage and mellow lights leave a hallowed sense of beauty upon the mind and spirit. From the mountain ash, with its crimson fruit, to the fringed gentian, with its dainty petals, we are fascinated as we wander through the woods—undisturbed save by the whirr of the grouse as it rises with a startling rush from its feeding-ground or a sharp chattering protest from the red squirrel. The sense of space and quietness, together with a harmonious blending of color, has the effect of freeing the soul from its smallness.

Those who remain after the campers have mostly left the lake have all these glorious woods to themselves, and we find ourselves studying the individual trees, as their foliage varies from day to day, more carefully than at any time during the summer.

These denizens of the forest have an individual character and a companionship for any who will cultivate their acquaintance. Yet the crowning charm of our life in their midst is the cosmopolitan privilege of prostrating, and yet she was willing to give to us many of her personal life experiences in a delightfully spontaneous way. Forty years ago it was no easy matter to find five little Japanese girls whose parents were willing for them to come to America to study. Japanese boys and young men had come by the score, but not a Japanese woman until these five little girls arrived in the early seventies. The father of Umé Tsuda had been sent to the United States in 1872 to investigate war-ships and military equipment, but he returned to his native land quite convinced that education and not armaments was the greatest power in directing a country's welfare. He was also profoundly impressed when in Vienna the following year with the Bible Society's exhibit of the various translations of the Bible, so he became a Christian and earnest promoter of all educational work at home and was willing for his daughter of seven to come to America to be educated.

When these five little girls, all under ten years of age, arrived at San Francisco, a reception was given them, although they could not speak a word of English, and it was a serious question who would or could take care of them, as the Japanese gentleman who had befriended them on shipboard could not remain to interpret for them. For ten years Umé Tsuda went to school in Washington, D. C., while two of her companions were prepared for Vassar College in New England. One of these is the wife of Prince Oyama, and the other the wife of Admiral Uruu, and both of them are most loyal supporters of Umé Tsuda in her work for the higher education of Japanese girls. Two of the original party of five returned to Japan before they were grown up, while the other three acquired a fluent use of English and forgot their mother-tongue, which had to be acquired over again when they returned to Japan. At the age of seventeen Umé Tsuda went back to Tokio to become the secretary to Prince Ito and interpreter to his wife. She also assisted the Princess Ito in entertaining the foreign ladies of the diplomatic circle. Little do we know or suspect the struggles through which Japanese students pass when returning to their native land. A foreigner takes many years to learn the Japanese language, and seldom, if ever, acquires all the niceties of the Samurai etiquette, yet Umé Tsuda accomplished all of this in a short time. She was placed in the Peresses School for girls which the Empress of Japan opened in 1886. She occupied this post, with some interruption, for fourteen years. Conscious of the need of a broader and more complete education she returned to America and spent three years at Bryn Mawr College, where she made a record for herself in English history and science. She also raised, by her own efforts, a competitive scholarship for Japanese girls to study in America—which has been most worthily filled by a succession of students at Bryn Mawr—two or three of whom have been invaluable helpers to Umé Tsuda and one of them is the first native Y. W. C. A. secretary in Tokio.

As the Japanese Governmental educational system does not offer to women any advanced English courses, above those found in the high schools, Umé Tsuda felt it to be her duty to provide a four-year course in English in order to prepare English-speaking teachers for those schools. Think for a moment what this involves and what it has meant to the one hundred and forty odd graduates by expanding their lives. The narrow environment many of these have had at home has been supplemented by the best Christian literature of the West. Sixty-three of these graduates are now employed in the Government middle and high schools, both for boys and girls, from one end of Japan to the other. They are taken upon certificate from Umé Tsuda's school.

The history of this institution during the past twelve years is far more interesting and infinitely more useful than many works of fiction. Started in her own house with fifteen students enrolled in 1900, she now has an attendance of one hundred and fifty, sixty of whom occupy two dormitories within the school enclosure. These dormitories are self-supporting, although the fees are very small. The graduates cleared the land upon which this school is built from debt by raising $3000 within a year or two past—a remarkable undertaking, considering all the conditions imposed by the late war and the poverty of most of the girls. They are admitted only after graduating from the Government or Mission Schools and upon a rigid examination. When the writer visited this school in 1905 he was much impressed by the personnel of the teaching staff and the atmosphere pervading every department. Umé Tsuda, always alive to the improvement of her pupils, had invited a company of more than a hundred, half of whom were foreigners, to listen to George Konnan tell of his experiences in Russia. On another occasion the Mayor of Tokio and Dr. Inazo Nitobe addressed the students in Japanese.

The course of study includes Chinese and Japanese literature, history, to tide over the winter, which has resulted in large exportation of cattle to the United States.

A recent despatch from Washington, D. C., says: "School children who are victims of tuberculosis will not be permitted to attend the same schools as healthy children in the District of Columbia in the future. They must have special classes and be taught separately. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia to-day approved an order of the Board of Health to this effect and tests soon will be made of all public school children. Those found to have tuberculosis will be aided in every way possible toward recovery."

President Wilson has lately signed a new tariff act. It is said to carry an average duty of twenty-six per cent. compared with about forty per cent. under the Payne law, which it supersedes, and nearly forty per cent. under the Wilson bill enacted during Cleveland's administration. No other tariff law since the Civil War has cut protective duties to so low a point. No other tariff bill since then has been so openly and so avowedly a measure solely for revenue and not for protection. It is also said that it is the first law of its kind placed on the statute books by the Democratic party in nearly twenty years.

A new State law in Massachusetts forbids the employment of children under fourteen years in work-shops, and limits the hours of those under sixteen to "not more than eight hours a day or forty-eight hours a week."

It is claimed by the National Negro Business League that Negroes in the United States have in fifty years of freedom accumulated property valued at $700,000,000, including 20,000,000 acres of land. The League also claims that the Negro population is now 10,000,000.

It is stated that lately the new giant steamship Imperator arrived at New York with the largest number of passengers ever brought into any port by any ship at one time. There were 3603 passengers. Including the crew, 4981 persons were on board.

Parents do not realize the serious nature of whooping cough, says Director Neff. He places special emphasis on the guarding of infants from this disease. The longer the disease can be put off the less likely it is to endanger life, he says. In the past ten years there has been an average of 1200 cases of this disease each year in this city averaging about 200 deaths. There has been an appreciable decrease this year in both the number of cases and the number of deaths. To date 874 cases and sixty-four deaths have been reported, as against 1188 cases and ninety-four deaths during the same period last year. All colds should be regarded with suspicion, when there is whooping cough in the neighborhood, warns Director Neff. Separate the sick child from the other children and call in the physician at once, he admonishes.

The Department of Labor has issued the figures regarding the "cost of living," as it was lately. The average prices of food and other articles commonly used by workmen were higher, on Sixth Month 15, than ever before, except in Eleventh Month, 1912, when average prices were a shade higher. Prices of these things last Sixth Month were 59.2 per cent. higher than the average prices of the same things through the ten-year period from 1890 to 1899 inclusive.

It is stated that New York postal authorities are experimenting with an electric carrier system that may be adopted for the quicker transmission of mails between the larger cities, such as this and Philadelphia, and their substations.

Americans are said to be interested in an effort to re-establish the unfluence of Jews in Palestine. A delegate to the Eleventh Zionist Congress lately held in Vienna has said that the Zionist Congress in Vienna brought out the fact that the Jewish interests in Palestine are increasing, and that the time is not distant when they will own and control the greater portion of it. In the last two years the Jews have acquired 7 per cent. of the entire area of Palestine. Through the efforts of an American, Simon Goldman, from St. Louis, 30,000 acres of land has been purchased in Palestine, and is being tilled by immigrants from many lands.

It is said that American mines are now producing more radium-bearing ores than the mines of the rest of the world combined. American Government scientists are convinced that, while all the radium put on the market in recent years has been produced in Europe, a large proportion of it has been obtained from ore which came from American mines. It is estimated here that there is now in existence about 40 grams of radium in the whole world. It is worth from $60,000 to $80,000 a gram, according to whether bought in large or small quantities. This would make its value about $2,250,000 an ounce.

FOREIGN.—A despatch from Berlin of the 29th ult. says: "The Association for the Reduction of the Number of Railway Accidents is the title of a new organization just launched in Germany. The founders are former railway employees and the object is to bring about improvement of signaling and safety apparatus and encourage inventors by financial support to exert themselves in that direction. The members of the association may be either men or women, and contribute as annual dues any amount they can afford. Branch societies are to be established abroad for interchange of information and ideas."

It has been stated by Dr. Len S. Rowe, who has recently returned from Panama, that "the Panama Canal is an unrequished fact. Within a comparatively few days the waters of Lake Gatun will enter the Colón-Cut, and all that now remains to be done is to place the finishing touches on this great world enterprise. All the problems have been solved. To us, in the United States, it means that the greatest public undertaking in the history of the world, involving the expenditure of nearly four hundred millions of dollars, has been carried to a successful conclusion by the Government of the United States, and that throughout the conduct of this work the highest standards of integrity, efficiency and economy have been maintained. The entire civilized world has lavished its appreciation and admiration on the energy and ability shown in grappling with the great problems of engineering and sanitation."

It is stated that Ireland's census shows an increase in population for the first time in 70 years. The new land laws are making it much easier for the people; therefore there is less emigration.

Severe fighting, with much loss of life, has recently taken place in Mexico between the Federals and others.

NOTICES.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. Sixteenth Street, Phila., will be open from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from 2 to 5 P. M.—Sundays from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. only.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.—The stage will meet at Westtown Station, trains leaving Broad Street (Penna. R. R.) Phila. at 6.32, 8.21 A. M., 2.48 and 4.30 P. M.; other trains will be met on request. Stage fare twenty-five cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, address West Chester Bell Telephone, 114A.

WM. B. HARVEY,

Superintendent.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, Philadelphia.—It has been the custom of Friends' Library to send cases of books to be circulated in neighborhoods where there is no access to a regular Library. If any one desires such a collection of books for use in the community in which they live, please write to the Librarian.

LINDA A. MOORE,

Librarian.

The visitation and religious service committee of Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting has arranged for the holding of a Public Meeting for Divine Worship to be held on First-day afternoon, the 12th inst., at 2.30 o'clock, in the Meeting-house at Arney's Mount (Lower Springfield), about five miles east of Mount Holly, N. J. Those feeling a desire to attend this meeting, and having no means of conveyance, please communicate with William E. Darnell, Moorestown, N. J.

WANTED.—At once, a suitable Friend as an Assistant to the Superintendent of the Indian School at Tusnesasa. One who may favorably consider succeeding him next spring.

All who wish to attend Iowa Yearly Meeting, to be held this year near Paulina, Iowa, are hereby informed that all trains will be met at Paulina on the C. & N. W. R. R. and at Gaza on the H. C. R. R. after the 13th inst. Any one wishing to come sooner will please inform David L. Peckham, or Walter Hampton or Joseph Henderson, Paulina, Iowa.

MARRIED.—At Friends' Meeting-house, Plainfield, Ind., on Fourth-day, Ninth Month 24, 1913, JESSE J. THOMASSON, son of Thomas and Mary E. Thomasson of Springville, Iowa, to SIXA ALTHEA THOMAS, daughter of David and Lydia B. Thomas, of Plainfield, Indiana.

DIED.—At her home in Philadelphia, on the twenty-seventh of Eighth Month, 1913, MARY KITE, daughter of the late Dr. John L. and M. C. L. Kite, in the seventy-sixth year of her age, a member of New Garden Monthly Meeting, Ohio.

Redlands--California

Wissahickon Inn

A comfortable family hotel
in the residence section of beautiful Redlands.

SEND FOR FOLDERS & RATES

School Children's EYES Tested

We test children's eyes and furnish glasses which remove all strain.

Satisfaction Guaranteed
C. A. LONGSTRETH
Specialist in Eye Testing
222 Market Street Philadelphia, Pa.

W. B. WEAVER
Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5th ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN
TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT
OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL
ACCOMMODATIONS FOR
FUNERALS.

BELL 'PHONE. ESTABLISHED 1880.

JOS. B. SCATTERGOOD
HOUSE, SIGN AND DECORATIVE
PAINTING

Orders Solicited Bell 'Phone

275 S. FOURTH STREET

NO MATTER

WHAT YOUR BUSINESS IS, IT NEEDS GOOD PRINTING TO PROPERLY REPRESENT IT.

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

1010 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT
made from the entire whole grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.

10th & Susquehanna Aves., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

ELKINS MORRIS & CO.BANKERS

MEMBERS OF
NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA
STOCK EXCHANGES

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

THE PRESENT LOW PRICES OF BONDS OFFER
UNUSUAL OPPORTUNITIES FOR INVESTORS. WE RECOMMEND THE PURCHASE OF HIGH GRADE BONDS.

WE SHALL BE GLAD TO SUBMIT A LIST ON REQUEST

— REPRESENTATIVES: —

WM. E. CADBURY PAUL W. BROWN JAMES P. MAGILL

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

ROOMS FOR RENT. A PLEASANT SECOND story corner room for two people with private family.
Six minutes from Lansdowne Station.

Address "H", Care of THE FRIEND.

WANTED—ONE OR TWO THOROUGHLY REliable and competent men to take on halves a twohundred acre dairy farm in Chester Co., Pa. Two sets of buildings.

SAMUEL FORSYTHE, Chad's Ford, Pa.

A FRIEND RESIDING ABOUT TWO SQUARES above Market and 40th Streets, has two pleasant third-story rooms for rent, furnished; bath-room on second floor. Private family.

Apply to C.,

Office of THE FRIEND.

WM. H. PILE'S SONSBOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

POCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevation 1800 feet, commanding extensive
mountain and valley scenery. Address

J. W. HURLEY, Manager,
POCONO MANOR, PA.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16th & RACE STREETS

Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals

BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 6848

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER

Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

(Marcellus Balderston)

802 SPRING GARDEN ST. 516 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL 'PHONE PHILADELPHIA

From Bondage to Freedom, by Isabel Shipley, 2nd Edition, 2 cts
Northfield Symposium, 1905 What 16 young Friends thought
when they were 8 years younger, 2cts.
Christ in all the Scriptures, by A. M. Huggins 60 cts.
Haydock's Testimony 50 cts. } by L. C. Wood
For a Free Concurrence $1.00

ALL POSTPAID

J. B. WOOD, PINE POINT PARK, CAMDEN, N. J.

Plant Paeonies and GermanIris at this season of the yearPaeonies are as perfect in form and as varied in color as Roses.German Iris come in many shades, grow easily and flower abundantly.Our illustrated catalog, that is mailed for the asking, describes a long list of each of these and almost 2000
other varieties of Perennials, Trees, Shrubs and Vines for lawn planting.THE WM. H. MOON CO.

NURSERYMEN

Room H, Stephen Girard Bldg.

Nurseries at Morrisville, Pa.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL.

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

Subscribers patronizing our advertisers will assist THE FRIEND, especially by mentioning our paper in correspondence.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 16, 1913.

No. 16.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FOSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to
EDWIN P. SELLEW or THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

A LIVING REMNANT.

Traditionalism has never saved a soul, but traditionalism if allowed its proper place and not suffered to usurp the place of something better is an important factor that we must always reckon with. And what is it? The unwritten, it may be the unauthorized customs of a community or a sect that have so implanted themselves deep in the very fibre that they have become an essential element of life.

Traditionalism exists in all of us, and it is well it does. Where it is the most prominent factor of our natures it is unfortunate, where, however, it has a subordinate place, and simply seasons what else is there, it may be as the very salt that keeps the life and freshness, but never begets it.

The Friend of to-day, wherever he be, is an inheritor, for there have come to him traditions through the generations that he cannot break away from. There is no call made upon him to break from them. If he is sincere in adopting them the world will know it about as soon as he knows it himself; if he is not sincere the chances are that he will be the only one seriously fooled thereby.

Quakerism is not a creed, as we have often heard, but it is a life. Creed may be wrapped about by traditionalism, but where there is life there must be expansion and growth.

All advances that have been made, both by individuals and groups, have had their origin in individual minds reacting on the inheritance they have received; hence the two types of mind and of men about us; one allows the cloak to assume more importance than the thing it clothes, the other fosters the life that uses the cloak simply as an adjunct.

In a recent conversation language like this was used, "A living remnant must be preserved;" had the emphasis been placed upon living, there would have been little demand for the rest of the clause, for where there is life there will be something, and whether it is the remnant or the whole piece need not concern us; as the language alluded to was used it had reference doubtless to a religious concern on the part of the speaker, that though innovations from this quarter and from that were apparent in the Christian church, unless there was life above the forms, the innovations could not advance the growth but would retard it.

The Christian church, the world over, has always been in this truest sense a living remnant; those of every religious sect who have been filled with the spirit of God and who have followed closely the revelations of His will have been "the living remnant," because to be living they must have life. Where forms and figures are allowed to stand for substance, there they usurp the place and the remnant may be devoid of life. With some—and too often is this the case—"the living remnant" is prominent only because it is a remnant, and no blessing has been pronounced upon this condition; it is the life exercised under Divine direction that calls the blessing forth.

We can all yield assent to this position, and yet when we come to apply it we fail in our judgment. Often the one who pleads for the living remnant, if not in direct words certainly by implication, considers himself a part of it and measures its boundaries by a very human measuring stick; too often also, as just hinted, he lays far more stress on the remnant than he does on the life. We are slow to claim for ourselves an attainment in the Christian life, it is a matter in which we do well to allow others to judge us, but we are not so willing to yield our place in the other particular, there is manifest what may savor a little of human pride that the smallness of our numbers makes the remnant feature of it so much more conspicuous.

We read somewhere in George Fox's Journal of a trial he underwent before two magistrates. He had many such trials, but this particular one seems to be responsible for a long train of consequences. He had claimed what we of to-day assert without a thought of contradiction, that preaching and forms and sacrifices do not sanctify, but that the fear of God and "to tremble at the word of the Lord" were the conditions of our acceptance by Him. The justice turned the remark back upon him, and a new word had come into the language. From that time to this the "living remnant" of Quakers have been the men and women like the founder and his co-workers, with hands never folded, with sandals always on, with ears ever alert to catch the Master's message and with hearts responsive to the call. These have had the life. They have not unduly mourned over the past, they have been cheerful in the present and have had hope for the future. They have known as much as others of the trials and griefs of life, they have read of the sad defections that history chronicles, but through it all they have been men and women whose lives have shed a radiance of cheer about them. There is no question as to what they emphasized. They abounded in Life.

We are often referred in the Old Testament to the remnant preserved, but nowhere were they preserved because they were the remnant, that was a mere incident of the preservation. They were granted the victory because God was on their side, and we do well under the New Dispensation to recognize that it is His power in all our struggles, just as it was in those battles of old that will win out for us, the fewness of numbers makes the victory only that much more remarkable, but in no wise precludes the idea that the victory goes to the few rather than to the many.

D. H. F.

EXTRACTS FROM DIARIES AND LETTERS OF RICHARD B. BROCKBANK.

(Continued from page 173.)

Oakfield Cottage, 8-9-81.—Wedding of Charles W. White and K. Hodge. We arrived at Glasgow from the Star Hotel, Stirling, yesterday morning, little after ten, and made our way to the meeting-house. They had kindly included me in the wedding-party, and I had no choice but go with them, and dined there. I brought away, by my partner, Caroline White's advice, my menu-card for dinner, which I enclose for thy edification. There were, I should think, about thirty for dinner. The meeting was a very nice one, they said their says very nicely, and several Friends appeared, E. W. in supplication before and H. Pumphrey after. F. Mackie then spoke, and Cousin Mary and Jane Miller and Edwin Pumphrey. I should think one hundred present in all, and a very quiet meeting. Robert Smeal read the certificate and William attended to the signing. I left Ardgarton about 4.30 and in response to a note from Edith M. Cruikshank asking me to tea and to join the Mackies and go with them to Greenock, where we had a public meeting arranged for at eight o'clock. We went and the first thing we saw was a placard on the wall with our names very conspicuously appointing a Meeting at the lesser Temperance Hall. We had only a small number, say about twenty, but an interesting meeting. A man who read his Bible in the first gathering, and who tried to turn to the texts as I quoted them after I began to speak, finally had to close his book. After we had both spoken and I had said a few words in supplication, when the meeting was all silent, he got up and prayed to God to bless what had been said so plainly in testimony to the Truth. I cannot give his words, but after meeting, he was speaking to a serious old gentleman, formerly a captain, now laboring amongst the seamen, and telling him that this was far better than all talk about Temperance, acknowledging the light and grace of God which can teach us to live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world, etc. He seemed very earnest and full of gratitude for the meeting and the Presence felt. The Captain was a solid man and seemed pleased with the meeting.

Narn, 10-6-81.—We had a good meeting at Forres, near one hundred I should think. Several spoke to us as we came out, and seemed grateful that the meeting had been held. It was in the Mechanic's Hall or Institute. The bell-man or drummer went around twice and we filled up and handed out a large number of notices.

The silent portions which were longer than often were very solemn. Two men stayed and talked to me a little and seemed very much interested and intelligent and said if we came oftener a number would gather to us. We told them how much we desired them to gather to our Master. It seems as though there is a people preparing in these parts to receive the Truth, who have in some measure lost faith in man and are seeking deeper, beyond anything man can do for them. I trust Friends may be raised up to bear a living testimony to the Truth, and fill the place intended for them.

We do not feel any concern to go further than this place, and hope to set out on our return to-morrow. We have engaged the Public Hall here for to-night. I shall send thee a paper which has a short notice of our Fochabers meeting. It is remarkable how the people are dissatisfied with the P. B.'s; it is not pleasant to be taken in any way for them, but the notice evidently infers that we are very different. The people are getting to understand a little about us, and we hope an open door left for further labor.

The meeting to evening was cheering to us, being as solid and serious as any Friends' meeting.

We went to the Hydrographic, and found that Cousin S. B. S. had left three days ago, so we left notices there. It is a beautiful, knolly, undulating, fertile country, and quite enjoyable to stay at. I should think a great many fine walks.

We saw a fine flat stone, about eighteen feet high and two and a-half feet wide and one foot thick, figured, and a cross on one side raised on the stone.

Oakfield Cottage, 10-9-81.—The meeting at Motherwell was a famous one, the room was full. It is said to hold three hundred, and as many were standing, and the seats, of which there were not quite enough, were all full. An intelligent, serious company, almost entirely workingmen. A full opportunity for clearing our minds, and I felt it a favored meeting. Our Friends there were well pleased, and felt that it was a time that would be much remembered and spoken about. I do trust they may be preserved by the very power of God for that alone can enable them to stand.

Yesterday I was at the Smeals, R. and M., they desired their love to thee. M. S. said that a dear Friend, her mother's sister, who died when she was ninety-three, was in a quiet time before her death enabled to see a people gathered to Friends in the north. She asked her sister if she remembered a stone on the top of a hill on the way they used to go to Old Meldrim Meeting, and she said she did. She said she saw Friends going past that way to gather a people in the North beyond there. Not in my time or in the next generation, but in the one after. M. S. said that the gathering of Thos. D. and Geo. S. and Thos. Kennedy at Nish seemed the only realization so far, but our mission to that district had been very interesting to her in remembering about this. Dear woman, she is really full of hope and faith and love.

Oakfield Cottage, 12-6-81.—I went by the 1.10 train to Busby station, and walked two and a half miles to Kiltock Side and found it a delightfully undulating country, grassy and well wooded, and the houses most respectable. Patrick Graham and his wife I found a deeply interesting couple, really tired of the deadness and formality of the way in which they had been brought up, and glad and thankful that they had been led at Harrogate to sit down with Friends. They had found a rest, peace, and enjoyment in the silent waiting upon God which they had been strangers to in their own places. They were most kind to me, and though I had gone to return soon they kept me to tea and drove me to the station at 8.40, and I got home here about 9.40.

They had an aunt, a most pious woman, who had withdrawn from the Established Church and joined the P. B.'s some years ago. She died not long ago, and had regretted very much ever having joined them. They have seen fully by their lives without knowing their doctrines how far wrong they are. The lady had been at some of Moody and Sankey's meetings in Glasgow years ago, and had not found what did her any good there. So that I conclude that the Lord himself has been preparing their hearts with that true hunger and thirst which He Himself and his own precious Truth alone can satisfy.

They are seven miles from Glasgow, and hesitate to come in so far driving to meeting on a First-day, but intend coming in to the Fourth-day meeting. I trust they may be enabled to wait on the Lord at home as well, as I am convinced that is the great need in Scotland, as elsewhere, a ceasing from man.

I tremble for them coming into G. meeting for whilst there are some who love the Truth and are living in humble exercise before the Lord, there is a large amount of that which is most trying. Some see that others go too far in the world's ways and pleasures, and they go a certain length themselves. My exercise yesterday morning was great that I should be preserved from harming any. Cousin M. spoke some little time on that Grace whereinto we have entered through the Blood—and entered into with confidence.

I found relief in saying that there is a faith which overcomes the world, and there is a faith which is overcome by the world—pointing out that the former stands in the Power of God, but the latter in the wisdom of man—that this latter despises the cross of Christ by which Paul was crucified to the world and the world to him, as foolishness, and yet claims to take hold on salvation in its own time, and will, and claims to have liberty to go with the world in its pleasures, fashions, customs and worships, and is led captive by its love and its friendships which are entirely against God, etc. But the other is that faith which is in Him who himself overcame, and whose disciples are to take up the cross and deny themselves and follow Him, etc.

It was a solemn exercise and opportunity, and I never felt greater need of the preserving power, and I believe it was in mercy granted. I had some evidence afterwards of the comfort the meeting had been to the lowly exercised ones, and as yet have had no expression of disapproval from the more superficial professors.

I went to R. and M. Smeal's to dine, and they were most kind and interested in hearing of the straggled ones whom I had been looking up.

Aberdeen, 30-01-'81.—We have been very busy this morning, F. Mackie and I went to call on Alexander Will, and we met on the street Theodore West from Darlington, who had last seen F. M. in Sydney. He had a Friend's coat on, so I spoke and then it was all right.

Then we caught Robert Gray ascending the steps on to the same tram car as we were going forward with. He went on with us and was most capital company, and showed F. M. where Thomas Kennedy's mother lived, and we went and called on her. Then we called on Mary Wilson and daughter in the Gallowgate, and went to see the old meeting-house and Alexander Jaffray's house, and returned to our lodgings. We are now going to Dundee. It appears the Pumphreys have been here, and are gone again, so that we have been kept out of their way. The cab is soon come to the door, I think.

Morland, 5-11-'84.—We got nicely to Appleby and were kindly entertained to a cup of tea, etc., at Thos. Carrick's, who had taken a great deal of pains to have full notice given of the meeting.

It was held in the Old Moot Hall. When it was asked for, the mayor said, "Certainly, let them have it free" and added that "it was a long time since a Quaker had been in it, and probably those that had been there had been sent to prison."

There were supposed to be about 200 there and a very good solid relieving time we had, a precious feeling of freedom and life was felt to the presence of Him who condescends to our low estate and enables us to give up to do his will. I felt free and peaceful after meeting, which was very comforting.

Ulverston, 22-11-'85.—We then went down to Barrow and called on a few Friends whom we expect to see here to-day—they are truly "a berry here and there on the outmost branches." I got an order for a new Barclay's Apology from one and he would see if others wanted, so that I might get them a parcel sent at once. There does need a fresh conviction here if the work is ever to take its right position and bear a clear testimony to the Truth.

London, 30-1-'05.—It has been a great comfort to me being at Maidstone—there is here a true work of the Lord going on among a seeking people. They know the joyful sound and have their spiritual senses exercised to discern between what is of the Lord and what is not. I was much refreshed by them and the evidence of the Lord's presence and power among them. They wanted to keep me, but I am thankful and grateful in being able to believe that they are in better hands than mine, which will keep them if they abide in Him.

Rochester is about eight miles off, and some previously visited ones came over from there.

(To be continued.)

COUNTING Life a precious privilege,
Casting out all thought of Care,
Sowing seeds of Love and Kindness—
Scattering Sunshine everywhere.

Climbing, climbing, ever climbing,
Up the mount of Better Things,
Never minding for a moment
Worry's flouts or Trouble's flings.

Keeping watch upon the Master,
Treading sometimes where He trod,
Helping here and there a little,
In the World-march up to God.

—G. W. HENDRICKS.

THE FELLOWSHIP OF SUFFERING.

Oh, sorely tried and troubled one,
With anxious fears distressed,
Grieve not thy griefs on God's dear Son,
And He will give thee rest.

He trod the paths thy feet do tread,
Bore sorrows like thine own;
His soul was filled with awful dread,
By all but Him unknown.

So, "touched with thy infirmities,"
He will can give thee aid;
In danger, or in darkness, then,
Faint not, nor be afraid.

Dost have thy sad Gethsemane,
Whence issue sobs and moans?
Remember Christ in agony,
His sweat and tears and groans,

And say, like Him, "This cup of gall,
O Father, would I shun—
But if Thou bid'st, I'll drink it all;
And pray, 'Thy will be done.'"

Then, though thine eyes drop many a tear,
Let this thy soul sustain:
That "they who suffer with Him here
With Him above shall reign."

—RACHEL Q. BUTTS.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

AN ENGLISH QUARTERLY MEETING.

WM. C. ALLEN.

Yorkshire Quarterly Meeting held at Hull was the most interesting occasion to its American visitors. At eleven A. M. on Seventh-day the Meeting for Worship promptly gathered and was immediately introduced into a living silence. In due course several impressive vocal offerings were made, and the period concluded with prayer and a sense of the Divine presence. The "devotional meeting," or, as we would call it, "meeting for worship," being over the business session was entered into. Its work was facilitated by the alertness of Arthur Rowntree, the clerk. He seemed to know just how much liberty to give to each member, and just when to proceed to new business before the old dragged. The late Yearly Meeting's recommendations were disposed of and reports received from committees in charge of peace work.

Our English Friends are wise, inasmuch as they do not hold a session so long, either of Quarterly or Monthly Meetings, as to become mentally or physically too exhausted to properly perform the Lord's work. They always rest in time, and air out their meeting-house, if only for half an hour, as far as I have ever seen, and so are able to give of their best to the matters claiming their attention. Thus, our first session was over in good time, when all hands trooped across to a large hall nearby, where long tables awaited us, loaded with good things. It was much like a Quarterly Meeting luncheon near Philadelphia, except that instead of ice cream, there was a bountiful dessert of delectable pies, rich puddings, and jellies. From the period of silent thanks, at the start, to the conclusion it was a love-feast, such as we so often delightfully know near home.

The afternoon was devoted to rest or sight-seeing until four-thirty P. M. We then took up the subject of "Preparation for Meetings for Worship." As Philadelphia Friends have a routine and often set a time for some particular business, such as Queries or reports that lead to discussion, so do English Friends, except that they print in a programme what will come before their Quarterly Meetings. The writer has seldom been at a more reverent consideration of these important matters than at Hull. It was felt and strongly presented that the old-type of meetings for Worship were the "power-houses" where was developed, and from whence was to be distributed, the spiritual force that should tend to invigorate and keep alive the body. The need of prayerfully bearing approaching meetings on our minds, and of reverently coming to them, was clearly indicated. More than one earnest appeal to those present to thus help their particular congregations was made, and these addresses were often followed by deep silence, and with a sense of the Divine presence in our midst. After a session of one hour adjournment ensued.

Tea, so dear to the hearts of our English cousins, followed. After forty-five minutes we again gathered to consider the international peace question, and the part Friends should take in the ministry of reconciliation between nations. This continued for about one hour and a half. It was a remarkably tender season. The meeting was plunged into profound feeling on behalf of some lads, the sons of Friends in Australasia, and their parents. Some of those who were thus suffering had but a few years before left Yorkshire for those Colonies, hoping in an environment of liberty to better their condition. Instead, the Defence Law had been rigorously applied against Friends, and efforts made by the authorities "to break the wills" of the children, who, for conscience' sake, were refusing to attend drill and military instruction. These innocent lads were being taken from their parents' care, placed in barracks or jails, and a deplorable stigma attached forever to their names as a result.

The conviction was expressed, by some of the young Friends present, that a testing time is before English Friends in the same direction. Lord Roberts and other military men of England are endeavoring to introduce conscription. The Boys' Scouts of England seems associated with the movement, and several instances were given to indicate this. Sober, earnest and strong appeals were made that Friends stand firm in the approaching danger, and that they everywhere protest against the sin of war and militarism. To see these keen young business men thus think and seriously speak of anticipated suffering, and in connection with it encourage one another to hold fast to the cause of Christ, was a new experience to me. It carried me back to the conditions associated with the early days of our Society when such scenes were all too frequently enacted.

We were told that the Meeting for Worship the following morning (First-day) was much larger than usual at Hull. It was, to use the good old Friendly term, a favored season. A full consecration, and loyal daily service, were emphasized. It concluded with prayer and thanksgiving.

At six-thirty p. m. was held the last Meeting for Worship. Evidently a good many people, not Friends, were present. It opened with a reverent waiting upon God, when the Friends who sat at the head of the meeting gave out a hymn, which was sung standing. The hour that followed was an occasion of spiritual uplift. When the meeting was solemnly drawing to a close, the same minister again proposed a hymn, and the tones of an organ greeted the ears of the writer. The organ was a mite of a thing that had been unobserved by us over at one end of the gallery. The congregation, which had so unfeignedly rejoiced in the old-time method of worship among Friends, now for a few minutes at the last, joined in the music. My feeling was that the hymns did not tend to the settlement or strength of the meeting. Then we separated.

At eight o'clock the same evening the house was filled to overflowing at a public meeting in the interest of "The Claims of the Soldier on the Mount as Against Modern Militarism." This was undoubtedly a most useful gathering. The sin of disbelieving Christ's teaching regarding love, and the evil results of ordain were triumphantly placed before the people by J. H. Mideley, Ericson Andrew, and Joshua Rowntree. The Christian Church was vigorously arraigned for its complicity in the unhappy fruits of militarism. These Friends are doing a splendid work in publicly opposing one of the greatest causes of human suffering and a reproach on the religion of Jesus.

Thus concluded Yorkshire Quarterly Meeting. It was a helpful time. I was impressed with how the great dual work of Christ—his operation in the heart through the medium of the Holy Spirit, and his atonement on behalf of mankind—was believed in, preached and held in an even balance. We were impressed with the vitality of the seasons of silent waiting and those of vocal ministry. Time after time we were brought to the feet of God. We had very much in common with them.

A kindly welcome was accorded the strangers within their gates. Numerous requests, which could not be answered, were made that we visit Friends, or their meetings, in Yorkshire. The two strenuous days were followed by one of generous hospitality and then we left Hull, glad that our lot had been cast with these dear brethren of the same household of faith as ourselves.

Reprinted from The Quarterly Examiner, Tenth Month, 1912.

THE CHILDREN OF THE REVIVAL.

All the world has heard of the remarkable outburst of religious fervor known as the Welsh Revival which took place some eight years ago. But there is an idea abroad that it was a mere flash in the pan, a spasm of emotion, easily explained by reference to the Celtic temperament.

Four journeys this year to many parts of South Wales have led me to a very different conclusion. The mere effervescence may be over, but solid results remain. It is painfully true that many thousands who seemed Divinely changed a few years ago have returned to their former manner of life, now that the Revival is fast becoming a mere beautiful memory so far as its enthusiasm is concerned. But many more thousands are living witnesses to the depth and reality of a Divine work.

It is of these latter that I wish to write.

Those who trace back the beginning of the Godward turn in their spiritual history to the period of religious intensity eight years ago are known in Wales as "the children of the Revival." They are fast developing into a distinct type of Christian character, easily marked off from the rest of the population. You come across them almost everywhere; in busy towns and in lonely hamlets, in mining districts and on secluded farmsteads, in industrial centres and in quiet fishing villages. They are more or less loosely attached to their chapels, even where they have not altogether shaken off ecclesiastical control. We were told of about eighty groups, most of them unsheltered, who have quite severed their connection with the different organized religious bodies, meeting together in a loose fellowship, seeking to keep alive in their midst the Revival flame.

The cause for this severing of ecclesiastical links is largely due to the fact that many of the ministers who were willing, for a season, to rejoice in the Revival, afterwards re-imposed on their people the old mechanical routines. While the Revival was at its height, it was not politic to offer any protest. What though the usual order was overthrown and the meetings conducted without hymn-book, organ, sermon, collection, programme, or pre-arrangement of any kind! The chapels were filled to the crush; homes and streets, as well as lives and lips, were purified and sweetened; public houses and places of entertainment were emptied, while the uninvited liberality of the people was such that the coffers of the church overflowed, without any need of questionable methods for raising money having to be resorted to. The breath of God was on the land.

The re-introduction of the former régime greatly discouraged many of the children of the Revival and drove them out of their chapels. Men and women unaccustomed to appear in public, timid youths and maidens, had been moved to take part freely, as they believed, in obedience to the Spirit as He gave them utterance. This newly discovered liberty had been so manifestly owned of God, even though it seemed to trench on the ecclesiastical order of things, that rather than relinquish it again they preferred to go forth into religious exile.

For herein consisted the newness of the Revival. Many waves of Divine influence have in past generations swept over the highly sensitive and imaginative people of Wales, but this Revival was on different lines. It seemed to many not so much a Divine seal upon the religious order of things in Wales as a protest against it. It seemed to ignore the whole machinery, so costly and elaborate, by means of which the various organized systems had maintained their hold. Especially was the pulpit, the pride of Wales, left out in the cold. Regular preachings, in a man's time and will and ability, were only in the way. The Master of the house had risen up, and He made use of his own instruments.

Because the inwardness of the Revival was the practical recognition of the presence, supremacy, and sufficiency of the Divine Spirit, it was felt by many to be on a par with not a little of what we understand under the term "old-time Quakerism." Said one of the children of the Revival to me: "Years ago I came across a Quaker book. When I became conscious of the Spirit during the Revival my life was wonderfully changed, and I felt as if I too had become a Quaker." No wonder that the hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light!" became such a favorite vehicle for expressing the aspirations of the newly awakened.

The children of the Revival are easily distinguished by their spiritual alacrity. There is an inspiring exhilaration about them. I have repeatedly recognized them by their beaming looks. "What is the Revival?" said Evan Roberts; "the Revival is your shining face."

The general public has not been informed of the more recent local visitations, pretty much on the lines of the more widely diffused stir of eight years ago. Away among the hills of Carmarthenshire we discovered an interesting group meeting in a farmer's kitchen, as the chapel doors were closed to them. They were the fruit of a recent awakening; and as they would pray, sing, and testify in regular services without waiting for the permission of the official minister, but as and when the Spirit moved them, they were expelled as disturbers of the peace. The aged farmer himself and his wife, fine types of Celtic patriarchs, though they had been religious professors all their life and sincerely attached to their chapels, had only recently come into an experience that brought satisfaction to their hearts. I can still hear his musical laugh as I asked him: "Can a man be born when he is old?" The rest who had been visited were mostly young people, as was the case very generally in the larger movement a few years ago.

It is not to be wondered at that the very earnestness of these simple souls, hungering for an experience, and not a mere record, of Divine realities, would expose them to peculiar dangers. Of some of these I will now speak briefly. A mysterious movement, accompanied by psychical phenomena and a speaking in "tongues," supposed by its adherents to be of the same nature as that found in the primitive churches, has been going its rounds from California to the ends of the earth during the last four years. It is computed that some seventy thousand in all countries where there are Christian people have come into this experience, which is considered to be the sign of the Pentecostal baptism of the Spirit.

This is not the place to enlarge on this mysterious subject. But it is clear that, whatever this movement portends, it is not Pentecostal. It is more Corinthian in its character. Anyway, it has got into Wales, and it has made sad havoc of not a few of the centres of Revival fervor. Wherever it has appeared it has broken up the once happy and unsuspecting fellowship of souls, drawn together by the mutual experience of a new life and gladness in God.

The centres where the "tongues" have appeared are again subdivided into rival groups, sharply opposed to each other. There is an extremely fanatical and boastful branch, and one more reasonable and humble in its profession. It was amongst these latter that we have had some service. Little can be done with the other till the bitterness of disappointment and the soberness of disenchantment have taken the place of the present intoxication.

The reaction after the Revival is probably to blame for the rapid spread of this cult, which reminds us of the pretensions and rudeness of the Ranters, with whom George Fox came so much into collision in the earlier days of the Quaker movement. Grieved at the systematic quenching of the Revival fire, and the forbidding of its accompanying liberty on the part of many of the official leaders of the churches, many of the children of the Revival have tried to warm themselves at this strange fire, which, while it promises so much, is certain to land them, sooner or later, into irreparable loss.

Not all the ministers presiding over Welsh church-life have been unsympathetic towards the Revival. Many of them hailed it with sincere joy, and have themselves been lifted on the crest of its wave into a higher life and experience. But in some places where the minister caught the flame the deacons have remained callous, and in several instances the minister has been driven out into the wilderness. I know of churches that have for this reason been split into Revival and anti-Revival sections, and in some places the new wine has been altogether too strong for the old bottles. New congregations had to be formed, of a more or less undenominational character, where not a little of the fervor and gladness and spontaneity of the Revival has been preserved, many of the members of the flock rallying loyally around their ejected pastor, who had relinquished chapel and salary for the sake of the Revival. Some of our happiest meetings were held with these earnest people.

How far Friends of to-day are in a position to help the children of the Revival is a serious query. How far Wales is likely to respond to the type of congregational life that has grown up in the Society remains to be seen. One thing is certain, these souls have had a taste of something deeper than words. Nothing will attract them but the power of God. But there is nothing sectarian in true Quakerism. It is an inward experience and a spiritual revelation of Christ as the Wisdom and Power of God. In so far as we can direct them to this heavenly Wisdom and eternal Power, that they may dwell in it and shape their individual and church life according to it, we shall do well.

MAX I. REICH.

DECIDING DOUBTFUL PRACTISES.—"Is there any harm in it?" is not the best question for a Christian to ask when doubtful about any course of conduct. At a meeting where questions on life problems were being answered by a well-known Bible teacher, one question asked was: "Is there any harm in amateur theatricals?" Another read, "Is there any harm in girls dancing with each other?" The speaker suggested in both cases that it would be better to ask: "What good is there in this? How much can I glorify God by doing it?" That way of approach clears up many puzzling problems for the Christian whose whole passion is the glory of God. There need be no "border lines in the field of doubtful practices," when we are willing to meet the question not from self's view-point, but from that of God and his glory.—The Sunday School Times.

THE SECRET OF THE LORD

God sometimes shuts the door and shuts us in,

That He may speak, perchance through grief or pain
And softly, heart to heart, above the din,
May tell some precious thought to us again.

God sometimes shuts the door and keeps us still,

That so our feverish haste, or deep unrest,
Beneath his gentle touch may quiet, till
He whispers what our weary hearts love best.

God sometimes shuts the door, and though shut in,

If 'tis his hand shall we not wait and see?
If worry lies without, and toil and sin,

God's Word may wait within for you and me.

—Unknown Author.

THE MASTER SCULPTOR.

'Tis the Master who holds the mallet,
 And lay by day
 He is clipping whatever environs
 The form away;
 Which under his skillful cutting,
 He means shall be
 Wrought silently out to beauty
 Of such degree
 Of faultless and full perfection,
 That angel eyes
 Shall look on the finished labor
 With new surprise,
 That even his boundless patience
 Should grave his own
 Reasons on such fractured
 And stubborn stone.

'Tis the Master who holds the chisel;
 He knows just where
 Its edge shall be driven sharpest
 To fashion there
 The semblance that He is carving;
 Nor will He let
 One delicate stroke too many,
 Or few, be set
 On forehead, or cheek, where only
 He sees how all
 Is tending, and where the hardest
 The blow should fall,
 Which crumbles away whatever
 Superfluous line
 Would hinder his hand from making
 The work Divine.

With tools of thy choosing, Master,
 We pray Thee then
 Strike just as Thou wilt, as often
 And where and when
 Thy vehement stroke is needed,
 We will not mind,
 If only thy chilling chisel
 Shall leave behind
 Such marks of thy wondrous working
 And loving skill,
 Clear even on aspect, stature,
 And face, as will,
 When discipline's ends are over,
 Have all sufficed
 To mould us into the likeness
 And form of Christ.

MARGARET PRESTON.

"LORD, THAT OUR EYES MAY BE OPENED."

As I read the other day the latter part of the twentieth chapter of the Gospel of Matthew, I was struck with renewed force by the prayer of the two blind men, "Lord, that our eyes may be opened." It is a prayer which I believe we all have adopted; and when by Divine grace new light has been given us, may we not hesitate to do as these humble petitioners did, and say, "Lord, that our eyes may be opened."

It is a prayer, I think that we can see, we can understand, and each of us no doubt feels secure in saying it. In many of most directions he sees the very things which he desires. This confidence, which we should hold in our own hearts, still pray that our eyes may be opened. For, though truly, and that we may be made aware of any errors which we may hold in our faith for the truth.

In my own case, finding that many of those whom I knew and loved to hold certain things, which I had always confidently held as true, I resolved not to be convicted of error on these points. So earnest was I in this desire to hold to the old beliefs, that it almost amounted to a prayer that my eyes might be kept shut. It now seems to me that this attitude of unwillingness to open one's mind to new light falls under the censure directed by our Saviour against the Pharisees who asked Him, "Are we also blind?" (John ix, verses 40, 41.)

Friends have always placed special stress on Truth, in its broadest and fullest sense, and "the honor of Truth" has been the watchword in many a spiritual conflict and in times of persecution and suffering. The truth as they saw it was indeed the guiding star of the founders of our Society, and the keenness of their spiritual insight was wonderful. Point by point their contentions have been adopted by other Christians. This gradual triumph of Friends' principles is still going on, and we rejoice to believe that it will still go on.

But have we not been too confident, too complacent? We have censured the Roman Catholics for their dogma of infallibility of pope and church. Have we not cherished as untenable a belief in the infallibility of early Friends? For myself, I must plead guilty. I have been willing to defend the position of the fathers on points of faith and practice just because it was their position. Now, while convinced more firmly than ever of the truth of most of the doctrines and testimonies upheld by the founders of the Society, I believe that in some particulars they were mistaken.

However multifarious its parts, the truth is one. We cannot draw any lines of distinction between its parts. Religious, moral, economic and scientific truth are one whole, and oftentimes discoveries in one field throw new light on the problems of another. No one person can know all the truth. For each there are many things in which he has no interest or concern. Let us be very careful not to be hasty in concluding that any matter toward which our attention is directed is no affair of ours. Let us rather pray that our eyes may be kept open and watchful for every phase of truth which the inward witness shows us to be our concern. And let us strive after a whole-hearted willingness to follow Him in the way when He shall have opened our eyes.

L. B.

ESSAY BY LYDIA PIERCE, READ AT A SENECA INDIAN Y. W. C. A. MEETING, TUNESASSA, N. Y.—Smoking cigarettes is one form of poisoning the body. This practice undermines the health of body and mind of boys who indulge in it. Boys, don't ever use tobacco, and above all don't smoke cigarettes, for they are poison. They ought to be marked with a skull and two bones crossing each other, which means deadly poison! It will bring death sooner or later; and think you that Jesus will say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," when a man or boy dies of the effects of cigarette smoking, when he stands before the judgment seat of God? No, I do not believe He would say that to a murderer. A murderer, you say! Yes, a murderer of his ownself; slowly but surely killing himself. Are your bodies stronger than General Grant's, who died with a cancer of the throat, caused by cigarette smoking? Is your mind stronger than Robert Louis Stevenson's, once a great writer of books; and called a strong-minded man? Yet he poisoned himself by smoking, and died while yet in his prime. Do you think you can afford to shorten your life, and make it miserable by getting a little fun, as you might call it, by smoking cigarettes? No, we want to live as long as we can, and we want to do something, and make our mark in the world. Then I say again, boys, never smoke your first cigarette; turn from it as you would from a rattlesnake; and you who may have already begun, I say make one mighty effort, and throw away your cigarette stub, and promise God that by his help you will never smoke again; go so far as to say even if I die from the stopping of it! But God will not put temptation to you stronger than what you are able to bear; only put your whole nettle against it, and shut your teeth in the firmness of your resolution, and pray for help every day.

It takes less time to amass a fortune than to become heaven-minded.—F. W. ROBERTSON.

AS OTHERS SEE US.

REFERENCES TO FRIENDS IN THE DAILY AND WEEKLY PRESS.

At business meetings and in private conversation Friends are sometimes heard to remark that the public misunderstands us. At times who notices in the newspapers the frequent and inaccurate references to the Society will be able to give at least one good reason for this. There are several news-cutting agencies which, for a small consideration, will send at frequent intervals a packet of press references to any desired subject, which have been gleaned from newspapers all over the country. This net catches some very strange fish, and anyone who glances over the notices about Friends caught in this way is not long left in doubt as to why we are misunderstood. The Friends' Reference Library in London has an arrangement with one of these agencies, and the most interesting and informing of the press-cuttings received are preserved for posterity to see, and not posterity only, for they are accessible to any Friend who calls at Devonshire House during ordinary business hours.

When Friends do something of public interest it is naturally reflected in the newspapers. The two most notable events of this kind in 1912 were the Yearly Meeting in Manchester, and the purchase of Swarthmore Hall. The opening of the Friends' Hostel at Old Jordans Farm also received widespread notice.

The references to the Yearly Meeting which are preserved at Devonshire House, if placed end to end, would measure nearly ten yards of newspaper column, or equivalent to about two-and-a-half pages of the Daily News. How much more appeared in print but was not preserved it is impossible to say. On this occasion a Friend was appointed to make it his special business to give information to the pressmen, and the result was seen in the accuracy of the reports. Sometimes, however, the editors of the evening papers let themselves go in the way of catchy headlines (these were not submitted to our Friend for approval). Here are a few of them:

UNIQUE CONFERENCE.

NO PRESIDENT AND NO VOTES.

Questions decided by consensus of opinion.

OLD TIME ASSEMBLY.

EX-LORD MAYOR AS CLERK.

NO SEX DISTINCTION.

One evening paper, evidently very hard up for ideas, used the most uninterestingly mild headline:

SOME INTERESTING FEATURES.

This reserve was not always noticeable, and sometimes an appeal was made to the insatiable curiosity of human nature, for instance:

WHAT A WITTY JUDGE SAID.

It will exercise the memory of Friends who attended to think what this referred to, and again:

THE DAY-SCHOOL AND THE HOME.

Two years ago London Friends prepared and published a report on the progress made by the Society in London during the first ten years of the century. This was referred to by newspapers covering almost the whole range of contemporary literature, and including The Times, The Grocers' Journal, The Globe, The Life of Faith, The Inquirer, The Christian, and even The Morning Advertiser, a London daily newspaper, which probably a large proportion of Friends have never even heard of, appearing in the interests of the brewing trade.

Some of the paragraphs have evidently been written by Friends, others, it is equally plain, have been written by journalists who knew nothing about us. In a London suburban paper there appeared an article headed in this way:

WHAT IS QUAKERISM?

The Present Position and Messages of Friends.

Their Local Activities.

That is certainly a good start, but we read on and learn to our amazement that:

"Quakers won't fight, and at their services everybody is in silence and looks at his neighbor. Of course there are not many Quakers. This, in a few words, sums up the knowledge of more correctly the ignorance of most people today regarding the Society of Friends."

"Truly a pure sample of journalism!" As a matter of fact this was written by a Friend who is also a professional journalist. If this and what followed is not stating the truth of Quakerism to the world in its own language, what is?

Sometimes our little foibles and inconsistencies are unconsciously and faithfully reproduced in print. In a paragraph from another local paper we read:

... quite a number of visitors have enjoyed a quiet meeting for worship on First-day mornings. Until recently the Sunday School ...

This paragraph was obviously written by a Friend. No outsider would ever use the term First-day in connection with a meeting for worship, and then on the next line talk about a Sunday School!

There is a paragraph which for months past has been floating through the provincial weeklies. It appeared in a Barnesley paper last fall, and at frequent intervals since it has been netted from all over the country by the press agency. It bears internal evidence of having been written by a Friend, though it contains some glaring inaccuracies. Here it is:

QUAKERS AND VOTES FOR WOMEN.—The Society of Friends, better known as Quakers, was actually the pioneer in the woman's movement. George Fox taught the absolute equality of the sexes on religion and Church government, and, at a time when advanced education was supposed to be a male prerogative, the Quakers educated their women in exactly the same way that they educated their men. The Quaker marriage ceremony exacts the same promises from the man as from the woman, and places the parties upon an equality. As a result there is no case upon record of a Quaker divorce. While the community is no longer so strong in this country as formerly, it is remarkable that there are no less than nine of its members in the British Parliament, and they are all of them friendly to the woman's movement, although emphatically opposed to violence in any form. By-the-by, while on the subject of Quakers, "The Quaker Girl," at the Theatre Royal next week is one of the daintiest musical comedies in existence. It is sent by Mr. George Dance.

It contains the comforting delusion, but quite inaccurate statement, which has been echoed and re-echoed of late, that there is no case upon record of a Quaker divorce. Unfortunately there was a case last year, when the Divorce Commission was actually in session, and it was accurately reported in the Times and other papers as a Quaker divorce. Both parties were, and still are, members of the Society of Friends. This is not the only case, there are others, but a single instance in a membership of only 20,000 makes it inadvisable to say anything about Friends' immunity from divorce. There are other inaccuracies, but we cannot stop to discuss them. The last few lines quoted above are obviously evidence of the sub-editor's activity!

We now come to some statements about Friends which bear no evidence that they were originally drafted by a Friend. This little paragraph appeared simultaneously in newspapers published in Newcastle, Windsor, Warrington, Stafford, Congleton, and probably in other places also:

After a lapse of thirty-five years religious services of the Society of Friends have been resumed in the historic Quakers' Meeting-house at High Wycombe.

There are three lines in the original and in each line an inaccuracy!

The next quotation contains some much more serious information and goes a long way to explain why the public has such strange ideas about Friends. We find in a north-country paper the headlines:

A QUAKER WEDDING.

PRETTY NUPTIALS AT —

and underneath we learn with astonishment that "the ceremony was performed by Canon —" and that during the service which was fully choral. . . . the bride was given away by her father. . . . Nine lines are required adequately to describe the dresses worn by the bride and bridesmaids "all of whom looked pretty in their Quaker grey costumes and lace caps."

Of another wedding we read that "with the quaint ceremonial of the Quakers a pretty wedding was solemnized this afternoon. . . . The bride, who was given away by her father looked exceptionally well in. . . . ten lines are needed to describe the bride and her dress, and more than that is said of the bridesmaids and relatives and their dresses.

Friends have recently heard much about how their funeral arrangements are misunderstood by the general public, and it is no wonder, considering the strange paragraphs that get into newspapers with circulations that far exceed the total number of Friends in this country. Such a heading as WITH QUAKER RITES is not infrequent, and more objectionable ones are sometimes to be found.

This is not the fault of the journalist, it is not right to blame the press-man. One of the inevitable conditions of journalistic life is that what necessarily has to be written in haste may be criticised at leisure. Sometimes a funeral is held at three in the afternoon, and a paragraph must be written for an evening paper which will be on sale in the streets at six. There is no time to make inquiries, the journalist has to hurry from the Friends' funeral to a football match, and on the way back look in at a house where there has been a murder. Even if he has the time to ask how Friends conduct their meetings, weddings or funerals, he probably has no one at hand to ask. The remedy is simple. When an event happens at which journalists are likely to be present to report, some Friend should consider it his duty to help the pressman at the beginning. The present writer has sometimes helped reporters in this way with information of Friends and their ways, the notable people present, and the exact spelling of names, and has been most cordially thanked by the reporters. The pressmen are glad to get accurate information, but if it is not forthcoming they have no alternative but to print what they hope is true.—E. D. HAROLD MARSH, in The British Friend.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY AND THE TARIFF.

There have appeared various statements in the daily papers to the effect that by the passage of the Tariff act, which puts English Bibles on the free list, the American Bible Society has been forced to abandon its printing plant in the Bible House in the city of New York, and has decided to print its Scriptures in some foreign country, possibly Japan, in order to meet the competition of English Bibles printed in other lands where labor is cheaper. What the effect of the Tariff bill in placing English Bibles on the free list will be, cannot now be determined. The Society has taken no action whatever with relation to the matter. It has been in the habit of printing at the Bible House in New York all the English Bibles which it has used in its general missionary work throughout the United States and in foreign lands. Last year its output of English Scriptures was 1,444,011 volumes. It has always sold its Scriptures at cost without purpose of profit, that the poorest might be able to have the Scriptures at the lowest price possible.

The Society has existed for nearly one hundred years to promote the translation, revision, and circulation of the Bible in every language, agency throughout the United States and other lands, bringing it away to the poor and needy wherever they are unable to pay for it. It has thus far maintained its printing plant in New York City because in that way it could produce the Scriptures at a lower price than it could procure them in any other way.

The Secretaries of the American Bible Society.

Tenth Month 2, 1913.

No man or woman of the humblest sort can really be strong, gentle, pure and good without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of that goodness.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

AN OVERWORKED ELOCUTIONIST.

Once there was a little boy, whose name was Robert Reece; And every Friday afternoon he had to speak a piece. So many poems thus he learned that soon he had a store Of recitations in his head, and still kept learning more. And now this is what happened; He was called upon, one week, And totally forgot the piece he was about to speak! His brain he cudgled. Not a word remained within his head! And so he spoke at random, and this is what he said: "My Beautiful, my Beautiful, who standest proudly by, It was the schooner Hesperus—the breaking waves dashed high! Why is the Forum crowded? What means this stir in Rome? Under a spreading chestnut-tree there is no place like home. When Freedom from the mountain height cried, Twinkle, little star, Shout if you must this old gray head, King Henry of Navarre! Roll on, thou dark and deep blue castled crag of Drachenfels, My name is Norval, on the Grampian Hills, ring out, wild bells! If you're waking, call me early, to be or not to be, The curfew must not ring to-night! Oh, woodman, spare that tree! Charge, Chester, on the On, Stanley, on! And let who will be clever! The boy stood on the burning, but I go on forever!" His elocution was superb, his voice and gestures fine; His schoolmates all applauded as he finished the last line. "I see it doesn't matter," Robert thought, "what words I say, So long as I declaim with oratorical display!"

—CAROLYN WELLS, in St. Nicholas.

WHAT I expect of the boy of fourteen. Right at the start I expect him to be a boy not a cherub, not a little old man, nor a sneak. Just plain, unadulterated boy. I expect that he stands well on his feet, looks you in the eye and tells you the truth; that he sleeps when he sleeps, works when he works and plays when he plays; that he swims like a duck, runs like a deer, and sees like an eagle; that he plays fair on the field, at the school and in the home; that he likes a dog, delights in woods and fields and believes in comrades; that he admires real men, stands by his heroes and looks up to his mother; that he sees in a violet, a sparrow or a worm the touch of the hand of God.

Furthermore, I expect that the boy has a father as well as a mother, a few brothers and sisters and a wise teacher or two; that his father remembers that he was once a boy; that his mother tempers her all-abiding love with justice; that his home is more than a pantry and a bed; that his school is more than a recitation period; that his teacher sees something beyond marks; that his church is more than a pulpit.

But my expectations are more than one-sided or two-sided, they are many sided. I rather imagine that the boy expects a few things himself. He expects that his parents are sturdy, responsible, clean; that fresh air is his in sleep, at play and in school; that he is fed at least as sanely as horses, cows and hens; that his desire for activity is turned from deviltry into useful knowledge and productive labor and wholesome play; that his parents reverently tell him of the functions and care of his beautiful body; that he is taught obedience and right thinking by example as well as by preaching; that his capacity, interest and native ability are studied and wisely directed; that the idealism of his adolescence is nurtured as though it was the voice of God. In fact, he expects that every hour out of the twenty-four is a step forward in his education, and that the task of educating him is more than a school affair.

There is yet more. Beyond my expectations or his expectations there are our expectations. Yours and mine—everybody's. He is our boy. He is to be our Michael Angelo, our Martin Luther, our Abraham Lincoln, our First Citizen, our Great Man. It is for us to give him his chance to be great, good and Godlike. It is for us to give him a parentage untainted by disease—social, civic, or industrial. It is for us to give him his rightful heritage of playgrounds, of good schools and of clean cities. It is for us to close the door of the corner saloon, the dive and the vulgar show. It is for us to prevent his exploitation in sweat-shop, factory or store.

Our boy cannot run the race with his feet tied. He alone cannot do it all. He will do his share, but we must do ours. When we of our share we shall find that our boy meets my expectations, his expectations, our expectations.

ARTHUR D. DEAN, in the Long Island Agronomist.

HOW GRANT EARNED HIS CALF.—Grant Norcross had come with his father and mother to spend a month in Tilton on his grandfather's farm.

Strange sounds met his ears on the first morning. The roosters wakened him. From the edge of the woods a crow was calling, and somewhere near the barn a cow was bellowing at the top of her voice. Close under the window was still another noise that Grant could not quite make out until he got up. Then he saw that on the other side of the orchard wall there was a calf tied to an iron stake driven into the ground. Every time the cow called, the calf tried to answer. What the cow said was hard to understand, but what the calf said was, "Ma-a, when will breakfast be ready?"

Grant hurried down to the yard to see his grandfather feed the stock. His two cousins, boys about his own age, were already up and busy at the milking.

"Why does the cow keep making such a noise?" asked Grant.

"Because I've just taken her calf away from her," his grandfather answered. "We have got to teach the calf to drink."

"Can't I do it?"

His two cousins, George and Frank, laughed, and even his grandfather smiled. "I'm afraid you wouldn't find it a very easy job, or a very pleasant one, at first," he answered. "It takes a great deal of patience and not a little grit."

"But I can be patient, and I know I've got grit. Do let me try, grandfather."

The old man turned a kindly eye on Grant's eager face. There was something about it that he liked—a good, clean chin and a well-shaped mouth. "Well," he said, at length, "I'll tell you what I will do. If you can teach the calf to drink without beating her or losing control of your temper, I will give her to you for your own, to keep or to sell, or do anything else with that you please."

Grant rushed joyfully into the house and asked his grandfather to tell him what to do. The next morning he got a milk-pail, put about two quarts of milk into it, and started for the barn-yard.

"You had better put on an old apron!" his grandmother called; but that seemed too girlish, and Grant kept on as if he had not heard. The calf braced her feet stubbornly when he tried to get her into the orchard. He set the pail down, and called, "So, Boss! Here, Boss!" as he had heard his cousins do. But the calf did not move.

Grant crept nearer. His grandfather had told him not to be afraid; that a calf was a gentle little creature that would not bite, and could not hook, since she had no horns. When he was within reach, he put the pail under the calf's nose, dipped his finger in the milk, and placed it in the calf's mouth. He was half-afraid that she would bite, after all.

But the calf did not bite. For a moment she did nothing but hold Grant's finger. She stood with all four feet spread wide apart, and her tail stood out straight like a ramrod. Then the tail kinked up, the fore legs moved back, and with a glad leap, the calf thrust half of her head into the pail.

The head came out white to the eyes with milk. Then, looking Grant square in the face, the calf blew a mighty "Whoosh!" that completely spattered him from head to foot.

Grant set the pail down to wipe the milk out of his eyes, and hearing a low laugh, turned, and saw that the whole family were watching him.

He dipped his finger again into the milk, and held it toward the calf's mouth. This time it was the calf's hind legs that moved. They went up into the air, and her head went down, but only far enough to hit Grant fair in the part of the stomach and knock him flat on his back, with the milk-pail on top.

When Grant went back to the house, his grandmother, still laughing, said, "Well, my boy, going to give it up?"

"No," said Grant. "I came after some more milk."

It was not that day or the next, or even the first of the second week, that Grant earned his calf. It took a long time and cost much hard work. One day the calf stepped in the pail and sent all the milk splashing over Grant's feet and legs. Sometimes she would slap him across the face with her tail, sometimes try to swallow his whole hand, and at other times run around him two or three times, until the chain bound both of them tight to the iron stake.

Then one day the calf began to drink as soon as he put the pail under her nose, and there was no more trouble.

When he told his grandfather, the old gentleman said, "Well, Grant, you have earned your calf. But you have done something a great deal bigger."

"Why, grandpa, what do you mean?"

"He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city," his grandfather answered.—E. W. FRENCH, in Youth's Companion.

NOTES FROM MASSACHUSETTS.

Now that the tariff is settled and business is still good and the wild birds are protected—both native and foreign—and the suffragists have better prospects than ever in these United States, and more girls are going to college than ever before, we thought it timely to make a pilgrimage to Wellesley and Mount Holyoke Colleges to settle in those in whom we are particularly interested. It was a real satisfaction to find so many Friends at both of these institutions. The direct trip to New York by way of the Larkawanna R. R. is exceedingly picturesque. The view across Paradise Valley toward the Water Gap, with the Kittatinny Mountains to the South, as seen from the car window, soon after leaving Mount Pocono Station, is one of the most extended in the Eastern States.

We spent First-day at Westerly, R. I., with Charles Perry and his family, very pleasantly. The meeting held there was attended by thirty-two persons and it was a season of spiritual refreshment.

Upon arrival at Wellesley College we were surrounded by hundreds of young women—four hundred of whom were Freshmen. About 1500 are now enrolled and the wholesome, cordial, sincere spirit which prevails throughout this institution, creates an atmosphere that is most helpful, and in keeping with the motto of the College, "I came not to be ministered unto but to minister." The weather was perfect and after registering our youngest daughter and speaking with the Dean, we enjoyed the campus, and dined with a group of Freshmen in one of the smaller dormitories. When one recalls the life work of Alice Freeman Palmer and her Presidency of Wellesley College, as told by her husband, Prof. George Palmer, in his choice biography of her, the campus and the buildings that are placed so attractively on its ample hills, surrounding Lake Waban, seem to reflect her strong, simple, generous character.

Helen Craig, a resident of Wellesley, is devoting her ample means to the development of a post-graduate kindergarten course at Wellesley College. She believes, from her personal experience, that over-education taking the kindergarten training should be as mature as a college graduate. The opportunity of seeing the surrounding country from an auto gave us another impression from that which we had previously received of this section of Massachusetts. It was very beautiful from points of vantage—one of which was the hill-top where the house of our kind hostess stood. Her husband's beautiful garden and exquisitely-kept green-house afford him endless satisfaction.

The industry and ingenuity of the Yankee is proverbial, and I only wish the South could and would see the need of working both with hand and head as we find so generally to be customary in New England.

As our Chinese student was admitted at Mount Holyoke we journeyed thither to find a warm welcome. The train from Springfield was filled with returning students and teachers and their courtesy and joyful fellowship was an inspiration. About 750 girls are in attendance at this College. It has passed its seventy-fifth birth-day and President Mary Woolley has built it up during the last decade so its standards are recognized by the College Alumni Association of the United States. If Mary Lyons could see the last fruits of her labors, surely her cup of thanksgiving through most of the cases before us as evidence that drink had its paralyzing influence on mind and morals of accused persons; the debasing influence of the saloon has just been so apparent in the majority of the cases that we feel compelled to make observation that the general public must pay the price for permitting the existence of these highly objectionable sources of crime."

On the 10th inst. President Wilson touched an electric button in the White House opening the Panama Canal to navigation. To complete the journey through the canal will occupy from ten to twelve hours, depending upon the speed at which the vessel can navigate in the two lakes and Culebra Cut.

A despatch from Nome, Alaska, of the 6th says: "Nome was almost destroyed by a storm. Two miles of territory next to the sea were devastated. No lives were lost. The storm, which last night began beating in from Behring Sea, was the worst ever known here. The Mayor of Nome has issued an appeal for help."

A carrier pigeon has lately flown from Havre de Grace, Md., to Topeka, Kansas, a distance in an air line of 1100 miles, in 19 days.

It is stated that the advance in the cost of living is shown by reports of the Chicago Nursery and Half-Orphan Asylum, which has been in constant operation since 1860. This record shows that from 1874 to 1883 the cost of maintaining one child was about $80; from 1884 to 1893 it was a little less than $89; from 1894 to 1903 it was a trifle less than $102; and in the period from 1903 up to the present time it is slightly more than $160.

The Supreme Court of Colorado has held that all cafés or hotel dining-rooms that sold liquor in small quantities were saloons, within the meaning of the law, and must keep closed on the First-day of the week.

It was stated on the 10th inst.: "The care of infants will be taught in fourteen of Chicago's schools, beginning next week. Real babies will be used in the demonstrations. The classes will be in charge of nurses from the Health Department, who will give instruction for one hour two days a week."

It has been recently stated from Los Angeles, Cal.: "The crop-moving season in southern California has arrived, and according to railroad officials, who have made a most careful investigation, there will be an average of 600 carloads a day shipped east by rail. Besides this, an enormous amount will go by water."

A despatch from Lawrence, Kansas, of the 8th says: "A department of child welfare, said to be the first of its kind established in an educational institution in the United States, to-day was inaugurated formally in the University of Kansas. Besides giving instruction, the department will take the entire State as its field in arranging healthful vacation employment for city school boys, etc."

It is stated that a society called the "National Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage" has just issued a statement from its Washington headquarters, that it will cease to oppose the granting of the ballot to women, "if the Suffragists can submit to Congress figures showing that a majority of the women of the United States want the franchise." The organization claims that the great majority of women do not desire to vote.

It is stated that remarkable results have been attained in the treatment of cancer and skin diseases by the new desiccation process, or "drying method." Dr. Wm. L. Clark has lately stated that diseased tissue has less vitality than healthy tissue, and we can produce and apply heat and absolutely control it at a degree that will dry up the diseased tissue, but will not affect the more resistant healthy tissue. The heat must be maintained at the exact point where it will desiccate or dry out the diseased tissue, but will not affect healthy tissue. For this purpose absolute control of the heat applied is necessary.

FOREIGN.—The steamship Volturno, of the Uranium fleet, from Rotterdam to Halifax and New York, was lately destroyed by fire in the mid-Atlantic, 136 of her passengers and crew being lost. The Volturno was abandoned, a helpless wreck.

A despatch from Washington of the 7th says: "The American Colonization Society, the only private corporation in history that ever successfully established an independent nation, to-day paid over to its ward, Liberia, more than $60,000, the increment of an ill-fund, for the education of the children of the republic. The fund was the bequest of Caroline Donovan, of Baltimore, devised twenty-seven years ago. In addition to the $60,000 paid to-day the annual interest on the fund hereafter will be used in aiding American colored people desirous of emigrating to Liberia."

It was stated from Hull, England, on the 6th inst.: "The annual conference of the National Union of Women Workers, popularly known as the 'Parliament of Women,' opened here to-day. There are 600 delegates in attendance. The programme includes a series of important discussions on child training and child welfare."

A despatch from Brussels of the 7th inst. says that as the result of a number of experiments between Loozen, near Brussels, and Bona, it has been found that messages from Loozen are regularly recorded by instruments in Bona. The distance is about 1200 miles.

A despatch from Peking of the 6th inst. says: "The united houses of Parliament to-day elected Yuan Shi-Kai Constitutional President of China for a term of five years. The European Powers have recognized the republic. Early in 1912 it was he who was given full powers to arrange the terms of abdication of the throne and to organize a republican government in conference with the Republican leaders. Shortly afterward, he was elected Provisional President of the republic by the National Council at Nankin."

Pour out thy life like the rush of a river.

Wasting its waters for ever and ever

Through the burnt sands that reward not the giver;

Silent or songful thou nearest the sea.

NOTICES.

The appointed time for holding the next meeting at Mount Holly, N. J., will be next First-day, Tenth Month 19th, at 3.45 P. M.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA., will be open from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from 2 to 5 P. M.—Seventh-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. only.

WANTED.—At once, a suitable Friend as an Assistant to the Superintendent of the Indian School at Tunasassa. One who may favorably consider succeeding him next spring.

The Committee appointed by Concord Quarterly Meeting have arranged for a public meeting for Divine worship to be held at Old Goshen Friends' Meeting-house, First-day afternoon, Tenth Month 19, 1913, at 2.30 o'clock. Carriages will meet 1 P. M. trolley from Sixty-ninth Street terminal at Milltown, Pa. All interested are invited to attend.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.—The stage will meet at Westtown Station, trains leaving Broad Street (Penna. R. R.) Phila. at 6.32, 8.21 A. M., 2.48 and 4.30 P. M.; other trains will be met on request. Stage fare twenty-five cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, address West Chester Bell Telephone, 114A.

WM. B. HARVEY,
Superintendent.

The Committee of Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting for visitation and other religious service, has appointed a meeting to be held in Friends' Meeting-house, Greenwich, N. J., on First-day, Tenth Month 19th, at 2.30 P. M. This meeting is held in furtherance of the concern of two visiting ministers from Concord Quarterly Meeting, Pa.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.—The following books have recently been added to the Library:—

- Campbell—Ladder of Christ.
- Chase—California Coast Trails.
- Coe—Second Book of Stories.
- Elkinton—Selections from the Diary of Joseph S. Elkinton.
- Marks—Vacation Camping for Girls.
- Rolleston—High Deeds of Finn.
- Sollitt—Increasing Human Efficiency in Business.

LINDA A. MOORE,

Librarian.

MONTHLY MEETINGS NEXT WEEK (Tenth Month 20th to 25th):

- Philadelphia for Western District, Twelfth Street below Market.
- Fourth-day, Tenth Month 22nd, at 10.30 A. M. and 7.30 P. M.
- Muncy, at Pottsville, Pa., Fourth-day, Tenth Month 22nd, at 10 A. M.
- Frankford, Philadelphia, Fourth-day, Tenth Month 22nd, at 7.45 P. M.
- Haverford, Pa., Fifth-day, Tenth Month 23rd, at 7.30 P. M.
- Germantown, Philadelphia, Fifth-day, Tenth Month 23rd, at 10 A. M. and 8 P. M.

A WORD ON SERVICE

With Incidental Reference
to Belting and Lace Leather

Topics of popular thought are urging that it is not how much you can get but what you can contribute that really counts. We find this ideal in commercial life. What is the best teaching that service is the basis of a successful business building. We find this in political life, as variously shown by Wilson, Bryan and Roosevelt. We find this in the lives of Frederick Taylor, the scientific study of efficiency. And we find this in the lives of Lace Leather contributors that to the service rendered maintain the painted industries. The belt that you steadily work in and week out. The harness that helps to do this without to the belt is contributing to the building of all uses of the goods manufactured.

To become a worker with this ideal of service lets one work above the merely sordid. Such an ideal is not new to Friends. Witness the sentiment attached to the name "Quaker" as a label. If you hold closely to the ideal, it requires the label that business cannot be done according to the Golden Rule. And so it is our endeavor to furnish belts and harness that shall give such service.

J. E. RHOADS & SONS

PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. Third St.
NEW YORK: 102 Beekman St.
CHICAGO: 322 W. Randolph St.
Factory and Tannery, Wilmington, Del.

W. B. WEAVER Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5th ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN
TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT
OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL
ACCOMMODATIONS FOR
FUNERALS. ☪ ☪ ☪

BELL 'PHONE ESTABLISHED 1880.

JOS. B. SCATTERGOOD HOUSE, SIGN AND DECORATIVE PAINTING

Orders Solicited Bell 'Phone
275 S. FOURTH STREET

MAKE IT

only make better your advertising literature. See that it gets the proper print.

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,
EDWARD T. BIDDLE,

1010 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

ELKINS MORRIS & CO. BANKERS

MEMBERS OF
NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA
STOCK EXCHANGES
LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WE HAVE FOR SALE A LIMITED AMOUNT OF EQUIP-MENT TRUSTS OF STANDARD RAILROADS TO YIELD
5%. WE BELIEVE THEIR SECURITY UNQUESTIONED.

DETAILED INFORMATION ON REQUEST.

REPRESENTATIVES:

WM. E. CADBURY PAUL W. BROWN JAMES P. MAGILL

ROOMS FOR RENT. A PLEASANT SECOND story corner room for two people with private family.
Six minutes from Lansdowne Station.
Address "B." Care of THE FRIEND.

WANTED—ONE OR TWO THOROUGHLY REliable and competent men to take on halves a twohundred acre dairy farm in Chester Co., Pa. Two sets of buildings.
SAMUEL FORTSYTHE, Chad's Ford, Pa.

A YOUNG FRENCH DESIRES A POSITION AS
stenographer and typewriter
Address "G." Office of THE FRIEND.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
(Marcellus Balderston)

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. 618 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL 'PHONE PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM S. YARNALL MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

From Bondage to Freedom, by Isabel Shipley, 2nd Edition, 2 cts
Nerfield Symington, 1905. What 16 young Friends thought when they were 8 years younger, 2cts.
Christ in all the Scriptures, 60 cts.
Haydock's Testimony 50 cts. by L. C. Wood
For a Free Conscience $1.00

ALL POSTPAID

J. B. WOOD, PINE POINT PARK, CAMDEN, N. J.

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone
mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Redlands--California

Wissahickon Inn

A comfortable family hotel
in the residence section of beautiful Redlands.

SEND FOR FOLDERS & RATES

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL.

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

POCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevation 1800 feet, commanding extensive
mountain and valley scenery. Address

J. W. HURLEY, Manager,
POCONO MANOR, PA.

The reason for the Suburban movement
is the opportunity it affords to have a lawn.

The reason for the prettiest lawn is often due to Moon's Trees and Shrubbery that add beauty, give enjoyment, and enhance realty
values.

Send for Catalogs about them.

THE WM. H. MOON CO.
NURSERYMEN

Room H, Stephen Girard Bldg.
Philadelphia, Pa.

Nurseries at
Morrisville, Pa.

JOSEPH G. FOGG FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16th & RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals

BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 6646

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST COMPANY OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.
Accounts Solicited Deposits by Mail
Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET

FOURTH AND CHESTNUT STREETS

For Rich Milk

For Clean Milk

For Safe Milk

Call Philadelphia Locust 209

ABBOTTS ALDERNEY DAIRIES

31st and Chestnut Streets

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 23, 1913.

No. 17.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to

EDWIN P. SELLEW or THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

THE REPRESENTATIVE MEETING.

The question of having the Representative Meeting of our Yearly Meeting a truly representative body has called forth much comment among us during the past few years. It has been of interest to note how the sentiment in favor of it has grown, and how the objections, rooted in large measure in our preconceived notions, have vanished without any one putting forth any considerable arguments on one side or the other of the subject.

There are two kinds of laws that govern us, and in fact govern mankind in general, one founded on the basic principles of truth, and therefore from the nature of things not alterable, the other more conventional in character and presenting very different fronts in successive periods of time. From the very origin of our Society the principle has maintained that the gift in the ministry is conferred by no human ordination and without regard to sex; these have not ceased to be stumbling blocks to a great majority of our Protestant brothers, and are absolutely beyond the range of conception to a Romanist, but with us it is a basic principle, recognized and upheld in the same spirit to-day that it was in 1647, when Elizabeth Hooten, the first woman preacher among Friends, had her name entered in George Fox's Journal. When the Society of Friends shall have loosed her moorings from this anchor she will have lost her right to the title she holds, for she will have given up a principle committed to her keeping at the start.

This then illustrates with sufficient clearness what we mean by the first kind of law, and to illustrate the second we will take the question of women in the Representative Meeting.

Is there something fundamentally inherent in the problem that makes the present long-observed plan the only right one, or does it come under the second law, and we admit that our predecessors acted most wisely in the course they followed, but that time is an element to be reckoned with, and the time is now ripe for a change to be made, which could not have been made with prudence and advantage at a much earlier date?

He is the wisest conservator of principle among us who, knowing the past because he is a student of its history and the present because he lives in it and is of it, gauges the future by these two. This is what constitutes true conservatism, which becomes little less than traditionalism if one is bound to the past, and which on the other hand develops into extreme radicalism if one entirely neglects it and blazes a new way.

Four pages of our Book of Discipline are devoted to the Representative Meeting, and an examination of them will give in brief the line of service this Meeting is called on to fill. It is doubtful if one can find in these pages the remotest hint that the duties there referred to could not with equal propriety fall upon women as upon men. This does not mean, however, that the interpretation put upon them twenty years or so ago, confining the duties to men alone, was a wrong one, for in the interval there have been influences at work from two quarters, which have very materially altered the problem.

It is easily seen then why this topic comes under our second law. Influences, if not existing, certainly not felt a few decades ago, have become more potent factors and need to be reckoned with, and they in no degree trample upon basic principle, though often they uncomfortably jostle some of our set notions which we have been almost ready to think were fundamental.

The Representative Meeting does much of its work through Committees. These committees meet at intervals during the year, and, unless something a little beyond the defined scope of their duties comes up, they do not report except once a year. These are some of the Committees: Book Committee, Committee to Watch Legislation, Doukhorob Committee, Committee on Capital Punishment, Committee to Publish and Circulate the African's Friend, Committee on Property, Committee on Charleston Trust, Committee on Record of Membership, etc.

A generation or two ago it is probable that women Friends could have furnished little assistance to their brothers in many of the above-named interests, and more than this, there was not felt then, at least to anything like the same extent as exists to-day, the need by the women for participation in it, there has been, as already suggested, the double growth, an increased interest on the part of women Friends in these affairs of the church and an increased need on their part for participation in it, in order that this branch of the church may advance to the full standard that she is inherently capable of. These are factors that make the proposition a present day one.

When the question was under discussion some few years ago, a Friend ripe in years and in judgment, said in effect that when women Friends felt as a body that the best interests of their meetings would be served by according them a part in the work of the Representative Meeting, he would be slow to oppose their request. At the time this seemed to some of the younger members a position that they found difficult to adjust to their preconceived notions of justice, but in time it has become clear that it is not so much privileges and rights that should concern us as it is the deeper question of duty; the one we can often reason out to a good degree of certainty, the other we have to feel after, which with many of us means that reason first has to be subdued and then opportunity is afforded for duty to direct.

It would seem to us that the question under review does not belong to the first class of laws referred to above, and that having its place in the second group it has received the careful consideration that years of waiting can afford. It has not been our intention in this brief review to advance specific arguments pro and con, that could easily be done, but the task set has been, rather, to establish the more important principle that growth is simply asserting itself here, as it has in the past with all of us in very many ways, and that finally we can take a position which we feel to be the right position, but which at an earlier stage would have been premature.

It is a temptation with all of us to argue with our father's arguments. Their reasons should always be sufficient for us where the matters concerned come under the first law, but where the questions involved admit of argument and present various phases, the only right we have to call upon them is to place them in the same conditions that surround us, and this of course we can never do. We find ourselves too often urging "the vain excuse of Hebrew custom, patriarchal use"; it is a weakness we are all liable to fall into, and to overcome it we need the help and caution which we can extend the one to the other. Many a real advance has been balked by an opposition which has its root in good intentions, but which fails to allow all the light to shine upon it that it should receive.

D. H. F.

"University and Historical Addresses," by James Bryce. Published by Macmillan; 433 pages. Price $2.25.

James Bryce, well known to us by his "The American Commonwealth," was called upon while ambassador to this country to make addresses on many kinds of public occasions. A number of these speeches have recently been collected into a volume bearing the title "University and Historical Addresses."

A varied range of subjects is included. Some are historical, commemorating the founding of Virginia, the Landing of the Pilgrims, and so on; some are on legal or legislative subjects, such as the Common Law, Methods of Legislation, and the United States Constitution; some are about persons—Jefferson and Lincoln, for instance; and several are on educational and cultural subjects—State Universities, the Study of Ancient Literature, Some Hints on Reading and the like.

All of these addresses are marked by just such logical arrangement and clearness of expression as one would expect from the pen of a distinguished jurist and expositor. Moreover, as one reads, one is impressed both with the sound common sense and with the mature Christian conviction throughout. It is hardly to be expected that the printed version of any speech should reproduce either the environment or the feeling under which it was delivered; hence such speeches are likely to seem flat. But the clearness and the clever epigrammatic statement of some of these are nevertheless very impressive. His hints on Reading are especially good and interesting; his Addresses on History, on Methods of Legislation, on Public Speaking and on the Ancient Languages are all well worth reading.

"I mean a few sentences—" I mean by the best books those from which you receive most, and can carry most away, in the form either of knowledge or of stimulation." "The chief end of education is to stimulate curiosity, to make a man ask about all things, be they familiar or unfamiliar, the how and the why." "Devotion to truth, loyalty to truth under all temptations, is the intellectual conscience of the man of learning and the man of science."

RICHARD C. BROWN.

SELF is the only prison that can ever bind the soul. —HENRY VAN DYKE.

"Some By-Products of Missions," by Isaac Taylor Headland. Published by Western Methodist Book Concern; 323 pages. Price $1.50.

Isaac T. Headland, for many years resident in China, writes on "the influence of missions as a factor in the civilization of the world," in an entertaining volume, "Some By-Products of Missions." In every department of human endeavor—in trade, in culture, in methods of living, for instance—real progress has begun in every nation as a by-product of Christian influence. "Every science, natural and applied, that the world has to-day, has been made by the man that has been developed by the Gospel of Jesus Christ." The author's array of facts and arguments in illustration and in proof of this statement is very impressive, and opens our eyes in a new way to the truth of Christ's saying: "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth."

"When Jesus Christ"—to give an instance of the author's method—"was preaching to his disciples in Western Asia, your ancestors and mine were clothed in skins and living in mud-huts, and caves in Europe, and if the disciples and their followers had said, 'There is no use of going to the ends of the earth while there is so much to do at home'—we might have been squatting on our haunches gnawing a bone among the unkempt, unbathed, half-clad members of our tribe in some cave in Europe." This is a bit of conversation which I. T. Headland reports himself to have had with a traveling salesman on a Pullman car—who did not believe in missions. Indeed, the whole subject is developed in an informal, conversational style, and the book is full of anecdotes and personal experiences. Though the book at times seems to lack the dignity of manner which we should expect in such a subject, it is, nevertheless, very readable and informing.

RICHARD C. BROWN.

[THE following letter, which appeared recently in print, will interest our readers. To those who are not acquainted with the writer of it, we would say that Toki Iwasawa is a native of Japan, that she is in membership with Friends there and came to Westtown School a little more than a year ago, graduating last Sixth Month, the first Japanese to receive the School's diploma.—ED.]

WHAT WESTTOWN HAS MEANT TO ME.

It was the eighteenth of Ninth Month last year that I was introduced to Westtown, whose name I was as little familiar with as of that of any other small town in America.

Now, looking back on my year at Westtown, I cannot help being thankful for all the experiences I had there; some being pleasant, some uplifting, and some comical.

How kindly the students received me, a strange Japanese girl, who, for some time, could hardly say "Good-morning!" or "Good-night!" without making a bow in such a sober way as her native etiquette requires. How, with sympathy, the teachers talked with me, while my heart was full of appreciation, and yet I could not express it with my awkward English. Setting in order my desk the other day, I found an old letter from one of the younger girls at our school in Tokyo, and I read the following lines with a smile: "We were very much interested in thy last letter, which told us that thee was happy among the people who treated thee so kindly. We promised ourselves to be good to one another, and that if we should have a Chinese girl or a Korean girl with us, we would surely be kind to her and try every possible way to help her from being lonely."

The first few months at Westtown I was pretty busy, besides with my study, drinking in every impression, adjusting myself to the new surroundings, and reporting them to the friends at home.

At every event, great or small, I naturally thought of our school. Seeing the girls' health registered every week, for instance, did I not think what we might do with regard to our girls in the dormitory? Hearing the girls reminded of some things which they forgot or neglected, did I not think of some similar instances with our girls? Attending the Old Scholars' Day, and realizing how they were interested in the development of their dear Westtown, did I not think of our Old Students' Association, and hope and pray that it would also grow in numbers and power to back the school?

Westtown Boarding School and our Friends' Girls' School seem to me like sisters, the former being established by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, and the latter being supported by some of its members. This is one reason, perhaps, why I felt very much at home at Westtown, and had an unspeakable affection for it. The beauty of the place has unquestionably a great deal to do with one's happiness, but, after all, the people and the atmosphere of the school make the place beautiful, attractive, and comfortable, even when one does not know its long history.

Let me add a few more lines about my happy memory. It has been my desire for a long time that I may be able to study the real viewpoint of the Friends. Studying Quakerism and being in contact with some Philadelphia Friends in the past year, has helped me to get what I longed for, and has led me to a broader view and higher standard in the spiritual life. I am sure Westtown has given me what Columbia will not be able to give.—TOKI IWASAWA.

EXTRACTS FROM DIARIES AND LETTERS OF RICHARD B. BROCKBANK.

(Continued from page 183.)

Kilmarnock, 21-1-'86.—We were deeply interested and instructed with our trip to Ardrossan. There are three men and a son of one of them and his wife and a young woman. They are convinced of the truth and have come through Presbyterianism and other ways, seeking to live to God and to cease from sin. They are called in scorn Perfectionists, but I find it is a similar cavil of the professors to what has often been thrown at us. They have been at Fritchley and heard about the large and small bodies, but they know and want to know nothing about that. What they want is the Life and to live near to God and to unite with those who are in earnest herein. Their desire is to live soberly, righteously and godly, and they know Him who alone can enable them so to live. There are others in communion with them in the little towns we are going to and elsewhere, and they go about and sit with them and worship with them.

We had a little meeting with them, and it was solid and valuable. They go to Stewarton in the same way that we do, earnest for the cause.

It was fine to go into David Wilson's blacksmith shop, and see him lay down his hammer and welcome us, and then go and find Alexander Dunlop, a joiner, and go with him to John Anderson's—all strong men physically and spiritually, yet humble and childlike.

They find since they have become acquainted with Friends' books that the experiences they have come through and the place they have been led into are fully described by Isaac Penington and others. It was in the search for Friends' books that they got into correspondence with H. T. Wake and he got T. D. to call on John Anderson and see the others.

Maybole Station, 22-1-'86.—We have just walked in from Crosshill where we had a meeting last evening. Thos. Hannah came with us and we had a wagonette to take us out. We got there about two p. m. The meeting was at eight, about forty there, and a favored time.

David McCaughtree, at whose house we were kindly entertained, is a valuable Friend, though not a member. He is in unity with the Ardrossan Friends, and he has been convinced of the Truth and led out of the Established Church and then out of the Free, to attend to the life and light within. He is a precious man. There is a policeman and three youths and one or two that we did not see who are brought very near to the precious Truth. It is remarkable how they are brought off from things in which they have been busy, and including things which some amongst ourselves are going back into.

and brought to a simple poor dependence on the Lord alone, waiting patiently on Him for the arising of his Life and Light in their hearts. They are a lesson to us. We can but be sure that they may keep near to Him who hath convinced them, and abiding under his hand may become valiants in Him for the spread of the Truth and the building up of that spiritual church of the living God which we have been too careless about. Many of our Friends might learn a lesson down here, if they were open, but I fear they are too full of themselves and their own works and theories to acknowledge, and these men are doing, that they have to forsake all their willings and runnings and simply follow the Lord in his precious leadings and guidance by his own Light and Spirit in the secret of their hearts.

These men have been seeking holiness and have even been at Keswick, but they found not Him whom their soul longed for, even there, and they now find how near He is, and that they need not go to any of these places to find Him, and their delight is to sit down in a way that the world cannot understand, and which it cavils at, to wait for his arising, and to learn of Him.

We got a train shortly for Avr. where we can dine and go on to Dalmington, where we have a meeting to-night, which we have heard is made widely known. May we be preserved and kept by the Power of the Living God that He may be glorified.

Kilmarnock, 14-1-'86.—The meeting was not a very large one, say about fifty, but it was a very precious one, gathered into very great solemnity, in which we sat in silence a considerable time. I then had to stand for some time and the same precious feeling continued and dear D. spoke shortly, but with much unction when there was continued the same precious covering to the close. The three periods of silence were remarkable, and I believe we were favored not to dispel the sense thereof.

Kilmarnock, 16-1-'86.—We had a good meeting at Ardrossan last evening, and well attended, I should think one hundred and fifty, a solid serious people.

We were very kindly entertained in a very simple way at Ardrossan and had no difficulty. The power of Truth seemed over the meeting, and the hearts of the dear Friends were greatly comforted. They joined us in our room after, and prayer and praise went up very sweetly to the Author of all our Mercies.

Kilmarnock, 17-1-'86.—We had a smaller meeting at Irvine, only twenty to twenty-five, but an interesting serious time. There are three friendly people there who are meeting together as Friends. It is quite remarkable how many who have been a time in connection with the Brethren are looking deeper and turning towards Friends.

All these three are of that class. There is also a young woman who went down with us, who has been with them, and has been brought very near to Friends, and I think is now a member. She is an interesting and pious young woman—her mother had come among Friends when she was among the Brethren, and when she came out from them it was some time before she was enabled to give up to come to Friends' meeting. She had been shown that every one that nameth the name of Christ should depart from iniquity, and the Brethren thought she was going all wrong. When she did go to Friends' meeting, the first Friend who spoke stood up with the very same words. It was remarkable, and had a tendering effect on her. She has kept steadily to Meetings ever since, and is now a firm Friend.

Alexander Dunlop told me when at Keswick he was much struck with a black woman, Amanda Smith, praying that she might be made like Skiddaw. She wanted to be made steadfast, immovable, always standing firm. It was very expressive.

Kilmarnock, 10-1-'86.—The whole of our stepping so far have been in boundless mercy felt to be in the way of peace, and though we feel as the least and weakest of the flock we have been favored with the presence and power of God in humbling nearness and yet in comforting support and consolation.

The Androssian Friends and their companions to the number of twelve or fifteen came into the special meeting on Seventh-day, and one of them, Alexander Dunlop, stayed over yesterday, as well as Jas. Anderson from Glasgow. They held a small meeting at Kilmars in the evening after we left yesterday, so that we had the P. M. meeting here to ourselves, and it was a very precious season.

The meeting on Seventh-day afternoon was a very remarkable one. It would be difficult to have got together a more living and interested company, and we were glad to be with them and yet fearful in our steppings, lest the precious life should be oppressed in any.

Maybole, 20-p-'80.—We had a nice meeting here yesterday afternoon, in which David McCaughtree said we had been led to counteract some false statements which had been made about Friends. If so, it was by setting forth the Truth in its own clearness as we were favored to see it.

Girvan, 21-p-'80.—I only sent thee a P. C. yesterday. It was very remarkable how the way had been opened out for us there, so that we got a hall and willingness to help us at our first trip and again how well every thing went with us when there. The meeting was a much favored one, the power of Truth was over all. We had a few tracts and I went to give them out, some got hold of my hand as well as the tract and gave me a hearty handshake, and when the tracts were done they held out their hands in the most cordial way, and kept me standing shaking hands till they all got out.

Here Thos. Hannah had engaged a "Sma' kirk," formerly and still known as the "Unitarian Kirk." It is now let for any services. We did not like the name, but there was no help for it. We found a few bill forms which D. gave him filled up and on the walls, and so little seemed to be known that I thought we ought to send the bellman round. D. did not relish this, and as he had T. H.'s report of the arrangement which he had made and thought it was left to us to decide whether the bellman should go round or not. We went to the town crier and finally A. decided that we would leave it alone, as he could not bear the idea of being called through the town in connection with the "Unitarian Kirk." It was well he decided so, for when we were sitting at tea, Sarah Picken, who had come down to visit some of her friends, and to come to the meeting, came in and said she heard the bellman calling the meeting very nicely, he was not long till he came into the front of our lodging and gave notice in a voice clear enough to be heard all round. Then a young man, Robert Campbell, came in and told us that Thos. Hannah had arranged with him to get the bills posted and the notice given with the handbill by the bill poster which explained the matter. One of D. P.'s objections was the room was too small to invite so very publicly. My feeling was that I should be glad to see it full. The result was that we had upwards of 100, and the room would have held more. We were much helped and feel quite free to go on to Avy.

Peelby, 14-p-'80.—There was a great political meeting here last evening, which absorbed most of the meeting goers, and we had just A. Tod with us on the platform and two women for our audience. We do not read that our Saviour disclaimed to state some of the most solemn truths of our religion to an audience of only one woman. We, therefore, must leave it.

(To be continued.)

But I shall have to use "the weak things," and "things that are despised." He loves to put the treasure of his grace into the feeble, that the world may be compelled to ask, "Whence hath this man power?" J. H. JOWETT.

A poor man, served by thee, shall make thee rich;
A sick man, helped by thee, shall make thee strong;
Thou shalt be served thereby, every man,
Of service which thou renderest.

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.

SCARBOROUGH.

WM. C. ALLEN.

For "THE FRIEND."

The other day a London newspaper referred to the weather the preceding twenty-four hours as having been "deplorable." That struck me as being only a fairly good word. Our first few days at Scarborough were what most Englishmen call "beastly"—whatever that may mean. The biting wind, the relentlessly grey sky, the squalls of fine rain driving sideways out of leaden clouds, all seemed to make the word "deplorable" quite inadequate. The German Ocean was tossed into foam. The great waves and spray swept up against the cliffs and over the breakwaters. The angry ocean reflected dull and dreary skies. I thought:

O, thou restless sea,
Thou art showing me,
How grey thou canst be—
Thou grey, grey sea!

Scarborough is little known to Americans, but is one of the most alluring watering-places in the world. It lies close down by the coast and the old part of the city is quaint and interesting. There is a little harbor where great piers of concrete have been built out into the ocean, and, describing the good part of a circle, leave an opening to the south into which can run small vessels. A white lighthouse looks down protectively from near the harbor entrance. For say two miles from the old town, there stretches a magnificently curved beach to the south. Behind it rises a high cliff, upon the lower side of which are built some fine promenades, and numerous places for public entertainment, with battlements and towers, and offering much architectural beauty. Beautiful public gardens have been developed on every available spot up the rugged heights, with winding walks and steps, shrubbery and flowers. There are many resting-places whence one can look far down, through the nearby greenery, upon the animated beach scenes and white-foamed surf, and where the distant harbor and the old red-tiled roofed city lie beneath the ancient castle to the north. At the top of the cliff is the wide esplanade, with one side lined with hotels and residences, and the other affording an extended view of sea and land. The whole scene is full of wondrous detail and is very beautiful.

Back from the esplanade extends the city of apartments, hotels and private residences. There are some lifts, the cars of which quickly carry you at a penny a head from the beach level to the top of the cliffs. Away from the esplanade every few blocks are pretty little parks, enclosed in railings, and affording attractive views of the ocean.

The beach is a good deal like such everywhere in civilization. There are the usual throngs of "trippers" down for a holiday. Not infrequently the youthful swain of the humbler class is seen walking hand-in-hand with his particular adored one—they show to all the world their affection for each other. The shows on the strand are surrounded by gaping crowds. The little bathing-houses—so odd to Americans looking at them for the first time—are, as of yore, ready to receive their occupants, and, while the bathers are getting ready inside of them, they are hauled down to the surf by demure steeds, and from them one can step right down into the water. But some of the old English feeling as to what constitutes modesty is, I fear, giving way. In Scarborough you will see some young women going into the bath through the crowd on the beach with a lack of attire that would not be tolerated a moment in any watering place in the United States. Certainly they will no longer criticize our mingling of the sexes in modest attire in happy sport in the sea. But no doubt we all have honestly different points of view in very many things, and this fact may be remembered.

Scarborough Castle is a fine old ruin at the top of a great rock that juts out into the ocean. There are about sixteen acres at the top. Steep hillsides and precipices made it practically an impregnable fortress in the bad old days. Cromwell's army besieged it twice. You now climb to the walls and look for miles over the scene. The sea laves the marine-drive far below and to the east extends to the horizon. To the north is the newer part of the city, and southwards is the old town with its quaint roofs, teeming streets, the little harbor, the quay and fishing vessels, all in picturesque confusion. To the westward is the smiling country landscape. It is altogether a magnificent panorama. This old fort has seen some heroic as well as brutal sights. Here for a long time was confined George Fox, who by his suffering helped to purchase for the English-speaking race the religious and civil freedom they so largely enjoy. How horrible and relentless was the cold and wet he was compelled to endure in his vile dungeon! It has since disappeared owing to the inroads of the sea.

The locality of Scarborough abounds in beauty. Robin Hood's Bay is a joy. Whitby is so very lovely that, after being there eighteen years ago, I promised to visit it again, if possible. It is about one hour distant, on the coast, to the north. The little river at Whitby runs into the ocean where there are steep hills on either side, which are connected by bridges. On these hills are enticing red-tiled or tumble-down looking houses one above the other, joined together in the most picturesque way imaginable. The narrow streets and steps wind up and up from the water. The brick-red and brown colored sails of the little fishing-boats—"cobles" they call them—lazily fill with wind out on the dancing waters. The ancient quay is alive with tourists, while ropes, children and hardy sailors are all mixed up in delightful fashion. At our feet—it is low tide—the "Dora Ann" and "Mary Ann" rub gunwales, whilst the "Rock of Ages" slowly comes up to the stone steps at the quay-side, loaded with nets and flecked with fish-scales. Artists abound. Ah! Whitby is a grand place for a holiday!

Or, possibly, you go out for a drive into the country and on the moors. The smooth roads and winding hedges or stone walls, the brilliant flower beds, the pretty wayside cottages or distant houses of the rich, always charm the visitors to England. Up on the moors the heather is in bloom. The lovely purple heather of these wind-swept heights can never be forgotten. The storm has all gone now and the air for miles is fragrant with the scent of new-mown hay and the perfume of flowers. Then you return, and before evening see Scarborough in the glorious sunshine. You walk out into the gardens on the south cliff, where acres of roses, geraniums, lobelia and gay wall-flowers nod and play in the afternoon air. The terraced cliff is alive with people. The grim old castle is outlined against the northern horizon, and hitherto unsuspected colors are revealed in the beautiful city beneath it. The sky melts into the ocean in sapphire. The white beach, the grey rocks, and pretty tower of the Spa lie at your feet. On the bosom of the sea countless vessels ride at anchor, their masts pointing toward heaven, from which seems to descend the message that God's love is ruling over all.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

Extract from a Letter to Benjamin Kite, by his brother-in-law, John Leitchworth. Ninth Month 1, 1813.

On this year Ohio Yearly Meeting was first held. The men's meeting convened on Second-day, sixteenth of Eighth Month. It was held under a shed, adjoining Short Creek Meeting-house, in which the women met and, I understand, filled it. If thou pictures to thyself, one of the sheds of your brickyards, forty-five by seventy-five feet, with blocks laid upon the ground, on which are rough boards for seats, and midway of its length a passageway for two-thirds of the distance where are two benches with backs for the Clerks, etc., the front of the shed boarded up about three feet, thou canst have a tolerable idea of the men's apartment. Yet here, even here, Benjamin, business can, under right authority, be conducted with propriety.

From John Heald to Benjamin Kite.

This, the first Yearly Meeting, was attended by, I suppose, two thousand Friends, some estimate the number as being larger. A solemnity attended all the sittings.

Near the close my mind was led to review in retrospect, the time when the number of Friends' families in Ohio (about 1785) did not amount to ten. I remembered the opening of the first Preparative Meeting, the first Monthly and then a Quarterly, now a Yearly Meeting, attended by such a very large number of solid Friends, and all this in my lifetime. And I said in my heart, "How great things hast Thou done for Thy people."

TEMPERANCE.

A department edited by BENJAMIN F. WHITSON, of Moylan, Pa., on behalf of the Friends' Temperance Association of Philadelphia.

"ABSTINENCE is not fanaticism or asceticism, but rational self-control in respect to something which is fraught with untold risks."—SIR THOMAS BARLOW.

EVIL is in perpetual outlawry, and wheresoever it would set foot is under prohibition from the foundation of the world.—JOHN G. WOOLEY.

THE International Medical Congress met in London this year. Our friend, Wm. C. Allen, writing from there, said: "About seven thousand are attending the Congress." He enclosed a clipping from the London Times, as follows:—

Sir Thomas Barlow, President of the Congress [Physician to the late King Edward] said that the progress of the temperance question in this country during the last generation had been very remarkable indeed in almost every rank of society. It was most pleasing to chronicle the growth of the movement in our army and navy, and one of the chief features of that had been the growth of an altruistic conscience among the officials of those services. In the commercial class the change had been enormous. Even men who were not teetotalers themselves recognized the enormous value of having abstainers in their service. In this strenuous time of the motor and the enormous acceleration of railway and steamship traffic the contention that alcohol took away the sense of control had become accepted by the logic of fact. The administration of alcohol in the hospitals was nothing less than a revolution. Instead of the old time, when alcohol was ordered as a matter of course, the doctor now felt when he ordered alcohol that he should prescribe how much he was going to give and for how long. The drink bill in this country, however, was still enormously large, and they must be on the qui vive on every side to see that alcohol did not get the better of them. Referring to the growth of medicated wines, the speaker said, "Do let us adopt common sense, and stamp out these medicated wines." He added that definite conviction against alcohol would bring material loss, but such a thing was not everything. Let them not be afraid of their convictions, or of being set down as faddists.

SUCCESSFUL MEN TOTAL ABSTAINERS.—Edward W. Bok, editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, says: "The most successful men in America to-day are those who never lift a wine-glass to their lips. Becoming interested in this fact, I had the curiosity to inquire personally into it. I found that of twenty-eight of the leading business men in the country, whose names I selected at random, twenty-two never touched a drop of wine. I made up my mind that there was some reason for this. If liquor brought safe pleasures why did these men abstain from it?"

DISGUSTINGLY APPARENT.—"I wish to say that all through this case there is the evidence that drink had its paralyzing influences upon the morals and the minds of these men and the young girls with whom they went on that trip to Reno. The terrible, debasing influence of the saloon and the road-house is too disgustingly apparent, and I make the observation here that society must pay the price for permitting the existence of these highly objectionable places."—JUDGE VAN FLEET, of the U. S. District Court, San Francisco.

A SCATHING ARRANGMENT.—Not long since a New York magistrate, Whittan by name, in addressing the New York Lawyers' Club, was moved to make a most scathing arraignment of the liquor traffic. He said: "Personally if I had the power I would close every saloon in the United States, and I am not a crank or fanatic on the liquor question. I drink myself whenever I care to, and probably shall continue to do so. I am willing that every other man shall have the same rights that I have. But when you sit on the bench that I sit on and see seventy per cent. of the cases which come before you, and see the misery, distress, and crime, all due to liquor-selling—I say, any man with red blood in his veins is likely to feel that the world would be infinitely better off if the liquor saloons could be crushed out, cost what it may. I believe it is the most abominable, the most outrageous, and the most inhuman influence in New York City."—Selected.

CHESTER COUNTY GRAND JURY REPORTS BIG REDUCTION IN VIOLENCE.—The report notes the greatest decrease in crime, from sections of the county where liquor licenses have been curtailed or entirely wiped out. It also notes that all through most of the cases brought to its notice there was the evidence that drink had its paralyzing influence upon the minds and morals of accused persons.

It adds: "The debasing influence of the saloon has been so apparent in a majority of the cases that we feel compelled to make the observation that the general public must pay the price for permitting the existence of these highly objectionable sources of crime."

EDUCATION MAKES AN ALIGNMENT FOR TEMPERANCE.—A variety of agencies have co-operated to bring to the knowledge of children in the public schools some of the reasons for temperance and abstinence as they have to do with intoxicating liquors. Thus it is that the school has become an open critic and opponent of the saloon. But colleges and universities, especially the latter, have not been equally vigilant. Not even on the sociological and economic sides of the problem have students had light, not to mention the ethical and spiritual. The older, richer and more socially entangled the institution the less inclined have been its officials to commit the university in any way to what might be deemed partizanship on a matter involving the personal habits of donors, teachers and students.

Over against this attitude it is well to contrast that of the educational department of the University of California, which is now providing a course for undergraduates which counts toward a degree. Its general topic is "Social Aspects of the Liquor Problem." Several hundred students enrolled at the start. More will enroll later. The lectures have scheduled subordinate topics that indicate a broad, inclusive treatment of the theme. For youths who wish to be intelligent citizens when called upon to vote on license or prohibition, local or state; for incipient law-makers who must sooner or later frame statutes that meet conditions caused by intemperance; and for persons preparing to serve society as ethical guides, whether as teachers, journalists or as speakers to the populace, what more pertinent choice of study could be made?

The advantage of instruction on this subject gained in such a place is that it is more likely to be exact and fair than if coming from other sources. The university teacher is under bonds to truth. He usually investigates before he generalizes. He weighs before he affirms. This being the case the more credit is due to his increasing attention on this issue with the years. It is to be prophetic and zealous temperament, and his words and conclusions are nearer to-day than ever before in a common advice judgment on intemperance.—Christianian Monitor.

"E with your heels so that all can see,
Sax to the King He can count on me
To push on the fight till the earth is free,
Free from the Tyrant Rum."

BAD COMPETITION FOR FARMERS.—Every thing which the farmer sends to market, cattle, grain, poultry products—whatever he sends, must be sold in competition with the saloon. So far as the greater part of the farmers' products are concerned, this is direct competition. In every one of the great cities of the land the farmer's meat, the farmer's grain, the farmer's eggs, the farmer's milk go into a market that is impoverished by the saloon's robbery. Every year the saloon takes from the people in the neighborhood of two and one-half billions of dollars, a very large part of it from people whom the robbery makes poor and who are therefore less profitable customers of legitimate trade, have less money to spend for the necessities, comforts and luxuries of life. There is in all our economic system no other one thing and no combination of things so hostile to the real welfare of the farmer as the liquor traffic.

THE DELAWARE COUNTY [PENNSYLVANIA] NO-LICENSE CAMPAIGN.—The success of the No-License movement in Chester County last year in which nearly half of the licenses were revoked or refused, encouraged a number of the citizens of this County to institute a similar contest.

Delaware County, according to the information gathered from the Prothonotary's office has, at the present time, seventy-six hotels and fourteen stores to whom licenses have been granted to sell liquors. The county has five bottlers and one brewery. Fifty-one of these hotels, twelve of the stores, one of the bottlers and the brewery are located in Chester. The County outside of Chester has twenty-five hotels, two stores, four bottlers.

As illustrating some of the difficulties that must be contended with under the Brooks High License Law of Pennsylvania, which gives large discretion to the Court, and virtually no power to the people, it may be cited that last year a remonstrance against a certain saloon operated by a relative of the family controlling the Chester Brewing Company was signed by eight hundred voters of the precinct, beside six hundred other citizens, while the petition for the license was signed by three hundred only. And yet this license was granted. At the same time another applicant for a license presented a petition signed by thirty persons against which was a remonstrance signed by thirty-one persons. The Court refused this license on the ground of majority against license.

FOREST NOTES.

THE Balkan war has brought about a rise in certain lumber prices in Europe because of the big demand for wood for ammunition boxes.

DOGWOOD, the principal source of shuttles for use in cotton mills, is growing scarcer year by year, and various substitutes are being tried, but with no great success.

THE officials of the Yosemite National Park are co-operating with the forest officers of the Stanislaus and Sierra national forests for fire prevention and control in both the Park and the forests.

EXPERIMENTS with a tree-planting machine at the Utah Agricultural Experiment Station indicated that it may be used to advantage in reforesting old burned areas on the national forests.

THE leading forest schools of the country not only have their own forest tracts for continuous experiments, but give their students actual experience in the woods by having them take part in big lumbering operations.

ONE of the sweetest promises of God's word is, "Your sorrow shall be turned into joy." A confident faith and trust in Jesus Christ as our Saviour will cause sorrow to flee away and joy to fill the heart.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

IF MEN WOULD JUST BE KIND.

My home is in the lourest tree
Here in my master's yard,
And he holds me, and I hold him
In strictest kind regard;
He will not let the cats come near
My lovely nesting limb,
And I—why, morning, noon and night
I gladly sing to him.

He loves to whistle notes to me
And have me whistle back,
You ought to see his smiling face,
He always calls me "Jack;"
And says, "Now, Jack, let's try again
So Polly girl can hear,"
And, to the woman at his side,
He'll say, "Now listen, dear!"

And then we whistle, he and I,
Some simple sweet refrain,
First soft and low, then loud and free,
Again and yet again;
I try my best to imitate
Each quaver and each note;
Sometimes to follow where he leads
It fairly splits my throat.

But he is such a lovely man
I always do my best,
And I would whistle all day long
If it were his request;
We mocking-birds love kindly men
And I am ready quite,
Because that man is kind to me,
To whistle day and night.

All men are not so kind, alas,
Some of them like to kill,
Not that they are in need of food,
But just to show their skill;
They think it is the proper thing
To take a cruel gun,
And slip around and kill a bird
And call such murder fun.

If all the men were nice and kind
The birds would all be tame,
And each would whistle all day long,
And answer to his name;
We all love people who are good,
And all the world would find
That birds would love all men alike,
If men would just be kind.

—JAKE H. HARRISON, in Our Dumb Animals.

"BILLY BOTHER."—It sounds strange to speak of any one as having too good a mother, yet John Harrison has come to the conclusion that that is the trouble with one of his companions.

Of course, he does not mean good in its broad ethical sense, but as signifying a mother who is too easy-going and indulgent, too ready to do things for her son that he ought to be made to do himself. John tells how he came to think as he does:

"Last fall six of us set off on a hunting and camping trip up the Temestigua River. We were to be gone eighteen days. We took our kit along, of course, and carried loads, but we had our heaviest stuff packed on an old horse that we hired for the trip.

"Billy was one of the youngest of the party. He is a pretty good boy, sunny-tempered and pleasant to get along with —that is, he would be but for one fault. That came out when we got away from civilization, and began to camp in the wilderness.

"With a party in camp the work has to be divided. Billy had a rather easy share, the rest of us thought. The 'cook' himself washed the dishes; all Billy had to do, mornings, was to pack up the camp kit in a large sack, and see that it was on the old horse's back.

"The first morning we moved, Billy left the camp-axe behind, sticking in a log. We didn't discover it was missing until we stopped for lunch. The cook had to go back, seven miles, after it.

"The next day it was the small case containing his comb, hair-brush, tooth-brush, soap and towel that he left behind; and this time Billy himself had to go back. He wasted four hours for us all.

"The other boys grumbled; but Billy promised to do better, and next day he managed not to forget anything. But the day after, he forgot the frying-pan—and of course, we had to go after it.

"By that time some of us were growing indignant; and when, the next day, or the next but one, Billy contrived to leave the lantern and the can-opener behind, there was some disagreeably plain talk in camp. Billy was taken off the packing job and set at dish-washing.

"But the very next morning he left his towel hanging on a bush by the river. In fact, he reached the headwaters in a very destitute state; he had contrived to leave most of his personal belongings behind at one camp or another. We had to take turns lending to him; and the cook at length nicknamed him, 'Billy Bother.'

"The last day we had a rather long march to make; for we needed to reach the railway station at half past two in the afternoon, to catch the one train of the day. We therefore got everything ready the night before, and made an early start the next morning. As we were packing up, Billy remarked that he had broken his boot-lace, and hadn't any. The cook gave him one. 'Now put it in to-night, Billy,' said he.

"But Billy neglected it, and somehow lost the lace. In the hurry of starting off before sunrise, he patched up the broken lace, and went on.

"We got within two miles of the station and left our old horse at two o'clock; then we started to make the rest of the distance in half an hour. We had our packs and guns to carry, but where it was down-hill, we loped along at a run.

"Just as we were reaching the station, we missed Billy. He had been behind all the way, fussing with that boot-lace. The cook ran back, and shouted for him to hurry up. A quarter of a mile up the road he saw something tumbling round on the ground. It was Billy. In trying to run with that unlaced boot, he had turned his ankle—sprained in quite badly. He was crying. The cook had to pick him up and stay by him.

"The train came in and steamed away without us; for of course we could not leave two of our party behind. We had to remain at the station all night, with little to eat.

"I have since visited in Billy's family. Among his people he does just as he did on that trip with us. When he comes in from school, down go his books, helter-skelter; he throws his hat in one place, his gloves in another; and as for his overshoes, it takes the whole family to find them when he goes out.

"Evidently that is the way he has always done; for his mother is one of those kind, affectionate people, who seem to spend half their lives picking up after others.

"That is why I think that Billy has had too good a mother."
—Youth's Companion.

WHY THE LEAVES CHANGE COLOR.—Despite the commonness of autumn coloring, we do not yet know the full meaning of autumn colors of leaves. We do know that late in the summer the tree is preparing for the leaf fall by drawing the valuable substances of the leaf into the stem. It also ceases to make chlorophyll (the green substance of the leaf which aids in the making of the plant's food), and this gradually fades away in the bright light. By fading it exposes to view any other colors in the leaf; and all leaves contain yellow coloring matters called xanthophyll (whose function is not known), and it is these which give the yellow color to autumn leaves.

The red is formed differently: in bright light and cool temperature a new substance, called erythrophyll, is made from sugar and tannin in the leaf cells, and that has a red color. A brown substance is also sometimes formed, and, besides, the skeleton of the leaf itself turns brown as the leaf dies. It is the various combinations of these substances that give the many shades of autumn colors. Some students think these colors are a useful protection to the living protoplasm (life material) of the leaf after the green disappears, protecting it against the full blaze of light, which is injurious; but others think the colors have no use at all, but are simply the incidental chemical result of the processes in the ripening and dying leaf.

As yet the weight of evidence seems to favor the latter view, but the matter is still unsettled. It is generally thought that frost has something to do with it; but it has not, except to hasten it. Anything which affects the vitality of the leaf tends to hasten it, for which reason an injured branch of a maple will often show red autumn color even in summer.

The colors are brightest where the leaves receive the most brilliant sunlight.—Prof. W. F. GANONG, in St. Nicholas.

OUR TESTIMONY AGAINST WAR.

For a Tower of Babel? or a Temple of God?

In "Quaker Strongholds," Caroline Stephen draws a sharp dividing line between "the deplorable caricature of that testimony against all war which has been at once the boast and the reproach of Quakerism," and "its essence and true significance." Some of her readers have been puzzled at such an utterance from a Friend who was held in great esteem, and who has made most valuable additions to the literature of our Society.

But Caroline Stephen goes on to say that "the question on which we Friends differ from all other Christians is not the question whether peace be desirable—whether it be not in fact the goal of all political effort—but what are the means by which it is to be attained or maintained." In other words, it is of the utmost importance to consider whether our testimony against war relies upon external means, or demands that each of our members shall become a habitation of God by the spirit—God working in us "both to will and to work for His good pleasure." A Quaker Stronghold is a manifestation of union with Christ; whatever is done from the standpoint of a world-policy belongs to another category altogether.

This distinction between the two kinds of security can be traced all through Divine revelation. The building of the city and tower on the plains of Shinar was a concerted endeavor to seek safety apart from God; and, many centuries later on, we read of Isaiah pleading with his fellow countrymen against strengthening the nation by means of alliances with people who knew not Jehovah. He said: "Associate, ye peoples, and ye shall be broken in pieces; take counsel, and it shall be brought to nought—with us is God." Commenting upon the words of Isaiah, G. Adam Smith says:—"God with us (Immanu-El) is the one great fact of life." "No cleverness of their own can create a satisfactory condition of affairs. . . . Short of faith, as Isaiah exemplified it, there is no possibility for the part of man to be freed from uneasiness." And when Paul's and in another connection: "In returning and rest let us be saved, in quietness and confidence shall be your strength. Ye did not ask his restless countrymen to yield blindly to an infinite force. . . . But to bring their conduct into harmony with a reasonable and gracious plan, which might be read in the historical events of the time, and was indicated in the latter prophetic sentiments."

So also, in all effort to introduce better methods into human intercourse, the Christian "way of life" aims to alter outside conditions through changing the hearts of men. As G. Adam Smith says, in another place, "A nation's politics are not arbitrary; they are not dependent on the will of kings, or the management of parties—they are the outcome of the nation's character. What the people are, that will their politics be. If you wish to reform the politics, you must first regenerate the people. . . . for the greater number of errors committed by their rulers, the blame must be laid on the people's own want of character."

This defect being inherent in most efforts toward social improvement, some spiritually minded leaders have taught the necessity for seeking a unifying truth which will rescue from fragmentariness all efforts for the uplift of humanity. Phillips Brooks has pointed out that "superficialness and fragmentariness go together." So that the demand must be "for more profundness—an appeal from the surface to the heart of things." "If," he continues, "we could believe in one great utterance of God, one incarnate word—the manifested pity of God, and the illustrated possibility of man, all at once—then, with such a central point, there could be no fragmentariness anywhere. All must fall into its relation to it—to Him. Blessings of every sort are reflections of one great blessing. Powers of every sort are glimpses of that possible manhood which was manifest in Him. Love of every kind is God's love. The centre once set, the circle builds itself."

And, in so far as Friends' principles express the truths upon which they are founded, they become part of a spiritual unity giving to their testimonies their true meaning. One such basal truth has a two-sided aspect—viz., not only that God, who is Light and Love, hath shined into our hearts, and hath sent His Son to be the Light of the world; but also that this light is bestowed upon us that our lives might illumine others. And any testimony which is really the light of our lives should, like that of our great Exemplar, though in lesser degree, cause other men, as Phillips Brooks says, "to feel within them the holiest capacities, quickening them through and through, bidding them be themselves." Consequently every testimony so borne tends to bring other lives into the true line of man's humanity. "The more a man becomes irradiated with Divinity, the more, not less truly, he is a man. . . . The wonder is that any child of God should live outside of it. . . . For Christ made all generations to see in Him how the son of man is the son of God in the very foundation and intention of his life."

Viewed from this standpoint, the testimony of Friends against all war should be the witness for Christ by men who have become temples of God's spirit—a declaration of their faith that "Christ must become the master of the soul and of the world." Let us, therefore, again put to ourselves the questions with which we started—Is our testimony of a kind that is helped by an alliance with materialism in any of its guises? Or is it wholly begotten by "that of God" amongst us? Are we acting upon the belief that spirit is stronger than matter; and, in this way, showing "the faith and patience of the saints?" Is our Spirit, in this particular, a "Candle of the Lord?"

To quote Caroline Stephen again—"When I came to understand that the Quaker testimony against all war did not take the form of any ethical rule, which could be immediately and universally applied, but was simply the acting out (in one's own person and at one's own risk) of obedience to that which one's heart had been taught to recognize as Divine authority—even where its commands transcended and came into collision with those of the nation—I felt at once that the position was not only perfectly tenable, but that it was the only one worthy of faithful disciples. . . . I do not see how the national standard of duty can be raised—how, in other words, the nation can ever become thoroughly Christianized—except through individual faithfulness (at all costs and at all risks) to a higher view of duty than that held by the nation at large. . . . To yield one's self unreservedly to Divine guidance; resolutely, and at whatever cost, to refuse to participate in that which one's own conscience has been taught to condemn—this is the ancient and inestimable Quaker truth. It is surely the best, the most effectual, and the most Christian way of witnessing against evil and of arousing the consciences of others."—J. F. M., in The Australian Friend, FRIENDS BOARDING SCHOOL, near Barnesville, Ohio, opened on the twenty-ninth of Ninth Month under most favorable auspices. The number of students has only been exceeded once before in the history of the School here. The winter of 1876-77 was the largest, when there were a total of one hundred and nine students, fifty-five boys and fifty-four girls, the present year we start with a total of ninety-four, there being sixty girls and thirty-four boys. These include representatives from all the seven Conservative Yearly Meetings on this continent and are distributed as follows: Forty-two from Ohio, twenty-nine from Iowa, nine from Indiana, two from New Mexico, one each from Kansas, Virginia, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Vermont, and four from Canada. Of this number, forty-eight are new, and twenty-five are starting in the Senior Class, making the largest graduating class the School has ever had. With a corps of six teachers and the added equipment, the School is in shape to take good care of its students. After the fire in the Spring of 1910, the buildings were very materially changed and added to. Those who came here this fall were one and all impressed with the beauty of the grounds and the simple but substantial improvements in and around the buildings. What old students of the School know as the "Old Gym" was fitted up during the summer for a dormitory for the girls and is very neat and homelike in its appearance. It accommodates fifteen girls and one teacher, this makes three dormitories, two for the girls and one for the boys. An effort is being made to make the life here as homelike as possible. The students have charge of the housekeeping of their dormitories, boys as well as girls, and the training in this care has been found to be considerable. Besides this, two years ago, the boys built a large Gymnasium building, under the leadership of one of the teachers, which has proved a great benefit to the School and to the boys engaged in the building of it as well. It is the policy of the management to maintain a School that shall uphold in its training all that Friends have believed to be essential, a guarded religious education and one to fit its children for the business of life, they also have endeavored to cater to the needs of the Conservative Yearly Meetings and indications seem to be that they have in good measure succeeded in this. The endeavor to make the School homelike and attractive has had an elevating tone on the morals of the School, as those who knew of the conditions under both the old and the present conditions will testify, and while the constituency of the School is limited there seems good prospect for a continuance of its present size.

The officers at the present time are: Jos. C. and Elizabeth Stratton, of Winona, Ohio, Superintendent and Matron. Teachers: J. Wetherill Hutton and Wilmer J. Young, both graduates of Haverford College; Amy Grace Makeel, of Jacksonville, N. Y., and a graduate of Cornell; M. Elizabeth Whitacre, of Muncy, Pa., a teacher of long experience in various schools in Philadelphia Yearly Meeting; also Ellen S. Cope and Mary H. Moore.

Don't say, What can a word do?

It takes so little to help a soul.

Don't say it was only a word;

It takes so little to hurt a soul.

—CHARLES WAGNER.

To work, to help and to be helped, to learn sympathy through suffering, to learn faith by perplexity, to reach truth through wonder; behold! this is what it is to prosper; this is what it is to live.—PHILLIPS BROOKS.

WESTTOWN NOTES.

The School enjoyed the company of Joseph and Sarah W. Elkinton on First-day last. They attended our morning meeting in which Joseph Elkinton had service; in the afternoon with a few others from the School they were present at an appointed meeting held in the Goshenville Meeting-house, and in the evening Joseph Elkinton spoke in the boys' and girls' collections.

His topic in the boys' collection was "Four Plank in a Young Man's Platform." These in brief were: (1) a willingness to recognize the elements of goodness in the world in which we live. (2) A determination to do some constructive work every day of every work. (3) A recognition of the wisdom of experience and openness of mind toward those who are older and have seen more of life, and (4) chief of all an assurance that the motive power of our actions is based on that which is the only sure foundation for all right living and thinking.

The address before the girls related to Christian education among the Japanese and was made the more interesting by personal experiences of the speaker. The Westtown family is grateful for such visits as this.

Our library at Westtown is one of the valuable assets of the School. No one claims that it compares with those of many other schools, but it meets the reasonable demands and needs of our pupils. There are about 6500 volumes on the shelves, and boys and girls at different times have unrestricted access to them at various periods during the week; the more advanced students do much of their history and English reading in the library, so that as a matter of fact the room is in use almost every hour of the entire day.

The funds available for new books are quite limited, and the price of books having advanced considerably the past few years, it is possible to place on our shelves comparatively few of the many desirable books; it has often occurred to some why the practice of presenting books to the library has never become the custom at Westtown. The special Committee in charge of the library would have to pass on what was offered, but it is not probable that a questionable selection would be made. Within the past fortnight Joshua L. Baily has donated three new volumes recently put out by Headley Brothers, Trevelyan's Life of John Bright, Crossfield's Margaret Fell Fox and Lewis' Life of Whittier.

There is one tier in the library devoted to Friends' books; we of course have a full representation from the choice collection published under the oversight of the Book Committee, but there are several, notably those of recent date and published in England, that should be on the shelves, but the annual appropriations for new books are in large measure exhausted before these are reached.

The Literary Union at its meeting last week had this program:—"Some Friends Who Have Labored Conspicuously Outside the Limits of the Society." Six essays of exceptional merit were read on John G. Whittier, John Woolman, John Bright, John Fothergill, John Bellows and Elizabeth Fry.

On Seventh-day the eighteenth the Classes of '00 and '10 held reunions; one had the use of the Lake House, and the other of the Alumni Shack. About forty attended, several of them remaining over night at the Farm House and attending meeting the next morning.

The "Field Sports" alluded to last week, were held on the boys' campus the afternoons of Fifth, Sixth and Seventh-days. L. Ralston Thomas, in charge of the boys' athletics, is largely responsible for the good showing made by the boys and for the splendid spirit of good comradeship displayed throughout. The season for football and hockey has now begun; there will be Seventh-day afternoon games with old scholars in all of these as the season advances.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EDITORS OF THE FRIEND.—It seems to me that there was never a time when more openings were afforded to The Philadelphia Peace Association for effective service in a righteous cause, nor when it was more vitally important that its work should be expanded and pushed with energy as well as wisdom. To-day by direction of its executive Committee a message was sent to President Wilson approving his policy of patience and non-intervention in dealing with the difficult Mexican situation, and encouraging him to persevere in it. The very important work of Gilbert Bowles in spreading among influential men in Japan such facts and arguments as will strengthen a kindly feeling in that country towards the Government and people of the United States, and promote peace between the two countries, claims continual attention. A large number of copies of the Advocate of Peace (the organ of the American Peace Society) are being distributed in Japan among the most intelligent English-speaking people. Assistance is being given in educating in this country a chosen young man of good family and training at home for the important position

A copy of the Common Bowls in his official service for the Japan Peace Society. My copies of the same is being constantly distributed among schools, colleges, and public libraries in and beyond our own State. From another a knowledgeable copy of "The Impeachment of President Isard" recently by the principal of a Normal Training School in one of our neighboring countries, and typical of many such. I quote the following:

"The book is indeed valuable. It is now circulating in my junior class, and will later pass to the senior class. I would prefer to read it aloud in the school during our general exercises but that we have all work planned for the daily period in October. When all have read it we will take it up for discussion. I have made excellent use of the other two books, you are doing a great work, do not grow weary."

I am writing because our treasury is now empty, and in hope that some of your able and liberal readers may come promptly to our relief. About 600 hundred dollars will probably be needed between this and next spring and our work be curtailed. Our treasurer is J. Linton Engle, 516 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

JOHN B. GARRETT.

WILMINGTON, Pa., Teeth Month 15, 1913.

CHRYSWOOD, N. S. Wales, Seventh Month 29, 1913.

My Dear Friend, Joseph Elkinton:—

Please convey to thy dear mother my warm thanks for, and appreciation of, the Memoirs of thy dear father, which arrived safely a short time since. The memory of the just is indeed blessed, and the path they traveled "as the shining light, shining more and more unto the perfect day." I have often thought of his kindness in coming down to Baltimore on purpose to see me—a blessing I little deserved, and I fear only partly appreciated at the time, for my illness had left me weak in many ways, and my sense of many things dulled. In thinking of him, and John Bellows, thyself and others, I feel thankful that the Lord was pleased to use a weak and faulty instrument like me (though what He hath cleansed is not common or unclean, blessed forever be His Holy Name) to open the door for the Princess of His people to come through, and work. And now well, thirteen years have passed away since my illness in your land, and they had me weak and unclean pretty much to the house for about four years past—with no pain worth mentioning—eating and sleeping well—with kind children and friends, and every blessing a mortal could rightly desire. Again, He hath not withheld "His tender mercies from me," but oft refreshes me with a sense of His cheering and sustaining presence. He is, and ever has been, faithful to all that He has promised, even to the humblest folk, and though many of His dealings with me have been very mysterious, and different to what I expected, I know all were, and are being ordered in perfect wisdom, and infinite love. I shall understand some day, and praise Him for all.

The people in New Zealand and their commonwealth have had a net share to offer them by the military power, without their consent, by which they are to be drilled and trained as soldiers—false ideas of national duty, duty and patriotism are implanted—three of the ten Commandments openly ignored, and under certain circumstances Civil War took subsequent to a Military tribunal. Unfortunately the people generally seem asleep to the true nature of this so-called "Defence Act," which is costing at the rate of 15,000,000 a year—the Press and a large proportion of the Pulpit, favor it, or are afraid to oppose it. Cases of suffering, especially among the poor and respectable class, are increasing. In New Zealand had are being severely punished, and there is no help except, as some are imprisoned again and again. The effect is disastrous. A well-to-do lady, S. S. teachers and scholars, seeing the attitude of the churches, are no longer of becoming infidels. They are making common cause with Freeland, and three or four English Friends are there. I have had a very good confession. A young man, who had studied the Bible, to know the truth, and to do the matter made a short, full and firm statement as to the same, and was sentenced, but I believe has been set free. He left his situation through it, but a Friend in New Zealand, in his development. Quite lately had at Newcastle, aged 25 years, a very good confession. I believe a grand-son of a friend of mine, Isaac Sharp, has had twenty days' confinement in jail for a similar confession. A Friend at Adelaide has had a fortnight's confinement regarding his son, and one in Melbourne has been fined, and confined in prison for the same offense.

Eight Month 7th. —Thear S. S. Croeland is again arrested. I respected this would happen, as the Area Officer had asked for a heavy sentence at his former conviction, as his conduct weakened his authority with the other lads. He was sentenced to fifty days' drill in barracks, but was released at the end of twenty, as he quietly but firmly refused to do anything. He is spoken of as a quiet, reserved lad, but a great favorite with his companions—some of whom, at an earlier stage in the matter, refused to drill unless he did. One feels much for him, and his family, and many more; and longs that they may stand firm, through all, in their allegiance to the Prince of Peace. If trying to stand alone, this military power will probably crush them, and may make slaves or anarchists (but never patriots), but if, laying hold on the Lord Jesus, and allowing Him to lay hold on them, and guide, govern, and teach them, by His Holy Spirit, they may shake these lands from end to end. As in the days of our fathers, "a little one may yet be a thousand," and though Satan seems to have leave to try the people of God again, as in the days of Job, Daniel and others, yet his powers are limited and his efforts will fail. A remark of Josiah Southwick (a brother of the New England maiden, whom Whittier has immortalized in one of his poems) has been much with me the past few months, "they that know the Lord to be their strength, need not fear what man can do." The present outlook in the world to-day seems very dark; though it is probably the ending of the powers of evil, before the glorious morn of God's Everlasting Day, breaks over the whole earth. While anything like speculation is unwise and futile—yet there are many portions of Holy Scripture that cause one to feel that the end of the present dispensation is drawing nigh. These horrible machines for destruction in the "air," seem foretold by the pouring out of the vial of the seventh angel having the seven last plagues (Rev. 16, 17). Then, the tendency to ignore and question all authority and the lack of reverence for anything which seems to me to be increasing. Holy Scripture (the Written Word) Living utterance, through anointed messengers (the Spoken Word) are these the "Two Witnesses" to be slain and to lay in the street of the spiritual Sodom for a season? (Rev. 11 chap.). I know not, but in my long, quiet hours, I dwell on many things—as a little child, ready to learn—but not as a student, or teacher. These Witnesses were never buried—always visible—but apparently had lost for a time their power and authority, till "the Spirit of life from God" entered into them afresh. I am much interested in reading of thy movements, from time to time, in THE FRIEND, which E. P. Sewell kindly sends me, and also in much other information contained therein. I am reading and have read nearly half thy dear father's memoirs, with much interest and profit. His single, watchful eye, to the Lord's guidance and requirements, is very instructive, and makes one long for oneself and others that we were more diligent and careful in this respect. Still it is for each servant of the Lord, to follow and obey Him, as He leads and directs. To copy another, or try to walk in another's footsteps, is apt to prove disappointing, if not dangerous. We all have a perfect pattern. May all strive by His grace and good Spirit, to be more and more like Him, and worthy of Him, and though we all feel how very far short we come, let us ever remember that "He is able to keep us from falling, and to present us faultless before the presence of His glory, with exceeding joy." With much love to you, and all my friends, I am thine truly.

JOSEPH J. NEAVE.

FRIENDLY NEWS.

PRESIDENT ISAAC SHARPLESS will address the Tea Meeting at Twelfth Street Meeting-house, Eleventh Month 3rd, at 7.30 P. M., speaking on his recent experiences and impressions in Japan, of the religious needs of that nation, the progress of Christianity and of Friends' work there. Invitations have been extended to all adult members of the Yearly Meeting to be present; supper will be served in the tea-room at 5.30 o'clock. If through some oversight any fail to receive invitations they will be gladly welcome anyway, the only request being made that they notify, before Eleventh Month 1st, Isabella L. Pennock, 2117 Chestnut Street, of their expectation of being present.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—In a recent meeting of the National Fire Prevention Convention held in this city it was stated that the annual loss through fires in this country is $150,000,000, and that fire-proof construction is a prime necessity in fire prevention and that wire-glass windows are preferable to iron shutters.

In a recent address in this city Commissioner J. Denny O'Neil, of Pittsburgh, contended that the youth of the nation was exposed to the gravest of all dangers in the saloon and that 90 per cent. of crime is caused by indulgence in alcohol and that virtually all physical misery and woe was traceable to the same source. He said: "We should strive to abolish the necessity of charities by striving to abolish the causes of suffering. We allow the saloons to exist, and they cause more poverty, more disease, more crime and more human misery than all other causes combined." The speaker pointed out that in Kansas, where there are no saloons, many of the counties are without insane or criminals.

Delegates representing 32,000 women recently met at Swarthmore, Pa., and earnestly insisted that women be appointed inspectors of the county jails and penitentiaries of the State; that the Commonwealth, by its laws, give a greater measure of protection to the children who toil in the mills and factories; and that in all laws touching the marriage relation one standard of morals be set for both the man and the woman in the compact.

A despatch of the 20th from Chicago says: "Severe snow storms fell to-day in North Dakota, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Montana and other sections of the far Middle West. In many places records were broken for depth and early season of the fall. The snow was attended by a sharp drop in temperature."

A despatch from Washington of the 15th says: "Combined estimates of the crops that go to make up the food supplies of the American table are discouraging, while the price of meat animals was far in excess of the figures for the last two years. James T. M. Pickens, of the Bureau of Animal Industry, said: 'The high cost of meat is a serious reality, and it is now obvious that the rise in prices in recent years is the natural result of an actual shortage in production. It is evident, also, that the country is facing an era of short production of meat, and that some constructive means must be adopted if the American appetite for this class of food is to be supplied.'"

It was stated from Chicago on the 14th that the removal of duties on farm animals is bringing a large number of cattle into the United States which otherwise would not come. Thus far, South St. Paul appears to be the chief beneficiary. At that point the receipts of animals from Canada are on a scale unprecedented, barring a few days in past years, when conditions were exceptional. On one recent day 417 carloads of cattle came in. Largely these receipts were from more Western points in the United States. The animals were sent along in anticipation of recruits to the ranges from Canada. The Canadian supply is of excellent quality, not merely because of the high breeds, but because of climate effects on the animals. Cattle raised in the colder climates are, as a rule, of better quality than those that have been brought up in the lower latitudes.

A despatch of the 16th from Chicago says: "Statistics given out to-day by the Chicago Safety Commission show that the number of deaths in Philadelphia from automobile accidents increased 390 per cent. from 1907 to 1912."

A despatch of the 14th from Savannah, Ga., says: "Ten per cent. of the people of this city are suffering from dengue or bone break fever, a painful but not serious malady, caused by the bite of the mosquito. Public health surgeons are working to check the epidemic."

William Sulzer, late Governor of New York, has been removed from office by a court of impeachment. The verdict of the court was that he was guilty of falsification, perjury and an attempt to suppress evidence against him. Of all other charges he was acquitted.

It is stated that a raincoat, made of waterproof paper, that can be sold for about 15 cents has been patented by an Illinois man. The garment can be folded up and carried in the pocket and can be used several times. The paper of the coat can be made in almost any color.

Director Neff has issued some hints in reference to colds, which he says are not due to weather, but to germs, and they are contagious. He says: Avoid persons who have colds, especially in poorly ventilated and crowded places. Avoid the common drinking cup and roller towel. Keep all unnecessary things, such as pencils and the like, away from the mouth. Avoid stuffy, poorly ventilated rooms and dusty atmospheres. Good ventilation will not only prevent, but will assist in curing colds and similar diseases of the breathing organs.

The discovery of Dr. Clark alluded to in last week's issue will be more correctly stated if we made clear that the heat applied in the new desiccation process of treating cancer is electrical. Dr. Clark is personally known to some of our readers and it is due him that proper credit should be accorded him.

FOREIGN.—A despatch from St. Petersburg of the 13th says: "Confirmation of the discovery of new land in the Arctic Ocean was received by the Russian Admiralty to-day in a brief official wireless report from Commander Wilkitzky, of the Russian Navy. The new land extends in a narrow strip from about 60 miles north of Cape Tshelyuskin, also known as Northeast Cape, the northern termination of the Asiatic continent, to 81 degrees north. The discovery of the new land is regarded as having the most important bearing on ice conditions in the Kara Sea."

In an account of the efforts used to save the Volturno at sea the use of oil upon the water is said to have been very helpful. One account says: "At once the Yaragouchi began to spray oil about the doomed ship, and the waves subsided as by magic. Soon the small boats were enabled to run alongside the liner and take the clinging people from the ladders. The rescue work was over in a short time. Eleven liners formed the boundary around the linn of oil, and the survivors were hoisted aboard the various steamers without trouble."

A despatch of the 14th from Cardiff, Wales, says: "More than 400 miners probably are doomed to death as the result of an explosion that wrecked the workings of the Universal Colliery early to-day. The fire that followed the explosion has spread to the intake air shaft, cutting off the entombed men from a supply of fresh air. At 6 o'clock to-night officials of the colliery admitted that they had virtually abandoned hope for the 431 men who had been imprisoned in the blazing pit. Fire damp and coal dust have been the cause of many appalling accidents in the past in the great South Wales coal fields, which extend for a distance of 50 by 20 miles, and are often several thousand feet in thickness."

It was stated from London on the 16th that a Central News despatch from Shanghai says a great fire has been raging for five hours to-day in a northern suburb of the city, half a square mile of which has been destroyed. Ten thousand people have been rendered homeless. The fire is now under control.

On the 17th a German airship was destroyed by an explosion at Johannisthal, and 28 men met death under terrible circumstances. The cause of the disaster is unknown, but when the airship was flying at a height of 600 feet three explosions occurred and the vessel fell a blazing wreck to the ground. Count Reventlow, the German military expert, declared that the accident, regardless of what the cause may have been, proves conclusively that all types of dirigibles are too dangerous for practical military or naval work. He will urge the Government to stop using them at once.

A late despatch from Peking says: "A force of Chinese brigands commanded by General Hwang Liang has murdered 300 people in the Province of Fokien. The American missionaries from the disturbed district are still in Fuchow, where they took refuge during the recent troubles."

NOTICES.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA., will be open from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from 2 to 5 P. M.—Seventh-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. only.

WANTED.—At once, a suitable Friend as an Assistant to the Superintendent of the Indian School at Tusnessa. One who may favorably consider succeeding him next spring.

MONTHLY MEETINGS NEXT WEEK (Tenth Month 26th to Eleventh Month 1st):

- Gwynedd, at Norristown, Pa., First-day, Tenth Month 26th, at 10 30 A. M.
- Chester, Pa., at Media, Pa., Second-day, Tenth Month 27th, at 7 30 P. M.
- Philadelphia for Northern District, Sixth and Noble Streets, Third-day, Tenth Month 28th, at 10 30 A. M.
- Concord, at Concoedville, Pa., Third-day, Tenth Month 28th, at 9 30 A. M.
- Woodbury, N. J., Third-day, Tenth Month 28th, at 8 P. M.
- Salem, N. J., Fourth-day, Tenth Month 29th, at 10 30 A. M.
- Abington, at Horsham, Pa., Fourth-day, Tenth Month 29th, at 10 15 A. M.
- Birmingham, at West Chester, Pa., Fourth-day, Tenth Month 29th, at 10 A. M.
- Philadelphia, Fourth and Arch Streets, Fifth-day, Tenth Month 30th, at 10 30 A. M.
- Goshen, at Malvern, Pa., Fifth-day, Tenth Month 30th, at 10 A. M.
- Lansdowne, Pa., Fifth-day, Tenth Month 30th, at 7 45 P. M.

BIBLE ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDS IN AMERICA.—The annual meeting of the Bible Association of Friends in America will be held in the Convocation-room of Friends' Meeting-house, Twelfth Street, below Market Street, on Thursday, Eleventh Month 5th, 1913, at 4 o'clock, P. M. Friends generally are invited to attend the meeting and take part in the proceedings.

WM. T. ELKINTON, Secretary.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.—The stage will meet at Westtown Station, trains leaving Broad Street (Penna. R. R.) Phila. at 6.32, 8.21 A. M., 2.48 and 4.30 P. M.; other trains will be met on request. Stage fare twenty-five cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, address West Chester Bell Telephone, 114A.

WM. B. HARVEY,
Superintendent.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

W. B. WEAVER
Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5th ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN
TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT
OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL
ACCOMMODATIONS FOR
FUNERALS.

BELL 'PHONE. ESTABLISHED 1880.

JOS. B. SCATTERGOOD

HOUSE, SIGN AND DECORATIVE
PAINTING

Orders Solicited Bell 'Phone
275 S. FOURTH STREET

School Children's EYES
Tested

We test children's eyes and furnish glasses which remove all strain.

Satisfaction Guaranteed
C. A. LONGSTRETH
Specialist in Eye Testing
222 Market Street Philadelphia, Pa.

NO NEED

To worry as to where you can get good printed matter at fair prices. Consult us.

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,
EDWARD T. BIDDLE,

1010 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL.

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

ELKINS MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

MEMBERS OF

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA
STOCK EXCHANGES

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

To ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 56 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

A YOUNG FRIEND DESIRES A POSITION AS stenographer and typewriter.
Address "G." Office of THE FRIEND.

FOR RENT—TWO LIGHT, COMFORTABLE THIRD story room. With bath. Communicating. Near the business section of the city.
Address "M." Office of THE FRIEND.

MRS. M. JONES, HAVERFORD, PA., DESIRES to secure a well-qualified secretary. She must be a good stenographer and typewriter, and capable of carrying on a variety of literary and business lines of work. A Friend would be preferred. Address as above.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
(Marcellus Balderston)

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. 618 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL 'PHONE PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Redlands--California

Wissahickon Inn

A comfortable family hotel in the residence section of beautiful Redlands.

SEND FOR FOLDERS & RATES

WE HAVE FOR SALE A 5% PUBLIC UTILITY BOND OF A COMPANY OWNED AND OPERATED BY THE UNITED GAS IMPROVEMENT COMPANY. TO YIELD 5%. FREE OF PENNSYLVANIA STATE TAX.

CIRCULAR GIVING FULL INFORMATION UPON REQUEST.

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY PAUL W. BROWN JAMES P. MAGILL

POCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevation 1800 feet, commanding extensive mountain and valley scenery. Address

J. W. HURLEY, Manager,
POCONO MANOR, PA.

The reason for the Suburban movement is the opportunity it affords to have a lawn.

The reason for the prettiest lawn is often due to Moon's Trees and Shrubbery that add beauty, give enjoyment, and enhance realty values.

Send for Catalogs about them.

THE WM. H. MOON CO.

NURSERYMEN

Room H, Stephen Girard Bldg.
Philadelphia, Pa.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER
S. W. COR. 16th & RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE BRUCE 6648

For Rich Milk

For Clean Milk

For Safe Milk

Call Philadelphia Locust 209

ABBOTTS ALDERNEY DAIRIES

31st and Chestnut Streets

Subscribers patronizing our advertisers will assist THE FRIEND, especially by mentioning our paper in correspondence.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 30, 1913.

No. 18.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to

EDWIN P. SELLEW or THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

ARE WE GROWING BETTER?

Does it savor the least bit of egotism to give assent to the statement that we are better than our forefathers? It certainly does if we make our statements specific, and no one with reasonable respect for himself will do so. None the less we are a unit in the feeling that each generation makes a great advance over the one before it. We do not have to put our stakes very far apart as students of modern history to see how reform has figured in virtually every vice and every social and political evil that appears in the catalogue of sins.

Toward the close of Paul's Epistle to the Galatians occurs this, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap," and a little earlier in the same letter he enumerates under these headings what are to be looked for as the outcome of a life that is passed in sowing to the Spirit, "Love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."

This to the devout student of history is the greatest conquest of all the centuries. Ocean cables, aeroplanes and wireless transmitters are wonderful indeed, but far less so than the fulfilment of this great utterance of the Apostle, that as man individually or collectively advances in the things of the Spirit the fruit will be made manifest.

There have been in heathen lands schools of philosophy that have had right living, as they claimed, for the central and pivotal point of their constitution; one by one they have failed of the attainment of those virtues Paul enumerates. No other than the Christian religion, much less any philosophy, has made an approach to measuring up to the standard set in the Sermon on the Mount, and no other religion has such a fruitage to display for twenty centuries of its existence.

But this is very far from an ethical problem. It is a deeply religious one. When the ethical element has abounded and the other has been left out, there has been a show of the virtues referred to, but time in every case has tested the nature of the foundation and found it unstable and therefor unsafe. As the one is greater than the other it must include it, and an altruistic spirit, founded on the principle of love, will win out in every case if conditions can be adjusted to favor it, whereas a desire for others' good, based on expediency, or a wish to appear well to on-lookers or from some other equally sordid motive, may seem to add prosperity to a cause, but will, if given a chance, turn out to be its worst enemy.

A hospital in the Lebanon hills of Palestine is a surer witness to the advance of Christian sentiment in America and Europe than the introduction of a new article in the form of creed of some Protestant church, even though that article makes the creed more orthodox and less heretical than it ever has been before.

No one has asked to have Paul's catalogue of the virtues lengthened. It seems that they comprehend in their broad scope everything that is fundamental. We would differ among ourselves and we would differ with those who have lived before us as to where we should place the emphasis. And who would be so wise as to say that the place of emphasis does not change from time to time? But there is an all-embracing element in each of these virtues as they are sounded one after the other, and in the assembly of them all there surely has been no omission.

If we should try to enumerate the practices that maintained in pagan times and among highly civilized people as well, and we need to be reminded that those times are the present in some places, we would find nothing that bore the stamp of sin but that had vastly improved. If you question the statement, turn to a volume that describes the common life of the people during the centuries when any nation you choose to name was at the highest point of its boasted civilization, you will not only verify the statement, but you will be shocked at the grossness of those times.

We must admit that many of the practices of former days which were stamped all over with immoral ty still exist, they have taken root on every new soil that has been discovered to the advancing race, and so we are often tempted to say "the former times were better than these," but we reason falsely in so doing, our view is too limited. There is a sentiment against them, and that sentiment is the thing which counts. Once they were well nigh universal, now they are tolerated, and as time passes and the warfare is maintained and pushed harder and harder, they will be wiped out altogether.

To have a part in this moral warfare is the high privilege and duty of every Christian citizen, and the seat for most effective warfare is in advancing the sentiment of men and women toward a higher standard.

Of all the pagan practices that most conspicuously linger over into the twentieth century, war takes first place, but that we are living in an era that can point back almost over the span of one hundred years, and say there has been no war for that long period between English-speaking nations, should beget cheer. There is, to be sure, much on the other side of the question to discourage, but there is the bright side too. This, however, is not the chief reason for hope. The sentiment is changed. Where are ancient pagan sentiments gaining ground? You will search the modern history of every nation and fail to find them as strong as they were one hundred years ago.

Where the Gospel truths have been the training the children of one generation received, those truths find an after reflection in the lives of the men and women of the next. It seems long to wait. All great movements have been slow. It is the law of nature in the outward world, and it is none the less so with the advances that are made in social and political life. Often times unseen and unheard influences are the mightiest to bring about the hoped for changes. These changes come with a suddenness that startles those who have had little part in the struggle, but on the other hand those who have been in the warfare know that there has been a yielding all along the line, and when the final position of vantage is taken, to them it seems little more than a natural step toward the goal. The warm currents of the ocean may have been many days at work in undermining the great iceberg, that has been floating so majestically that it would seem nothing could disturb its poise; the final change in its centre of gravity is the work of an instant, and the grand display of power as it topples over seems to the careless looker-on like little less than a miracle, but, while to him who knows something of the nature of ocean currents, the display of power is none the less grand and inspiring, he recognizes in what he sees a natural evolution and rejoices in it.

There must be some reason why the most effective work of Christianizing the world thus far has been done by small groups or individuals. Aside from the fact that small bodies are likely to work more harmoniously and therefore more effectively than large ones, it is oftener the case than not that the individual or the small group seems best able to grasp the fundamental principles of things.

There is no merit accruing to a religious society on the score of its small membership, rather the reverse, on the principle that a good thing should be shared with others, but there should be a substantial advance made by every religious Society, no matter how small; and if in the sisterhood of Protestant churches the Society of Friends has a special place to fill, may not its most important function be to keep high the "ancient standard," that the daily life of men, and of communities and of nations should be the outward showing of the inward living? A people growing up on this foundation will be an advancing people.

D. H. F.

[At the Quarterly Meetings held in Eighth and Ninth Months considerable time was given to the proposed new building to be erected at 302 and 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

A rather elaborate report from the Committee of the three city Monthly Meetings, signed by Wm. T. Elkinton, Clerk of the Committee, was presented to the Quarterly Meetings. This report was too long to read in full at those meetings, and so the clerks with varying degrees of success summarized it.

Each meeting was of course at liberty to act for itself, but their procedure was identical so far as appointing a committee to have the matter in charge. In some cases this committee was simply a nominating committee to name Friends to serve on the two committees alluded to in the report, in one or more others the committee was given power to proceed without further action of the Quarterly Meeting, and a still different course may have been taken in other cases.

The time is near at hand when our Quarterly Meetings will be again in course, and it is well for those of us who were present at the former meeting to read the full report, and it is the request of several who were absent from their homes in Eighth Month that they be given the chance to see it.

The paper in full covers more space in THE FRIEND than we usually allow to one subject in one issue, but it is one in which we are all interested and on which every member of our Yearly Meeting is expected to have an opinion.—Ed.]

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON NEW BUILDING AT 302-304 ARCH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

In the Fifth Month of 1910 the subject of providing suitable accommodation for Friends, in the neighborhood of the Meeting-house at Fourth and Arch Streets, was brought to the attention of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia for Women Friends, and by them introduced to Men's Meeting. The following joint Committee was appointed to investigate this subject:

Rachel W. Hall, Eleanor R. Elkinton, Anna Walton, C. Virginia Sellow, Wm. T. Elkinton, George J. Scattergood, Ira S. Frame and Albert H. Votaw.

At a later meeting Hannah D. Stratton was added to the Committee.

Under date of Fifth Month 18, 1911, a report to the Monthly Meeting was adopted and signed by all the members of the Committee. It contains the following information from the Sub-committee on Entertainment which had been requested to confer with Friends desiring accommodations during Yearly Meeting week of 1911.

"We received answers to the letter addressed to the Monthly Meetings giving the names of thirty persons wishing accommodations, others applied to Rachel W. Hall and Wm. C. Cowperthwaite, making in all about fifty applicants.

Twelve were entertained in private houses, three took rooms at the Young Women's Christian Association, Eighteenth and Arch Streets, four at Young Friends' Association, Fifteenth and Cherry Streets, others were accommodated at Randolph Chappell's, 330 Spruce Street, and ten Friends were provided for at 302 Arch Street.

A few Friends from distant Yearly Meetings were also entertained in private houses. Most of the applicants prefer being together and near the Meeting-house.

We feel that accommodations for forty or fifty persons on the Meeting-house property at Fourth and Arch Streets will best meet our needs during Yearly Meeting week, as there are few desirable places within easy access, and many expressed their desire for boarding at 302 Arch Street.

ELEANOR R. ELKINTON,
RACHEL W. HALL,
C. VIRGINIA SELLEW."

The report further states:—

"After a careful consideration of the subject, it was decided that in the event of an additional building being erected to provide for the accommodation of guests, it would be desirable to erect it on the Arch Street front immediately adjoining and in the rear of premises 304 Arch Street, with the view of including in the new structure accommodations for the Book-Store, also the residence portion of 302 Arch Street, as well as some additional rooms for the general purposes of the Society.

Owing to the provisions contained in the Deed of 1817, it will be necessary to obtain the united consent of the three (3) Monthly Meetings in this city before such a project could be undertaken. We, therefore, recommend that should our Monthly Meeting approve of the erection of the proposed building, that a Committee should be appointed to join with similar Committees of the other two Monthly Meetings in this city to consider the entire subject and report their judgment to the Monthly Meetings when prepared to do so."

This report was presented to and considered at a Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, held Fifth Month 25, 1911.

"It was approved by the meeting and William T. Elkinton, Albert H. Votaw, C. Virginia Sellow and Eleanor R. Elkinton were appointed to unite with similar committees of the two other city meetings, should such be appointed, in considering the whole subject.

The Clerk was directed to furnish to the two other city meetings copies of this Minute, including the report of the Joint Committee."

Anna P. Sharpless was subsequently added to this committee.

At a Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia for the Northern District, held Sixth Month 27th, 1911.

"A minute from the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, held Fifth Month 25th, 1911, accompanied by a report from a committee of that meeting with regard to providing suitable accommodations for Friends visiting this city, especially at the times of our Yearly Meeting, was received and read.

The proposal for the appointment of a joint committee of the three city monthly meetings for the consideration of this subject was approved. This meeting appointed George S. Hutton and Howard E. Yarnall, and our Women's Meeting appointed Frances B. McCollin and Ann W. Fry to represent us upon such a committee.

The Clerk is directed to forward copies of this minute to the two other city Monthly Meetings."

Taken from the Minutes.

HENRY T. BROWN,

Clerk for the day.

At a Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia for the Western District, held on Sixth Month 21, 1911.

"A Minute was received from the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, held Fifth Month 25, 1911, accompanied by a report to that meeting from a joint committee which has been under appointment for about one year to consider the advisability of providing, in the neighborhood of the Arch Street Meeting-house, accommodations for Friends visiting the city, particularly at the times of our Yearly Meeting.

The Minute proposed a conference of committees of the three city Monthly Meetings to consider the whole subject. This meeting appointed George Vaux and Joel Cadbury, and Women's Meeting appointed Ann Shinn Maier and Mary M. Vaux as our representatives on such a conference committee.

Copies of this Minute were directed to be forwarded to each of the city Monthly Meetings."

Taken from the Minutes.

BENJAMIN CADBURY,

Clerk.

The Committees appointed by the three city Monthly Meetings, reported under date of First Month 15, 1912, to the Monthly Meetings in part as follows:

"As directed by the Minute of our appointment, we have carefully considered the subject in connection with our present buildings, 302 and 304 Arch Street, where we find additional accommodations are needed for the Book Store and for Committee-rooms, as well as a suitable fire-proof room for the records of the Yearly Meeting and Committees appointed by it."

It also stated that plans had been prepared for a building that would accommodate forty or fifty people, and contain additional accommodations for the Book Store, Committee-rooms and a fire-proof room.

The report was approved by each of the three city Monthly Meetings, and Minutes were adopted continuing their respective committees for further care in the matter.

Through articles published in THE FRIEND and in the Westonian, as well as plans and circulars placed at the Book Store, 304 Arch Street, in the Centre Hall, Arch Street Meeting-house and in the Friends' Institute, the proposition was brought to the attention of Friends generally.

Much interest was thus aroused throughout the limits of our Yearly Meeting, and various projects were presented to our Committee for consideration by interested individuals. In deference to them and to a request received from several members of the "Friends' Historical Society of Philadelphia," and in view of an opinion given by George Vaux, Jr.,

dated Sixth Month 26, 1912, relative to the legal requirements in regard to the removal of the remains of the dead, from so much of the Burial Ground as may be required for the proposed building, it was decided to defer action for further study of the problems entrusted to us.

In the First Month of 1913, the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia was asked to consider a proposition that would involve the removal of the buildings, 302-304 Arch Street, and the erection of a larger structure on said premises, and on the adjacent ground to the south of 304 Arch Street.

At an adjourned session of the Monthly Meeting held Second Month 6, 1913.

"The recommendations of the Committee, favoring the construction of a new building on the lots, 302 and 304 Arch Street, and also that this Meeting should appropriate from its funds the sum of $25,000.00 towards the expense of such a building, were approved."

The Clerks were directed to forward a copy of this Minute to the Joint Committee of the three Monthly Meetings.

In order that Friends may understand the conditions under which the property at Fourth and Arch Streets is held, we may state that William Penn by his patent dated the eighteenth day of October, 1701, conveyed to Edward Shippen and Samuel Carpenter, their heirs and assigns for ever, two certain pieces of ground, situate at the southeast corner of Fourth and Arch Streets. This conveyance was made "Upon special trust and confidence nevertheless and to the use, intents and purposes hereinafter mentioned and declared, that is to say to the use and behoof of the people called Quakers of Philadelphia, with whom I am now in communion and who are and shall be in union and fellowship with the Yearly Meeting of ye sd people at London, for a Burying Place and upon ye further trust and confidence yt the sd Edward Shippen and Samuel Carpenter and their heirs shall from time to time forever hereafter transfer and make over ye sd two pieces of ground and premises or any pt or prcl thereof to such uses, intents and purposes as ye Monthly Meeting of ye sd people at Philadelphia shall at any time hereafter direct and appoint."

Originally there was but one Monthly Meeting of Friends in Philadelphia. As the number of Friends increased separate Monthly Meetings were established, but the property of the Monthly Meetings was held as joint property until 1817, when the title to certain properties was vested in the individual Monthly Meetings, while other properties continued to be held in common, or jointly, by the several Monthly Meetings.

The title to that portion of the tracts of ground given to Friends by William Penn, commencing at the west line of 302 Arch Street, and extending on Arch Street to Fourth Street, thence southward along the east side of Fourth Street to the south side of the south pier of the northernmost gate on Fourth Street, so as to include the whole of said south pier, and thence eastward and northward by varying lines to the place of beginning was conveyed to the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, together with the buildings erected thereon. SUBJECT, nevertheless, to certain reservations set forth in the Deed of conveyance, being in part as follows: "Also the use of the East Wing, being the easternmost of the said Meeting-houses and of the centre buildings thereto attached for the general purposes of the said Religious Society as at present, and the Library and room for the use of the Monthly Meetings already established in Philadelphia, and its Liberties, and such as may in future be established within their limits and of ingress, egress and regress to and from the same respectively, it being understood and agreed that the Monthly Meeting of Philadelphia, shall from time to time appoint a Friend to have charge of the fire-proof room attached to the said Meeting-house and that all the said Monthly Meetings shall have the privilege of depositing their books and papers therein, and it being also further expressly understood and agreed that all the said Monthly Meetings established and to be established as aforesaid, shall contribute in equal proportions to defray the expense of keeping those parts of the said Meeting-houses and centre buildings in repair, the use of which is reserved in manner aforesaid.

AND moreover, subject those parts of the said Friends' Burial Ground hereby granted, which are not now improved with Meeting-houses or other buildings to this restriction, to wit: that the same shall forever remain as yards for the accommodation of the said Meeting-houses, hereby granted."

In the partition of 1817 the title to the tract of ground south of the entrance from the northernmost gate on Fourth Street, also to the tract of ground immediately east of the Meeting-house, both of which were then used for burial purposes, was vested in Trustees appointed by all of the Monthly Meetings, and is now held by Trustees appointed by the three city Monthly Meetings.

The premises No. 302 Arch Street belongs absolutely to the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, and the title is vested in Trustees appointed by it.

Having decided that it would be advisable to erect the proposed building on a portion of the ground in which two of the Monthly Meetings held reserved rights, and on a part of the ground in which all three of the city Monthly Meetings had a joint interest, the subject was again brought to the attention of the Monthly Meetings, with the information that the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia had approved the plan for the construction of a new building on the lots 302-304 Arch Street, and had appropriated from its funds the sum of $25,000.00 towards the expense of erecting such a building. The Joint Committee recommended that the three Monthly Meetings should appropriate sufficient ground, about thirty feet on Arch Street, commencing at the west line 302 Arch Street, and the entire depth of 178 feet, so that the proposed building can be erected on the site now occupied by properties 302-304 Arch Street, and the ground immediately adjoining the same. The report further states:

"As the ground now occupied by premises 304 Arch Street, and the yard and building in the rear was originally used for burial purposes, it will be useful to comply with the requirements of the law covering the case.

"The Joint Committee asks the Monthly Meetings to authorize it to take such steps as legal counsel may advise for making application to Court for the necessary authority to remove the remains of the dead, and properly re-inter them, so far as they are not claimed by relatives, in some other part of the ground or in the Marshall Road burying ground, and to direct the several trustees holding title to the property to sign all such legal papers in connection therewith, as may be required."

Each of the Monthly Meetings approved of appropriating the ground for the purpose mentioned, and authorized the Committee to take such steps as legal counsel may advise for making application to Court for the necessary authority above referred to, and also directed the several Trustees holding title to the property, to sign all such legal papers in connection therewith as may be required.

The Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia having authorized, under date of Second Month 6, 1913, the construction of a new building on the lot 302 Arch Street has since directed its Property Committee to co-operate with the Joint Committee in this matter as may be necessary.

In accordance with directions of counsel the required Public Notice was given on three consecutive First-days, at the close of the morning meetings, and similar minutes were adopted by the three Monthly Meetings, reciting the facts in regard to the Public Notice that had been given, and directed the Trustees holding title to the property in question to present a petition to the Court of Quarter Sessions of Philadelphia County setting forth the facts in the case.

At a meeting of the Joint Committee held Seventh Month 8, 1913, we were informed that the petition to the Court had been prepared, but in view of the affidavit that the Trustees must make, our counsel advised that the financial success of the undertaking should be assured before the petition was presented to Court.

The judgment of our counsel, George Vaux, Jr., was accepted, and it was decided to make a definite effort to raise the required funds. In view of the fact that the proposed improvements are for the benefit of the members of our Yearly Meeting generally, and the further fact that our Yearly Meeting has a reserved right in that portion of the property at Fourth and Arch Streets, that was conveyed to the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, by the Deed of 1817, reference to which has already been made, it was decided to ask the several Quarterly Meetings, composing our Yearly Meeting, to co-operate with the Friends of the three city Monthly Meetings, and we recommend that each Quarterly Meeting should have a representation of one man and one woman Friend, who, with a similar representation from each of the three city meetings, should act as a committee of management in charge of the new building, and we ask that each Quarterly Meeting should appoint a Collecting Committee to solicit contributions from its members for this project.

The first floor plan of the proposed new building provides accommodations for the "Book Store," "THE FRIEND," the "Bible Association," a Fire-proof and Committee Rooms.

On the Second Floor there is a large Sitting-room, and three rooms which may be used for dormitories, or additional Committee-rooms, also five bed-rooms, with two baths.

On the Third Floor, there are nine bed-rooms, with ample toilet accommodations.

On the Fourth Floor, the Dining-room, Kitchen and Pantry are located, as well as five bed-rooms.

The specifications call for a substantial fire-proof construction, and it is expected that the boarding accommodations will be used by many Friends throughout the year, as well as at Yearly Meeting time, which was the original concern.

The estimated cost of the proposed building is $85,000.00. Subscriptions, including $25,000 from the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, have been made, amounting to $26,500.00. Cash contributions, including $5000 towards the Fire-proof have been received, amounting to $6,040.00. Total amount available at the present date, $32,540.00.

In addition to the above our Friend, Joshua L. Baily, has informed our Committee, that if any Friend will head the list with a subscription of $2500.00 he will contribute a like sum ($2500.00).

It is the unanimous opinion of our Committee that the proposed accommodations would be a great convenience, and in many respects are a real necessity, and having met the preliminary requirements of our Society and of the law, we now feel justified in asking the co-operation of the several Quarterly Meetings to further this project, which is in the interest of the whole membership of the Yearly Meeting.

By direction of the Committees appointed by the three city Monthly Meetings.

WM. T. ELKINTON,
Clerk.

PHILADELPHIA, Eighth Month 4, 1913.

SPIRITUALITY.

Speaking of spirituality—and we speak a good deal about it—what do we mean? Is it true that our times are growing more worldly and less spiritual, that real religion is losing out, that the days of great prayers and great victories and great religious heroisms are gone—or are going?

As to spirituality, is it not "a quick and vital sense of God?" "Where there is no vision, the people perish." It is moral and religious decay, when the apprehension of God becomes dim and uncertain, or when men become so absorbed in other things that God is not in all their thoughts. There is not very much theoretical atheism, perhaps. Occasionally there is found a man to say, as did a certain sort of preacher in a conference some years ago, "I spell my God with two o's, and my devil without a d—good and evil." But the speculative atheists are rather few.

The important question is this: Is there so much indifference to God, so much forgetfulness of Him, so much disregard of his will and word, that we threaten to become a nation of practical atheists? And that is but another way of asking, Are we growing unspiritual? In proportion as there is a keen, vivid, and commanding sense of God in our lives and in this world, there is spirituality.

Spirituality means a change of emphasis from the lower to the higher, from the outer to the inner, from the seen to the unseen, from the shifting to the abiding. It means to throw the accent upon the kingdom of God and his righteousness rather than upon the temporalities and superficialities of this present world. Paul summed it up when he said, "Seek the things that are above, where Christ is." Listening to the voices of our day, where does the accent seem to lie? What are the things of first concern with the great masses of the people? The answer to that question will have something to do with determining whether we are becoming more or less spiritual.

Our spirituality means a dependence on supernatural agencies for religious achievement. The carnal mind is most concerned about human machinery, the spiritual mind about getting into touch with the Divine sources of power. Is there less or more dependence on prayer than at other periods of religious history? Is there a disposition to depend on the might of the Holy Spirit, and to expect miracles of moral transformation through his power? Do we make very much or very little of the living energy of the Word? Are we leaving regeneration and sanctification by the Spirit of God too much out of sight in our social service and social betterment work?

It is well to remember the solemn declaration, "The mind of the flesh is death." And it is important that the Church make it her supreme effort to deepen the spiritual life of her members and to increase the spirituality of this nation.—The United Presbyterian.

EXTRACTS FROM DIARIES AND LETTERS OF RICHARD B. BROCKBANK.

(Continued from page 196.)

Edinburgh, 11-5-'86.—We had a remarkable meeting in the morning when I had a full clearance in a way that I little looked for, after Daniel Pickard, H. M. C. and R. King had spoken. R. K. was much favored in supplication immediately after.

The meeting at Leith was fuller than the last held there, and very cordial. There were about eighty people present, filling the room nicely. Several stopped and spoke kindly.

Old Crummock, 15-5-'86.—We had a nice meeting at Lanark, about fifty in the town hall—these country towns do not come out well—I think the people are afraid to come near us.

We are in comfortable private lodgings here, with a printer and wife, no family. The good woman was afraid to take us in, as she had only one bed and it was short, having been made shorter to fit a recess in a previous house. I took my rule and it was five feet four inches. She thought it would never do for two such tall gentlemen. So thought I. But all else was so nice and clean and she so open and kind like that I told her I thought it might be made right if she would turn the side next the wall into the head, and set some chairs and a door and turn the bedding the other way. She took up the idea at once, and we have a bed fit for two,—five feet four inches wide and about three feet (two chairs on each side and a door laid across) added to the width for the length, which gives us at least seven feet. We got in at the foot and have room and to spare.

Sanquhar, 18-5-'86.—Among the hills and journeying homewards, I felt last evening a step nearer home when the meeting was over here. It was in the town hall, kindly lent by the Provost—one hundred and thirty or so. A wonderful people, there has been a great interest in religious renewal amongst them lately, and last evening was the usual evening for kitchen meetings, about six of which are held for singing, prayer, and exhortation in various parts of the town. It was arranged that our meeting should be at 8.15, so that they could meet at eight as usual and dismiss their meeting and come to ours. There are a goodly number here who are seeking earnestly to live to God, and I believe are awakened to a sense of a need of strength beyond their own.

Culls, 10-10-'86.—I wrote thee yesterday morning a line from N. Stewart. We had no one but ourselves at 10.30. At four we had five and in the evening at seven between thirty and forty, including the banker, A. B. Matthews, who is married to P. H. Hughan's cousin, and with whom we had tea when in N. Stewart before.

I am beginning to doubt whether I sent thee the change of address soon enough—in fact I did not know myself. Therefore if there are any letters sent to Newton Stewart I shall not get them till to-morrow morning. We left address for them to be sent on here.

It was a relief to feel free of N. S.; being what they call Sacrament day we felt the people were under a bondage and not free to come to anything else. Having done our part we were grateful to feel free. We came on by the 11.17 train to Millisle station, where P. H. H. kindly met us and brought us on here. We had a meeting last evening with all that are employed on the farm, which was a relieving one to us both.

We are going to Isle of Whithorn this afternoon in the hope of having a meeting this evening there. To-morrow evening we may have one at Whithorn and possibly at Port William next evening. These two last we attended at the time of our former visit. This is how the matter seems to shape at present. We may then feel free to go on to Glenclue and Port Patrick.

Culls, 20-10-'86.—I am very well and grateful for help mercifully afforded. We had quite a large meeting last evening at Isle of Whithorn, a small port rather on the east side of the southernmost point of Wigtownshire, Barrow Head—I should think full one hundred and fifty there, a number of them scholars, but more than half adults, which was very good considering we only got into the place about half-past three in the afternoon.

It was a solemn favored meeting and a measure of the power of Truth was felt over all. We intend for Whithorn to-night and Pt. Williams to-morrow night.

The weather has been very fine since we came to Culls, which is a great favor. I took no harm from the drive home last evening after the meeting at Isle of Whithorn. We saw the little old chapel of "St. Niman" on the island or rather peninsula.

Kilmarnock, 19-4-'87.—I am thankful to say that I am well and have all I need, and in regard to meetings in humble dependence and obedience. I have peace and am helped from day to day. The Friends are comforted and I trust the precious cause is not harmed.

Stranraer, 22-4-'87.—The meeting last evening at Girvan was a very relieving one. There were, A. L. thought, one hundred and fifty or thereabouts present. There were three or four women there who are tender and well known to David McCaughtree. He was at the meeting and knelt in prayer after I had spoken. The times of silence were very impressive, and it was felt to be a time of favor and nearness to the source of all good.

Whiby, 22-10-'87.—We had a very small meeting last evening, not over ten or twelve in all. E. Sewell was much disappointed—I am content. It may be that Friends may have to look into the causes and to find that their desire to popularize their views and so render themselves more acceptable to their neighbors has not had the effect of bringing them nearer to the precious Truth, or even given their professions of the Truth more place than their fathers had with the people.

Tbornton in Craven, 20-11-'87.—I should be glad enough to come home again any time, and feel how slender is the hold which such a small service of love as mine has upon the mind of the Society generally, and how largely their attention or its attention has been turned in other directions. Under these circumstances thou wilt readily understand what a relief it would be to me to turn homewards, yet it would seem even under these circumstances it would be seeking relief, present relief, in a way that would not conduce to permanent welfare either for myself or for the precious cause which is dear to my heart.

In saying so much I do not overlook the unity and love which in most cases have been so freely extended to me and coupled with an appreciation of my service for the Truth. It is difficult to understand how two things so essentially different as non-conformity and conformity to the world and its ways can co-exist. I am satisfied that there must be an essential turning to the fountain of living waters and a ceasing from the cisterns of our own hewing out—if ever the Truth of God and the love of it is to have its right place in the hearts of Friends.

It is one of the curious effects of the present state of things that many beloved young Friends who are the very class who would be most likely to be of real use as ministers are, along with a deep interest in the welfare and religious advancement of their fellow-men, losing faith in the real power of Truth inwardly revealed and are spending their strength in methods which are largely copied or imitated from the very practices which Friends were raised up to draw others from. There is no doubt whatever in my mind that a living concern given up to by dear young Friends would keep them clear of much that is going on and bring them into greater real usefulness in the Lord's hand and in his precious cause of Truth and righteousness in the earth.

That such may be the case with those beloved ones who are near and dear to us is my inmost desire. It can be only at most a few years that we can be here, and it would be a joy indeed to see a succession of standard bearers raised up in the Lord's will and time to his glory and their peace and salvation, and also to the advancement of his precious cause.

(To be continued.)

ENGLISH HOTELS.

WM. C. ALLEN.

For "THE FRIEND."

When attempting to speak about English hotels I do not refer to Americanized hotels in England, or rather to those establishments much patronized by my countrymen. They are conducted largely to suit their patrons. I want to tell about hotels that almost entirely have English people as guests.

When visiting another country—you cannot call England foreign—it is interesting to see how the people do and how they cater to their own needs. The big cosmopolitan hotels, the world over, are about the same,—we meet the same old soups, entrees, joints and desserts, the same swallow-tail-coated waiters and more or less tidy chambermaids. So it adds to the interest of travel to try to see hostilities that represent national tastes and methods.

In London this year we went to the West Central Hotel which is, what is so difficult to get in this country, a temperance hotel. When we went down to Hull we tried one that had been well spoken of, but, while we got our money's worth, it was poor. The ladies in the office were sure that American hotels offered very mediocre accommodation for the same price charged us, but they did not know. The coffee-room was also the "lounge" or exchange, as we call it in America. It was about thirty by twenty feet in size, and was expected to answer for the refreshment of about one hundred guests. We had to go outside to get comfortable meals, but roomed there at our stay in Hull was short.

When we reached Scarborough we went to a very good, and unquestionably the best, hotel in the city; but it proved a mixed place, with much drinking at meals, and there were twenty servants in gold braid at every step to seem sufficiently homelike. So the next day we moved across to our present quarters. It is an English house of the better sort, and very typical of the modern kind. They have improved much recently. It is no longer fashionable to be very uncomfortable and absolutely ignore things that American hotels considered necessary many years before. The days of candles in bed-rooms, and a cold water bath taken in the morning in a tin tub hauled into your room for the purpose—the days of it being good form to have the drawing-room in any corner, and the kitchen likely as not in the front—have gone by.

This house accommodates about eighty people. It has a fine lounge and drawing-room facing the street. The dining-room has little tables. There is a good writing-room. The public-rooms are excellent for a house of the size. The furniture is heavy and well upholstered. All the public and private apartments have a generous supply of good pictures hung in them. Our room is large and beautifully furnished in mahogany. The dressing-table in the big bay window is a feature of English furnishings that is attractive everywhere. At a given price the furniture secured in English bed-rooms is generally superior to the cheaper and often ugly sort found in so many American hotels. We have four windows in our room. All have very dark blue shades, and this is important these summer nights when, in this latitude, the sun does not stay beneath the horizon very long. The other curtains are almost white and are very nicely adjusted. The sash and curtains in England often work with an arrangement of cords to pull on, which seems very bothersome, after our simple method; and I daresay they have wrathfully excited most people from the United States who for the first few times have grappled with them.

We do not have the delight of hot and cold running water in our pretty room. Instead, every morning, one hour before breakfast, and every evening, one hour before dinner, the pink-cheeked maid brings hot water up in the little yellow heavy tin hot water can, with which we became familiar almost thirty years ago. To somewhat compensate for this we see continued the good old custom of being able to put boots and shoes outside the door, when retiring at night, with the certainty that they will be there nicely blackened the following morning. No true Englishman starts the day without polished foot-gear, and he is to be commended for observing this little detail of life.

The bath-room fixtures are not of the American sort, but the tub is better than the old-time portable tin affair. The tub is so high that it almost requires an athlete to climb in and out of it. A step helps somewhat, but not much. Our English cousins have a theory that Americans do not wash often, and in conversation frequently refer casually to their own baths, but long observation has made me believe that our well-to-do, and poor, people with their universal and generous facilities in that direction exceed the English of similar social conditions as to bathing.

Our meals come as follows:—Breakfast 9 A. M.; luncheon 1.30 P. M.; afternoon tea 4.30 P. M.; and dinner at 7 P. M. The old days of tea, bread and butter and marmalade for breakfast seem to have gone by. Now, most well-fed people get here, as in many other English hotels, a generous breakfast a la Americain. The other meals are good and well cooked. Having potatoes as the only vegetable for the mid-day meal comes hard on the average citizen from the United States. All he can do is to pour some mint sauce on it—then he has a flavor. The dinners are excellent. Vegetables are scarce, but the puddings are legion and good. Making sweets is an art with English chefs. The guests eat faster than in a hotel or boarding-house of the same character in our country. They think they do not; but there has never a sufficient number of Englishmen visited America to find that their ideas are wrong, and thus disprove their theory in this as well as in many other particulars.

At meals strangers are more shy of one another than in the United States. The Americans often foolishly err on the other extreme. But here so many seem fearful of each other that it is amusing. For instance, at a little table near us sat two young married couples. Whole meals would pass without conversation. Did one young man have an income of two thousand dollars per year, for which he did not have to work; and did the other young man earn four thousand dollars per year by working for it? Was one "a gentleman" and was the other "in trade?" I do not know. Probably the first-comers at the table were not really sure of their own social position, and were afraid to speak politely to the second couple that shared the table with them. Anyway, they had a melancholy time of it, until one set left—then the others had real fun all to themselves.

Afternoon tea we Americans know little about. At this boarding house it is a serious function—a social ritual. At half past four the men gather, from where one does not know, and the ladies too, and they all sit round the lounge and hall, drinking tea, and munching bread and butter and wee bits of rich cake. Everybody gets as far as possible from the others, except a few choice spirits who have agreed to flock for the moment. Except the gentle click of spoons, and the subdued "thank you's" to the servants, it is almost as silent as the woods.

It is safe to say that when English people go to "the States" they think they are being stewed, and when Americans go to England they think they are being frozen. Which is the worse? The afternoon we called at our hotel in Scarborough to see about rooms, we noticed a gentle warmth, or rather tempering of the cold, that induced us to partake of its fortunes. Hot-water heat—an innovation—was in the lounge. The weather was very chill and rainy. I have often heard our English brethren say, "O, you live too warm in America," whilst sitting around their own hotels, their faces and hands all covered with purple spots from the cold. They would look extremely miserable until, out of consideration for the effete American probably, somebody started a fire. Then they would all pull their chairs up to its genial warmth so that the American would be fortunate if he could get near to it. So it is in this hotel. I was trying the other day to keep warm in the steam-tempered lounge where the thermometer possibly registered fifty-eight degrees, whilst near me two fellow-sufferers talked. "It is very cold," remarked number one. "Yes!" assented number two. "But it is comfortable in here," added number one. "Too comfortable," sourly replied number two, as a shade of depression passed over his countenance, and he arose and went out into the hall where a temperature of about fifty degrees awaited him. But I have also seen in America as well as in England some people who, in some way, disliked being comfortable; so we are all about the same after all.

In our hotel "boots" (the porter) is the factotum. In many respects he takes the place of the hotel clerk in the United States. He seems to run the place. He is our guide, philosopher and friend. I must not forget "Buttons," the little page who cheerfully runs errands, and who gets his name from the countless bright buttons on the front of his jacket—fifty or sixty at the least. The maids are trained girls. Our waitress has rosy cheeks and a dreamy eye, and is a picture in her faultless uniform. English hotels average much better service than do those of relative style or expense in America, excepting in our larger hostleries.

CHINESE REPUBLIC STUDIES OUR FOREST METHODS.—David Z. T. Yui, formerly Secretary to the vice-president of the Chinese Republic, is now traveling in this country to learn modern methods for adoption in China. He is at present in charge of the lecture board of the Chinese Y. M. C. A., which is in close touch with the new Government, and is aiding in putting into effect an educational campaign for the citizenship of the Republic.

While in Washington recently, D. Z. T. Yui spent some time investigating the work of the forest service, in order that he might find out whether its organization and methods would be of value to the newly-created department of agriculture and forestry in China. In speaking of this part of his work, he said: "In the matter of forest conservation, the United States profited much by looking upon the disasters which were the result of the Chinese neglect of forestry. This was a great warning to you. Now we wish to profit by the improved methods of forestry which the United States has discovered and applied."—From the Forest Service, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

SOME BENEFICENT RESULTS OF THE TEACHING OF THE BROTHERHOOD OF MAN AS SHOWN IN PUBLIC HEALTH ACTIVITIES.

BY DR. J. J. M'LOWNEY.

THE PRINCIPLES OF QUAKERISM.

First of all the principles of those who make up the Religious Society of Friends or Quakers is the recognition and heart-worship of God, attributing to Him the supreme qualities of Goodness, Love and Mercy. It is well to state that this principle is a fundamental of all religion and is not confined to Quakerism.

The second principle is the belief that God, good, loving and merciful, directly reveals Himself to the perceptions of man; that this Light shines into the souls of men, if they will admit it, and they need not the assistance of any one to receive it. This second principle is thoroughly distinctive of Friends.

The Scriptures record the experiences of men in the past who have tried to respond to the spirit of God—The Truth—in their individual souls, and, in the New Testament, particularly, we have a record of the very highest manifestation of the Divine in human form, a record of the life and experiences and teachings of Jesus Christ of Nazareth. We therefore esteem and revere the Scriptures, and earnestly desire to become the possessors of the truths they contain, through the enlightenment of the same Spirit by which the Truth was originally given forth by God. But, in so much as the Bible has been compiled by men who, at times erred, as all who are human will, we do not believe in a literal interpretation of each and every word in it. We believe, rather, in the Spirit of the Bible, not in the letter.

Convinced that the Divine Nature, the Christ Spirit, the Word, the Truth, "which was in the beginning," found expression in Jesus in an unparalleled, and, to our finite perceptions, in an immeasurable degree, we regard Him, in the words of the Quaker poet, John G. Whittier, as the "highest possible manifestation of God in man."

Desiring the guidance of the God Spirit which was in Christ, and through inward conviction, the Infinite Truth He illustrated and taught, Friends see in it the ideal of a religious life. They have striven and are striving to make real His teachings—the Spirit, not the Letter; Reality, not Form; Love, not Hatred; Brotherly Kindness, not Oppression; Moderation, not Excess; Simplicity, not Ostentation; Sincerity, not Pretense; Truth, not Deceit; Economy, not Waste.

These statements form a body of belief—a positive and definite Faith. They are not a Creed. The Society of Friends has no Creed, no Dogma. They are simply a statement of principles. They do not go beyond the simple and essential truths declared and practiced by Jesus Christ.

SUCH PRINCIPLES MAKE FOR A BROTHERHOOD.

People with such principles must be interested in all things which tend to the consummation of the Brotherhood of Man. But a mere statement of such principles will not aid much in bringing about that blessed condition in which all men shall think of the "other fellow" as his brother. In our strenuous, complex life, there is need for action, not words. Need for men who believe in service. Need for men who are not afraid to be "the servant of all."

PUBLIC HEALTH WORK THE FRUIT OF TREE OF BROTHERHOOD.

We must not be of those who have lost faith and hope in humanity. Despite the fact that there is so much vanity, so much thoughtlessness, so much that savors of greed and commercialism, even among those who call themselves Christians, there are not lacking evidences that the seed that Christ planted so simply and yet so eloquently in the hearts of those simple peasants of yore is beginning to bear fruit. One of the most beneficent and potential of the fruits of the Tree of Brotherhood is that of Public Health Work.

PUBLIC HEALTH TO BE UNIVERSAL LANGUAGE.

If there is to be any universal language it is surely to be found in the language of public health. If there are any great factors, some more than others, which will tend toward the consummation of a universal and lasting peace between the Nations of the world, they will surely be found in the wide propagation of those laws and principles of communal well-being, happiness and prosperity, which, slowly but surely, are being recognized as possessing universal application.

EAST JOINED HANDS WITH WEST BY PUBLIC HEALTH.

It is scarcely three years since the world was thrilled by the news of the Chinese Revolution and the overthrow of an Eastern sovereign—the remarkable woman who had held sway over 400,000,000 of people for about half a century—the Empress Dowager of China.

Early in the year 1913 there took place in the ancient capital, Peking, an event which must be accounted the most astonishing and unique in all the history even of that wonderful people. Under the immediate patronage of the President, Yuan Shih Kai, there was held China's first Public Health Congress. Here, indeed, has the East joined hands with the West, and has, if only for a moment, conversed in a common language, in its endeavor to study the application of western principles of sanitation and combat against disease.

VAST POTENTIALITIES OF SCIENCE OF PUBLIC HEALTH.

The science of Public Health is so vast in its potentialities, so far-reaching in its effects, that the layman, "the man in the street," is actually unaware of its practical existence. He accepts without a thought the ministrations of its devotees, in the same way that he draws a cup of water from his well or purchases his daily loaf of bread.

THE GREAT WORK OF DR. DIXON FOR PENNSYLVANIA.

The people of Pennsylvania may well be proud of the record this State holds as a leader in the vanguard of this benevolent work of Public Health and Sanitation. No man could work more assiduously, early and late, no man could work more unselfishly, giving even of his own substance, as well as of his time and energy for the sake of the common good, than the present Commissioner of Health, Dr. Samuel G. Dixon. He should receive the encouragement and support of all who are working for the Brotherhood of Man.

It is obviously impossible to give a detailed outline of the work which Dr. Dixon is doing, but perhaps some idea of the extent of the activities of the Department may be formed by pointing out some of the lines of work that come closest to those who are interested in bettering the physical, mental and spiritual condition of their fellow-men.

As with practically all Public Health work, the Department was originally organized to combat the spread of those diseases commonly known as contagious diseases, but dangerous and important as these diseases are, it was found that non-contagious diseases caused more deaths of children than the contagious diseases; such diseases as are due to lack of care and cleanliness in the preparation of food for infants and children. Consequently a campaign has been launched for instruction in the prevention of infant mortality. It was found that many school children were retarded in education and development because of neglected physical defects. The Department examined about 250,000 pupils in Fourth Class school District last year and only twenty-three of this number were free from physical defects. Letters and circulars of instruction were sent through the teachers to the parents outlining methods and importance of prevention of diseases in the young. Again it was found that certain diseases were being transmitted because of pollution of streams and a campaign has been waged and is being waged to prevent the spread of disease by this means. This is a tremendous task in itself, for man does not always realize that he is his brother's keeper in matters of health. There are many other lines of work undertaken by the Department for the people of this Commonwealth, but time is too fleeting for me to even enumerate them here. I must, however, mention the great work that has been begun to instruct the people in regard to the causes and prevention of that dread disease, Tuberculosis. No man in this State and none in this country has contributed more of his energy, talents and substance for the conquest of the Great White Plague than Dr. Dixon.

Finally, reference must be made to the new Act, establishing a Bureau of Housing in the Department. This is a most vital and far-reaching undertaking, because it is an effort to better the environment of our people. Environment makes character.

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS STANDS FOR CHARACTER.

The Society of Friends has always stood for the Development of Character. It is because Public Health Work is a factor in making character, because it is a work as free from partisan politics as any human work can be, because it is a service for the common people—for all the people—that I have deemed it worthy of giving it my best effort and of asking you to give it your prayers and encouragement.

PUBLIC HEALTH WORK A MANIFESTATION OF A RELIGION THAT DOES THINGS.

From the days of George Fox and William Penn, our predecessors in the Religious Society of Friends, were men who saw the folly and uselessness of Creeds, Cant and Ceremony but they believed in and practiced a religion that did things. Public Health is a manifestation of a religion that does things, and does things for all by all.

THIS IS A DAY OF OPPORTUNITY.

The Society of Friends has too modestly kept its light hidden under a bushel. There are thousands of people, sick and weary of the inconsistencies of much present-day church Christianity, who would be glad to learn that there is a Society of men and women who believe in and try to practice the simple teachings of Christ. Perhaps they might be taught that many of the things that have discouraged them, as they did some of us, are not a part of His teachings. The Society should use more of the "Printer's Ink."

We ought to make more effort to make our Principles known to the thousands of toilers of this country, who have become disgusted with the pomp, expense and incongruities of much of to-day's organized Christianity, and who, because of the bitterness engendered, are allowing the Spirit life within them to become dwarfed and inanimate. It may be well to point out in passing, that the toilers are not the only ones in this condition. We should be Friends, in deed and in truth, to all such men.

FEDERAL CO-OPERATION FOR GOOD ROADS.

Secretary Houston of the Department of Agriculture says that the State and Federal Governments should work together for highway improvement in order that a large proportion of the money annually spent for road construction may not be wasted.

In his own department the office of public roads has been demonstrating the value of proper road building by the construction of certain object-lesson roads, and the forest service is carrying out his idea of national and State co-operation in road-building. The law requires that ten per cent. of the gross receipts from the national forests shall be spent in the States in which the forests are situated. This money is expended for road improvement under direct control of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The amount appropriated under this act, based on the receipts of the national forests for the fiscal year, ending June 30, 1913, is $23,463,688. From the 1912 receipts for this ten per cent. road item, there is an additional $134,831.10, which is still available.

In administering the ten per cent. road fund, forest officers charged with the actual plans and expenditures in the neighborhood of their forests have, in almost all cases, secured an equal or a larger co-operative fund from State authorities for the building of certain pieces of road.

With the money thus expended many important roads are being built or put in repair. One on the Wyoming national forest, six miles long, makes accessible to farmers a large body of timber and opens up a region of great scenic beauty. In northwestern Arizona, part of the fund will be used in connection with the LeFevre-Bright Angel road, important because it makes accessible to tourists the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. In one place, the Ocean to Ocean Highway crosses the Apache national forest, Arizona, and on this project the forest service and the local authorities co-operated enthusiastically. On the Florida national forest in western Florida, steel bridges and graded roads have, under the stimulus of this fund, taken the place of corduroy, bog and sand.

This federal road fund is now available in all national forest States of the West. Just as fast as returns come in, the forestry officials say, a similar fund will become available in States in which eastern national forests are being secured.—From the Forest Service, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

THE FOUR-LEAF CLOVER.

A little maid in a gingham gown
Went hunting the meadows over;
Till the birds were tired, and the sun went down,
She hunted a four-leafed clover!

The four-leaf clovers bring luck, they say;
And patchwork "stint" 'n dishes
Were tiresome duties of every day,
She wanted some fairy wishes!

With dishes unwashed and "stint" 'n undone,
She tramped back home in the gloaming;
No four-leaf clover—no, never a one
Was there to be had for her roaming!

A little maid in a gingham gown
Had washed all the dinner dishes;
Had finished her "stint" 'n the sun went down,
Undreaming of fairy wishes.

When just at her feet, as she raced in play
The blossoming meadows over,
She found, what the other had sought all day,
She found, yes, a four-leaf clover!

—MARY CLARKE HUNTINGDON, in S. S. Visitor.

"WITH YOU ALWAYS."—When David Livingstone returned to Scotland, after an absence of sixteen years in Africa, the University of Glasgow desired to honor him by conferring on him the degree of Doctor of Laws. On such occasions, candidates for honorary degrees usually expected an embarrassing reception at the hands of the young collegians, who were present in full force, bubbling over with boyish fun. But when David Livingstone appeared on the platform, they received him with silent respect and reverence. He was gaunt and weary from exposure to sixteen years of African sun and twenty-seven attacks of African fever; one arm, having been injured by the bite of a lion, hung useless by his side.

There stood a real hero, who had fought many a battle for humanity, and whose presence inspired a feeling of awe in the minds of all present. He told them he was going back to Africa, partly to open new fields for British commerce, partly to suppress the African slave trade, and partly to open the way for the preaching of the Gospel. But the sentiment that stirred all hearts most was this: "Shall I tell you what supported me through all the years of exile among people whose language I could not understand, and whose attitude towards me was always uncertain, and often hostile? It was this: 'Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.'"—From the Little Light Bearer.

"THE GOOD SAMARITAN OF DEATH VALLEY."—From the pages of a recent magazine looks forth the pleasant pictured face of a young man, and by him is an equally pleasant looking black Newfoundland dog. They seem to smile, and well they may, with a glad feeling of work well done, for as "the pious monks of St. Bernard" go forth to rescue perishing travelers, with their brave dogs beside them, even so do Lou Beck and his dog "Rufus," only it is not from blinding snow but from deadly thirst that they have saved so many men, that "in California they call him the good Samaritan of Death Valley," we are told.

Lou Beck was a prospector, one of the many who try in one place after another to find the precious ore without making any very great success of it, and he heard wild rumors of great "finds" in Death Valley, and started through it with a party, all "expecting to make their fortunes in a few days."

They traveled a weary way through that desert land, almost perishing from thirst, and "when death seemed inevitable," finding a tiny stream trickling out of a canyon at the base of the Panamint mountains.

When Beck returned to civilization he was a changed man. He had seen sands that were strewn with skulls, and that sight had put a big idea into his head.

Spring came, and Beck made another trip through Death Valley. At his side was a Newfoundland dog. The prospector carried a bundle of tin strips. They were signboards to guide the wanderer's steps aright.

Each summer since then the prospector and his dog have made a journey to the land of the purple mist, piling up rocks and attaching signs to them, searching for lost travelers and incidentally keeping a lookout for a piece of precious metal. Once or twice Rufus has led his master to prospectors who, after long suffering from thirst, had fallen upon the burning sands to die. In signboarding the desert Beck has saved a number of thirst-mad rainbow-chasers, and has also, in remote districts, stumbled upon the bleaching bones of dead men who may have found fortunes in the silver sulphuret district but who did not live to tell the world about it. At one time he assisted at the burial of four men who died of thirst within two miles of a spring.

The country that Beck traverses is the most arid section of the American continent—a dreary stretch of hundreds of miles of desert, dotted here and there with foothills, buttes, dry creek beds, chaparral, prickly pear and sagebrush. Springs are miles upon miles apart. Most of them are bitterly alkali and some are poison. One finds an occasional coyote well, but they are not numerous, especially when sought.

Very little animal life exists in the desert. Always there is the crafty coyote and the kangaroo mouse. Aside from them, put down the chuckwalla and the side-winder. The side-winder is a dusty-looking little snake, scarcely more than a foot long, yet nearly as deadly as his big brother, the diamond-back rattler. As a protection against snake-bite, Beck has his dog wear boots which lace up the legs. Before donning boots the dog was bitten several times and barely escaped with his life.

On an ordinary summer afternoon the thermometer runs up to about 134 degrees in the shade out in Death Valley, and the most unpleasant thing about it is that there is a dearth of shade.

When we think of what it must mean to be without water in such surroundings as these, we may be thankful for the work of the "good Samaritan," and his four-footed helper, and conclude, as does the writer of the article, "the world needs more such men."

F. T. R.

THAT thou art happy, owe to God; that thou continest such, owe to thyself; that is to thy obedience therein stand.—MILTON.

FRIENDLY NEWS.

At a Quarterly Meeting, held at Devonshire House, London, on the 7th ult., the chief business was the consideration of work for Peace, especially a proposal from the meeting at Jordan, that the Centenary of Peace between Britain and America in 1914 shall be made the occasion of special efforts for Peace on the part of Friends. It was desired especially that the Yearly Meeting should be asked to approach the British Government, urging that the Centenary of Peace should be celebrated by the offer of treaties of unlimited arbitration with every country in the world. After a long and interesting discussion the proposal was approved and the clerk was directed to prepare a minute for the consideration of the next meeting.

WESTTOWN NOTES.

The rain of the past few days has done a great deal of good and at the same time disappointed not a few coming to and going from the School. Many persons had planned coming here on Seventh-day last in automobiles. About fifty pupils went away on the stage for week-end visits. After dinner a party of boys went to the farm barn for a frolic, and the gymnasium was in demand by both boys and girls.

For a number of years the heads of the School have been gathering once a week in the Superintendent's parlor for reading and discussion of Friendly matters or those of a more general moral and religious nature. A somewhat different program has been arranged for this winter; the following topics have been suggested for discussion: Character Building; Morals and Religion; Historical and Political; Sports and Recreation; Pedagogy and General Education; Science; Poetry, Art, Fiction.

It is arranged that sub-committees from the group shall be responsible for the particular subjects allotted to them, some of which may require more than one evening to complete.

A good portion of the top of the large pasture field on Walnut Hill has been ploughed, and it, together with the sixteen-acre field south of the woodland adjoining, will soon be dotted over with trees. Workmen have been opening old "French" drains north of Hickman's run with a view of gathering a number of the springs with a central cistern; from here the water will be forced to the top of the hill to serve the new orchard project. A combined barn and packing shed and a workman's cottage will probably be built before next spring. On the west side of Walnut Hill the forest planting, both of conifers and deciduous trees, has made good growth during the past season. The harvest time for such crops is not very near, however, with prices for lumber as they are, it is reasonable to expect a good and sure dividend in years to come from the enterprise.

Once, evening last week, the fire gong on the girls side rang with no uncertain tone; almost instantly there was great commotion, girls scurrying with apparent precision; the occasion was nothing more than practise of the fire drill; the building was soon cleared, though the girls came from their sleeping apartments.

On First-day evening, 26th inst., Wm. B. Harvey spoke to the boys on "Principles and Practices of Friends." Alfred Lowry, Jr., addressed the girls concerning the "Apostle Peter."

The model of the Old Building is here, and now awaits the completion of a glass case to cover its rather delicate dimensions; a table in "central" has been specially strengthened for its accommodation for the present.

CORRESPONDENCE.

For "THE FRIEND."

The following advice issued by Ulster Quarterly Meeting, held at Lurgan, Ireland, the twenty-second of last Ninth Month, has come to us with request for insertion in our columns. A personal letter accompanying it states: "The letter was issued by our last Quarterly Meeting in view of the present and its grave crisis caused by the Government's extreme efforts because of the Home Rule Bill for Ireland, which would place Protestants under the rule of a Parliament in Dublin composed almost exclusively of Romanists, dominated by the Pope and the Jesuits. . . . The so-called 'scoffguards' in the bill we know are perfectly useless, not one of those offered by Protestants being introduced. When the bill passes the House of Commons next session, the House of Lords cannot under a new act interfere. Ulster for the past two years has been preparing to defend itself and is now arming. Fully 100,000 volunteers have been enrolled. A few days ago 12,000 of those of Belfast alone were reviewed."

Alluding to the address our correspondent continues—"Our best papers of all polities in England have inserted it [the advice] in a slightly condensed form, giving it a most prominent position, which I must say surprised while it delights us."

Our Friends in Ulster call for the sympathy of their friends everywhere, for the circumstances are trying in the extreme and menace some of the rights and privileges which we inherit as our birthright. The Unionists, or Anti-Home Rule party, number about two-sevenths of the total population in North Ireland, while the rest, five-sevenths or over—the Nationalists—are for Home Rule and belong to a religious system that has never learned what the word tolerance means. We are far from a unit as a people in the discussion of this question, but we are a compact unit in extending our sympathy to the dear Friends in Ulster. The letter of advice is as follows.—Ed.

ADVICE FROM ULSTER QUARTERLY MEETING, 1913.

In common with the other churches, Ulster Quarterly Meeting feels that the circumstances in which our country is placed demand earnest prayer on our part to our Heavenly Father for protection and guidance. He is King of kings and Lord of lords, and the deepest desire of our hearts should be that His will may be done on earth as it is in Heaven.

All around us warlike preparations are proceeding. The Society of Friends has always held that war and the taking of human life are irreconcilable with the spirit and teaching of our Lord Jesus Christ.

We would do well to read and dwell upon the Sermon on the Mount and those portions of Scripture which deal with the love of Christ and His love manifested through us to others, even to our enemies, and seek to be thoroughly convinced in our own minds of the disparity between the spirit of Christ and that which animates war. Our faith and actions should be the result of personal conviction, not merely a blind following of a creed handed down by our fathers.

We are all members of a community, and not isolated individuals, and in our relationship with our neighbors we must inevitably come to a point of decision as to our attitude and action, in case the troubles come which are so sadly feared. That we should give the matter deep consideration is the duty of every Friend, so that the moment of choice may not find us unprepared. If we are true to our principles as Friends, we shall not assist in the taking of human life, however great our desire to defend our rights as citizens of the United Kingdom.

This non-militant attitude may lead to misunderstanding of our position, but we must be prepared to face this, remembering that the servant is not greater than his Lord, and that such suffering was His portion in this world. Some members may be placed in circumstances of extreme difficulty, if not of actual danger; they should, however, not neglect to take such precautions, consistent with our principles, as prudence may dictate.

Again, the non-militant attitude implies a firm faith in the protection of our Heavenly Father, as when Hezekiah of old said, "With them is an arm of flesh, but with us is the Lord our God to help us." We therefore urge our members to see to it that they are individually "reconciled to God through Jesus Christ our Lord," and in the position of being His servants.

Prayer is far the most powerful weapon with which we are armed. Whatever our political views, we may truly unite at the Throne of Grace, asking that our country may be kept in peace. Let us therefore pray unfeignedly, as perhaps never before, that we may be pacemakers, and that we may in all things do the will of God.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—The Legislature of Pennsylvania passed a bill providing that ten verses must be read from the Bible each day, in every school, with a penalty of dismissal of the teacher for failure to comply.

A dispatch from Trinidad, Colorado, of the 23rd says: "Between 230 and 280 miners are entombed in the No. 2 mine of the Stag Canon Fuel Company at Dawson, in Colfax County, N. M., 55 miles south of this city. An explosion, the cause of which has not yet been learned, wrecked the slope of the mine. All reports indicate that the disaster is the greatest in the coal mining history of the Southwest. It is thought that the explosion was due to gas, but this has not been confirmed by any reports."

It is stated that the greatest radium ore deposit known to exist has lately been bought by two philanthropists and will be utilized for the benefit of humanity in the alleviation and cure of cancer. It is located in Paradox Valley, Colorado.

The distribution of a fund of $35,000 has lately been made in Kansas for purchase of seed wheat for planting in western Kansas counties, where grasshoppers and drought left the farmers without money and without credit. Tractor engines and motor trucks are doing work formerly required of 80,000 horses and mules. More than half of the 7,000,000 acres to be planted will be seeded with power-driven machinery. Where it costs eighty cents an acre to plow wheat ground with horsepower, it costs but ten cents for kerosene, twelve cents for gasoline and fifteen cents for coal.

A proclamation issued by President Wilson announces that the law passed by the last Congress to protect migratory and insectivorous birds is now in effect. Under this law reed-birds, shore birds and wood ducks are protected for periods of from two to five years. In most cases the opening dates for wild fowl shooting in the various states are made to conform to laws of the state in which the fowl are found. According to report of G. F. Guelph, a New York naturalist, birds in that state are more numerous now than ever.

Dr. George R. Carson has announced at San Francisco a new treatment of typhoid fever by injecting serum drawn from convalescent patients.

It is stated that almost 100,000 more tons of foodstuffs were imported through the port of San Francisco in the year ended with Ninth Month 30, 1913, than in the preceding twelve months, according to figures compiled by William B. Hamilton, assistant Collector of the Port. Hamilton predicts a doubling of such imports when the Panama Canal is in operation.

A despatch from Nashville, Tenn., of the 20th inst. says: "Winter appeared in many sections of the Middle South to-day, snowfall being reported from points as far south as Birmingham, Ala., and Atlanta. This was the earliest snowfall on record in Nashville."

It was stated from Washington, on the 21st: "Good roads movements throughout the country are to have substantial support of the Post-office Department. First Assistant Postmaster General Roper has notified officially postmasters of all classes that 'it is the desire of the department that they co-operate with state and county authorities in the endeavor to improve the condition of the public roads.'"

The Mississippi Valley Immigration Association, the object of which is the diversion of immigrants to the South, has lately been organized in New Orleans.

The American people drank more whiskey and beer, smoked more cigars and cigarettes and used more tobacco during the fiscal year 1913 than in any other yearly period of the nation's history, according to estimates based upon the record-breaking internal revenue receipts of the Federal Government for the twelve months ended Sixth Month 30.

FOREIGN.—A large body of land hitherto unexplored has been discovered in the Arctic Ocean north of Russia and Siberia. It is thought that it may be as large as Greenland.

A despatch from London of the 20th says: "According to the Evening News, the Chartered Company of South Africa has decided upon a vast undertaking whereby Rhodesia will become the new beef market of the world. The Chartered Company will turn millions of acres of excellent grazing land into a vast ranch. It is estimated that via Cairo and the Mediterranean supplies of meat can be brought to Europe seven days quicker than from the Argentine."

A despatch from Belgrade, Servia, of the 20th says: "The Servian Government to-day notified the European Powers that it had ordered its troops to withdraw immediately behind the Albanian frontier, fixed by the peace conference held in London at the conclusion of the first Balkan war. This step complies with Austria's ultimatum."

Two French aviators recently began a flight from Issy les Moulineaux, France, to Cairo, Egypt. The distance to be traversed is 3345 miles.

The presidential election in China resulted in the choice of General Yuan Shi Kai as President for five years. General Yuan has been Provisional President ever since the Republic was established, excepting in the first few weeks when Dr. Sun Yat Sen, an Americanized and Christianized Chinaman, held the office. In China, as in France, the President is not elected directly by the people, but by the people's representatives in the parliament, or Congress.

It was stated from Berlin on the 23rd: "The International Tuberculosis Congress was opened here to-day, in the hall of the Prussian Diet, delegates from twenty-two nations attending. The German Empress attended the opening session, and in accepting designation as a patroness of the conference, said she was intensely interested in the endeavor to combat the scourge of tuberculosis. The Imperial Vice Chancellor welcomed the delegates. The feature of his address was an enthusiastic tribute to the "extraordinary energy and success with which the fight against consumption has been conducted in the United States."

A despatch of the 26th from Vienna says: "Emperor William of Germany arrived here to-day on a visit to Emperor Francis Joseph, who warmly welcomed him at the station. The meeting of the two sovereigns, it is believed, will go far toward checking rumors of coolness between the two countries."

Peru has lately adopted a constitutional amendment giving religious freedom to all. Until now the constitution of that country has forbidden the practice of any religion except the Roman Catholic.

NOTICES.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. Sixth Street, Phila., will be open from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from 2 to 5 P. M.—Seventh-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. only.

WANTED.—At once, a suitable Friend as an Assistant to the Superintendent of the Indian School at Tunusassa. One who may favorably consider succeeding him next spring.

MEETING AT LANARH.—Under authority of a committee appointed by Concord Quarterly Meeting, a meeting for Divine Worship will be held in Paiste Hall, Lanarh, Pa., on First-day afternoon, Eleventh Month 2nd, at three o'clock. All interested are invited.

BIBLE ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDS IN AMERICA.—The annual meeting of the Bible Association of Friends in America will be held in the Committee-room of Friends' Meeting-house, Twelfth Street, below Market Street, on Fourth-day, Eleventh Month 5th, 1913, at 4 o'clock, p. m. Friends generally are invited to attend the meeting and take part in the proceedings.

WM. T. ELKINTON, Secretary.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.—The stage will meet at Westtown Station, trains leaving Broad Street (Penna. R. R.) Phila. at 6:32, 8:21 A. M., 2:45 and 4:30 P. M.; other trains will be met on request. Stage fare twenty-five cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, address West Chester Bell Telephone, 114A.

WM. B. HARVEY,
Superintendent.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK (Eleventh Month 3rd to 8th):
Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting, at Fourth and Arch Streets, Third-day, Eleventh Month 4th, at 10 A. M.
Abington Quarterly Meeting, at Germantown, Phila., Fifth-day, Eleventh Month 6th, at 10 A. M.

MONTHLY MEETINGS:

Kennett, at Kennett Square, Pa., Third-day, Eleventh Month 4th, at 10 A. M.
Chesterfield, at Trenton, N. J., Third-day, Eleventh Month 4th, at 10 A. M.
Chester, N. J., at Moorestown, N. J., Third-day, Eleventh Month 4th, at 7:30 P. M.
Bradford, at Coatesville, Pa., Fourth-day, Eleventh Month 5th, at 10 A. M.
New Garden, at West Grove, Pa., Fourth-day, Eleventh Month 5th, at 10 A. M.
Upper Springfield, at Mansfield, N. J., Fourth-day, Eleventh Month 5th, at 10 A. M.
Haddonfield, N. J., Fourth-day, Eleventh 5th, at 10 A. M.
Wilmington, DeL., Fifth-day, Eleventh Month 6th, at 10 A. M.
Uchlan, at Downingtown, Pa., Fifth-day, Eleventh Month 6th, at 10 A. M.
London Grove, Pa., Fifth-day, Eleventh Month 6th, at 10 A. M.
Burlington, N. J., Fifth-day, Eleventh Month 6th, at 10 A. M.
Falls, at Falsington, Pa., Fifth-day, Eleventh Month 6th, at 10 A. M.
Evesham, at Mt. Laurel, N. J., Fifth-day, Eleventh Month 6th, at 10 A. M.
Upper Evesham, at Medford, N. J., Seventh-day, Eleventh Month 8th, at 10 A. M.

DIED.—At her home at Norway, Ia., on the eleventh of Tenth Month, 1913, JULIA TOW, wife of Lars Tow, in the seventy-first year of her age; she was a member of Staveanger Monthly Meeting.

A WORD ON SERVICE

With Incidental Reference
to Belting and Lace Leather

Leaders of popular thought are urging that it is not how much one can get but how much one can serve that really counts. We find this ideal in commercial life, where Sheldon is teaching that service is the basis of successful business building. We find it even in political life, as variously expressed by Wilson, Bryan and Roosevelt.

It practically underlies Frederick Taylor's message of industrial efficiency. And so Belting and even Lace Leather contribute their part to the service rendered mankind by manifold industries. The belt that runs steadily week in and week out, the lace leather that helps to do this without break-downs, are contributing to the welfare of all users of the goods manufactured.

To do business with this ideal of service lifts one's work above the merely sordid. Such an ideal is not new to Friends. Witness the significance attached to the name "Quaker" as a brand. If you hold closely to the ideal, it refutes the libel that business cannot be done according to the Golden Rule. And so it is our endeavor to furnish belts and facing that shall give such service.

J. E. RHOADS & SONS

PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. Third St.
NEW YORK: 102 Beekman St.
CHICAGO: 322 W. Randolph St.
Factory and Tannery, Wilmington, Del.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL.

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

For Rich Milk

For Clean Milk

For Safe Milk

Call Philadelphia Locust 209

ABBOTTS ALDERNEY DAIRIES

31st and Chestnut Streets

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and a natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Aves., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

ELKINS MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

MEMBERS OF

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA
STOCK EXCHANGES

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

A YOUNG FRIEND DESIRES A POSITION AS
stenographer and typewriter.
Address "G," Office of THE FRIEND.

FOR RENT—TWO LIGHT, COMFORTABLE THIRD story rooms. With bath. Communicating. Near the business section of the city.
Address "M," Office of THE FRIEND.

RUFUS M. JONES, HAVERFORD, PA., DESIRES to secure a well-qualified secretary. She must be a good stenographer and typewriter, and capable of carrying on a variety of literary and business lines of work. A Friend would be preferred. Address as above.

WANTED A FEW DAYS A WEEK A POSITION as Substitute Attendee; to read to, or write for an invalid, or some similar work.
EMILY E. CHESMAN, BEVLY, N. J.

WANTED TO BUY—COPY OF JOHN WOOLMAN'S
Journal, Edition of 1857. Published by T. E. Chapman, Philadelphia.
Address, AMELIA M. GEMMERE, HAVERFORD, PA.

ENGLISH FRIENDS' PERIODICALS

The Friend (London), Weekly..... $2.11
The British Friend, Monthly..... $1.60
Friends' Quarterly Examiner.....$1.66

SUBSCRIPTIONS NOW DUE FOR 1914
NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS SOLICITED

GRACE W. BLAIR, - Media, Pa.
AMERICAN AGENT

Redlands--California

Wissahickon Inn

A comfortable family hotel
in the residence section of beautiful Redlands.

SEND FOR FOLDERS & RATES

A MILLSTONE

Around your neck. That's what poor printing is to any business man.

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,

EDWARD T. BIDDLE,

1010 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

JOS. B. SCATTERGOOD

HOUSE, SIGN AND DECORATIVE

PAINTING

Orders Solicited Bell 'Phone

275 S. FOURTH STREET

W. B. WEAVER Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5th St., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN
TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT
OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPL.
ACCOMMODATIONS FOR
FUNERALS.

BELL 'PHONE.

ESTABLISHED 1880.

FREE OF PENNSYLVANIA STATE TAX. PHILA-DELPHIA SUBURBAN GAS & ELECTRIC CO. FIRST AND REFUNDING. 5% GOLD BONDS. GUARANTEED
FOR PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST BY AMERICAN
GAS CO. PRICE TO YIELD ABOUT 5.35%.

FULL PARTICULARS AND LATEST EARNINGS UPON REQUEST

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CAOBURY PAUL W. BROWN JAMES P. MAGILL

DOCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevation 1800 feet, commanding extensive
mountain and valley scenery. Address

J. W. HURLEY, Manager,
POCONO MANOR, PA.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

(Marcellus Balderston)

602 SPRING GARDEN ST. 518 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL 'PHONE PHILADELPHIA

The reason for the Suburban movement
is the opportunity it affords to have a lawn.

The reason for the prettiest lawn is often
due to Moon's Trees and Shrubbery that add beauty, give enjoyment, and enhance realty
values.

Send for Catalogs about them.

THE WM. H. MOON CO.

NURSERYMEN

Room H, Stephen Girard Bldg.
Philadelphia, Pa.

Nurseries at
Morrisville, Pa.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST COMPANY OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.

Accounts Solicited Deposits by Mail

Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET

FOURTH AND CHESTNUT STREETS

JOSEPH G. FOGG FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16th & RACE STREETS

Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals

BELL 'PHONE

SPRUCE 6648

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 6, 1913.

No. 19.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
{ DAVID H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to
EDWIN P. SELLEW OR THE FRIEND,
NO. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

INTERESTED—CONCERNED.

A school of educationists—the Herbartians—make interest the core of their system. Such exaggerated statements as, "Interest is the greatest thing in the world," "There is nothing like interest," characterize their writings. To the champions of the old ideas of formal discipline these statements are very distasteful. Their doctrine is that of choosing disagreeable things to do because of the training to be had in doing them. The emphasis therefore on interest or pleasure seems a very great cheapening of educational values.

As is often the case, however, when two points of view of a subject are in conflict, the doctrine of interest is very imperfectly understood so long as it is interpreted as a doctrine of mere pleasure. The Herbartians in their philosophical system make it very clear that the most appealing interests are those that exact strenuous and persistent toil. These interests of course are not the primitive interests of the child—they are at the end rather than at the beginning of the series by which the attention of the child is secured. The points to be kept in mind if our education is to be scientific, are first that there is a natural progression in interest, and second that this progression leads inevitably into the serious application to tasks essential to the development of character. In using interest as a means of education—whether we have school education in mind, or the education of groups of people in the activities of social or of religious life, these essential points are often slighted. The interests used to attract attention are external, often unrelated to the subject, in too many cases unworthy of the high aim in view. Especially has this been so in many directions in promoting church activities until one seems almost excused for a prejudice against the appeal to interest in religious matters. A very great deal that has been done under the designation of the "institutional church" has been open to this criticism, and there has, therefore, been a popular reaction against the institutional church.

In the Society of Friends the revival of the past decade has been largely based upon interest. In some instances the appeal has been to other than the essential elements of interest involved in our message and mission. The point for congratulation, however, is the fact that the appeal has mostly been a sane one, and that it has been in good measure successful. It has drawn young Friends in increasing numbers to participate in the concerns of the Society. In view of this situation the question is pertinent whether a religious Society of Friends can be maintained by interested members alone? Is there not a stage beyond interest, expressed in the well-known term concerned, necessary to keep our membership truly alive? In other words, how can interest be transmuted into concern?

If we are ardent Herbartians we shall at once say that the appeal of interest in any subject, if rightly made, includes the whole scope of the subject and very especially its religious aspects. There is no need to embark on a philosophical discussion. Enough, perhaps, has been said to indicate that the appeal which successfully results in interested members of our Society is the appeal which puts all such in line for the further stage of progress that Friends describe by using the adjective concerned. Practically, however, it seems to be true that there is danger in some quarters that interest does not ripen in that way—danger that the "affairs of Society" shall be undertaken by those who are actively interested but apparently not religiously concerned. Is there any ready solution of this difficulty where it exists or must we go complacently on and trust that by a natural process it will eventually work itself out?

From across the sea, where the quickened pulse of interest has had an undoubted strength, a new note has of late been sounded again and again. This note has been quoted more than once in THE FRIEND, but it has not yet been repeated too often or with too much emphasis. It points out that "the meeting for worship" is the centre of our system, the key to our message and mission. Wherever this becomes recognized, so that meetings for worship compete successfully with committees and board meetings and missions, a new fire is kindled. Something of that effect takes place that was described when a "son of the morning" in our Society said that the early Friends were changed men themselves before they went about to change others. It is nothing more distant, nothing more revolutionary than this for which we would plead. It is very much as though we had taken a first step and were pausing with indecision on the brink of a further. Through our tea-meetings, our study circles, our Old Scholars' Associations, our anniversaries, we have become interested. Shall we not give ourselves over to that which is pronounced the centre of our system, our meetings for worship, and so put ourselves in line to become concerned?

J. H. B.

RAISING THE STANDARD.

"For effective work [in reaching the 'religiously indifferent'] three things are essential: (1) A high standard of Quaker truth publicly declared; (2) an effective organization; (3) a fair proportion of the lives of the rank and file of our membership bearing enthusiastic witness to the reality of that truth, and whose lives must be sufficiently pronounced to convince people that they are the result of Quaker thought and training. Today the greatest lack comes under the last heading."—From First Prize Essay by EDITH J. WILSON.

"In the beginnings, the large proportion of those who practiced Quakerism were in earnest and lived strenuously; now in almost every meeting, the large proportion are not in earnest, think loosely and live without trying to square the details of their daily conduct to a lofty standard. The dynamic force of Quakerism is hampered by the amount of inertia in its instrument."—From Prize Essay by JANET E. L. PAYNE.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

A FRESH TESTIMONY TO STEPHEN GRELLET.

As J. Bevan Braithwait's words in relation to the eternal change of Rachel Grellet, daughter of Stephen Grellet, may comfort some mourners, I venture to copy them.

E. P. SMITH.

"The doting father of this daughter was indeed a noble servant and modern prophet. His memoir by Wm. Guest and the fuller biography by Benjamin Seebom are rich additions to our literature. The former is the especial book to present to thoughtful young Christians. A librarian once handed it to a reader and said, 'Read this memoir of Stephen Grellet and you will never regret it.' Returning it, he said, 'Did you give me this book to humble me into the dust, to make me realize how a one candle power would show beside the solar light?'"

Stephen Grellet had his birth in the ranks of French nobility in 1773. The parents were noble by birth as well. He was highly educated in Catholic Universities. He was a soldier in the King's Horse Guards when the French revolution was at its height. The royal army was routed and the young soldier and his brother became prisoners and were ordered to be shot. During some uproar in the army they with others escaped into Holland whence they took ship to a port in the north of South America.

The Divine Spirit had talked with Stephen Grellet when a child, but he had turned from it, now it came again with power and he yielded. From this time he wholly dedicated himself to the service of God and humanity. Stephen Grellet certainly became one of those great depositions of spiritual power by whom mortals now and then see the heavens opened. He was soon recognized among the Friends as a minister of marvellous power, though yet compelled to speak by an interpreter. In three extended journeys over Europe he visited down into the deepest Inquisition dungeons, he went where pestilence and sorrow dwelt, he spoke words of comfort to human beings in chains, and in a bondage worse than death. No evil came nigh him and no man reproached him. The angel of His presence saved him. Czar Alexander besought him to come to him after he had already visited him, and he knelt in prayer with Stephen Grellet. The cry of his spirit was, "Lie low, my soul; be thou exalted my Blessed Redeemer."

E. P. S. adds to the foregoing—"Rachel Grellet gave away copies of Guest's Memoir of her father without stint. The letters acknowledging her generous gifts are of deep interest. One recipient wrote her—"I prize the Memoir more than any book I have, the Bible excepted, it is one of experience and adventure." How many poor people were released from suffering through his influence, and now through the work of his daughter that influence still spreads."

It is pertinent to add that a Friend favorably known in Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, who but recently joined the Society of Friends, was first directed to them by the reading of Guest's Memoir.

A GOOD NAME. If your name is to live at all, it is so much more to have it live in people's hearts than only in their brains.—HOLMES.

EXACTNESS in little duties is a wonderful source of cheerfulness.—F. W. FABER.

PERSIS EARL HALLOCK.

"As the clear light is upon the holy candlestick so is the beauty of the face in ripe age."

Nearly a year ago two Friends of ripe age died within a few weeks of each other. The first to depart was Susan C. (Gorham) Maule, of Bristol, Pa. The other, so soon to follow her beloved friend, was Persis Earl Hallock, of Poplar Ridge, N. Y.

For years these two had lived in the same community and attended the same meeting. On the extended journeys in the ministry undertaken from time to time by Persis Hallock Susan Gorham was her faithful attendant. Their close and intimate companionship was interrupted in the year 1884 by the marriage of Susan Gorham to Joseph Maule, of Philadelphia. Henceforth their interests were divided but visits and correspondence kept unbroken the ties of friendship.

The memory of those two stately forms with faces of rare spiritual strength and beauty so familiar to my childhood brings repeatedly to my mind the verse from Ecclesiasticus with which this sketch opens. Because of her removal to Philadelphia in my early youth, I did not come to know so intimately the beloved "Aunt Sue" of a gifted circle of nieces and nephews, but of Persis Hallock, my mother's friend and mine, I have been asked to write a few words in memoriam.

Persis Earl Hallock, a daughter of Burling and Lydia Hallock, was born in 1830, at Keeseville, New York, near Lake Champlain. In the Ausable River she had when a girl a narrow escape from drowning. At two different periods in her teens she attended Nine Partners Boarding School in Dutchess County, New York. When she was seventeen years of age she began to teach, in which work she continued a number of years to the satisfaction of pupils and patrons. In 1857 she nursed her mother through her last suffering illness and thus records the event of her death: "The tenderest, the very best of mothers has been taken from us. Two weeks ago this morning her pure spirit took its flight to dwell forevermore with angels. But none can tell the lonely state we are left in."

It was some years after this that Persis Hallock heard and obeyed the call to consecrate more fully her life to the Truth as it was revealed to her. She often referred in later years to the worldliness of her life before this time, although it is hard to believe that she was ever lacking in seriousness of mind. She has written of this turning point in her life: "I tried to make peace and continue in the way I was then in, being of the world, but nothing would bring peace but giving up to endeavor to be a Friend."

Because of this experience her very frequent testimony was that "He who called me away from friends and prospects has fulfilled the saying of the Saviour, 'Seek first the kingdom of heaven and its righteousness and all things needful shall be added.'"

Her intimate friends knew too that she not only renounced at her Master's call the customs and dress of the world, but that she also made the supreme renunciation compared with which the laying down of life itself would have seemed easy. The knowledge of this fact gave her frequent appeals from the gallery for complete sacrifice on the part of the true disciple a peculiar weight and poignancy. It also gave to her daily speech and manner a touch of wistfulness and a hint to her voice of inward struggle and pain never quite outlived. For our friend was not naturally an ascetic. She loved intellectual and cultivated companionship, beauty of form and color, beautiful objects in furnishings and adornment, landscape and flowers and, above all, young people and children.

Her home at Poplar Ridge, to which she came in 1864, was opposite the Meeting-house and many children passed her door on their way to Hepsibeth C. Hussey's Select School at Sherwood. To them the house was always an object of extreme interest because of its octagonal shape and surmounting cupola. On the seats which flanked either side of the doorway the children were wont to see in summer time Friends in delicately tinted lawns and caps and handkerchiefs, knitting or sewing as the afternoon shadows began to lengthen across the roadway.

And sometimes we had errands there or were gently hailed and invited to rest on our homeward way. The warm welcome from the true friend of children was unfailing and we never left without a flower from the tangled garden she loved, and with the little floral token the earnest, affectionate gaze as if into our very souls, which we well understood without need of spoken word to mean a concern for our higher welfare.

In 1875 Persis Hallock accompanied by Susan Gorham traveled with a Minute to England, Norway, France and Germany. She felt her interest and love go out especially to the Friends in Norway in whose homes she was an honored and long remembered guest. "How my heart goes into those homes visited on the—to us—memorable visit. My best love and earnest desire is for all amongst whom my lot has been cast that the seedtime may be improved and the harvest be full of sheaves of peace. Who, when earnestly considering these things, would not be willing to part with any earthly consideration for the peace and rest that remain for the children of God."

Two years later, accompanied by Susan Gorham and the latter's brother-in-law, Samuel D. Otis, she visited Nova Scotia and Vermont. From St. John she wrote, "The crowning meeting was held First-day afternoon at Carlton, just across the river from this place. A very full house of quietly sitting people. Yesterday we had two meetings in the new buildings in the burnt district among the poorer classes. There seems a very great respect to linger in the hearts of many, and now and then one who claims to hold our principles. My beloved Susan has been the same faithful companion. S. D. O. has done his part well."

Later from Lincoln, Vermont, she writes of Samuel Otis, Lydia D. Meader and herself being engaged on the west side of the Green Mountains "in the work of love assigned us. 'How doth the city sit solitary that once was full of people.' Greatly have I desired that the things that remain may not die but be strengthened."—"The people about here are much interested in Moody's meetings and I have said whatever means it may please the Father to use to awaken the masses, these means He can bless to the furthering of His work in the earth. That it may be so is the breathing of my spirit, for there is great need of more than a superficial religion amongst the people of this country."

The same autumn she wrote from Peru, New York: "It is with a reverent heart I can acknowledge that a meeting held among my old friends who knew me when I was a wanderer from the Father's house was so owned by the Divine Presence as to cause us to feel we were in our right places."

In 1878 the two friends went together on a religious visit to Bermuda. The following communication shows Persis Hallock's firm faith in a guiding power the outcome of obedience to which she could not always foresee: "Since being here we have kept pretty quiet. The object of our coming is getting more and more understood and it must be through His power if way be made to meet with the people."

Two days later she wrote: "The inexpressibly proving season of holding the first meeting has passed. A tribute of thanksgiving should dwell in our hearts that we were not left in the time of need though faith was tried to an hair's-breadth. Such an event as a Friends' Meeting has not occurred in more than a century (and perhaps never where a woman asked the privilege), though Chalk'ey mentions a meeting or meetings in the Bermudas."—"Fifth-day we went over to St. George where notice had been given of our desiring to have a meeting. Curiosity would have some effect to draw out the people but whatever the feelings, there was a very large gathering, and marvelous in our eyes was the quiet of those who are so entirely unaccustomed to our simple way of worship. There were many Episcopals present and there have been soldiers at some meetings. There are more colored than white people living in Bermuda. There have been numbers of them at all the meetings. The meeting last evening was very exercising but especially quiet though there were many about the doors and windows. No bond so precious between pilgrims bound toward a better country as that sweet union of spirit known to those who do indeed prefer Jerusalem to their chief joy; and to be one of these is the desire of thy loving friend, never more sensible than now that of Him who has all power must every thought be formed that will in any wise bring nearer in spirit unto the Father whose teaching my heart most earnestly craves."

And again—"So much frailty of body causes many serious questions as to its being required thus to go out from home, but thus far there has been enough bodily strength to get there and back again. Not that I feel anxious about it as regards the body, only to do what is required and no more."

Persis Hallock visited California twice,—the first time accompanied by Susan Gorham, and Jesse Meekel of Jacksonville, N. Y. There was then but one railroad to the coast and that through snow-sheds dreaded by eastern travelers. Pasadena, which as a beautiful and extended city she visited again in 1906, was then a cluster of four or five houses.

Several times afterward she took shorter journeys to the West and was twice in North Carolina, where the hardships which so many Friends endured appealed strongly to her sympathies. Her last Minute to North Carolina also liberated her to cross the Atlantic again. But her physical strength failing, she felt the will was taken for the deed and she expressed the belief that the burden would rest on another.

Many Philadelphia Friends well remember her visits to meetings within their limits in her later years. She yearned over Philadelphia that she might "hold fast that which she had that no one take her crown." She died First Month 13, 1913, in the home of a sister, near Trumansburg, N. Y., where through a prolonged decline, a devoted niece and nephew ministered to her needs.

This short account can give only in meagre outline the main features of Persis Hallock's life. Of her unflinching and wide-extending sympathy, her self-denial for the sake of helping others, her courage as friends and relatives dropped away and left her alone, no complete idea can be given in so short a space.

She stands in memory as one of those heroic spirits found in every age who hear a voice which calls for the sacrifice of personal desires and inclinations upon the altar of conviction. Although its fulfillment was again and again a crucifixion of her natural preferences, no self-consciousness marred her vision of duty, and no excuse was made to herself for its avoidance because it was unusual or difficult of accomplishment or unconventional for a woman's undertaking. The spiritual radiance of her countenance and the sympathy of her manner, as well as the Friends' garb, attracted people to her wherever she went, and her pilgrimages were a succession of opportunities to minister to the deeper needs of all classes of people. Gracious and charitable, possessed of insight into simple human aspirations, she was not concerned to magnify differences of doctrine. Her creed may be summed up in the word "obedience," with all that it implies, united to the conviction that "the unpardonable sin

Is to deny the Word of God within!"

AGNES L. TIERNEY.

THE BIBLE TESTED.—The Bible, as a whole, has been put to a test to which no other book has been put, and has stood it. The Book is a whole; the whole of life is in it—peace and war, grandeur and ugliness. There are uglinesses in the Bible; but it was the same man who stood guilty before Nathan that wrote of the God he worshipped; who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases; who redeemeth thy life from destruction; who crowneth thee with loving-kindness and tender mercies."—The Spectator.

He who hopes to go to heaven on account of his good work, and he who expects to go there without doing any, may shake hands; for one is as deeply in the mud as the other is in the mire.—OLD HUMPHREY.

EXTRACTS FROM DIARIES AND LETTERS OF RICHARD B. BROCKBANK.

(Continued from page 210.)

Macduff, 10-8-02.—We had a small meeting last night, under twenty, but they were the right sort. It was a remarkable time and after the meeting a young man studying for the Presbyterian ministry, stayed and we had a most interesting explanation of several points. He was evidently in a very tender state of mind and much concerned to be right. Another man and his wife who had two sons, students, agreed with all but "Freely ye have received, freely give." This we heard from an interesting man who has a meeting in his house, quite unsectarian—belongs to the Free Church but is free beyond it.

Think we may have more at Banff. Some remember me as being here before. Does thou remember the date when the Mackies and I were here?

Buckie, 12-8-02.—Yesterday we came on from Banff after a small meeting to Portessie, where the old ship builder, Wm. Mackintosh, lives, whom I have told thee of seeing in our last visit. At Banff we were deluded by a woman, the bellman's wife; we called on her and she promised he should call our meeting during the latter part of the forenoon, say eleven or twelve, and in her presence we gave the pay into the hands of a soft citizen to pay him when he had gone. She said he was out with the bell then and would soon be in. We called again at three and she said he had just gone out with our notice and was then up the town calling it. We could never hear of it and it turned out the poor woman was lying and her husband was drinking, and our one shilling was returned to us by the man who held it to pay the bellman.

We had given a few notices out for the shop windows, and but a small company drew up. But the meeting was held in the authority and power of Truth. I called on W. Barclay, with whom I left a Barclay's Apology when here before, but it was evident that they had been frightened out of any sympathy, that they had with us by the fear of doing harm to the organizations and ordinances to which they are now committed.

We met with a nice couple, Jas. Legge and wife, who brought a friend with them. They were all tender and comforting to meet with. They had been farmers and retired, and have now a small shop and temperance restaurant. They were very kind and showed us a place to stay for that night at a temperance hotel near the sea. There were two students staying there, a nice young Methodist from near Stirling, who was at our meeting and had with us an interesting conversation before going to bed. He is studying at Headingley College, Leeds, and was here for his vacation. He was very nice and open-minded, and I trust we were enabled to point him to some things which may be of value to him. He seemed glad of having met us and been at our meeting, and D. Wilson gave him Hiza Pickard's address. We got out at Portessie and walked down to the shipyard, and the son, John Mackintosh, knew me again. We arranged for a meeting at Portessie in the Fishermen's Hall, put up by them for meetings, unsectarian. They let the hall free and came freely, and we had a fine company of sixty to eighty, a large proportion fishermen's wives, godly women. The men are mostly away with their boats to Peterhead, the narrowing of the sea there making that a great place for getting the herrings as they gather together in shoals going south to Yarmouth, etc.

We stayed last night at Portessie and came on here to Cruikshank's Temperance Hotel this morning. W. Mackintosh recommended us here, but we did meet a difference in the reception. The landlady is a most zealous Baptist and a most fluent and able exponent of her notions. She asked us several times why we came to Buckie. They have put up a new church and are about to turn Buckie upside down because they are the true and only true church, and we were out of it, etc., plenty of it, we offered to go and find other lodgings to relieve her, as it seemed as if she was going to put us out and over the road into the sea. However, we gave her a few calming words and came in again to dinner, a very good dinner, and then we arranged to stay all night, as we intend going on to Sossiemouth to-morrow to stay over First-day. I called on the wife of Dr. Simpson this A. M. and she remembered my visit.

I think some will come over from Portessie where they were exceedingly interested. Old Mackintosh said I had preached one point that had never been preached before in that house, and if I did not come again for ten years more, he feared it would not for that time either, though he had seen it for more than twenty years. It was about being delivered from sin and praying for deliverance and never believing it possible. He said all the churches were too much in this delusion.

They were all most hearty and kind and we go forward with kind remembrance of them.

Sossiemouth, 13-8-02.—The meeting at Buckie was not large, about thirty to thirty-five. We had the Volunteer Hall at a cost of ten shillings, and I distributed two hundred notices and sent the bellman round as well.

Our landlady was a fair type of the Buckie professors—full and satisfied, and had need of nothing.

A young man with his wife and family were there, who seemed very much drawn to us as well as his wife.

All who came were serious folks—there were few fishermen in, but we had some nice chats with serious ones during the day on the piers. When they are in they come freely to meetings, but the present is their herring harvest and they are out most nights, and just run in to discharge and go out again. They had a few good hauls last Second and Third-days, but they are very scarce since.

We have arranged for a meeting at Elgin on Third-day evening, and I think probably may not be able to have a place to address to nearer than Robert Gray, Kinmuck, near Inverurie, whom we expect to see at Kinmuck or Old Meldrum.

Alexander the tinsmith remembers me, and Watt the baker, and at Elgin the Provost, W. Law, lent us the same hall and helped us to arrange a meeting for Third-day evening. He was very kind when we were there before and continues the same. We have got the Town Hall here for three meetings, one to-night and one at three and one at 7:30 to-morrow.

Elgin, 16-8-02.—We had a nice meeting, from twenty-five to thirty, last night at Nairn, and very cordially were we greeted by all when the meeting was over. D. W. said the Free Church ministers were there, but did not stop to shake hands as all the rest did. Some young men were very nice. Of course we cannot have interviews with all, but one very well-dressed, respectable man told us that he attended Aberdeen meeting thirty years ago, and that Anthony Cruikshank was the first man that ever spoke to him seriously about the welfare of his soul. He turned out to be James Stirling, chief constable of Nairn. The county is small and his force only consists of eight men, but he is a very nice man and valued the meeting much. Some fishermen and townspeople—all very appreciative—were the rest. We felt how open they were to receive the Truth in the plain old-fashioned way. What a sad thing it is that so many of our dear Friends are thinking too lightly of it, and turning aside to the right hand or the left. A banker here named Gall was at both of our meetings at Sossiemouth, and had seen me there. He said it was quite a treat to him to attend, it was so different from all that they heard from their various pulpits.

Frazerburgh, 10-8-02.—We had dinner at Old Meldrum before Robert Gray left us, and were wondering if we should have any reply from W. Smith of Peterhead. Whilst we sat there a gentleman drove up to the door and came in for lunch and ordered his horse fed. We three were quickly talking. He asked if we were the Friends who were to have the meeting there to-night. He said he was Wm. Smith of Peterhead and that he was traveling all week and had written me to Frazerburgh. I had written by the advice of W. Souther, a sailor, who attended our meetings at Macduff and Banff. I sent him a notice form to show him how we announced our meetings. He was most kind and as neither of us knew when we wrote to him of where the other would be that day, it was quite comforting to us to meet him so. He had seen our bills in the town and they were a copy so far as printed of the one sent to him, so that he would conclude that the Friends who were to have the meeting there were the same who had written him from Nairn.

He has opened the way for us to have their Hall at Peterhead, and gave us a name of a merchant here. Both he and his friend here, R. Stephens, think he will get few to attend. There has been a deputation from the churches preaching out of doors to the fishermen. Last night it was wet and they engaged the Batchans Hall and held their meeting there instead of on the quay or street. They had only twelve, so if we do not get many we shall not be much different.

This place is quite an eye-opener for D. Wilson. When we first saw the harbor this A. M. at eleven, there was a forest of masts of fishing boats, about two they were all sailing out to the fishing grounds, and a most lovely sight they were. There are over five hundred boats here at present, and say six to eight men to each, runs to over three thousand men, besides women and girls who work up the fish into salt herrings in barrels on shore—a most wonderful industry. One boat has taken four hundred crans and they get ten shillings a cran for them. This is considered a good season. All, of course, have not done so well as this. D. W. never saw anything like it, and we agreed that if we do no good to these dear people it ought at least to enlarge our sympathies towards this most interesting and in the main pious people.

We had over one hundred, and quite a number of young people. M. Ritchie and her husband and their son, a youth of seventeen or eighteen and a girl not their own about twelve, came in.

(To be concluded.)

THE HADDONFIELD CELEBRATION.

The eighteenth of last month was an eventful day in Haddonfield, N. J. Exercises of more than local interest had been well planned out by some of her best citizens, and the day proving fair a large company gathered in the beautiful grove that surrounds the Friends' Meeting-house. Full reports of the addresses, etc., appeared in Philadelphia papers the next Second-day, but for the benefit of our readers who live beyond the circle of these we will give a brief review here. Shortly it is expected that the full report of the papers read and addresses given will appear in pamphlet form, when that is done, it may be our place to copy copiously from them, for the present we will be satisfied with a few brief notes.

Some two hundred and twenty years ago there came to the wilderness shores of the Delaware a young woman of twenty to assume the oversight of her father's extensive plantation in what was then called West Jersey. This was Elizabeth Haddon, a Quaker maiden, about whose life both here and in England much of interest could be given. The standard biography of Elizabeth Haddon is now, we are told, in the making. It offers a wide field for the historian and antiquarian and incidentally it is rare good fortune that the work has fallen to the hands of a Friend, who besides the scholarship he brings to the task, yields it the real sympathy that can come in fullest measure from some one who is intimately familiar with the history and traditions of the Society of which Elizabeth Haddon was a member. Longfellow in "Elizabeth," with the license accorded a poet, gives a picture true to the life of the day and adds a charm to it by the recital of the romantic story of Elizabeth Haddon and John Estaugh's courtship. Through this poem the name Haddon has gained a wider range than all the history that could be written about her would give, and while six thousand or more people assembled to witness the celebration a few weeks ago, there were many more thousands of boys and girls all over the country, who, reading the story as a set school task, make inquiry as to what it all stands for.

Friends figured conspicuously in the literary part of the celebration at Haddonfield, and it is right they did. We do well to cherish these memories of the past, when they are so worthy as the one under review. S. Abbott Willits presided at the morning session in the Meeting-house when Annie H. Barton read a paper stocked with interest concerning the Friends of Haddonfield of long ago, then followed another paper on incidents in the life of Elizabeth Haddon and the exercises concluded with an original poem by Rebecca Nicholson Taylor.

These exercises being finished, the company moved to the large burial grounds close by, and under the branching trees that lend a special charm to almost every Friends' burial lot and Meeting-house, a simple brass tablet given in honor of the founder of the town was presented. The tablet was placed here, with the consent of Friends, by the nieces and nephews of Elizabeth Haddon, including those of the sixth, seventh and possibly eighth generations. It bore these words, suitably arranged so as easily to catch the eye of the reader: "In memory of Elizabeth Haddon, daughter of John Haddon of London; she was founder and proprietor of Haddonfield, N. J. Born 1680; emigrated 1701; married 1702; died 1762. Buried near this tablet. Originator of the Friends' Meeting, here established in 1721. A woman remarkable for her resolution, prudence, charity."

This ceremony was followed by an address by Samuel N. Rhoads, who called attention to the fact that Elizabeth Haddon was the only woman who had come to America unattended, and had settled an estate in her own right. Later the historical address was given by Frank A. Smith, a former resident of Haddonfield. He paid due respect to many worthy Friends whose lives in Haddonfield had made it the better place to live in and with warm appreciation dwelt particularly upon the life and influence of the late Charles Rhoads.

The old homes in Haddonfield on this occasion unclosed many articles of interest, but the one that claimed more attention than the rest was the marriage certificate of John Estaugh and Elizabeth Haddon.

D. H. F.

SHALL WE OPEN OUR MEETING-HOUSES?

WM. C. ALLEN.

Philadelphia Yearly Meeting has maintained an excellent testimony as to the nature of true worship—that, in essence, worship involves a direct personal contact with God through the administration of the Holy Spirit according to the will of Jesus Christ. Whilst granting that all men can worship God according to the methods they believe right for them to employ, we feel that we are particularly the custodians of a practical method which witnesses to the non-necessity of human intervention, or ritual, in this sacred service. We proclaim the distinct value of holy communion founded in silent waiting upon God without reference to any particular season.

Our meeting-houses are open to public worship at stated hours and, to that extent, are utilized in forwarding the well-tried methods that we believe in and preach. But we go no further.

Some of our dear brethren of other denominations go further. Whilst they honestly trust in an elaborate service, when a congregation is gathered, they also offer to the public more opportunities than we do to enjoy the private devotion and silent worship which we so freely recommend. Not a few of their places of worship are open all day for private, silent prayer.

If we are the trustees of a very precious spiritual inheritance, which incorporates a clear testimony to the nature of genuine worship, why should we be apathetic while others are alert, and why should we fail to fully put into practice what we preach? Why should not our meeting-houses, of all places of worship, be always open to those who alone, and in silence, desire to commune with God?

The home life of most persons does not conduce towards aiding the spiritual life. To say that people can indulge in such opportunities for devotion anywhere they please is begging the question. There is as much right, it is as high a privilege, and it is as much needed, that men and women go into such a place in the quiet seasons as when a congregation is collected. The fact that our meeting-houses are not consecrated by human ritual will make possible the extension of the knowledge of the fact that Christ can be found in every place. All about us there are people who are tossed but not comforted, blind, but desiring light, tempted, but not strong. Of the many thousands who throng the shops and mills around our city meeting-houses, no doubt some will be glad, at hours convenient for them, to get into God's stillness, and listen to His voice, at the very moment they most need it. Will not His best be revealed to them, just as it is to us, when they are alone with Him?

As the spiritual trustees of some grand old elementary spiritual truths, and as the earthly trustees of some centrally located meeting-houses in Philadelphia, the writer is concerned to ask his Friends if they will not soon open their places of worship for the above indicated purpose?

It will require but a tithing of the ability and earnestness which Friends so successfully apply to secular affairs to consummate the necessary arrangements in connection with this matter. The provision of suitable janitors, and of the money required, from funds or otherwise, should not be difficult. The effort at least could be made.

Such an arrangement ought to be suitably advertised. O, for the zeal of our early Friends as to letting the people about us know what we have to offer! Whether such houses are opened all day or not—probably all day would be the best—a generous sign somewhat like the following should be placed at the gateways.

THIS OLD MEETING-HOUSE

IS OPEN ALL DAY FOR PRIVATE DEVOTION OR SILENT WAITING ON GOD.

ENTER—REST—PRAY.

Let us do more than just talk about this proposal. Then, probably, many a torn heart that has fought harder battles than some of us have fought, and many a tired brain that needs the quietness of God, may, in the future, go forth from such communion with a fresh consciousness of the Divine love, and with a more perfect rest in Him. Our spiritual and material assets are to be practically applied to the needs of all God's children around us.

[The following review is reprinted from the Springfield Republican. It will interest Friends to find history written from the standpoint of peace so liberally commended.—Ed.]

EXCELLENT ENGLISH HISTORY.

There have been histories of England written briefly and voluminously, wisely and unwisely by a multitude of historians and near-historians hitherto, and doubtless the succession will continue to the end of time. Each decade gives a new vantage point of retrospect, and each author brings to the task a new individual factor, so that the output is never twice just alike. Prof. Allen C. Thomas, of Haverford College, who has written school histories of our own country, is the latest reviewer of the history of the mother country in a school textbook, "A History of England," of 650 pages, published by D. C. Heath & Co. Like most of the modern historians, Prof. Thomas puts more emphasis on the arts of peace than on the glitter of war, and while fighting bulks large in British annals he is more concerned with its results than its actual progress. The book is made convenient for comparative study by the inclusion of many sketch maps showing the progressive political changes on the map. Also for comparative work there is an appendix of 80 pages giving a brief history of continental Europe from the fourth century to 1684. As a whole the book is admirable and will commend itself to educators; it is also as likely as any text-book can be to appeal to the interest of pupils. The reviewer has been interested in several apparent errors of statement or typography, which upon investigation simply prove the accuracy that characterizes the work; and the handful of corrections simmers down to one where it would seem that the map showing Europe at the height of Napoleon's power should be dated 1812 rather than 1821. With this reconsidered, we congratulate the author on his successful work.

ANNUAL REPORT 1912-13 OF THE INSTITUTE FOR COLORED YOUTH, CHEYNEY, PA.

The managers of the Institute for Colored Youth report to the corporation a year of useful work characterized by quiet, efficient instruction by an experienced group of teachers, by unusual activity in building, additions and improvements to our plant, and by unforeseen anxieties and responsibilities incident to the resignation of our Principal, Hugh M. Browne, and the appointment of his successor.

THE ACADEMIC YEAR OF 1912-13.

The work of the Institute was conducted with the usual thoroughness and efficiency so far as the Managers can judge by results. No special changes were made in the course of study. The policy was adhered to that each pupil specialize along one chosen line of industrial work to become an efficient teacher of that branch.

The total enrolment for the regular session of the academic year 1912-13 was fifty-nine. On Sixth Month 12, 1913, a class of twelve was graduated.

Their names, the departments in which they specialized and their graduation theses are as follows:

Lillie E. Cameron, Domestic Art, Cotton and its Manufactures.

Helen P. Carter, Domestic Art, Domestic Art in the School.

Rosa L. Hill, Domestic Art, Sanitation of Clothes.

Carlitta P. Johnson, Domestic Art, Weaving.

Crystilla R. Miller, Domestic Science, Correlation of Dietitian, Teacher and Physician.

Edith V. Osborne, Domestic Art, Domestic Art in the Home.

Ernestine F. Pegues, Domestic Science, Household Management and its Relation to Domestic Science.

La Gretta M. Rice, Domestic Art, Silk and its Manufactures.

Mabel M. Shorter, Domestic Science, Pure Milk.

Florence M. Warfield, Domestic Art, Dyeing.

Herbert E. Whiteside, Domestic Science, Domestic Science and the Cost of Living.

Agnes B. Wright, Domestic Science, New Processes in Cookery.

BAILY HALL AND OTHER BUILDING ACTIVITIES.

The Commencement was signalized by the formal opening of the new dormitory, named Baily Hall in honor of Joshua L. Baily, whose liberality and initiative led the Managers to undertake the collection of funds and the erection of the new building. We here gratefully record the obligation under which the Institute for Colored Youth rests to this faithful and untiring friend of negro education. His faith in our work and his practical help has brought fresh strength to the Managers on many occasions during the last few years.

Baily Hall is a beautiful and substantial stone dormitory two stories in height, built to conform to the colonial style of the other buildings, continuing the line of Emlen Hall toward the south and extending the west side of the quadrangle in accordance with the plan for the future development of Cheyney. The Hall contains cubicles for forty students, together with two teachers' rooms, two comfortable study-rooms and bath-rooms fitted with tubs and shower baths. The building has been completely furnished with an eye to economy, comfort and good taste, and was occupied for the first time during the summer school of 1913.

The erection of Baily Hall seemed a proper time to carry out a plan long considered by the Managers to install an electric light plant, to supersede the dangerous system of oil lamps previously used at Cheyney. This work has also been completed and is now in successful operation. The power is generated by steam and oil engines, the former being used at such times as the boilers are being employed for heating, laundry work, etc. A storage battery is also provided to supply a moderate number of lamps to make the continuous operation of the engines unnecessary.

With the installation of the heating apparatus in Baily Hall, some modifications were made in the heating of the other buildings, except the two cottages and the Administration Building. The changes bring them into complete harmony for operation from the central plant, where a vacuum pump was installed to facilitate the circulation and make it more uniform.

The larger enrolment resulting from increased dormitory space also made some other changes necessary. The need of increased dining-rooms has been met by converting the first floor study room in Emlen Hall into a dining-room, connected with the kitchen by a large dumb-waiter. The kitchen was enlarged by removing the school laundry and removing the partition between the two rooms, and the store-rooms have also been extended into the basement of Baily Hall and necessary shelving and other facilities installed. A new laundry, sufficient for present needs, has been built between the new building erected for the dynamo and storage batteries and the rear of Humphreys Hall.

IN MEMORIAM—FANNY JACKSON COPPIN.

On First Month 21, 1913, occurred the death of Fanny Jackson Coppin, for thirty-five years connected as Teacher or Principal with the Institute for Colored Youth at Tenth and Bainbridge Streets, Philadelphia, before its removal to Cheyney. The following tribute to her memory, prepared by the teachers of the Institute, was read at her funeral: "Lofty in ideals and with the simplicity of greatness, Fannie Jackson Coppin so lived as teacher, wife, woman, disciple of the Master, that she will ever guide her children to the still waters of true living. For thirty-five years under her gentle inspiration men and women went out from the Institute strengthened for the world's work. Through her patience, her nobility, her loving devotion, her utter giving of self to the training of youth, she has wrought her very soul into the race conscience. She was not of a generation, but of generations. Her spirit will always be a living fibre of the Institute for Colored Youth reaching out beyond its walls in unseen gentle inspiration to her race."

The following minute was adopted by the Board of Managers as their expression on this occasion:—

"Since the last meeting of this Board our late Principal, Fannie Jackson Coppin, has been called to her eternal reward. It is right and fitting that we should express our deep sense of the loss that has been sustained by her own people and by all her fellow-citizens.

"Her services to the Institute covered a period of about thirty-five years, for the greater part of which time she was Principal. This position was a severe test of her powers, demanding scholarship as well as rare tact and good sense in dealing with her subordinates, many of whom were men. She rose to the occasion and gave her service to the Institute without grudging, and it might indeed be said that her heart was built into the courses of its walls.

"We now record our appreciation of her ability and fidelity as well as her patient loyalty to what she believed to be the good of her people among whom her memory is fragrant and precious. Her loving faith in her Redeemer and her devotion to His kingdom made her a bright example of the good and faithful servant and we reverently believe that after her abundant labors here she has entered into the joy of her Lord."

THE INSTITUTION OF NEIGHBORHOOD WORK.

The Managers are glad to report the beginning of neighborhood work that promises well for the future. This had its origin near the end of 1912, when a committee of teachers and pupils was appointed "to visit the neighborhood, study the needs of the colored families, to collect funds from the teachers and pupils to make purchases, to provide a Christmas tree for the children, and to supervise the making of garments."

This effort extended beyond the holiday season and resulted in the organization of Seventh-day classes for the children of the neighborhood which have been eagerly attended since that time. Instruction has been given in sloyd, basketry, paper folding, oral stories and games. It is hoped that the influences thus started may extend and deepen the hold that Cheyney is gaining on the community.

THE SUMMER SCHOOL OF 1913.

This was the ninth year of the Cheyney Summer School. The total enrolment was 114, forty-two more than that of 1912. A considerable number of teachers who could not be provided for at Cheyney boarded in West Chester and traveled the five miles back and forth in the train. The teachers were chosen from a large list of applicants. They came from seventeen states. By location of schools represented Maryland led, with Pennsylvania, New Jersey, North Carolina and South Carolina ranking about even for second place. Other states represented in about their order of numbers were Delaware, Virginia, West Virginia, the District of Columbia, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Arkansas, Indiana and New York.

There was again a convincing expression that Cheyney is doing a unique work for negro education by planning summer courses that precisely fit the needs of the inadequately or poorly trained industrial teacher. The fine body of instructors seemed well selected both for practical efficiency and for inspiration. Gratifying reports were received proving the growing estimation in which this branch of our work is held by educational experts and superintendents, especially in the South.

The annual conference held by the Managers with the teachers was again an occasion of unusual interest and encouragement.

The following courses of study were conducted at this session of the Summer School:—

ENGLISH—Review of the English taught in the grammar grades of the public schools; technical grammar, composition and literature. Reading for grammar grades.

SCHOOL MANAGEMENT AND SUPERVISION.

PHYSICAL TRAINING—Physiology, Hygiene and Gymnastics.
MATHEMATICS—Arithmetic, Algebra, Geometry—application of mathematics to the trades and industries.

DRAWING—Mechanical, Free-hand and Blackboard Sketching.

PRIMARY METHODS—Subject matter and methods of instruction for the first four grades. Model School.

AGRICULTURE—Nature Study, Children's Gardens.
GEOGRAPHY—This will be taught in connection with other subjects.

DOMESTIC SCIENCE—Cookery, Serving, Marketing and Laundry Work. Household Cooking and Economics.

DOMESTIC ART—Sewing, Dressmaking, Millinery, Weaving, Basketry and Raffia-work.

MANUAL TRAINING—Paper and Cardboard Folding, Weaving, Cord-work, Whittling and Wood-working. All of these courses are graded.

The Managers thank the many friends of Cheyney who so generously responded to the appeal for funds to conduct the Summer School of 1913. The response was the largest yet received and the sum of the contributions amounted to $1,789.88, which about covered the expenses.

It is hoped that next year the work may be extended still more. An endowment to provide for the Summer School would be of the greatest practical value to our work at Cheyney.

THE POSSIBILITY OF A PRACTICE SCHOOL FOR CHEYNEY.

In Tenth Month, 1912, the Board of Managers appointed a committee to confer with a similar committee of the Managers of the Shelter for Colored Orphans in West Philadelphia.

This joint committee considered the possibility at some future time of the removal of the Shelter to the neighborhood of Cheyney. Nothing definite has been decided, but the Managers of both Institutions are carefully considering the advantages of such a course.

On the one hand the pupils at Cheyney would have the advantage of a practice school made up of children of their own race and the Shelter would benefit by location in healthful country surroundings, with ample space for gardens and playgrounds, and the instruction of careful and sympathetic teachers under competent oversight and in accordance with the best and most progressive methods.

It is greatly to be desired that funds may be provided by liberal friends of negro education to make this arrangement a reality at no distant date.

THE RESIGNATION OF HUGH M. BROWNE.

On Sixth Month 4, 1913, the Board of Managers accepted the resignation of our Principal, Hugh M. Browne, who looks forward to a period of foreign study chiefly in Germany and then to advisory educational work for his race.

Hugh M. Browne has been Principal of the Institute for Colored Youth for ten years. Acting upon his advice, the Managers decided upon the radical and then unpopular step of removing the Institute to Cheyney and reorganizing their work. This involved changing from a day to a boarding-school, from the problems and conditions of a congested city neighborhood to definite teacher training in country surroundings, with the all-round development of the pupil in view. They have not for a moment regretted this step or doubted the wisdom of it.

It was the aim of the Principal and Managers to develop at Cheyney a Normal School to correlate industrial and academic training and "to translate the advanced and approved educational methods of instruction into the language of the present condition of the negro child."

They were not afraid of small numbers in working out this experiment, but were willing to submit to criticism if only the lines of future development were wisely laid down and a firm foundation built for the superstructure that is sure to follow. Starting with an enrolment of sixteen, the Institute has slowly extended its influence until it has attracted wide attention by the originality of its methods and the excellence of its work.

The Managers wish to place on record their obligation to the leadership of Hugh M. Browne in this period of experiment and development. His faith in the Cheyney ideals was in itself a guarantee of their soundness and their practicality. His high standards and refusal to compromise or accept work at anything but its intrinsic value has been of very great service in developing Cheyney. The care and precision with which details of the business management, and the economic side of the daily life have been worked out are a tribute to his practical ability and have had unusual educational value to the pupils trained under him. His insistence upon system and punctuality was a constant object lesson to his race.

The Managers wish also to express their appreciation of the services of his wife, Julia S. Browne. While holding no official position at Cheyney, she nevertheless filled a most important place in the life of the Institute. She exercised in her relations with pupils and teachers rare sympathy and the true courtesy that results from the cultivation and refinement of both mind and heart. Those who came in daily contact with her were uplifted and cheered by the quiet dignity and strength of her character.

THE APPOINTMENT OF LESLIE PINCKNEY HILL AS PRINCIPAL.

A Committee of the Board of Managers appointed to recommend a new Principal reported at a special meeting held in Philadelphia on Sixth Month 26, 1913. After correspondence and conference with many leaders in the field of negro education and a number of interviews with candidates, the committee unanimously urged the appointment of Leslie Pinckney Hill and their report was accepted.

He in no way sought the appointment and he and his wife decided to come to Cheyney only after the most careful consideration in which they sought to know our Heavenly Father's will for them. They finally decided that the Institute for Colored Youth offers an enlarged field of service for their race which they as consecrated workers cannot refuse to enter.

Leslie Pinckney Hill graduated from Harvard University in 1903 and received the degree of Master of Arts there in 1904. For three years he taught at Tuskegee, where he married Jane Clark, a college graduate and successful teacher, who was at that time Dean of the Woman's Department of Tuskegee.

After their marriage they removed to Manassas, Virginia, and took charge of the Manassas Industrial School. During the six years in which Leslie Pinckney Hill was Principal at Manassas the School has practically been made over both in buildings and equipment and in the efficiency and spirit of its teachers and student body, now numbering about two hundred. The Managers who visited Manassas were most favorably impressed by the intelligence, energy and high ideals of service everywhere apparent in the life of the School and equally impressed by the evidences of economy, thrift and wise business management. The results attained with slender resources and in the face of constant anxieties and discouragements are truly remarkable.

The Managers have made an arrangement with the Directors of Manassas that during this year of transition, our Principal shall divide his energies between the two Institutions, and shall give their work such help and practical guidance as he and they may think best. We wish here to speak in very high terms of the important place the Manassas Industrial School is filling in a locality that greatly needs industrial training and educational guidance, and to recommend it to friends of negro education as worthy of their interest and support.

Our new Principal has become a leader in educational work for his race, and has during the last few years helped in organizing a Secondary and Industrial School Association of Negro Schools. It is the expectation of the Managers that his wide acquaintance among the educational leaders of his people will be of great service to Cheyney by identifying it more closely with great educational movements.

THE OPENING OF THE INSTITUTE IN THE AUTUMN OF 1913.

The Academic Year of 1913-14 began on Ninth Month 20th, with an enrolment of eighty-four, the increase over last year made possible by the use of Baily Hall. This attendance clearly indicates a growing appreciation of what Cheyney is offering to negro students. The teachers report that the average preparation of newly enrolled pupils is higher than heretofore and that the student body presents a more even and coherent group to work with than in some other years.

Because of plans made long before his appointment, our Principal did not reach Cheyney until Tenth Month 7th, and was unable to give attention to details of management previous to that time. The chief responsibility rested upon a committee of the Board of Managers and on our faithful teachers, Evangeline R. Hall and George K. Conway and his wife. The Managers acknowledge their gratitude to them for the efficiency, patience and tact with which they have managed the business of the Institute during the last few months, and to congratulate them on the successful solving of many problems and the satisfactory opening of the school year. We appreciate also the helpful spirit and hearty co-operation of all the teachers during this period of reorganization and transition.

The Managers look forward with confidence to the future and bespeak the continued interest and support of all friends of our work at Cheyney.

STANLEY R. YARNALL,

Secretary of the Board of Managers.

Approved and accepted by the members of the Corporation at their Annual Meeting held in Philadelphia, on Tenth Month 27, 1913.

GEORGE M. WARNER,
Secretary of the Corporation.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

THE MACHINE WITHOUT THREAD.—“I like to sew when there is no thread in the machine, it runs so easily,” said a little girl.

A good many people, I think, are pretty fond of running their machines without thread.

When I hear a boy talking very largely of the grand things he would do, if he only could, and if things and circumstances were only different, and then neglecting every daily duty, and avoiding work and lessons, I think he is running his machine without any thread.

When I see a girl, very sweet and pleasant abroad, ready to do anything for a stranger, and cross and disagreeable in her home, she, too, is running her machine without any thread.

Ah! this sewing without a thread is very easy indeed, and the life machine will make a great buzzing, but labor, time and force will in the end be far worse than lost.—The Friend for Boys and Girls.

FOR “THE FRIEND.”

A YOUTHFUL MINISTER.—In the annals of the Society of Friends there are some notable instances of youthful ministers, James Parnell and others, but the little account of Jonathan Burnyeat in the Journal of James Dickinson. (Friends' Library, Vol. 12; pp. 399-402) is most remarkable and cannot fail to convince the reader of the truth of the declaration, “Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings Thou hast ordained strength.”

Apart from the account given by James Dickinson, about all that is known respecting this stripling is that he was the son of John Burnyeat, a contemporary and frequent co-laborer with George Fox, and was born in Dublin the fourth of Eleventh Month, 1680. A memoir of the father says that “He left one son, a hopeful young man, behind him.” This “hopeful young man,” when about thirteen years old, accompanied James Dickinson in a visit to Friends in Scotland, and in 1704 he went with the same Friend on a religious journey through Yorkshire and Lincolnshire. Of these visits James Dickinson tells us: “In the forepart of the year 1690 I had drawings in my mind to visit Friends in Scotland, and proceeded on that service in company with Jonathan Burnyeat (son of John Burnyeat), who had the like concern. As he was very young and had not traveled in Truth's service before, a concern fell upon me for his preservation every way.

My companion was deeply opened into the mysteries of God's kingdom and grew in his gift, so as to give counsel to young and old; he was very zealous against deceit and wickedness, both in professor and profane; and often reproved such. . . . We traveled together through the south and west parts of Scotland, to Douglas, Hamilton and Glasgow, and had many meetings among the people. . . . From thence we returned to the yearly Meeting at Edinburgh, where we met with many brethren. . . . We were deeply bowed under a sense of the Lord's favor to us, yet under great sorrow to see the wickedness of the people. A concern came upon Jonathan Burnyeat to write a warning to the inhabitants of that place which was afterwards put into print to answer its service.” After attending many other meetings J. D. says, “being clear we returned home and witnessed peace to flow to our souls.”

“In the year 1704,” James Dickinson writes, “I was engaged to visit Friends in Yorkshire and Lincolnshire. Jonathan Burnyeat had the like concern, and we traveled together in sweet brotherly love. The Lord went before us, opened our service to us day by day, and enabled us to answer it, so that we found great encouragement to follow him fully. We had many meetings in these counties. . . . We labored to stir up all to faithfulness to the Lord, and to wait to know their communion and fellowship to increase with Him, and one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ to cleanse them from all unrighteousness. Having finished this service I returned to my wife and family in peace.”

Length of days was not to be the portion of this devoted youthful servant of the Master, as he died at Graythwaite in Cumberland, fifth of Third Month, 1709, in the twenty-third year of his age. Of him it might truthfully be said, “Servant of God, well done! Rest from thy loved employ;

The battle o'er, the victory won—enter thy Master's joy.”

J. C. M.

BRISTOL, PENNA.

In wonder workings, or some bush aflame,

Men look for God and fancy Him concealed;

But in earth's common things He stands revealed,

While grass and flowers and stars spell out his name.

—MISOT J. SAVAGE.

TUNESSA NOTES.

School has been in session about eight weeks. We have sixty-two in the family; eleven helpers, twenty-eight girls and twenty-three boys. The helpers are as follows:—superintendent and matron, two care-takers, two housekeepers, two teachers for general school, sewing and manual training instructors and dairymaid. There is also an Indian woman who comes in to teach basket weaving once a week. All these lend a hand to the busy life of a Tunesassa worker.

We are glad to say that our Indian helper has joined us of her own free will. She feels it is her duty to teach the arts and crafts of the Indian race to the coming generation of girls. Some few baskets have been made and the girls seem to be making rapid strides towards a helpful and successful future in that line. Susie Warrior is quite a genius with her delicate art.

The School with its new system and additional subjects, such as sewing, weaving, basket-making and manual training seems to be advancing in interest as well as importance among the Indian people. The idea that Tunesassa School is fast losing its hold on the Indian, we think is a wrong one. I believe it is just the opposite. The older children do not come to school as much as they used to, it is true, but the younger ones are much interested and are willing to do all they can to help out in the running of the farm and school. They seem to take a growing interest in their school life. They learn manual work much faster than the old fashioned branches of school routine. I think, however, this is because they are not able to understand our language as well as they might. We do not realize the difficulty these boys and girls have in trying to learn everything in a foreign tongue. One of our greatest problems is trying to present the various subjects in a way simple enough for the child to comprehend. It will continue to be so until we have been able to understand their troubles and with God's help able to solve them.

We have been greatly encouraged and strengthened by visits from Anna Walton and Susan J. Allen. The latter spent eight days in our midst. We wish that more of the interested Friends could come and spend a while with us and see and enjoy the Tunesassa life.

Our hearts are saddened by the recent death of Fred Pierce, one of the School's very loyal Indian friends. His death was due to an attack of pneumonia followed by hemorrhages of the lungs which terminated his life. Through his sickness of about six weeks' duration he evinced a cheerful and hopeful disposition. When asked during one of the attacks of hemorrhages how he felt about the results, he replied, “I leave that all with God. I have given my life to Him, and I want Him to do with me as He feels best.”

TUNESSA FARM.—At the present time forty-five cows are being milked on the farm and the product made into butter, which finds a ready market in Salamanca, N. Y., and Atlantic City, N. J. The amount varies from two hundred and fifty to five hundred pounds weekly at different seasons of the year. The by-products are fed to pigs and calves, sixty of the former are now on hand, also twenty-five head of young cattle give promise of a profitable succession in the dairy. Much of the milking and work of caring for the stock is done by the older Indian boys. New cement mangers and some other improvements in the cow-barn add greatly to the convenience of feeding and caring for the cows.

Arrangements have just been made with the state forestry commission for the purchase of three thousand five-year-old white pine trees to be planted on the western slope of East Hill where quite a number of pines are already started.

C. LESLIE PENNELL.

FRIENDLY NEWS.

BIRMINGHAM MONTHLY MEETING, Pa., has issued a memorial of the late Josiah W. Leeds. The date may to some seem delayed for such a publication, but as Josiah W. Leeds was the most prominent worker we have had in our Yearly Meeting in certain lines of reform, which just now are popular with many of our younger Friends, the date is more opportune than had the paper been prepared four or five years ago. The memorial will take the prescribed course. After the reading before Concord Quarterly Meeting on the eleventh of this month, it goes to the Representative Meeting for examination and possible revision, before it reaches the Yearly Meeting.

It is a matter of interest to learn that the Wm. Penn Charter School boys have contributed sufficient funds to send a framed engraving of Wm. Penn to Dr. Wm. W. Cadbury's cottage, which is known as the Wm. Penn Cottage, at the University Medical School, Canton, China.

The Tenth Month issue of the [London] Journal of Friends' Historical Society is recently at hand. It is double its usual size and full of matters of interest. A paper entitled, "A Stuart Among the Quakers," is the retelling of an old story, but is done so cleverly that we shall try to give it a place in THE FRIEND soon. It recounts the strange experiences of Jane Stuart, natural daughter of the English king, who, when her father fled from England, seized the opportunity to gain her liberty, and came upon a little Quaker community, "which was beginning to breathe again after the barbarous persecutions of the reign of Charles II."

FRIENDS of Fritchley, England, have recently issued a three-page folder of a valuable tract, "Manner of Worship," which has been translated into the dialect of the Scotch Highlanders. Thomas Davidson, well known in many circles of American Friends, has had an important part in the concern. He says that the paper can be read understandingly by Irish-speaking people, though not prepared originally for them. It is intended to give the paper a wide circulation.

More than a year ago announcement was made that prizes would be given for the best essays reviewing Wm. C. Braithwaite's "The Beginning of Quakerism." The first prize fell to Edith J. Wilson of Birkenhead, England. A short selection from this was given in THE FRIEND a few months ago, and did space permit we would be glad to extend the quotations to a considerable length or give the whole. It, however, appeared in the Friends' Quarterly Examiner and can be had of Headley Bros. for 3d. It merits a thoughtful reading.

Is recently reading aloud from Helen G. Crofield's "Margaret Fox of Swarthmore Hall," the word "sisis" arrested our attention. It occurs in a letter to Margaret Fell from one of her daughters. "The money goes so much out of the country to soldiers pay and sisis that there is very little left in the country." In a letter recently received the suggestion is made that the identical word is still used in some parts of Ireland, where one hears "County siss" and means assessment, the plural being "sisses."

WESTTOWN NOTES.

The past week marked the middle of the autumn term; there has been almost no sickness among the pupils and the school-work has known no serious interruptions. The conditions have been ideal under which we have lived since the School opened almost nine weeks ago.

The games incident to the late summer have given place to soccer and hockey, and each afternoon from 3:15 to 5:00 the fields at either end of the campus are alive with two hundred children. Several of the men teachers take an active part in the soccer games, one among them has the reputation of being the best all-around soccer player in the country. Games with our neighbors have been scheduled for nearly every Seventh-day until the New Year. These are played with companies of old scholars, with teams from Harvard College and Harvard Grammar School, with boys from the Massachusetts Academy, and one or more other sets.

The teachers have put into effect a wise ruling that no boy shall be allowed the year to play a match game of soccer in the afternoon and a match game of basket-ball the same evening; this will of course dis-credit the latter to some extent, but later in the season there may be opportunity to arrange for a few games of basket ball, especially with old scholars.

Our lecture course begins this week with an illustrated lecture on the Panama Canal by Joseph Elkinton. Many of the illustrations are from photographs taken by Joseph Elkinton last spring; he has had them colored by expert Japanese artists and they will in themselves constitute a genuine treat. The lecture scheduled for the following week, the fourteenth, is by Mary M. Vaux. Her beautiful pictures of the Canadian Rockies have gained a national reputation, and the new ones added this summer when she was in the west will be shown to the Westtown family. A week hence we hope to be in a position to give the complete lecture course with dates up to the holidays. The Westtown family will make welcome any Friends and neighbors who can enjoy our lecture courses with us.

The Literary Union held a meeting of marked merit on the twentieth of last month. Humor played a conspicuous part in the nine exercises that constituted the program, but they were all so well prepared and admirably spoken or read that it was a delight to listen. "The Worst Break I Ever Made" fell to the lot of a teacher of German and she told how at a popular summer school in Germany her place at table fell opposite a Chinese gentleman whose stock of German was so low that it seemed her place to lead and expect little in return beyond the monosyllabic negative or affirmative. The popular afternoon exercise was swimming or tennis. Her query addressed to the Oriental, "Haben sie gebadet?" surprised the Englishman sitting by and likewise surprised herself.

On Seventh-day afternoon and evening Wm. and Frances Harvey entertained the Senior Class at a camp supper. The happy crowd came back to the School at "lights out," ten o'clock, enthusiastic over the pleasant time they had had and grateful for the thought that prompted the hosts in giving them the outing.

We enjoyed a visit from Job S. Gidley of Dartmouth, Mass., early in the week. He was on his way to visit meetings in North Carolina and may be with us on his return trip north about the ninth. Susanna S. Kite and Ann Sharpless attended the mid-week meeting, the latter having an earnest and helpful message for the meeting. On First-day John B. Garrett attended meeting and appeared both in ministry and vocal prayer. The boys' collection on First-day evening was addressed by George L. Jones. He took for his topic the heroic struggles of Captain Scott and his four comrades in their south polar expedition, drawing from it pointed lessons of true courage, generosity and friendship. The girls' collection the same evening was addressed by Emily Oliver, who contrasted the life of the Syrian girls with the privileges enjoyed by the Westtown girls.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—Several hundred engineers, manufacturers, labor union men, welfare workers and others met at the Capitol on the 28th ult., at Harrisburg, for the first Pennsylvania industrial welfare and efficiency conference. The meeting is for the purpose of promoting interest in preventing waste and conserving material, especially human life.

A despatch from Chicago of the 28th says: "The first butter ever received in the local market from Siberia and Argentine made its appearance to-day—750 pounds from Siberia and 56 pounds from the Argentine. The importation with a chance of profit was made possible by the new tariff law."

It was stated from Jefferson City, Mo., on the 28th ult.: "Poultry and eggs to the value of $48,678,240 were sold in 1912 by the farmers and poultry raisers of Missouri, according to tentative figures on this industry given out for publication to-day by John T. Fitzpatrick, Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. These figures mean that Missouri is still the 'Poultry Queen of the Union,' a title which was bestowed four years ago when Missouri took first rank for this industry over all other States."

A despatch from New York City of the 28th ult. says: "The first consignments of foreign meat of appreciable magnitude to arrive here duty free was brought by the White Star liner Baltic. The shipments included 588 quarters of beef to Armour & Co. and 4300 hindquarters and 800 forequarters to the Swift Beef Company. This quantity of meat will undoubtedly have a tendency to keep down extravagant increases in the ordinary scale of meat prices."

Secretary Lane is asking Congress for $100,000,000 more, to develop small irrigated farms in the far West under direction of the Interior Department. He says the irrigated land already developed is ninety-eight per cent. occupied.

The Public Ledger of this city says: "Business concerns of this city are, in a majority of instances, prepared for the operation of the new labor law regulating work hours for girls and women. The law prohibits the employment of women for more than fifty-four hours a week or more than six days a week, hospital nurses excepted. Women are not allowed to work in factories after ten o'clock at night or before six o'clock in the morning, unless they are employed as managers, superintendents, clerks or stenographers. Women under twenty-one years of age are not allowed to work after nine o'clock at night or before six o'clock in the morning."

A despatch from Minneapolis of the 30th ult. says: "Figures issued by the industrial department of the Minneapolis Civic and Commerce Association show that the cost of living is lower in Minneapolis than in any other of the largest twenty-five cities of the United States. The average price of each article in each city on Sixth Month 15, 1913, was taken. The averages for all articles in each city were combined and the simple average for all the cities was made the 100 per cent. basis. On this basis the percentage for Minneapolis was 91.8, the lowest. The highest was for Boston, 115.4. That for Philadelphia was 106.5."

A despatch from Washington of the 31st states that the tax upon incomes recently enacted goes into effect on Eleventh Month 1st. It is also stated that the operation of the law at present affects only banks, corporations and others responsible for payment on bonds, mortgages, salaries, etc.

A despatch from Tulsa, Okla., of the 27th ult. says: "With the object of eliminating losses from drought, such as cost Southwestern farmers $500,000,000 or more this year, the International Dry Farming Congress and its auxiliary body, the International Congress of Farm Women, opened their four-day session here to-day. Hundreds of delegates from the West and Southwest, Canada and other foreign countries were present."

Governor Sulzer of New York has been found guilty on three charges, by the High Court of Inquiry before which he has been on trial. His removal from office has been decided upon.

A recent despatch from Spokane, Wash., says: "In great rural sections covering several middle Western States the average yield of corn has been increased ten bushels to the acre through the education of boys in agriculture."

FOREIGN.—It is stated that more than 400 coal miners, it is believed, have perished in the Universal mines, near Cardiff, Wales. There were nearly 1000 men in the mine when a terrific explosion of fire-damp occurred. Only about 500 were rescued.

A despatch from Paris of the 30th ult. says: "A second aerial postal service will be started in France at the end of next week. The letter-carrier will fly from Paris to Nice, taking a big mail, and coming down at Nevers, Lyons and Orange. The distance from Paris to Nice by air is 465 miles, but the detours of the air postman will prolong the journey to 525 miles. When the new service is established the saving of time over the railway will be 20 hours."

An apparatus to collect heat from the rays of the sun and apply it to various useful purposes has been invented by an American. It is stated that the sun power plant now consists of a great number of mirrors, an absorber to collect the heat, a low-pressure steam engine and a condenser. Great care is taken to have the whole plant insulated so that very little heat will be lost. The Shuman sun plant, after being tried in Philadelphia, was sent to Egypt; and according to a report received from the U. S. Consul at Alexandria, it is a success there. The plant covers several acres on the west bank of the Nile. The mirrors have a total surface of 13,500 square feet.

A despatch from Halifax, N. S., says: "A new island has appeared in the Atlantic, not far from the track of ocean vessels off the Nova Scotian coast, according to reports from Captain Anderson, of the Gloucester fishing schooner Lizzie Giffin. The new land is a dry bar standing about ten feet above high water, 16 miles east-northeast of Sable Island, about 70 miles from Whitehead, the nearest point of mainland, according to Captain Anderson. The marine and fisheries department is making inquiry to confirm the discovery."

NOTICES.

CONCORD QUARTERLY MEETING of Ministers and Elders has changed the time of meeting to Second-day afternoon at three o'clock. The meeting this month will occur on the tenth. The Quarterly Meeting occurs the next day (Third-day), at 10.30.

THE ALMANAC for 1914 having gone to press before the following notice was received, Friends will please observe the same:

Abington Monthly Meeting will hereafter be held alternately at Horsham and Abington, on the one day and hour as heretofore, at Horsham in the even months, and at Abington in the uneven months. In meetings occurring directly after the end of a month, the place shall be determined by the preceding month.

ISAAC SHARPLESS, President of Haverford College, will give an address on the "Peace Problem in Japan," at Friends' Meeting House, Twelfth Street, below Market Street, on Second-day, Eleventh Month 10, 1913, at 8 1/2 A. M. President Sharpless, who has recently returned from the Far East, will tell of the remarkable growth and influence of the Japan Peace Society. All who are interested are cordially invited to attend the meeting. On behalf of the "Philadelphia Peace Association of Friends."

JOHN B. GUILLET, President,
JEAN M. SMITH, Secretary.

FRIENDS' FREEDMEN'S ASSOCIATION is preparing to send its usual boxes of old clothes and shoes to Christiansburg Industrial Institute. A letter from Edgar Long, Principal at the school, makes special request for as much as possible. Again, as last year, old New Year's cards and remembrances will be very useful to the pupils who take them to their needy neighbors with whom they have social service. Books and magazines are always in demand. All contributions to be packed should be at Friends' Institute, 20 S. Twelfth Street, Phila., not later than Eleventh Month 10, 1913, plainly marked for Christianburg Industrial Institute.

THE Committee for visitation and other religious service appointed by Hadlornfield and Saleon Quarterly Meeting, acting in conjunction with Friends of Burlington and Bucks, have appointed a public meeting for worship to be held in the house known as Upper Springfield, at 2.30 o'clock, First-day, Eleventh Month 9th. Upper Springfield Meeting-house is located about two and a half miles east of Jobstown, Burlington County, N. J. Friends desiring to attend this meeting and seeking a conveyance thereto, may apply to William E. Darnell, Moorestown, N. J.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.—The following books have recently been added to Friends' Library:—

Bishop—Panama, Past and Present.
Choate—Two Hague Conferences.
Crosfield—Margaret Fox.
Deweese—Bend in the Road.
McCracken—Italian Lakes.
McKeever—Training the Boy.
Trevelyan—Life of John Bright.
Yonge—Captivating Bible Stories.

LINDA A. MOORE,
Librarian.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA., will be open from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from 2 to 5 P. M.—Seventh-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. only.

WANTED.—At once, a suitable Friend as an Assistant to the Superintendent of the Indian School at Timesassa. One who may favorably consider succeeding him next spring.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.—The stage will meet at Westtown Station, trains leaving Broad Street (Penna. R. R.) Phila. at 6.32, 8.21 A. M., 2.48 and 4.30 P. M.; other trains will be met on request. Stage fare twenty-five cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, address West Chester Bell Telephone, 114A.

WM. B. HARVEY,
Superintendent.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK (Eleventh Month 10th to 15th):
Concord Quarterly Meeting, at Media, Pa., Third-day, Eleventh Month 11th, at 10.30 A. M.
Cala Quarterly Meeting, at Coatesville, Pa., Sixth-day, Eleventh Month 14th, at 10 A. M.

MARRIED.—At Moorestown, N. J., Sixth-day, Tenth Month 10th, J. COLINS BARTLETT, son of Amos R. and P. Louisa Bartlett, to M. ELIZABETH SCATTERGOOD, daughter of David G. and Hannah P. Scattergood, All of Moorestown, N. J.

DIED.—Ninth Month 15, 1913, at her residence near Springboro, Ohio, CATHARINE A. STANTON, in the ninety-third year of her age.

W. B. WEAVER Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5th ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN
TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT
OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL
ACCOMMODATIONS FOR
FUNERALS.

BELL 'PHONE. ESTABLISHED 1880.

For Rich Milk

For Clean Milk

For Safe Milk

Call Philadelphia Locust 209

ABBOTTS ALDERNEY DAIRIES

31st and Chestnut Streets

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL.

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

ENGLISH FRIENDS' PERIODICALS

The Friend (London, Weekly) $2.11
The British Friend, Monthly $1.60
Friends' Quarterly Examiner $1.66

SUBSCRIPTIONS NOW DUE FOR 1914
NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS SOLICITED

GRACE W. BLAIR, - Media, Pa.
AMERICAN AGENT

Redlands--California

Wissahickon Inn

A comfortable family hotel
in the residence section of beautiful Redlands.

SEND FOR FOLDERS & RATES

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

ELKINS MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

MEMBERS OF
NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA
STOCK EXCHANGES

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD,
EQUIPMENT TRUST, 4½%,
TO YIELD 5%.

FULL PARTICULARS UPON APPLICATION.

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CABBURY PAUL W. BROWN JAMES P. MAGILL

To ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

A YOUNG FRIEND DESIRES A POSITION AS stenographer and typewriter.

Address "G." Office of THE FRIEND.

RUFUS M. JONES, HAVERFORD, PA., DESIRES to secure a well-qualified secretary. She must be a good stenographer and typewriter, and capable of carrying on a variety of literary and business lines of work. A Friend would be preferred. Address as above.

WANTED A FEW DAYS A WEEK A POSITION as Substitute Attendant; to read to, or write for an invalid, or some similar work.

EMILY L. CHIFFMAN, Beverly, N. J.

WANTED TO BUY—COPY OF JOHN WOOLMAN'S Journal, Edition of 1837. Published by T. E. Chapman, Philadelphia.

Address, AMELIA M. GUMMERE, Haverford, Pa.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16th & RACE STREETS

Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals

BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 8648

Selling More Goods

IS NOT A HARD PROPOSITION IF YOU USE GOOD PRINTING.

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,

EDWARD T. BIDDLE,

1010 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER

Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

(Marcellus Balderston)

802 SPRING GARDEN ST. 818 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL 'PHONE PHILADELPHIA

POCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevation 1800 feet, commanding extensive
mountain and valley scenery. Address

J. W. HURLEY, Manager,
POCONO MANOR, PA.

The reason for the Suburban movement
is the opportunity it affords to have a lawn.

The reason for the prettiest lawn is often
due to Moon's Trees and Shrubbery that add beauty, give enjoyment, and enhance realty
values.

Send for Catalogs about them.

THE WM. H. MOON CO.

NURSERYMEN

Room H, Stephen Girard Bldg.
Nursery at Morristown, Pa. Philadelphia, Pa.

School Children's EYES
Tested

We test children's eyes and furnish glasses which remove all strain.

Satisfaction Guaranteed
C. A. LONGSTRETH
Specialist in Eye Testing
222 Market Street Philadelphia, Pa.

JOS. B. SCATTERGOOD
HOUSE, SIGN AND DECORATIVE
PAINTING

Orders Solicited Bell 'Phone
275 S. FOURTH STREET

Subscribers patronizing our advertisers will assist THE FRIEND, especially by mentioning our paper in correspondence.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 13, 1913.

No. 20.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to

EDWIN P. SELLEW OR THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

WHY STRENGTH FROM CONFERENCE?

At a recent Select Preparative Meeting the proposition was entertained of having the ministers, elders and overseers of the Quarterly Meeting confer together for mutual strength and help in the best life and for the out-reaching service to the church and to the community. It seemed a right exercise to all present at the little meeting, and so being approved by them was passed on to the superior body. It called to mind a lively concern introduced by an aged Friend into Men's Yearly Meeting last spring that such meetings be encouraged, and the spirit which prompts the calling of them be fostered.

There is a oneness in the work of the church that knows no distinction among the officers, and while it is appropriate that certain specific tasks be the special duties of each, the complete body of the church is only served completely when each duty is fulfilled in unison with the duties all the others perform. As "the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee, nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you" in order that the perfect life of the outward physical body be maintained, so it is essential that all be living members in the church, which is the body of Christ, if the church is to fulfil its mission and advance the cause of righteousness. Medical experts tell us that in theory no human body is ever in absolute health; at the times of apparent freedom from disorder there are some functions not perfectly performed, but it has attained so nearly to a perfect condition that it passes for absolute health. In such a state every tissue is alive with energy and every organ asserting itself to be full of life and power. Through all the stages of degeneration this runs down until we reach the other extreme, where what little life still subsists comes from without and finds the body too feeble to be ministered unto, and utterly unable to appropriate the nourishment that may be at hand.

The same figure holds with the church in spiritual matters. Much depends on the knowledge and skill of the physician who treats his patient's bodily ailments, but there come conditions that are beyond his grasp; he calls in a fellow doctor and together they go over the case, comparing with the greatest care they can command the symptoms with the treatment that has been given.

It poorly becomes any of us to belittle the work of the church by a comparison that may seem to lift it out of the realm of ideality and to place it on a level with matter and things, but sometimes we gain by a really practical survey of our deepest problems, provided they have advanced to that stage when it is proper to bring them forth from the privacy that has thus far shielded them. Our Heavenly Father ever stands ready to do His part, and He has done it times without number to our wonderment and blushing of face. He has made it apparent that He will guide us if we confide in Him, but He has made it equally clear that we must use what He has given us of ordinary talents to their fullest capacity. The man who brings the soundest common sense to the solution of his most profound questionings is not to be ignored, for there is no expectation that these will not receive the same measure of Divine illumination that those receive who are less practical.

Enlightened common-sense stands for a high attainment, and it is to be cherished by all of us. You may place either first—the enlightenment or the common sense, it matters little; one without the other is destined to lead its possessor far astray, and while the latter can never of itself lead to those depths and heights of human experience to which the saints attain and to which every humble Christian hopes to attain, the other without a balanced mind to illuminate it is flickering and unsteady and therefore not a safe guide in the darkness.

And so ministers, elders and overseers come together and in prayerful submission refer their case to the Great Physician. They have already done individually what seemed to them good and right for the betterment of the body, the church, they have not been idle, but have been active in their service; they have endeavored to follow out the laws of health which He has given them through his inspired penmen long ages ago. The great principles of treatment are just the same as they were when these laws were given forth; we may have grasped in fuller measure some of the truths He means us to know as the years have followed on, and at rare intervals, often a full century or more apart. He seems to have permitted a disciple to receive a fuller share of the Gospel message, and a flood of light radiates from his life, and so to this extent our privilege as well as our responsibility is increased.

The disorders in the spiritual body are just as real as are those of the outward body. We speak of them in different terms, but we have terms by which to name them. We consult about them in a different way, but the end to be attained is the same. The doctors have a limit, often very near at hand, which they cannot contend with or go beyond, their case is pronounced hopeless, but with us in the interests of the higher life our case is never hopeless, for there is above all that we can do with our human efforts, sanctified by Divine grace, the appeal through prayer to the Great Physician of value that He will manifest His mercy and His power to restore what we cannot.

It is in this light and this light only that we can expect good results to follow our united efforts, and the blessing from above to enrich us: a using of all the gifts God has given us, directed wisely according to the best wisdom we can know, a diligence that knows no loitering, a full faith in the value of our calling and unquestioning confidence in the Physician who can give strength to our weakness and who will displace our faint-heartedness with boldness to follow Him.

D. H. F.

[The following announcement has recently been issued by the management of the Colored Institute at Cheyney, Pa. It speaks for itself. The prospects of that interesting institution are promising, but it will call for much effort and some sacrifice on the part of Friends and others to make it as effective as it should be. The Cheyney Institute should be as much of a power to-day toward freeing the race from ignorance and superstition, as the scores of farm-houses in our neighborhoods were half a century ago in gaining for him a safe journey to Canada.—Ed.]

ANNOUNCEMENT.

At the conclusion of the Summer School for Teachers at Cheyney, Pa., in the Seventh Month last, Hugh M. Browne withdrew from the principalship of the Institute for Colored Youth. His ten years of service have been signalized by the organization of a Normal School for Negro Teachers of national importance. In the three-fold matters of business administration, correct and economical standards of living, and careful co-ordination of academic and industrial training, the Managers feel that the foundations have been solidly laid. In arranging a succession it has been made emphatic that these practical and business-like standards shall be maintained.

The Board now take great satisfaction in announcing that they have secured Leslie Pinckney Hill for Principal. He and his wife, Jane Clark Hill, enter upon the responsibilities of the position on their return from Europe early in the present month.

Leslie Pinckney Hill graduated at Harvard in 1903 and took the Master's degree in 1904. At College he was quite as much distinguished for his manly character and pleasing personality as for his scholarship. Upon graduation he went to Tuskegee. Speaking of his four years' experience at that institution he said to the Managers that the value of the training and experience under the great leader of men who made it so famous could not be exaggerated. It has meant more to him even than his college course could. After his marriage to the Dean of the Woman's Department at Tuskegee, herself a college graduate and most successful teacher, Leslie Pinckney Hill accepted the appointment as principal of the Manassas Industrial School at Manassas, Virginia. Here he found an opportunity rather than an institution. In seven years he and his wife have had the satisfaction of securing upwards of $80,000 for buildings in addition to the necessary means for the maintenance of a school of about 300 students.

In the face of such a situation it was a serious matter for these earnest people to turn to another field. A sense of the larger opportunity to serve the cause of Negro education in teacher training decided them in favor of Cheyney. They came to us with a feeling of consecration in which they have sincerely sought Divine guidance.

Leslie Pinckney Hill has developed unusual capacity in his previous experience in securing the co-operation of all the forces calculated to advance the interests of the work in which he has been engaged. He has organized a Secondary and Industrial School Association amongst Negro schools and teachers and has been a leader in important conferences. Qualifications in these and allied lines of work seem to be of particular importance to Cheyney at this juncture. We bespeak for him through members of our Corporation, from all the friends of Cheyney and from friends of education and of philanthropy at large a kindly reception and hearing. He and his wife very particularly desire that Cheyney shall become a centre of influence based on service, and of wise activity in every line calculated to solve the great National problem to which it and they are dedicated.

For the Board of Managers.

J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
STANLEY R. YARNALL.

CHEYNEY, Pa., Tenth Month 20, 1913

EXTRACTS FROM DIARIES AND LETTERS OF RICHARD B. BROCKBANK.

(Concluded from page 221.)

Peterhead, 21-8-'02.—In the evening there were several open-air meetings, and also mission meetings at Moray of the denominational places, so that they did not expect a large number. There were about two hundred W. S. thought, and a very solid company they were. We had a full and relieving opportunity in every way and the meeting lasted for over an hour and a half. They parted with us with great cordiality. The various ones who are interested in keeping up the H. M. work believe that the Lord had been very near to bless, and that a great blessing had attended the meeting that day. There was no arrangement of ours in it, and we were content with the precious openings afforded in mercy and the evident solemnity that attended. An old man, John Mitchel, was very cordial, he said what had been said was the true way to comfort an old man like him. He had been among the Independents, but there was some disagreement and he could not do with it. He had attended a meeting held by J. R. Pim here twenty years ago. He much approved and has corresponded with J. R. P. since. He now goes to the Salvation Army. And when he had to leave the Congregationalists he said he would be content to be classed with the Salvation Army and the Quakers. He came to the evening meeting and was very cordial. W. S. says he is a great help to them, a man of pure and sincere heart. He told me the Army preached conversion first and then a holy life.

Knock Station, 24-8-'06.—The meetings at Portessie in the F. Hall at two p. m. and in the Wesleyan Chapel at six p. m., were most precious times, the first numbered one hundred and fifty and seldom indeed is such a feeling maintained; it might be truly said the Truth was over all and its power known. We intend to have meeting at Insch and Inverurie on Fifth and Sixth-days, and go on to Aberdeen on Seventh-day and attend meeting there on First-day, then take a few more meetings north before coming south.

Cullen, 26-8-'06.—R. A. Mackie's letter is very nice, coming at the time in the very place where we labored together with her dear husband fourteen years ago.

We had a good meeting, about thirty, at Ternemey School-house, Rothiemay. One woman and her daughter walked from Rothiemay village several miles, and was very cordial after the meeting. Jean Dey, or Westcott, her late husband's name, was there with her grand-daughter, an eight year old child who lives with her, also G. Dey's father-in-law, Thos. Grant, of Ramsburn and a daughter of his, and the man at whose house we lodged at the P. O., near Knock Station. We went to Macduff yesterday morning to arrange for a meeting there, but could not get a hall and finally decided to take one at Banff and give out bills in each place and have our meeting here instead of Macduff. To-night we go there and intend to go to-morrow night to Insch and the next night to Inverurie, after which we shall go to Aberdeen, where letters will find us at James Stewart's, 17 Ferry Hill Terrace, till Second-day morning. After Frazerburgh and Peterhead it may be needful to give thee further address. Last evening we were favored with a good meeting here about fifty present, and a most attentive, appreciative audience of awakened people, both merchants and fishermen and their wives. It was entirely like a meeting of Friends—the times of silence were very solemn and searching, and the power of Truth was over all. We are truly thankful in being so favored.

Ravenscorth, Pollokshields, 14-3-'04.—I am quite well and peaceful though feeling the responsibility and solemnity of the work, and trust I may be kept in my place and do no harm to the tender ones who have not seen much of the world, but are precious seed in the Lord's hand, that they may grow up to plant of his planting to his praise.

Strathpeffer, 13-8-'06.—We left our dear and most hospitable friends at 9.30 for here, where we found a meeting called at eight p. m. There was quite a good meeting last evening, seventy or eighty at least, we had dinner after we came. Seven o'clock dinners are the thing here, and we ate sparingly, not as our friend, R. Gray, urged us at his home, "get abundance," yet we had enough.

Part of the people got up and went out when I had spoken, and then A. C. spoke nicely to a less number—both were heard in great stillness, he was the minister at Kinmuck.

After meeting the Free Church minister shook hands very heartily, and we had an opportunity of thanking him for kindly lending us the room. It was 9.30 and a little dark when we came out, but the light, the true light, was upheld, and I trust it may be said that the power of Truth was over all. T. Fox asked for a little silent prayer before the close, as people began to go out when A. C. sat down. They kept their seats and in a few minutes he knelt in a few words, and when he rose I said that the meeting was now over and we felt it very kind of them to come and listen with such patience and in that love. We had no lights, and we could not see their faces at the close, but it was a good meeting.

Cromarty, 13-8-'06.—At Dingwall we had a meeting in the Y. M. C. A. hall, free, and a Chairman appointed, and some other curiosities in the bills, but we explained at the beginning that Dr. Fox had not given sufficient information and acknowledged their great kindness, and all went well—about fifty present. The Chairman, Dewar, a chemist, was an old man, not fit to come out at night, and I think he was glad to be relieved. His wife and daughter came, and after meeting took us to supper. We stayed at a hotel near the station, and came away at seven-thirty to Invergordon and by steamer to Cromarty, and are kindly housed with Dr. Grey Fox's wife and children.

Ardrassan, 15-7-'04.—I got along well yesterday, though with no time to refresh, arriving at Kilmarnock just in time to catch the train to Ardrassan, and arriving here at three, which allowed time for a cup of tea before meeting. There was a nice company at the meeting and I felt that notwithstanding all my want of faith which would hardly allow me to speak of coming because of discouragement, I was enabled to feel in the meeting such a sense of the love of God towards these dear simple-hearted ones, that I was almost broken down. I was helped to do all that was required at my hand and came away peaceful and thankful. C. W. Thompson was here from Glasgow, W. I. Begg, Thomas Hannah and his three daughters from K., George Day and P. Milne and John and J. Stewart from Irvine. There had been a little meeting begun by a few young men at Irvine, unknown to P. Milne and James Stewart, and they only heard of it a day or two ago by the father of one of them asking P. M. what was this new meeting they had begun and which his son was attending. On enquiry he found that they met to wait upon God, finding that the Brethren and other meetings which they had been going to did not satisfy their souls. P. M. and J. S. were going to-day to sit down with them for the first time.

It is likely I may stay a few days, though I do not see far ahead. To-day I go to the regular meeting at eleven and hope in the evening to have a meeting for others. There are several popular preachers to have meetings to-night, so we may have but a few if any.

A. D. got home a few days ago, and was near advertising a public meeting for to-night. Had my faith been strong enough to write them this would have been done. I may get to Irvine and Maybole, but have to wait and see.

Whilst sensible of a deep yearning of love towards all you dear ones, I feel most easy to be here, and am content therein, though aware how little I can do in this great work, and how needful it is for me to keep near to the source of life and strength, that his strength may be made perfect even in my weakness.

Aberdeen, 8-8-'08.—Never noticed—I omitted that the other paragraphs in the M. and A. which had also been alluded to by our clerk, on availing ourselves of and watching for opportunities of service were very well worthy of our attention, especially under the circumstances in which we found ourselves in this beloved land, with such a widespread thirst for a nearer communion with God. I felt how great an opportunity was before Friends, and how desirable it was that each one of us should be alive to take advantage of these opportunities, &c.

9 Suffolk Street, Edinburgh, 13-8-'08.—We had precious meetings at Creiffs. At the close of the evening meeting I asked as many as could to come to the Hall at nine-thirty A. M. in the morning. We had twelve to fifteen in all, and a very precious time, and left at ten-thirty-seven for here. There were seventy to eighty in the evening.

Maybole, 9-11-'08.—We had quite a satisfactory meeting last evening, and came on here this morning to help to arrange for the meeting to-night and expect to go on to Cropphill to-morrow. There has been nothing to disturb my service in the slightest and I feel peaceful and thankful to feel in my place. Yesterday and to-day have been lovely days, and I hope the weather has improved with you and that dear Amy is improving fast. See that Tom gives her all the help she needs and cares for all her poultry and covers down the beehives for winter. I am well and even rather freer of lameness than at home. I mention this because I know thou likes to be informed.

A. D. is with me and singularly enough was not at home when the G.'s were at Ardrassan, so that he is clear of the charges which they made against the other Friends there. I saw the young man, Henderson, from Aberdeen, and several of the attenders of the Edinburgh meeting at the special meeting on Seventh-day, and thought them very serious and nice, and very tender. I trust that they may be preserved by the Lord in this storm which is at present very strong and trying. There is none who can keep his little tender ones but Himself, and I feel that his power is over all and that this work is his, and nothing can prevail against Him. There are many who have tasted of his love who are not likely to be driven away.

Dundee, 27-4-1900.—There are quite a number of new members here of a most respectable class, and they appear delighted to see the beauty of the Truth and to unite with Friends. I have never seen anything like it in Dundee before.

The meeting last night was a favored one. The power was over all. I spoke first after say fifteen minutes' solemnity, then A. D. then after I had a few words of prayer, followed by M. Steel, in the same sense not long, and helpful.

We were wonderfully helped. I felt the meeting a very comforting one and left them clear. There were several more there besides those who have applied lately, who are looking to applying before long. There is a more hopeful atmosphere about them altogether.

WHATSOEVER things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, of good report—if there be any virtue and any praise think on these things.—ST. PAUL.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

THE ALTRUIST.*

One summer noon upon a dusty way
That wavered white before my lagging feet,
I came upon one fainting in the sun,
With travel worn and heat.

I bore him to the shadow of a tree,
And there beside the waters of a spring
We rested, he and I, and his poor hands,
Soiled from long journeying,

I bathed all lovingly till wiped away
Was every stain as though it had not been.
And faring on, I, too, was strong again,
And my hands, too, were clean.

CHARLES FRANCIS SAUNDERS.

*Suggested by a communication by Wm. C. ALLEN to THE FRIEND last Spring.

A WAYFARER'S FAITH.*

This is a remarkable little book. It combines in excellent taste a lofty mystical point of view and a distinct literary power that suggest John Woolman. There is an added element of broad scholarship, absent in Woolman, but this is used to enhance the combination of merit without even suggesting priggishness. William Penn in one of his maxims exhorts us "to cultivate the universal spirit." We are inclined to say of this volume of T. Edmund Harvey's that it is a manual on the right means of "cultivating the universal spirit." A natural tendency of human nature seems to be toward the specific. The individual point of view becomes so absorbing that we are apt to forget that it is partial and limited. At the same time as we look out upon the world from this personal vantage ground we are sufficiently sensible of the limitations of others. Particularly is this true in religious matters. So there are sad stories to record of sectarian bitterness and working at cross purposes on the part of those who are in reality brethren. The search for "the common basis of religious life" is one of the correctives for this spirit of contraction. It is the title of the first chapter of "A Wayfarer's Faith" and in a sense it is the subject of the whole book.

Turning with some care the 156 pages of the little volume certain sentences stand out as way-marks. It may be no injustice to the work as a whole to copy these portions, either with or without comment as seems best. "Though man, like his fellow-creatures, cannot behold unveiled the vision of the Eternal, somewhere under every imperfect picture which our dogmas have framed of Him does there not lie at least some trait of faint resemblance?" How unlike is the attitude displayed in this view, to the very common denunciation of dogma! It presents a good starting-point in our quest for "the universal spirit." Nor need there be any shock of surprise that it leads to this as a conclusion.—"Certainly the experience of all the great mystics would seem to show that as we ascend the Heavenly mountain, one from one side, one from another, our paths draw nearer to each other, and so across the night between, we may listen to our fellow-pilgrims' voices, and realize that some day we shall meet face to face." In the chapter on "The Inner Life of the Church," some wholesome observations on the question of union, now often under discussion, seem like a permanent contribution to the subject. A portion of one paragraph may indicate the drift of the whole: "The union [of Christians] is not to destroy personality or variety of character, but to underlie all difference. It is no external machinery to unite us in a single visible organization by which individuality would be stamped out or fettered in growth. There is little trace of any such machinery in the earliest history of the Church, and the ages and places where it has been most perfect have not been those which we think of as nearest in spirit to Christ, nor those men most like Him whose lives have been spent merely in the development of such organization." And then this at the conclusion of the same chapter, "As we look out upon Christendom divided by sects, and creeds into a score of different bodies, we may be saddened by the lament which many a devout lip has uttered over the schisms which rend the robe of the Master. But it was only His outer garments which the soldiers rent asunder, the seamless robe is unsevered still. External separation does not touch the spirit of love and true communion which beneath countless outer differences unites together the lives of all who follow Him in deed and in truth. And as we each draw nearer to Him, and His life flows into our lives, we must draw nearer to each other and to all our fellow-men."

The chapter with the title, "The Prophet in the Church" discloses the essence of what is known as the "prophetic ministry" and shows how at times the "iron grip of organization" has silenced the true prophet. Out of a wealth of good the following seems specially notable: "The teacher thinks over what he knows of the needs and difficulties of his fellows, ponders over the truths that have been made clear to him in the past, searches amongst the sayings of the Lord, the teachings of the Apostles, the words of the Law or the prophets of old, for help for the present. Not so the prophet. He may, indeed, go through all this preparation of thought, but the essential preparation of his work is prayer; prayer in which he must be willing to lay aside, if need be, all these thoughts of his. The prophetic spirit reaches out to realize the condition of those to whom it is to minister, and upward in search of light and strength from its only source." . . . "He [the prophet] must remember too how easy it is for interpreters to expand and embroider upon the original and thus to mar it. And, therefore, the prophet should keep very close to the Giver of the message, who may have given to others its fuller exposition." . . . "Prophecy is born of prayer, supported by it, not the prayer of words, but the attitude of soul, of will, of which the most beautiful of our collects are the momentary reflections. In this spirit then, feeling our need and our fellows', let us long for more light to come into our lives. Let us remember that we have not just to sit down contentedly in the dark and wait for God's light."

Perhaps in no direction more than in that of the treatment of the Sacraments has the Society of Friends been misunderstood. This doubtless is due to a lack of constructive presentation. No one on reading T. Edmund Harvey's chapters in this book would feel that the Society could be properly classed with the anti-communionists. Thus at the conclusion of the chapter we have just been quoting, "For surely there are not merely two or seven Sacraments, but seventy times seven, for him whose heart seeks ever fellowship with his brothers and with the Father above him, who would be loved in them, and served by their service." And further in the chapter on the "Sacraments of Life," "The error of the sacramentalist in the past has often rather been that he has confined the Divine presence and the Divine working to certain fixed channels and unchanging visible signs. Those of us who hold that these good men have narrowed down the freedom of the inner life need to meet them not by denying the Divine presence where they see it, but by trying to see and to realize that presence ourselves more fully throughout all our lives." The whole of the chapter on Sacraments abounds in quotable paragraphs. One more may indicate how constructive the treatment is throughout.

"Surely to us the most wonderful thing in life is personality, and it is human personality which may be the highest sacrament of good, or the most terrible sacrament of ill. Our deeds are often at their best poor clumsy acts that stray in the dark; our thoughts are all imperfect, and our words fail to express them fully. But in spite of all this failure soul acts upon soul, we know not how, and the influence of one life upon another goes out continually like the myriad rays of a lamp. Silently men are changed and transformed by this influence. And there is no man but who is doing his part for good or ill in this transforming work, whatever it may be, wherever he may go. Is it not thus that God's self-revelation in Christ becomes real to the Christian? God speaks to us in Jesus through human personality. We draw near to Him as a man, we see his life and listen to his words, and as we gaze and listen, we feel that God has taken hold of us."

Save spirit and flavor there is nothing about this book particularly to suggest Augustine or A Kempis, or even the Religio Medici, but somehow it seems to belong with them, and we gladly give it place on our book shelf in such company.

J. H. B.

WHEN THE LORD humbles the creature, and gives it clearly to see its own insufficiency and need of superior aid, how it hides pride.—THOMAS SCATTERGOOD.

OUR LORD declares He will come as a thief in the night, in a day and hour when he is not expected. How awful to the unprepared will the summons be, "Steward, give an account of thy stewardship."

* A Wayfarer's Faith, by T. Edmund Harvey, London, Wells Gardner, Darton & Co., 1912.

For "THE FRIEND."

A REMINISCENCE OF BARNEGAT.

BY WALTER L. MOORE.

The most ancient street of the little village, as we assume, leads down to the bay. On either side, at first close together, but later, no less neighborly but more distant from each other, stand the homes of a quiet people the tenor of whose lives runs on from year to year with little variation, unless it be that a broader and deeper ripple breaks the surface of the daily calm when the summer visitor to the shore wends his way from the little railroad station en route to a day's fishing or sailing upon the above named expanse of inviting water.

The aristocracy bred of wealth has not yet found footing here. It is true they have a bank, but so broad is the policy of the directorate that the pennies of every child born in the village are welcomed, and the nucleus of his account is formed by the gift of one dollar placed to his credit by these same fostering hands at the start.

The little town wins distinction on another score, as we discovered years ago upon our first visit. Upon very many of the gates to the yards fronting upon the street, great iron latches of a peculiar design will be noticed, and of a workmanship that is at once its own recommendation. These we learned were the handiwork of a blacksmith, who, upon whatever other line he may have rested for reputation, and even failed therein, has left to him an enduring credit in these well-wrought tokens of a skilful hand.

Equally well guarded are the homes of the citizens from the intrusion of that bane of the New Jersey coast—the ubiquitous mosquito; the porches being screened from intrusion by this common enemy the crack of whose doom has already been sounded by the deliverances of science, both as to his obnoxious character and the methods by which his existence can be successfully combated.

On the left hand side of the street aforementioned, just where it bids adieu to the town to straggle on by field and meadow to the bay, stands the little old-fashioned meeting-house of Friends; exhaustively plain in every detail and innocent of paint since many a day. But, withal, there seems an element in this saline air that mitigates the agencies of decay; and, besides, there are reverent and kindly hands which extend now and then a care lest this ancestral seat of worship fall to ruin.

Reaching almost to the porch and extending to the left, as we approach, lies the burial ground, overrun with blackberry vines and a clustered mass of other congenial members of the over-crowding vegetable world. But the forsaken aspect of the enclosure rescues its dignity through the adjacent towering grove of oaks that to the right stand guard where once were the horse sheds and the arena for carriages.

The house receives additional complacency from its location, having the uninterrupted prospect of field and salt meadow till the eye rests upon a sheen of waters, or catches the glint of nodding sail as the boats pass to and fro. Or, if it be night, you may catch the intermittent bull's-eye gleam of the Barnegat light warning the mariner afar at sea. For that coast off yonder has been pitiless in the toll of its dead, and the body of more than one poor fellow washed ashore, as we have been told, has found a last resting place within the quiet precincts of the Friends' burial ground.

Such was Barnegat on the beautiful summer afternoon we last beheld it, when the little meeting-house was awakened once more from its quiet slumber and put astir to receive the Friends and kindly regarding neighbors who had responded to the invitation to an "appointed meeting." And how interesting the assembly! Old and young are met together; the serious, quiet faces of the one contrasting finely with those of the other, whereon time has not yet ploughed his furrows. If, at first, there are one or two who appear to be listless or uneasy with what may seem to them the unmeaning quietude of a service which to others may be the hallowed avenue to the place of prayer, even these are brought ere long to feel somewhat of the mystic influence that pervades their fellow worshippers. For here, as in general, shall we not say, the earnest and well-meaning expectation of those not familiar with the manner of worship of Friends, is at first directed towards the outward message rather than to the inward revelation of the Divine will. At such a time if the spoken word is to be to edification, all the more important is it that they who are responsible for thus bringing the people together, be found endeavoring to withdraw to the inner sanctuary—the Holy of Holies, for the discernment of the Lord's will in the ministration of the word. At such times how comforting the expression,—"Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it."

The words that unsealed the lips of the first speaker that afternoon were those spoken by the fellow villagers of the woman of Samaria, who, having come to the Master in obedience to her call, could say, "Now we believe, not because of thy saying; for we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world."

The next speaker quoted the words of the woman herself when she invited her people to partake of the same blessed experience which had warmed her heart and made her a true Gospel messenger.—"Come, see a man that told me all things that ever I did; is not this the Christ?"

The third speaker made use of the expression, "Ye opened the doors and the people came," alluding to the cordial response with which the call for the meeting that afternoon had been met, and continuing at some length upon the theme, that if back of this willingness to thus come together in the act of worship there was a real heart hunger for the Gospel message, souls would be joined together in true Christian fellowship regardless of sect, and preacher and hearer would be alike satisfied through a sense of the abounding love which is begotten of the situation and its sincerity of purpose.

After the meeting more than one expressed satisfaction in having been present. Perhaps the words of an earnest woman who lived across the way may be quoted as illustrating the feeling of some of the neighborhood people: "I am a Methodist, but I am always glad to see this house opened, and enjoy the service of Friends."

And so that day, as we sped away from Barnegat, the feeling was strengthened that there is a real service for I truth, and that it may be further outreaching than we have yet realized, in the preservation of some of these now closed meeting-houses, and their occasional opening to the service for which they were builded. We cannot doubt but that there is just now an inviting field for this sort of Gospel labor. In many of these neighborhoods there remain descendants of those to whom Quakerism in its simplicity and directness as a form of religion, was most appealing; and though so far as their own practice of it was concerned, it may have been but lightly and even formally retained, nevertheless, in their best moments it was unto them as a "savor of life unto life" which neither time, nor change could sweep aside or wholly efface. To their children, and even to their children's children has been handed down something which, while it may escape exact definition, is more than a tradition, and if it could be found within their grasp in its pristine strength and purity would be received with joy.

GOALS.

Ah, well for him who knows, when each new goal
Eludes his steps, 'tis only that the soul
To farther goals may speed, and that the eyes
May thus be lifted toward a fairer prize;
Who, called at eve to lay his hopes away,
Knows higher hopes shall come with breaking day.

—THOMAS CURTIS CLARR, in S. S. Times.

"Oh how good it is for us to live near the Truth! Walking in 'The Light' we should be at no loss to know what to do, nor where to go, nor how to behave ourselves before men, for the glory of God, and for the safety and peace of our souls."
—ABEL THOMAS.

THIS I DID FOR THEE.

I gave My life for thee;
My precious blood I shed;
That thou might'st ransom be,
And qui-kened from the dead.
I gave My life for thee:
What hast thou given for Me?

I spent long years for thee
In weariness and woe,
That an eternity
Of joy thou mightest know.
I spent long years for thee:
Hast thou spent one for Me?

My Father's home of light,
My rainbow circled throne,
I left, for earthly night,
For wanderings sad and lone.
I left it all for thee:
Hast thou left aught for Me?

I suffered much for thee—
More than tongue can tell—
Of bitterest agony,
To rescue thee from hell.
I suffered much for thee:
What canst thou bear for Me?

And I have brought to thee,
Down from My home above,
Salvation full and free,
My pardon and My love.
Great gifts I brought to thee:
What hast thou brought to Me?

Oh, let thy life be given,
Thy years for Me be spent;
World-letters all be given,
And joy with suffering blent.
Give thou thyself to Me,
And I will welcome thee.

—F. R. HAVERGAL.

SOCIAL COMMON-PLACES ABOUT ENGLAND.

WM. C. ALLEN.

I will offer a few random thoughts about England—about the commonplace things—if you please.

Thus, the American looks for fly-screens on his first trip. He does not see them—they do not tumble over his fingers and harass him every time he tries to put up the window. The reason is that there seem to be few flies in the motherland, nor are there many mosquitoes. Probably the lack of really hot weather explains the absence of these nuisances.

Another thing he likes is the fact that the table knives of Great Britain actually cut. They are not like those shameful apologetics for knives which we have everywhere in America—heavy, thick, dull silver-plated things that hardly go through meat, bread or fruit, and only by dint of pushing make ragged holes in what they enter. The English knives are of steel, well tempered, keen and sharp, and immediately cut everything except necks or bones. They really do what knives should primarily be intended to do—cut things.

They have a custom there which also might well be followed by different grades of society in our country. It is the habit of the family adjourning after dinner to an adjoining room—say the drawing-room, for that is the name given to even a tiny room that would correspond to our parlor—and there sip coffee. In quietness, away from the used dishes, can this gentle art be applied. Our English cousins do not use the coffee that we do, and they often put boiled milk into it instead of cream, but the social custom is a pleasant one. We can at least imitate their service, while they might imitate our coffee.

The English barbers are different from ours. When a man wants his beard and hair trimmed, in our land, he walks into an elaborately fitted-up establishment and with due ceremony is installed into a chair presided over by a more or less competent professor, who, being in a little trust of his own, will charge him sixty cents when the interview is over. At least that is the western way. When such a man seeks a barber's shop in this tight little isle, he passes through a shop, adorned with front windows filled with wigs, switches and toilet articles, into a little room in the rear. It looks incomplete, dismal, uninviting. The wee chair is unrestful. He sits in it, he throws his neck back out of joint, and takes his dose like a man. But somehow the work is accomplished in amazingly quick time, no extra flourishes are given, and the deed is soon done. He arises from his chair, pays four pence for beard and hair trimming, and goes his way. The work is quite as well done as in many places in America, outside of the large cities, and is so cheap that he is ready to repair to the barber on the next slightest provocation.

Around England you hardly ever hear any swearing. Men do not much indulge in the practice of such presumed emphasis in any walk of life. I have at present writing been several weeks here, mingling among all sorts, and have not heard one profane word. In talking with the lower classes we hear some expressions odd to our ears. The other day a poor woman close by me in a railway carriage remarked to a nurse sitting opposite that the child in her lap was "the only baby I have—the only pebble on the beach." A few days before a mischievous youngster was warned by his mother, "Now, chappie, don't do that, don't do that, chappie." Chappie stopped.

Some Americans, of recent years, have acquired the idea that English women have taken up smoking. After several weeks on this trip, I have not seen a single woman smoking. On the continent you can see this frequently.

England is an orderly country, but there is less precision in it than in America. If you tell a man to do a thing the chances are that he neglects to definitely follow your instructions. He seems to think of everything else except direct attention to the matter in hand. Possibly the schools are at fault. Such "thickness" would soon put its exponents to the rear in America. Among adults much harm is unquestionably done by the drink habit. We have, for three weeks, been living in an excellent private boarding-house, patronized by a class of people able to pay about twelve shillings, or three dollars per day. Among equivalently educated people of similar means in such a family hotel in the United States you will not see so intoxicants on the table from one year's end to the other. Although we tried to get into a house where drinking is at a minimum, almost all the guests here use wine or whiskey twice a day, although it is not a licensed house. They send out for it, and one man at a nearby table the day of this writing brought one bottle in his hand, and two bottles, one in each coat pocket, into luncheon, and calmly put all three before his family. Nobody becomes drunk, but they get "thick," and we know that scientific investigation proves that precision and initiative go down before the habit. Such people do not primarily demand a wholesome variety of food, nor do they seem prepared to think out changes in their diet.

Take potatoes for instance. The Briton has generally boiled his potatoes and is likely always to do so. They are some times the only vegetable in good houses at the midday meal. Britons know not of the delights of cooking potatoes in the infinite varieties practiced in America.

Around the watering places of England are observed many women carrying walking sticks. It seems strange at first to see husky girls briskly walking up and down hill with a cane that looks as if it by right belonged to Grandpa. But it seems to me to be quite sensible, and a great aid in long tramps; although apparently somewhat superfluous when the hooked handle is carried on the arm, and the stick dangles at the side, as the fair owner strides down the city pavement.

Many English people have very queer ideas about "The States." Thus a very capable man of affairs told me recently that many of our people who visit their shores, shut up their shops, go abroad and spend all they have, return home, and open up shop again. He was foolish enough to believe this, whilst also commenting on the "cleverness" of a countryman of mine who was rushing through Glasgow, and who could not stop, but who tipped a porter to put a Glasgow hotel label on his trunk to show the folks at home that he had been at that city. "Very clever," added my veracious informant.

Schools in England cannot teach much geographical knowledge regarding America. Highly educated people often seem to have heard only about New York, Chicago and Philadelphia, and some of them apparently know less as to whether Ohio is a suburb of New York or if California is across the river from Philadelphia. They often frankly admit their ignorance regarding a people we might suppose they would be eager to learn about. On the contrary, our children can tell the relative positions of, say, London, Liverpool and Edinburgh, and know a great deal about the geography and history of the motherland.

Most of our English cousins are perfectly satisfied with their limited knowledge of America. Many of them tell me that they are the best provided for people in the world, and why should they trouble about others? This attitude is impairing the vast possibilities that the otherwise splendid characteristics of the nations carry with them. Few seem to want to learn—many of them do not care to know about conditions elsewhere lest their own complacency be shattered. America seeks results—England thinks of tradition. But after twelve visits to England, during the past twenty-eight years, one thing has strongly impressed me. It is that a great evolution, all the way from batttubs to footgear, has been going on based on imitations of American methods. Many of their present good things have come from our side of the water and it is delightful to see how artlessly many of the educated people think that these better ways originated in their own country. It is quite useless to tell many of the ordinarily intelligent friends of mine that we of America took the initiative. They courteously respond, "Really," and I know they think I am in error. The few English people who go to America are ever ready to admit that their own country must imitate us in many respects or suffer in competition. The great mass of English people need precision, initiative, less alcohol and more universal education. But when they come to the United States to live, the splendid qualities of the race develop and they quickly forge to the front of the Republic's activities. I do not forget that my own country can be improved in many ways patent to all of us.

England is a magnificent country. She and the United States are in essentials much alike. She is a great centre of financial and political power. The ends of the earth pay tribute to her shipowners, bankers and investors. Her keenness in trade, and courage in commercial life, have been even greater than her past naval and military prestige. Under modern conditions her flag follows her trade. Trade does not now simply follow the flag. Statistics prove this. She has a noble history, glorious ideals, a vigorous national conscience, and we, her brothers of America, are largely descended from the same grand old stock.

HITHERTO the Lord hath helped us,
Guiding all the way;
Henceforth let us trust Him fully,
Trust Him all the day.

—F. R. HAVERGAL.

"THE experiences and gravity, the judgment and wisdom, frequently found in old age, demand veneration, and even when these are in some measure wanting, the infirmities and inquietudes of that state call upon people of younger years to abound in compassion toward them."

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

THE MOTHER'S LESSON.

You have taken the flower to pieces,
And very learnedly told
The name of each part from root to crown,
From calyx to heart of gold;
But say, do you think, my darling,
That all of the learned men,
Who have taught you to treat lovely flowers so,
Could put it together again?

You chased a butterfly, love, this morn:
I was watching you at your play.
You only bruised it, and brushed the down
From its beautiful wings away.
But could any surgeon, my darling,
Reset those delicate limbs,
Or restore the beautiful golden bloom,
That you spoiled for your idle whims?

The butterfly and the pink, dear,
At best, they were transient things;
And flowers will bloom, and butterflies
Still float upon golden wings.
But, love, remember, the bloom of truth
Once brushed from your soul away,
Or an impure word, will leave a scar
That will last for many a day.

—Every Other Sunday.

"DARNING THE WEAK PLACES."—"But there aren't any holes in those stockings," said Molly. "Why do you put them into the pile to be darned?"

The Lady-Who-Always-Knows-Somehow had been sorting out her weekly grist of stockings on the veranda and Molly had been lying in the hammock watching.

The Lady picked up the pair of stockings in question and ran her hand into them again for Molly's benefit. "I know there isn't any hole," she explained, "but see all those weak places."

"You aren't going to darn them?" asked Molly, incredulously.

"Indeed I am," said the Lady; "I always do. I find it's very much easier than darning holes. That's part of my philosophy, you know."

"Philosophy?" echoed Molly, inquiringly.

"Yes," said the Lady, "I mean that I believe in darning the weak places everywhere in life instead of waiting for the holes to come. You know my husband inherited weak lungs. You didn't know it? Well, I suppose that means we've darned the weak place pretty successfully. Both his father and mother died of tuberculosis and he was naturally stoop-shouldered and narrow chested. If we hadn't done anything about it, I don't doubt that his lungs would have given out under some of the hard strains he has had to bear. But instead of waiting for the hole to come, he darned the weak place by taking exercise and sleeping out of doors and building himself up by his diet. Wasn't that better than letting the weak place become a hole and then spending the rest of his life trying to patch it up?"

Molly admitted that it was.

"Well, that's one way of darning the weak places," went on the Lady. "And (Mrs.) S. is an example of another. That pretty girl of hers is just beginning to realize how pretty she is and to think of nothing but clothes and boys. Some mothers would say, 'It is just the foolish age,' and wouldn't try to do anything about it unless the weak place became a bad hole. But (Mrs.) S. believes in darning the weak places, and she is doing all she can right now to make Dorothy modest and sensible and unspoiled.

"And then there are the weak places in our efficiency," went on the Lady, warming to her subject. "Now, I know a stenographer who is so quick and accurate, and such a pleasant person to have around, that her employers bear with her bad spelling. Sometimes they get out of patience with her, but they have always forgiven her so far, and she thinks they always will; and so she doesn't try to darn that weak place. I should hate to see it wear through into a hole because it would be so much harder than to patch it up than it is now, but—

"But I have tried," interrupted Molly, suddenly.

"How hard?" asked the Lady, not at all surprised by the interruption.

"Not very," admitted Molly, reluctantly. "You don't happen to have a spelling book handy, do you?"—Philadelphia Inquirer.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

A PICNIC IN SYRIA. Perhaps the children who read THE FRIEND would be interested to know how the boys and girls of the Friends' Mission School at Ramallah, Palestine, spend their annual picnic day. We usually spend the day at a spring about an hour's walk from the schools, over rocky hills, down into a valley, where we sit in the shade of a steep cliff or under the olive trees with their "little gray leaves." The spring sends only a tiny stream from under the rock, but it is a great delight to children in a land where no rain comes from Fourth Month to Eleventh Month and only the dew waters the land, where many of the springs run dry in the long summer and the people must depend largely on cistern water. This year, some of the children were not very well and there were a number of little ones so we thought it better not to take the long walk. The boys had a wheelbarrow race, to see which of the big boys made the best time in wheeling a small boy a certain distance. It was very funny as wheelbarrows are not much used in this land and most of the boys had never tried to push one.

The "kousa" that is mentioned for dinner is a kind of small squash like our summer squashes. The inside is dug out and it is then stuffed with rice and meat. This is one of the favorite dishes in this land. Each child was given a loaf of bread, round and flat, about as thick as a breakfast plate and about that size, and on it was laid his "kousa," one or two according to the size—and here was a perfect dinner, bread and meat and rice and vegetable with apricots for dessert. And here is what one of our little Syrian Friends—for she is a member of the Society—says about it. ALICE W. JONES.

THE PICNIC.

Can you guess why we have a picnic every year? I think every one of you knows that a little fun is very important for every one to have, it makes us feel stronger and happier and lool' well and bright after spending some time at work.

This year our kind teachers decided that we should spend our picnic under the pine trees in front of our school-house. It was one bright Sixth-day morning, Fifth Month 30th, when all the teachers and the girls and boys of the training homes were ready and the doors of the school were closed. We began our picnic under the pleasant pine trees where they prepared swings for us to swing.

The first game was basket ball played by the second and third year girls and that was followed by the field-day, which the boys made. It contained many games. The first was a race by the little boys and then the big boys ran fifteen times around the basket ball court, after which the elder boys of the school played jumping over the rope while others were playing tennis. When this game was over the next thing was that nearly ten boys stood over each other in many different ways, this was a nice game. Then some of the boys tied their feet together and ran to see who would reach a certain place first. That was the last thing on the field-day.

Then we played a game of basket ball again, and then, because it was getting too warm, we all went under the pine trees and played quiet games till dinner was called. It was "kousa" and apricots. And after dinner was over some of the big girls and boys went to play croquet and this was an interesting game too. And some took their fancy work and went under a shady tree to work, while others played some different games till late in the afternoon; when the sun was not too hot we played a game of basket ball, greens and reds. (These are the colors worn by the regular teams.)

Some of the boys wished to see our school, so they did see it, and we jumped rope and played as usual. Some of the good players played tennis, so we were very glad to watch them till supper was ready. We had our supper under the trees; it was cheese and cucumbers and bread. Some of the girls did not eat from happiness. After supper we jumped and laughed and played and spent a nice time till it was dark. Then Superintendent Kelsey talked for us some words and prayed, thanking God for the good times he gives us all. We ended our picnic with thankful hearts to "our Father who art in heaven."—ANUSIE ANDI.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The subject of this obituary is a stranger to us and lived in a far distant land, but such is the character portrayed that I thought it might be reprinted in THE FRIEND with profit to many.

S. E.

ROBERT MATHER

The life of our Friend was one that in a large measure fulfilled the Divine injunction to do justly, love mercy and walk humbly with God. Blessed with parents who sincerely loved the truth and sought above all things to live it out, he seems almost imperceptibly to have followed them as they followed Christ; and thus from childhood, through school days and until the end, his daily path was illumined as by a shining light, shining more and more unto the perfect day. Evidently feeling that what he had experienced of the love of God was not for himself alone, his sympathy was stirred, shortly after leaving school, by the condition of many of the poorer lads of Hobart, who had no one to care for their highest welfare; and so, for several years, he spent two or three evenings each week in teaching them at a night school. Not only so, but as opportunity occurred, he put them in a way of earning an honest living. Later on in life, he did much useful work in connection with a Prisoners' Aid Society, meeting at the prison gate men whose sentence had expired, and striving by earnest counsel and practical help to induce them to turn from their evil courses.

He was also very earnest in promoting total abstinence from intoxicating liquor; and for many years was an indefatigable working member of the Executive Council of the local Society.

Inbued with the deep spiritual vein of our religious Society, he was a very regular attender of our Meetings for Worship, greatly valuing the privilege; and, though not often taking vocal part in them, he, by his earnest spirit, contributed not a little to their deeper life and power. In the business Meetings as an overseer, and in all other ways in which the interests of the Society were concerned, he was ever ready to take his full share of work and responsibility. For several years he devoted his First-day afternoons to teaching a class of children at the Friends' School, anxiously striving to imbue their hearts with the love of that Saviour whom he served.

At the head of an extensive establishment, he was ever ready to deal liberally with his employees, and by his general business integrity won for himself the respect and confidence of his fellows as a high-minded and upright man.

A large and representative assembly of citizens met at the Friends' burial ground, where several speakers bore testimony to the sterling character of him whose life had just closed.

J. R. W.

SMALL service is true service while it lasts.

Of friends, however humble, scorn not one:

The daisy by the shadow that it casts

Protects the lingering dewdrop from the sun.

—WORDSWORTH.

It is our own fault, if our greatest trials do not turn out to our advantage. Times of adversity are often to the children of God seasons of the richest consolations. One design of suffering is to qualify us to sympathize with those under affliction.

A FARM VIEW OF EDUCATION.

[AN esteemed subscriber has put into our hands some "Hope Farm Notes" on education from the Rural New Yorker. We gladly quote a portion of the article, and commend the practical common-sense view of college training to our readers. —Ed.]

Of all the planting that a farmer finds it necessary to do there is nothing quite equal to transplanting home-grown plants in the garden of education. Some homes might be called hotbeds, others are very cold frames, and there are grades running all between. Children grow up away from childhood and show that they are ready for transplanting—with evidences around the head to be compared with those on a tomato plant. You cut off their roots, and try to trim their heads and plant them in the hard field of practical life or in the sheltered garden of education. It is a large undertaking, for here is the best crop of your farm put out at a hazard. You may not have grown or trimmed it right, and the soil in which you plant it may not prove congenial, or some wild old strain from a remote ancestor may "come back" when it should "stay put." You cannot tell about these things except by experiment; therefore there is nothing quite equal to this sort of transplanting. That is the way mother and I felt as we took the two older children off to college. My experience has taught me both the power and the weakness of an education. He who can grasp the true spirit of it acquires a trained mind, and that means mastery. He who simply "goes to college" and drifts along with the crowd without real mental training is worse off than if he never entered. He cannot live up to his reputation as a college man, and when a man must go through life always dragging behind his reputation he is only a tin can tied to the tail of what was once his ambition. I can imagine an intelligent parrot going through college, and perhaps passing the examinations; but all his life he would be a parrot, unable to apply what he had learned to practical things. I made up my mind long ago to give each one of the children opportunity. That means a chance to study through a good college. Each and every one must pay back to me later the money which this costs. My backing continues just as long as they show desire, through their labor, to think and work out the real worth of education. Should they become mentally and morally lazy and assume that "going to college" is like having the measles or raising a beard—out they come at once, for if I know anything at all it is the fact that the so-called student who goes through college just because his parents think it is the thing to do makes about as poor a drone as the human hive can produce.

"ONE of the greatest needs of the Christian life in these days is more devotion. The tendency is to action rather than to worship, to busy toil rather than to quiet sitting at the Saviour's feet to commune with Him."—Selected.

FRIENDLY NEWS.

By appointment of the Abington Quarterly Meeting Visitation Committee, a meeting for Divine worship was held on the second inst., at three p. m., at Nature Meeting-house, on Jenkintown Road. Nature rarely furnishes a more perfect setting than was ours in this assembling. The little drab house, back from the road, was an invitation in itself, seemingly protected from the frosty air by stately evergreens and gorgeous maples. At the approach of the hour few seats were vacant. Many Friends of both branches were present, and several of other denominations foregathered to worship as the Spirit gave guidance. Vocal ministry was frequent but not voluble, and the silence intervening lent a solemnity and dignity more than ordinarily impressive.

Jesus' love for the family of Lazarus, as typical of the love we should have for each other, was the first message, and it found a verbal response from another who directed us to His Divine love as the well of living water. A gentle explanation of our rejection of the sacraments, an earnest prayer, and an appeal for acceptance of the grace freely offered us were succeeded by a precious period of silence in the early twilight.

As many came from a distance the solemn beauty of the autumn sunset surrounded all of us, going homeward by motor, trolley or on foot. The long aisles of ruddy sunset haze over the woody hillsides, lit up by myriads of gorgeous leaves, gold, scarlet, brown and green,—how peacefully they blended with the quiet of the meeting, as they gradually faded into the early purple and drab of the approaching night. Truly no grander vesters than these are possible, where God's nature joins with God's spirit in the hymn sung only in the heart.

PHILADELPHIA QUARTERLY MEETING.

THE Select Quarterly Meeting, which was held on the 3rd inst. in Philadelphia, will be remembered for the sense of life that prevailed in it.

An opening prayer brought the company into the very presence of the Most High, and the vocal expressions that followed this utterance seemed to lift us above the ordinary level of spiritual satisfaction.

The effort which we make to keep a reserve fund of goodwill, kindness and real helpfulness to be used upon occasion,—even when the attitude of our fellow-men is otherwise toward us,—was compared to that which infinite compassion keeps in reserve for us who are so often lacking. Our preservation from some trials which have afflicted other sections of the Society of Friends as well as other denominations was mentioned in connection with the ministry amongst us that has been sound and edifying in a good degree.

It is cause for profound thankfulness that a spring of living ministry still exists within our borders and that the prophetic gift is exercised in a way to bring honor to the Truth. We all felt the absence of our dear friend Edwin P. Sellow, who has been in the hospital for a fortnight.

The general Quarterly Meeting, which was held on the 4th inst., was also a live and interesting meeting. In the first meeting, Edward Hodgkin of England, spoke to us, soon after we had gathered, upon the Pentecostal power which we all so greatly need to quicken our lives and make us most effective ministers of the everlasting Gospel. Testimonies were borne to the need of valuing the spirit above the letter. In those moments of illumination, which are so graciously granted to us all, the clouds, which sometimes have overhung us, are seen to be below us and we find ourselves between the difficulties which have cast their shadows athwart our path and the source of light and life. We may be dazzled by the glory, as on the Mount of Transfiguration, but a sense of the Majesty of God, even when His presence is withdrawn, remains and we find another sense of duty and of courage to testify in His name.

In the second meeting the minute of unity and fellowship recently granted by Philadelphia Monthly Meeting to Joseph Elkinton, also including his wife, Sarah W. Elkinton and their daughters, Mary C. and Frances D. Elkinton, was fully endorsed. Their prospect of travel and religious service extends through Europe, Syria and the Orient, including London and Dublin Yearly Meetings, Friends in Denmark, Syria, China and Japan with the Waldensians of Italy and the Christian educational and medical missions along the route of their travels in the Far East.

There was a large expression of interest in and sympathy with as well as fervent prayer for the preservation of our dear friends during their extensive prospect, upon which they expect to start in the Fourth Month next.

The Committee under appointment by the Quarterly Meeting to consider the condition of Philadelphia Monthly Meeting for the Northern District, reported it to be their judgment that the members and property of this Monthly Meeting should be transferred to that of Philadelphia Monthly Meeting, held at Fourth and Arch Streets, by the end of next Sixth Month. The considerations of this subject induced a most helpful discussion of the needs and conditions of our city meetings with a deep concern that the funds belonging to them should not be diverted from their original and highest uses, and that we should be fully alive to the needs of the population surrounding our meeting-houses, although they are of a very different character from those who formerly resided in their neighborhoods.

The Committee appointed three months ago to whose care was entrusted the suggestion of Haverford Monthly Meeting, made the report that they considered it helpful for Monthly Meetings to send to the Quarterly Meeting, as occasion seemed to require, a more complete statement of their condition and interests than was embraced in the usual answers to the Queries.

This report was accepted and copies of it were directed to be forwarded to the other Monthly Meetings. The exercise of the Quarterly Meeting was that this privilege should not become formal or burdensome, if presented in addition to the usual business of the meeting.

Eli Harvey was present with a minute liberating him for service in the Quarterly Meeting.

The whole effect of this meeting was calculated to assure our hearts in the belief that a true concern exists in our membership for the upbuilding of the spiritual life as all the subjects presented for the consideration of Friends were treated in such a serious and worthy manner.

ABINGTON QUARTERLY MEETING.—The members of Abington Quarterly Meeting assembled on the sixth of Eleventh Month with a strongly marked feeling of fellowship and understanding, which has been fostered by the annual visits of the General Visitation Committee appointed a year ago. During the first meeting attention was called to the great need of a fuller, deeper baptism with the Holy Spirit, in order that one might become a power in responding to the calls for service which come to all.

The practice of the daily reading of the Holy Scriptures and a time of quiet waiting upon God in the families was dwelt upon as a custom bringing blessing to those who follow it.

In the joint session with which the business of the Quarterly Meeting opened a report from the General Visitation Committee was read. The Committee have made many visits to meetings, and in the pleasant as well as the profitable, Tea Meetings were held in the country and a few meetings for special purposes to which the public was invited. In view of the small number of some of the meetings an earnest plea was made that young married couples follow the call, if it comes to them, to settle in such neighborhoods that their united lives may become a blessing in the up-building of the Church. Information was received from Abington Monthly Meeting that they had decided to hold the Monthly Meetings alternately at Abington and Horsham.

A message from Frankfort Monthly Meeting mentioned the helpfulness they had found in the personal distribution of the minutes of a late Yearly Meeting by a Committee who made friendly visits.

After a lunch served in the Committee-room, those who could do so stayed to listen to Emily Oliver, from Syria, who gave a graphic picture of life on the Lebanon Hills. All were impressed by the fitness of service which opens for those who follow the call of the Master, whether He leads to far away lands or into harvest fields near at hand.

C. C. W.

WESTTOWN NOTES.

On Seventh-day, eighth inst., the class of 1900 had a reunion at the School, including a supper at the Lake House enjoyed by sixteen persons.

The track team, comprising some thirty-five boys, had their supper at the old Alumni sluck in camp style the same evening.

The water supply for the new orchard proposition seems well settled; a well has been sunk in the large pasture field of "Walnut Hill," nearly opposite the lower bars—a yield of 500 gallons of excellent water per hour has been found after reaching a depth of but twelve and a half feet, in fact quite a good supply was found at five feet; it was fortunate to strike at six and a half feet the upper end of an underdrainage system installed years ago by Jonathan G. Williams.

The first lecture of the season was given on the evening of the seventh inst. by Joseph Elkinton; he showed on the screen illustrations of places visited on a southern trip, taken last winter, including Tuskegee and the Panama Canal; it is hardly worth while to state that the School family and its neighbors much appreciated the entertainment. The following brief program is announced:

Tenth Month 14th: Mary M. Vaux—Gleaners of the Canadian Rockies.

Eleventh Month 28th: Daniel Oliver—Syria and its People.

Twelfth Month 5th: No Lecture—Conference in Philadelphia.

Twelfth Month 12th: Stanley R. Yarnall—Norway.

Twelfth Month 19th: George W. Kirshway—Politics and Humanity.

Jon S. Ginta has been visiting at the School on his return from North Carolina Yearly Meeting. On Seventh-day evening, a goodly number of the pupils gathered in the library to hear him recite poetry, of which he has a large store at command. At the meeting on First-day morning, the class sang a number of hymns, as was our friend Daniel Oliver.

A class for book-clubship was held in the afternoon in the library, attendance being voluntary. Walter L. Moore and Alfred Lowry, Jr., had charge of the evening.

John S. Ginta, accompanied by two others of the School, attended an appointed meeting at Cheveny Institute after some preliminary exercises. A Friends' meeting was held, in addition to the labor of the above Friend, J. Edward Hodgkin of England and Joseph Elkinton spoke to the assembled company of perhaps eighty colored students, who with the Principal, his wife and teachers, seemed to much appreciate the visit.

J. E. HODGKIN spoke to our boys in the regular First-day evening collection on the science of investments, giving the subject an interpretation from a spiritual standpoint and including good, solid advice.

HELENA HOGUE, who has had considerable experience in the work of Young Women's Christian Association work in St. Louis and elsewhere, gave the girls an earnest talk regarding the work of service which is being accomplished by this body.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WILMINGTON, Delaware, Tenth Month 31, 1913.

EDWIN P. SELLEW.—

Dear Friend,—While at present I have nothing to offer that is adapted to publication in THE FRIEND, I wish to encourage thee to continual insertion of articles which portray the spiritual experiences of souls exercised in the search of Christian Truth, by which others less advanced in knowledge of Divine illumination may be helped, may be cheered or instructed in Heavenly wisdom and humble, saving faith. I remember at one period of my life when often longing for light on some subject of Christian doctrine or practice in reading THE FRIEND, then, I think, edited by Jos. Walton, I would meet with a short extract or perhaps original passage which would be an answer to longing search. I believe there are those among the readers of our paper yet who would find help and comfort by such well-chosen literature which our Editor may introduce, perhaps truths which he has himself learned in the school of Christ. Dear friend, my desire is to encourage thee in furthering the main object of our journal, to make it a religious as well as a literary publication, and not in the least to dishearten thee in thy work.

Truly thy friend,

JONATHAN E. RHOADS.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—It was stated from Washington on the 4th inst. that income tax returns for the current year must be made to the collectors of internal revenue in the district where the taxpayer lives by the first of next Third Month. These returns must cover the amount of income from Third Month 1 last to Twelfth Month 31st.

A despatch from Washington of the 4th inst. says: "Following the proclamation of the President of the United States establishing regulations for the protection of migratory birds, the Department of Agriculture has set in motion machinery to make these regulations effective in every State on Eleventh Month 1, the date set for the operation of the proclamation. These regulations put under Federal protection, for the first time, a large number of migratory game and insectivorous birds. Among the birds protected by the regulations are the brant, wild duck, goose, swan, cranes of various species, rail, several kinds of shore birds, pigeon, dove, wild pigeon, bobolink, catbird, chickadee, cuckoo, flicker, flycatcher, grosbeak, humming bird, kinglet, martin, meadow lark, night hawk, nuthatches, oriole, robin, shrike, swallow, swift, thrush, warbler, whip-poorwill, woodpecker and wren."

It is stated that a new department, to be known as the Department of Vocational Education and Guidance, is to be added to the public school system of this city. Doctor Brumbaugh, superintendent of schools, outlined its significance in a special report to the Committee on Elementary Schools and that body indorsed it unanimously.

A despatch to the Public Ledger of this city from Chicago, says: "The alfalfa propaganda is making a headway that astonishes even those who have been enthusiasts in regard to it. The value of the crop raised in Nebraska this year is in excess of $31,000,000, this being the second State in rank in this country. In the Fort Collins district of Colorado more cattle and sheep are being fed for several years, on account of the abundance of the alfalfa crop."

A despatch of the 4th inst. from Chicago, says: "The voting of women in more than a score of towns in southern Illinois resulted in a slight increase in prohibition territory, the votes of the women being overwhelmingly in favor of the 'dry' tickets."

A recent despatch from Newark, N. J., says: "What was considered a record ear of corn for size was exhibited at the Washington House. It contained 1100 grains that measured one quart and a half pint. It came from the Drennan farm at Greenleaf, Pa."

In a recent election in Southern Illinois in which local option was one of the issues, about 15,000 women went to the polls and nearly eighty per cent. of them voted against the saloon. Sixty-five saloons were eliminated.

In Redwood, Cal., lately Judge George H. Buck decided that women may serve on juries, and a jury was organized consisting of eight men and eleven women members.

It is stated in this city that the transmission of diseases by the failure of some dentists to properly cleanse their instruments after use is being carefully guarded against by the Board of Health. A warning was issued recently urging the public to insist upon its rights in this respect from dentists. The bulletin points out that while a great majority of the dental practitioners are of the careful, painstaking type, there are others who are open to criticism. The bulletin further defines "surgically" clean instruments as those which have been treated in a germ killing or antiseptic solution and not those which have been merely washed with soap and water.

The growing of alfalfa in some of the Western States is said to be of the utmost significance to farmers in the Western uplands as a forage for live stock. It is said to grow luxuriantly, giving abundant yields; it renovates the soil and provides better conditions for succeeding crops, and it is long lived. It has been the chief support of great peoples in the region between the Indian Ocean and the Mediterranean, famous for its herds.

In Los Angeles, Cal., the water supply for the city is now brought 250 miles through conduits by which 260 million gallons of water may be furnished every twenty-four hours.

Under the new State educational law in New Jersey, which makes it compulsory for children under the age of sixteen years to attend school, Judge Boyle, in the Camden Court of Common Pleas, has imposed fines in two cases of violation of the act.

On the 9th inst., western Pennsylvania, Maryland, Ohio, West Virginia and Michigan, as well as parts of other States, experienced one of the heaviest storms of the year, a storm that delayed traffic on the railroads or tied them up altogether, hampered trolley and telephone service and snapped thousands of telegraph wires. The storm was accompanied by a forty-mile wind in several places, with rapidly falling temperature and heavy snow.

FOREIGN.—A despatch from Buenos Ayres of the 5th inst. mentions the arrival there on that day of Theodore Roosevelt, who was accorded an enthusiastic welcome.

It was stated from Santiago, Chile, on the 6th inst.: "The rails were joined to-day of the great Chilean longitudinal railway from Iquique to Puerto Montt. This line covers about 1850 miles. When completed the road will extend from the frontier of Peru to the Strait of Magellan."

It is mentioned that the Radium Institute in London has just purchased 2,000 milligrams of radium, or almost one-third of the world's total visible supply, for $300,000. The high price of radium is due both to its remarkable intrinsic qualities and its great scarcity and the high cost of separating it from the ores in which it is found. It represents such a very small percentage of the ore that long and tedious operations have to be carried on to secure the tiniest trace of the metal.

Officials of the U. S. forest service say that a large amount of beechwood is now used in this country in the manufacture of wooden shoes similar to those in use in Holland. They report that these shoes are rapidly coming into favor and that the wooden shoe industry is growing apace. A pair of these shoes cost sixty to seventy cents and last about two years. They are well suited for the wear of those employed in cold, wet, or hot places and in places where the footwear is subjected to unusually rough usage. Hitherto such shoes have been imported from Holland.

A despatch from Peking of the 4th inst. says: "The struggle between the Chinese Parliament and President Yuan Shi Kai has brought about drastic action by the President, which, in the opinion of many, will have a serious effect on parliamentary government. Martial law is in operation in Peking; the authorities are engaged in making arrests and summary executions, which have been numerous since the rebellion began, it is understood, will continue."

NOTICES.

The appointed time for holding the next meeting at Mount Holly, N. J., will be next First-day, Eleventh Month 16th, at 3.45 P. M.

The Committee for Visitation and other religious service, under appointment of Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting, have arranged for the holding of a second appointed meeting at Arney's Mount, about two-and-a-half miles east of Mount Holly, on First-day, the 23rd inst., at 2.30 o'clock. Friends desiring to attend and who desire conveyance thereto, may apply to William E. Darnell, Moorestown, N. J.

The Committee appointed by Concord Quarterly Meeting have arranged for a public meeting for Divine worship to be held in the Episcopal Church building, Chad's Ford, Pa., First-day afternoon, Eleventh Month 16, 1913, at 2.30 o'clock; all interested are invited.

FRIENDS' EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION.—The first meeting for the year of the Educational Association will come on Sixth-day, the twenty-first of Eleventh Month, at Friends' Select School. Supper (25 and 35 cents), 5.30-7.00 P. M. Meeting 7.15 P. M.

PROGRAM.

The Responsibilities of a Friends' School.

1. The Religious Aspect of Education—Rufus M. Jones.

2. The School and the Community—Stanley R. Yarnall.

3. The Yearly Meeting School—Thomas K. Brown.

Please notify Bertha M. Fry, 140 N. Sixteenth Street, if thee expects to come to supper.

FRANCES C. FERRIS,
Secretary.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.—The following books have recently been added to Friends' Library:—

Adams—Pioneer Boys on the Great Lakes.

Carlton—New Lives for Old.

Demetrius—When I was a Boy in Greece.

Hayward—Bermuda, Past and Present.

Hyde—Quest of the Best.

Kawakami—American-Japanese Relations.

Mulets—Stories of Big Animals.

Wyne—Story of Heather.

LINDA A. MOORE,
Librarian.

FRIENDS' FREEDMEN'S ASSOCIATION is preparing to send its usual boxes of old clothes and shoes to Christiansburg Industrial Institute. A letter from Edgar Long, Principal at the School, makes special request for as much as possible. Again, as last year, old New Year's cards and remembrances will be very useful to the pupils who take them to their needy neighbors with whom they have social service. Books and magazines are always in demand. All contributions to be packed should be at Friends' Institute, 20 S. Twelfth Street, Phila., not later than Eleventh Month 19, 1913, plainly marked for Christiansburg Industrial Institute.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA., will be open from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from 2 to 5 P. M.—Seventh-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. only.

WANTED.—At once, a suitable Friend as an Assistant to the Superintendent of the Indian School at Tunessassa. One who may favorably consider succeeding him next spring.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.—The stage will meet at Westtown Station, trains leaving Broad Street (Penna. R. R.) Phila. at 6.32, 8.21 A. M., 2.48 and 4.30 P. M.; other trains will be met on request. Stage fare twenty-five cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, address West Chester Bell Telephone, 114A.

WM. B. HARVEY,
Superintendent.

At a recent session of Abington Monthly Meeting, it was concluded to resume the alternative plan of holding the Monthly Meeting, which was in effect many years ago. The meetings will be held at the same time and day, but at Horsham in the even months, and at Abington in the odd months. The membership of the meeting is only twelve, but a number of Friends of other Monthly Meetings live in the neighborhood, and it is hoped the new arrangement will make it convenient for some of these to transfer their membership and adherence.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK (Eleventh Month 16th to 22nd):

Western Quarterly Meeting, at West Grove, Sixth-day, Eleventh

Month 21st, at 10 A. M.

MONTHLY MEETINGS:

Philadelphia, for the Western District, Twelfth Street, below Market,

Fourth-day, Eleventh Month 19th, at 10.30 A. M.

Muncy, at Greenwood, Fourth-day, Eleventh Month 19th, at 10 A. M.

Haverford, Fifth-day, Eleventh Month 20th, at 7.30 P. M.

Frankford, Fourth-day, Eleventh Month 19th, at 7.45 P. M.

Germantown, Fifth-day, Eleventh Month 20th, at 10 A. M.

LACE LEATHER

It Saves Stops

It saves half or more of the labor of lacing belts, for it lasts twice as long or longer. And you know the labor costs far more than the lace. But even the labor cost is nothing like so great as the loss of output, fixed charges, and wages inflicted by stops when lace breaks. With Tannate you can save half or more of all these losses, for it does not so soon become hard and brittle. Besides, it costs less per year because it lasts so long.

J. E. RHOADS & SONS

PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. Third St.
NEW YORK: 102 Beekman St.
CHICAGO: 322 W. Randolph St.

FACTORY and TANNERY, WILMINGTON, DEL.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER
S. W. COR. 166 & RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 0546

DO NOT FORGET

THAT GOOD PRINTING CAN BE PROCURED AT MODERATE PRICES FROM

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,

EDWARD T. BIDDLE

210 W. Washington Square 210 S. Seventh St.
PHILADELPHIA

W. B. WEAVER Undertaker & Embalmer

550 52 N. 5th St., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL ACCOMMODATIONS FOR FUNERALS.

BELL 'PHONE. ESTABLISHED 1880.

Subscribers patronizing our advertisers will assist THE FRIEND, especially by mentioning our paper in correspondence.

ELKINS MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

MEMBERS OF

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA
STOCK EXCHANGES

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

AMERICAN ICE CO.

REAL ESTATE, FIRST & GENERAL MORTGAGE, SINKING FUND, 6% GOLD BONDS, SECURED ON CITY REALTY, VALUED CONSIDERABLY IN EXCESS OF AMOUNT OF THE ISSUE. TO YIELD 6%.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY PAUL W. BROWN JAMES P. MAGILL

To ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

RUFUS M. JONES, HAVERFORD, PA., DESIRES to secure a well-qualified secretary. She must be a good stenographer and typewriter, and capable of carrying on a variety of literary and business lines of work. A Friend would be preferred. Address as above.

PLAIN MILLINERY

FOR A LIMITED TIME I WILL SEE CUSTOMERS AT 858 N. MARSHALL STREET ON SEVENTH DAYS, AND OTHER TIMES BY APPOINTMENT.

RACHEL G. HALL.

For Rich Milk

For Clean Milk

For Safe Milk

Call Philadelphia Locust 209

ABBOTTS ALDERNEY DAIRIES

31st and Chestnut Streets

JOS. B. SCATTERGOOD

HOUSE, SIGN AND DECORATIVE

PAINTING

Orders Solicited

Bell 'Phone

275 S. FOURTH STREET

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST COMPANY OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives

Acts as Executor, Etc.

Accounts Solicited

Deposits by Mail

Travelers' Cheques

Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET

FOURTH AND CHESTNUT STREETS

Redlands--California

Wissahickon Inn

A comfortable family hotel in the residence section of beautiful Redlands.

SEND FOR FOLDERS & RATES

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL.

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM S. YARNALL MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER

Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
(Marcellus Balderston)

602 SPRING GARDEN ST. 818 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL 'PHONE PHILADELPHIA

POCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevation 1800 feet, commanding extensive mountain and valley scenery. Address

J. W. HURLEY, Manager,
POCONO MANOR, PA.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 29, 1913.

No. 21.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.
Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to
EDWIN P. SELLEW or THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

A NOTE FROM THE LONDON EPISTLE.

A recent visit to Harrisburg seemed to have been timed just when a delegation of suffragettes was in evidence. They made no commotion on the streets and attracted but little attention at the Capitol. One of the legislative halls for the time being was given over to them, and while most of the senators attended to some secular matters away from the building or idly gossiped in the ante-rooms, a few were curious to know what transpired and lingered in the hall.

To the Friend who happened to be part of this gathering, the thoughts unbidden ran back across the eight generations since his people had been a church, and had enunciated as one of their cardinal tenets the equality of the sexes in the sight of God. Why, he asked himself, did those noble women of the seventeenth century brave worse discomforts than a long, rough voyage across the Atlantic, and worse dangers in the new land than could come from the Indians' tomahawk or the pestilence that bred in the undrained swamps? Was there anything of the nature of courting notoriety that sent them back once and again to New England when they knew that foul dungeons, public whippings at cart-tails, and degradation that every good woman shrinks from awaited them?

Did this great throng of women who jostled elbows in Harrisburg the summer day of 1913 have anything of the spirit of those fine, brave women whom the Boston and Salem magistrates thought to be either possessed of an evil spirit or to be rebellious beyond measure, and who needed therefore either to have the spirit purified or their natures sweetened? We know how in 1660 and later, with heavy threatenings hanging over them, they turned their steps back toward New England time and time again with a message from the Lord.

I fancy to most of us there would at first thought seem to be no connection between the two, that the lapse of two and a half centuries is a measure of the difference between them, and that no analogy can hold, but upon reflection it may be found that below the surface there is a something that is identical in the two cases. They of the former times came "Enduring all things, so their souls were free"

—or Whittier puts it thus in "How the Women Went from Dover";—

"The tale is one of an evil time,
When souls were fettered and thought was crime,
And heresy's whisper above its breath
Meant shameful scourging and bonds and death!

"How much thy beautiful life may owe
To her faith and courage thou canst not know,
Nor bow from the paths of thy calm retreat
She smoothed the thorns with her bleeding feet."

What we beheld at Harrisburg was lacking in all the qualities that Whittier throws into his verse.

Most of us know that London Yearly Meeting at its last session issued an Epistle addressed to all Friends, everywhere, which for its hopeful outlook, for its earnest call to the duty of the hour, and for the strong re-annunciation of the necessity of abiding under the directing hand of the Master, has produced an impression upon all who have seriously taken it to heart. The Epistle calls attention specially to four present-day movements that have a deep root in our twentieth century history; one of these naturally is the one that was being urged at Harrisburg on the occasion referred to. Many of our readers may not as yet have had the good fortune to read the Epistle, the following is a sample of its spirit and bears directly on the topic we have in mind: "We, as Friends, both men and women, are called to bear our share in bringing this movement to its full fruition, and in saving it from the serious dangers with which it is threatened. This can only be done as we derive our convictions on this subject once more from their true source, and so, by bringing Christ into the heart of the movement, lift it onto the highest possible plane."

The best things in life do not often come to us suddenly and never by chance; to that man or woman who is not in the spirit of them and knows little of what is transpiring concerning them, the change from one course to another may seem revolutionary, and to him who has never learned to see the finger of God in the advancing history of the race there may seem to be much of the element of chance in what to him is a radical revolution.

A movement is either right or wrong; if right to-day, it may be wrong to-morrow, or the reverse. This is not paradoxical. If there is anything inherently wrong in a stated course being followed, the lapse of time may or may not alter the proposition, if it does, what was wrong yesterday, may be winked at to-day, tolerated tomorrow, encouraged next year, and fostered and protected in the not remote future. There is no man more inconsistent than he who abides by all his first judgments and refuses to allow new discoveries and fresh advancement to influence his position.

In certain respects we have as a Society taken a very advanced position in regard to the equality of men and women. When the Society took its rise it was not an uncommon practice for women to exercise the like privilege with men as ministers of the Gospel. This was not confined to Friends, but was a practice more or less common with many of the dissenting bodies: it is to the great honor of Friends that they have preserved this valuable principle intact and dignified it with the names of some of the choicest and noblest women that we have any record of.

For "THE FRIEND."

SOME HOLLAND SIGHTS.

WM. C. ALLEN.

As a body, both here and in England, we have stood aloof from the present movement; there are to be sure many, both here and there, under our name, who share conspicuously with those prominent in the work, but the organization as such stands uncommitted. There must be reason for this. The question cannot seem to us to be on the same footing as that of woman ministry, if it did it would have been settled, so far as we could settle it, just as the question of the ministry was settled. We shall have to search further for the real cause of our natural antipathy. Is it because the campaign so vigorously pushed of late has developed a certain type of woman which we instinctively dislike and which we would be very sorry to see become the type represented by our sisters? This doubtless has its place with not a few, but let us remember that every new movement invariably has its ardent enthusiasts who go beyond the demands of good sense. Can you name one movement that has developed real, over-abundant enthusiasm that has not at the same time included a James Nayler in its catalogue?

Why is it that our girls' colleges all over the country are crowded beyond their capacities to care for all who have a real demand upon them? Does not this imply the introduction into our modern life of something that was not with us a generation back, and have we not a right to think that we are only in the beginning of the movement? Why is it that women are asking for admission into enterprises of various kinds that a generation ago they would not have thought of entering? Why is it that the professions, one after another, which for so long barred their doors against them, have at last opened them and promise in the near future to invite and almost urge them to come in?

Surely it is not because woman wants to test out her powers beside those of her brother, nor any more does she want to break up the Divinely established order of the family. There has come into this last age something that was not known or felt in the same fulness in any former age. You may call it, if you please, unrest, but whatever name you give it, you will find it to be deep-rooted and wide-spreading and with its history before it rather than behind.

In the language and the spirit of the London General Epistle already referred to will be found the key to the situation. The Society of Friends occupies to-day no mean place in her attitude toward this question; her outlook is broader than that of many of her neighbors for reasons obvious to all. She is filling the place intended for her better than some think, and she will continue in her conservative and judicial treatment of it, checking extravagance and encouraging what she should, till men and women alike shall see that the cause of righteousness demands that a new step be taken forward.

D. H. F.

FRESH, pure speech is just as necessary to the moral and spiritual life as fresh, pure food is to physical life. St. Paul understood this also, and his admonition is positive as well as negative. Speak such words as will build up, such as will supply the manifest need of knowledge, encouragement and hope which you may easily see in the lives of those about you.
—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

Amsterdam is the capital of Holland and a delightful city. Take the view from our room, for instance, as very typical. A little balcony extends from the big "French window." Right below is the confluence of three canals spanned by graceful bridges in either direction. Directly opposite, beyond the nearby canal, is a "plein" or public square, flanked by high business houses, canals, graceful trees, and a lovely old place of worship with a beautiful spire, surmounted by a golden weather-cock quietly gazing down on the busy scene below. The electric tram-cars smoothly glide—do not rattle—through the plein. Some of the cars have two immense panes of plate-glass on each side affording an unobstructed view from the interior. The canals are alive with all sorts of moderate-sized craft, propelled by gas or muscle. They are loaded with all kinds of merchandise. The men and women on them guide, or pole, or push them beneath the bridges. It makes a marvelously picturesque scene for the heart of a throbbing city of 600,000 people.

Like crooked spokes of a wheel there extend from the plein numerous attractive streets, one of which is Kalver Street, the fashionable shopping thoroughfare of Amsterdam. It is full of little shops with enticing show-windows. The visitor who wanders unscathed through Kalver Street without making a purchase is of great moral fibre. What is better, the shopkeepers seem very honest. Indeed, we have met with several instances in Holland of sincere dealing on the part of people who could easily have taken advantage of us, owing to our lack of knowledge of their goods and their money.

I will not give a guide-book description of anything in Holland. Old buildings there are in Amsterdam with odd or beautiful façades, and with the glamor or tradition of centuries clinging to them. The present is what we can hastily consider. The city's streets are delightful to the stranger. Many of them flank one side of the canals with quaint old gables or more modern architecture on one side and the water on the other. Often low rows of trees adorn the curbs or quaysides. The ill-smelling and black water of the canals is thronged with queer old barges or dull-prowed boats, which often lie or labor beneath the shadow of the trees. Nearly every vessel has, aft, a little square cabin, built above the deck in which the master and his family live. Neat little lace curtains droop at the tiny cabin windows, in strange contrast with the barrels and sacks of goods heaped on the deck. Often the hard-working wife handles the tiller or helps push their craft beneath the many bridges. Children play on the deck in the midst of these business operations, and frequently the family laundry is hung to the breeze. Meanwhile there is a strange minimum of traffic in the streets of this large and active city. The pavements are remarkably clear of vehicles, while thousands of pedestrians tramp them, or walk out in the middle of the highways.

The Hollanders have a splendid record for recognizing religious freedom and this brought, centuries ago, some of the best mental and physical strength of the nations to their land. Here the Jews found an asylum when fierce persecution assailed them. The Jewish quarter of Amsterdam is one of the sights of the city. At certain times of the week the Joden Bree Straat and adjacent streets are filled with Hebrews bargaining and selling goods with a fervor that only that keen commercial race can exhibit. The shops offer strange-looking sausages, meats and confections. The breads and cakes look horribly solid. A people that can digest such food should have strength to move the world.

Another sight in Amsterdam is the Nieuwe market. In it are to be found booths and tents, erected in a plein in which are displayed every imaginable article of merchandise. Fish, slippers, clothing, post-cards, hardware, fruits, old books, etc., are piled up for prospective customers, who crowd around them and listen to the vociferous appeals of the salespeople. The din is terrific, and you would suppose that here was your last chance to purchase anything under the sun. You want to get out of it all before long.

It is a good pian when near any of Cook's offices to interview them, tell how long you want to stay in a particular locality, and secure advice as to how to spend the time at your disposal. This we did at Amsterdam. We were, among other trips, recommended to go out to Alkmaar on cheese-market day. That excursion was a success. A run on the train of about one hour took us to Alkmaar. In due course we reached the cheese-market. It was held in the open square under the weigh-house, built in 1582, with its beautiful steeple and clock with horses that prance gaily around every time the hour is struck, and close by a canal. Quaint old gables and quays were all about. The cheeses were big balls, each weighing about five pounds, and a bright orange color. They looked for all the world like magnificent grape-fruit. Hugh piles of them occupied the open square of a few acres in extent; and amongst these pyramids of cheeses wandered the curious throngs of tourists watching the animated bargaining. When a deal was concluded it was bound by the parties slapping, not shaking hands. Then the goods were taken over to the public weigher, and carried out to the nearby boats in carryalls or trays by two men, who would stagger under their loads of some five hundred pounds each. These porters were dressed in white suits and wore funny hats of the brightest reds, greens, or yellows. The veins on their necks stood out like small ropes as they, with staring eyes, tottered to the vessels. The noises, and strange sights connected with the yellow heaps, the canals and boats, trees, and quaint shops and delicious old gables constituted a traveling experience long to be remembered. After luncheon we wandered down a pretty street with broad brick sidewalks, under delightful foliage, and where a canal served the place of a highway for vehicles; and from the end of it took the little steamer for Amsterdam. Quiet country scenes including broad meadows flecked with sheep and cattle, red-tiled farmhouses, with distant windmills flaring their broad arms against the sky and alternating with pretty villages, whose tiny gardens came down to the water's edge, consumed the remainder of the day.

One of the first things the American notices in Holland is how the dogs are compelled to work. They are hitched under, or before, bread, huckster or milk carts and pull away vigorously, whilst a man pushes. It looks very comical. I have met some American or English women who express regret that these dogs have to work for their living, just like most men, instead of being petted and being given the privilege of towing ladies around the streets with a string. This seems a queer way to consider the dog question. Meanwhile, the animals apparently enjoy their work, and cheerfully trot along, wagging their tails, as if they considered it great fun.

Of course we went to Marken. That odd old town has been so often written about that it is unnecessary to refer to it here. Volendam is really more interesting. If you approach it from the Zuider Zee you see a forest of masts of the fishing fleet, if it is in port, being hundreds of black points in regular rows pointing skyward, each mast tipped with a wee bit of a "fly" which flutters in the wind. The hulls of the fat, roomy old boats, the rigging, and drying nets are also black. The town is a grand place for artists, who much frequent it. The quay is rich in lovely views of trees and craft, and ancient façades with fascinating gables, while the narrow streets are alive with the fisherfolk and their families who still retain the picturesque and gay costumes of centuries ago. The women and children wear voluminous skirts, and big noisy shoes, and wonderfully embroidered sacks, or blouses, while little gay caps adorn their heads. They are a stalwart folk. The men are attired in loosely fitting shirts, and immense pleated bloomers. The bottom of each trouser at the ankle is in many instances as large as the bottom of a modern woman's fashionable sheath-skirt, and must certainly be much more comfortable. But Volendam was having a celebration when we were there, and I am sorry to say that a good many of these strangely attired men were very, very drunk. With silly, maudlin countenances they wandered up and down, arm in arm, sweeping the whole width of the streets as they proceeded, jumping, shrieking and making the beautiful little town hideous with their debauch. It was a sorrowful sight to see young women anxiously attending some of these revellers, and trying to shield them from the results of possible acts that they evidently feared. Women are the greatest sufferers from the curse of intoxicants, the world over.

That same afternoon we left the boat to pursue its chilly way on the canal and took a warmer route back to the city. It was a steam-tram that we patronized. These lines go all over Holland and are extraordinarily cheap. A train generally consists of a "dinky" engine and two railway carriages—the first-class being almost never used, and the second-class full to overflowing. We had many sorrows ascertaining—or not ascertaining—when the next train was due, and much well-meant but unintelligible Dutch was politely poured out upon us, until finally we simply sat in the pretty glass "shelter" that served the purpose of a station, and waited. Just before the stubby little engine puffed around the curve we bethought ourselves of tickets, and discovered that what looked just like an ordinary house nearby was really the booking office. Inside a broad sitting-room, looking out of a window, sat an old woman knitting. When I approached asking for a ticket, she opened a small door, about six inches square, in a hitherto unobserved hole in the wall, underneath the window, and through it the exchange was made. Then she shut the door. The price was twelve cents, Dutch money (less than five cents American money) for each passenger. We were then in style—first-class—trundled to our destination, a distance of some ten miles. And the accommodations were excellent.

MORAL DISEASES.

[We are glad to give place to the following observation of the Springfield Republican, on an extract from a speech of President Hibben of Princeton University.—E.D.]

President Hibben of Princeton did well in his address to the Philadelphia medical club to emphasize the relation between hygiene and morals. He said:—

"Many of the diseases of modern times which are sapping the strength and virility of our young manhood and degrading and destroying our young womanhood may be traced to our moral indifference, moral sophistry or moral degeneracy."

There is perhaps too general a disposition nowadays to deal with moral questions in a materialistic and utilitarian spirit. In preaching against vice the physical consequences are so exclusively emphasized that it is not surprising that many get the impression that if these penalties are evaded vice is not vice, that a rake who manages to keep his health is no rake, that if Nature is silent, conscience has nothing to say. Unfortunately there are some doctors, not many let us hope, who take this skeptical attitude, and their professional authority makes their influence doubly dangerous. On the other hand, the profession can exert and does exert a great influence for good morals, and President Hibben's appeal will receive general support. "Moral indifference, moral sophistry, moral degeneration" are as much diseases of society as phthisis is a disease of the individual, and even in the interest of hygiene it is needful to work for a sound and comprehensive morality.

God sometimes washes the eyes of His children with tears in order that they may read aright His providence and His commandments.—THEODORE L. CUYLER.

If we work upon marble, it will perish; if we work upon brass, time will efface it; if we rear temples, they will crumble into dust; but if we work upon immortal minds, if we imbue them with principles, with the just fear of God and love of our fellow-men, we engrave on those tablets something that will brighten to all eternity.—DANIEL WEBSTER.

"O LOVE THAT WILT NOT LET ME GO."

O love that wilt not let me go,
I rest my weary soul in thee;
I give thee back the life I owe,
That in thine ocean depths its flow
May richer, fuller be.

O Light that followest all my way,
I yield my flickering torch to thee;
My heart restores its borrowed ray,
That in thy sunshine's blaze its day
May brighter, fairer be.

O Joy that seekest me through pain,
I cannot close my heart to thee;
I trace the rainbow through the rain,
And feel the promise is not vain
That morn shall tearless be.

O Cross that liftest up my head,
I dare not ask to fly from thee;
I lay in dust life's glory dead,
And from the ground thee blossoms red
Life shall endlose be.

—GEORGE MATHESON.

For "THE FRIEND."

TWO QUAKER NATURALISTS OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

CHARLES FRANCIS SAUNDERS.

Most of us who find enjoyment in studying the wild plants in their native haunts are doubtless familiar with a certain ill-smelling weedy sort of herb whose yellowish flowers nod at us in summer woodlands of the Atlantic seaboard States, and which is known to botanists as Collinsonia Canadensis. The name preserves the memory of a Friend of the olden time, Peter Collinson, who, but for this common plant, would now perhaps be forgotten except by the antiquarian and curious searcher of ancient records.

Peter Collinson was born in 1694 in the city of London, where for half a century he followed with success the business of wholesale woollen draper, living over his shop in Grace Church Street, as was the custom of the time. He was no one-sided business man, however, but in his leisure hours cultivated a lively interest in natural history, and throughout his long and busy life he was a generous patron of the sciences, quick to interest himself in every new discovery. He counted among his particular friends Benjamin Franklin, whose experiments in electricity he helped to further, and Linnaeus, the father of modern botany. He had many correspondents in the North American colonies of the New World, and early formed an acquaintance in this way with John Bartram, whose house and famous botanic garden—or rather, what is left of it—on the banks of the Schuylkill, are among the noteworthy sights of Philadelphia. From Bartram, with whom he maintained an intimate correspondence from about 1730 to the time of Collinson's death, he received seeds and specimens of many of our choice and curious wild plants and trees, which he distributed among connoisseurs in England besides supplying his own garden of rarities which he established at his country seat in Surrey.

Through the kindness of a friend whose library contains a volume of the memorials of John Bartram, I have lately been greatly entertained by the perusal of some of the correspondence between these two Quaker naturalists. The letters of Collinson are particularly often very quaint, with sometimes a dash of the quaint that makes the diary of the famous Samuel Pepys, such amusing reading, and I have thought a few extracts might be of interest to such readers of THE FRIEND as have a taste for ancient matters.

Here, for instance, is a curious recipe for almond pie, supplementing a gift of almonds which Collinson, in his ignorance of the character of the Pennsylvania winters, believed could be grown to advantage by his Philadelphia correspondent.

"I have put [in the shipment] some hard-shelled almonds of my own growth and some soft-shelled from Portugal: they are easily distinguished. The almond makes a fine pie, taken whilst a pin can be run through them, for you eat husk, shell and kernel altogether. They must be first coddled over a gentle fire, and then put in crust. I query whether young peaches would be as good, before the shell is hard."

With his almonds, Peter enclosed some cuttings of the Old World grape. This is the same stock as is grown in California to-day, and will not stand extreme cold, so it is not surprising to find this passage in a subsequent letter of Collinson's:

"I am amazed to hear that the frost in your latitude kills the vines in winter. You must use the German method. Dig a trench or hole close to your vine, and therein lay the young shoots, and then cover them with earth, which protects them from the frosts, and when they are over take them up again and prune them. Pray, how fares it with your wild country vines? I am strongly of the opinion they will be best to make a vineyard, because they are habituated to your seasons, but then it will much depend on the skill of the person that chooses the vines to propagate. When they are ripe, a knowing person in grapes should ride the woods where they grow, and select out those that have good qualities—as good as bearers, best flavored fruit, large berries, close bunches, early ripeners—and mark the trees so as to know them again, and from these take cuttings for a vineyard."

This in fact is what afterwards was actually done, our present-day Concord, Delawares, Niagaras, Catawbas, etc., being developed from our native wild vines which are of an entirely different character from the Vitis vinifera of the Old World. It was characteristic of Collinson's alert mind that he should have suspected the usefulness of our wild stock.

All the products of the New World were more or less novel in England at that day and people with country estates were often interested in growing plants received from the colonies. Certain seeds of forest trees which Bartram sent, were shared by Collinson with a certain Lord Petre, a well-known connoisseur of the time, of whom he writes to Bartram:

"As he is a man of a noble and generous spirit, he very rationally considered thy pains and trouble in collecting them, and desired to make thee some returns and left it to me. I thought a good suit of clothes for thy own wear might be as acceptable as anything, so have sent thee one with all apertunances necessary for its making up, which I hope will meet with thy approbation, and help in some measure to compensate for thy loss of time," and adds with a touch of canniness that provokes a smile: "Pray, give nobody a hint how thee or thy wife came by the suit of clothes. There may be some with you may think they deserve something of that nature."

This Lord Petre soon became a substantial contributor to a small regular fund, some twenty guineas per annum, which Collinson succeeded in raising among lovers of science in England as a contribution towards Bartram's expenses in the extended journeys into the wilderness which, from time to time, he made in quest of plants and novelties of nature. With this establishment of the "nature study" on a money basis—"a pretty sum in sterling money," as Peter calls it—he becomes very particular in his instructions as to how John shall proceed. "Always walk with a box or two in thy pocket and then thou art provided, for oftentimes when one least expects, a curious thing is seen but perhaps lost or broke for want of a proper convenience to secure it." He also recommends, "a very pretty method by which plants will keep fresh three or four days on a journey"—a rustic precursor of the present day tin vasculum. "Take," he advises, "three or four largest ox bladders, cut off the neck high, and when a plant is found, take it up with little earth to the roots; put this into the bladder, then put water into the bladder to cover the roots; then tie up the neck of the bladder close around the stalk of the plant, leaving the leaves, flowers, etc., without. Large plants won't do so well; but several small plants may be put in a bladder. When tied, hang to the pommel or skirts of the saddle, or any other convenient way thee may choose."

With a fund toward expenses assured, a journey to Virginia was proposed in 1737 and Peter's concern that John's outward appearance should be suitable, found expression in this wise:

"One thing I must desire of thee and do insist that thee oblige me therein; that thou make up that drugged thyself, to go to Virginia in, and not appear to disgrace thyself or me; for though I should not esteem thee the less to come to me in what dress thou wilt, yet these Virginians are a very gentle, well-dressed people, and look perhaps more to a man's outside than his inside. For these and other reasons, pray go very clean, neat and handsomely dressed to Virginia. Never mind thy clothes; I will send more another year."

John's rusticity, indeed, more than once seems to have been of solicitude to Peter, who rubbed elbows enough with the great ones of the earth to know the practical value of a suitable outward appearance; for we find in another letter this little lesson in savoir faire: "I can now only tell thee that I have sent a parcel of seeds for thee in a parcel to your proprietor Thomas Penn. Dress thyself neatly in thy best habits and wait on him for them, for I have in a particular manner recommended thee to him. . . . First inquire his most leisure time, and then wait on him."

The correspondence throws many side-lights on Peter's tribulations as a collector because of accidents in the ocean conveyance. The boxes were sometimes inadvertently put in a wet part of the ship and the contents spoiled with mould; once a barrel of salt, stowed over a collection of specimens, leaked its saline contents through; sometimes the vessel was captured by the enemy's privateers in times of war; again, the uncommercial John would at times pack his shipments in so bulky a way as to increase the freight charges unnecessarily, to the businesslike Peter's distress. "Another thing I would gently touch on," the latter admonishes, "and that is, to be as close and compact in packing the seeds as possible, for the freight and charges come to a great deal. The last cargo came to £2 12s 6d. Had thee a thought on this, thee would have packed some things closer. To give thee an idea of the charge I shall enclose a freight bill, in which the captain has charged primage to every parcel which is not customary; but that depends on an agreement made in the bill-of-lading. Next cargo, I shall beg the assistance of our friend Israel Pemberton or Joseph Breintnall to make the agreement in the bill-of-lading for thee." Then there was the tragedy of some butterflies unfortunately packed with beetles. "Dear friend John," Peter writes, "I have thine of [Eighth Month] 12th, which gives me both pleasure and pain. I dreaded to go on board to see the disaster and so much labor and pains thrown away by such a swarm of pestilent beetles. As we say by a fine old woman, 'there's the ruins of a fine face,' so I may say, 'there's the ruins of fine flies,' and such as I never saw before. Pray, next time divide the precious from the vile; I will send thee boxes enough. Keep the butterflies or dayflies by themselves, the moths by themselves, and these devouring beetles by themselves; but drown them in rum or heat them in a gentle oven will stop all their further progress."

Even a worse catastrophe, however, was one that Peter touched upon as follows, a year or two later: "Now dear friend John, I come to thank thee for thy curious collection of living plants for myself. But oh! sad story for to tell, not the least glimpse of one was to be seen. If the unworthy captain had set that case only in his cabin, all had been safe; but it was stowed on the deck above the hold and covered all over with pipe-staves. But all this might have been tolerable, if that mischievous and unruly vermin, the rats, had not fell on board it; for so it was, when I came to get it out of the ship, behold, two nests of young cawling rats were kindled there; and I take it, what with their trampling, etc., everything above ground was totally destroyed. . . . It grieved me to the heart to see so many curious things and so much labor and pains like to be destroyed by these nasty creatures and the neglect of the captain."

An experiment with turtles had a happier ending, which it is pleasanter to quote: "I shall now tell thee something which very much pleased me and will surprise thee. The box of turtle eggs (which was an ingenious thought of thine to send) on the day I brought it from on board ship, I took off the lid, having a mind to see the eggs, and on peeping about I saw a little head just above ground, and while I was looking I saw the ground move in a place or two more. In short, in the space of three or four hours, eight tortoises were hatched. It was very well worth observing, how artfully they disengaged themselves from the shell, and then with their forefeet scratched their eyes open. They have had many visitors, such a thing never happening, I dare say, in England before."

Early in the spring I design to turn them out at Lord Peter's, who has large ponds, if they are water turtles. I believe it was providential that this box was put in the lazaretto, for the warmth of the ship supplied the sun's heat and brought them to perfection. But the luckiness of the thing was their hatching the day they were brought home." It would be pleasant to record the subsequent happy life of these tortoises, but I do not find anything further in the correspondence with specific reference to them. It is to be feared, however, that they strayed away from their new home, if we are to judge from the following sentence in a subsequent letter: "I had almost forgot a material article: that is, to send me some terrapins; for I have two gardens walled in that I can secure them from running away." And shortly afterward he prods John's memory with this hint: "I am glad the snakes did not come. There is a sort of natural aversion in human nature against this creature. But any of the species of turtle or terrapins would be innocent and pretty in my garden; and are easily sent in the fall in a box of leaves, etc., when they have done eating."

One friendly concern of Peter's that often cropped out in his letters, was that Bartram in his zeal for science should not neglect his proper business on his farm. John had sent him a drawing of his own of some natural scene, and Peter writes: "I was really both delighted and surprised to see thy draught so naturally done, and at thy ingenuity in the performance. Upon my word, friend John, I can't help admiring thy abilities in so many instances. . . . A man of thy prudence will place this to a right account, to encourage thee to proceed gently in these curious things, which belong to a man of leisure and not to a man of business. The main chance must be minded. Many an ingenious man has lost himself for want of this regard—by devoting too much of his time to these matters. A hint thee will take in friendship: thy obliging, grateful disposition may carry thee too far. I am glad and delight much in all these things—none more; but then I would not purchase them at the expense of my friend's precious time—to the detriment of his interest and business (now, dear John, take me right). . . . In the trunk of the [Philadelphia] Library Company, thee'll find a suit of clothes for thyself. This may serve to protect thy outward man—being a drugged coat, black waistcoat and shaggy breeches. And now, that thou may see that I am not thoughtless of thy better part, I send thee R. Barclay's Apology, to replenish thy inward man. So farewell. Success attend thee in all thy expeditions."

Peter Collinson died after a brief illness in 1768 in his seventy-fifth year, preserving to the last his delightful enthusiasm in the natural sciences that had been his innocent recreation from youth to old age. "My inclination and fondness to natural productions of all kinds," he quaintly observes in one of his letters to Bartram, "is agreeable to the old proverb: 'Like the parson's barn—refuses nothing.'" He seems to have been in no sense a critical student, but just a wholesome, kindly, human sort of man with a genuine love for the wonderful works of the Creator, the reverent study of which he believed to be among the worthiest employments of time, and ever ready to lend a helping hand to any sincere investigator. One of his last benefactions was to procure for John Bartram the appointment of botanist to the king of England at a salary of fifty pounds sterling per annum.

For "THE FRIEND."

THE AWE OF THE WOODS.

"Th' sweet to be here in the wildwood alone,
Where solitude's blessings abound,
And the sun's golden light,
Seems to greet with delight,
The leaves that come flitting around.

Metinks when the earth in her infancy lay,
No purer place could be found,
In such sweet-scented air,
With beauties so rare,
And Peace, encircled around.

Alien to the rush, the noise and the din;
To all that's untrue and unfair,
And give me the quiet, the peaceful and good,
Oh give me the awe that is found in the wood,
And a heart that delighteth in prayer.

E. ROBESON.

CANADA, AUTUMN, 1913.

COLONIAL BEGINNINGS OF HADDONFIELD MONTHLY MEETING OF FRIENDS.*

ANNIE H. BARTON.

The early history of Haddonfield Monthly Meeting is so closely interwoven with the story of a little group of Friends on the banks of Newton Creek that we are compelled to begin our narrative nearly forty years before the first meeting-house appeared in Haddonfield.

In the autumn of 1683, a little company of Friends from Ireland had come to Salem, where they sojourned for the winter. The following spring having searched up and down that portion of West New Jersey adjacent to the Delaware River and lying between Pensaukin and Timber Creeks, which had been reserved for the proprietors dwelling in Ireland, they in the language of Thomas Sharp "at last pitched down by vt which is now called Newton creek as ye most inviting place to settle down by." "At which time also Robert Zane who came from the city of Dublin and had been settled in Salem four years before joined in with us." Robert Zane had already married an Indian maiden in Burlington Meeting, and on account of his familiarity with the country he was apparently the guide for the rest of the company in selecting a site for their future homes. Thomas Sharp, Mark Newbie, Wm. Bates, Thomas Thacker, Geo. Goldsmith, with the families of some of these men, and Robert Zane from Salem made up the little colony. Thomas Sharp, in his own words, gives the "impulse that drove them across the seas." He says: "Let it be remembered it having wrought upon ye minds of some friends that dwelt in Ireland, but such as formerly came thither from England: and a pressure having laid upon them for some years, which they could not gett from the weight of until they gave upp to leave their friends and relations there, together with a comfortable subsistence, to transport themselves and family into this wilderness part of America, and thereby expose themselves to difficulties, which if they could have been ea'v where they were, in all probability they never have been met with."

The sincerity of their motive is shown by the additional statement: "And immediately there was a meeting set up at the house of Mark Newbie, and in a short time it grew and increased." As we further read his words ring out a prophetic message through the centuries which should fall on attentive ears to-day. He says: "And that the rising generation may consider that the settlement of this country was directed upon an impulse by the spirits of God's people not so much for their care and tranquility, but rather for the posterity vt should be after and that the wilderness being planted with good seed might grow and increase to the satisfaction of the good husbandman."

Mark Newbie's house, where was held the first meeting, was on the north side of Newton Creek, probably near the old burial ground at West Collingswood, but a little further down the stream. It was the spring of 1682 when this little gathering of perhaps twenty persons, probably in a house of logs, with floor of earth and roof of bark, met, after the simple ways of Friends, for the purpose of worshipping in Spirit and in Truth according to the dictates of their own consciences.

Only two other meetings had been established in West New Jersey, Salem in 1675 and Burlington three years later.

Here in this rude cabin on Newton's Bank, while Elizabeth Haddon was a toddling infant and before William Penn had landed in Philadelphia, was laid the foundation of Haddonfield Monthly Meeting and the first Friends' Meeting in Gloucester County, which then included the present Camden County. Two years later, Newton Friends built their first meeting-house. It too was made of logs, and Sharp says it was erected at the west end of the burial ground. It would seem a second house must have been built on or near the site of the old log meeting-house on Newton Creek, as one was burned there early in last century, but we are unable to find a record of it. The present Newton meeting-house in Camden, with which we are more or less familiar, was built about 1801.

It is recorded that in 1685, through the permission of Burlington Friends, a meeting was established at the house of John Kay in connection with a similar meeting to be held at Pensaukin on alternate First-days for the better accommodation of Friends in Evesham and about Pensaukin and Cooper's Creek. According to Clement's book, "First Settlers of Newton," John Kay's house was located on a tract of land now part of a farm formerly belonging to Joseph W. Cooper's estate, lying on the Marlton Pike, about one mile east of Ellisburg and running back to the north branch of Cooper's Creek. This meeting appears to have been held there about twenty-two years. It was not until twenty-five years later that this same John Kay bought the tract of land on which now stands Evans' Mill, and removed there, so it is quite evident that this indulged meeting was held at the home nearest the present Marlton Pike.

The "Evesham Friends," as they were called, included William and Elizabeth Evans, who at one time lived in a cave near Mt. Laurel. Elizabeth was a minister and doubtless spoke at this meeting.

The first Monthly Meeting was held at Newton in the autumn of 1682, and later for the better accommodation of Friends alternately at Newton and Thomas Shackles' house, which stood on the farm now the home of Wilmer Collins, northwest of Haddonfield and Moorestown Road, about one mile from Ellisburg.

Very early in the next century, Elizabeth Haddon's strong personality made itself felt in the circle of Friends that from time to time assembled at Newton, at the Shackles' home and possibly at John Kay's. Still in her early twenties she was in 1705 clerk of the Women's Monthly Meeting, a position she held for more than fifty-five years, except when interrupted by her visits to England. These records stand to-day a safe model in neatness and accuracy for all her successors. When John Estauch came from England on a religious visit to America the certificate furnished him by Friends there contains this expression, "We do believe he is Qualified for ye Service ye Lord hath called him unto and we have unity with him. And so wee desire you to receive him." Apparently Friends did receive him. About two years later his marriage to Elizabeth Haddon is recorded.

A copy of their marriage certificate may be of interest.

"Whereas John Estauch and Elizabeth Haddon of the Province of West New Jersey and County of Gloucester; both single persons (the said Elizabeth being daughter of John Haddon of London in the Kingdom of England) having several times declared their Intentions of taking each other in Marriage to Husband and Wife at the Monthly Meetings of Newton, to which they belong according to Truth's order, and the said meeting having received satisfaction concerning their clearness both by due and orderly Enquiry made here and also by Certificates from Friends in England, as also the consent of their parents being had, so that the said meetings have given their free assent and concurrence therewith and thereunto.

* Real Tenth Month 14th, 1913, at the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Settlement of Haddonfield, N. J.

These therefore may Certifie that upon the 1st day of the tenth month in the year One thousand Seven hundred and two, at a publick meeting at the house of the said Elizabeth, appointed and held on purpose for the full accomplishing and solemnizing of the said Marriage, they the said John and Elizabeth openly and solemnly in the presence of the said meeting did take each other in marriage to husband and wife, the said John solemnly promising in these words (viz) Friends and neighbors, in the Presence of God and you his people, whom I desire to be my witnesses, I take this my friend Elizabeth Haddon to be my wife, promising through the Lord's Assistance to be unto her a loving husband till the Lord by death shall separate us. And the said Elizabeth declaring as followeth, friends; in the fear of the Lord and before you his people, whom I desire to be my witnesses, I take this my friend John Estaugh to be my husband, promising through the Lord's assistance to be unto him a faithful and loving wife until the Lord by death shall separate us.

In testimony whereof the said John and Elizabeth have hereunto set their hands the day and year above said.

JOHN ESTAUGH
ELIZABETH HADDON."

Notice that she wrote her name Elizabeth Haddon, though on later dates she uses the surname Estaugh.

The population of Haddonfield increased, the roads were bad, the distance to Newton considerable, and after several years it was decided that a meeting-house was absolutely necessary to be erected. £101 10s were subscribed, although £12 additional were raised the next year. The specifications according to the minutes call for a building "forty foot long, 25 foot wide, 12 foot posts, shingled on ye outside. Galleries at each end 10 foot one, 12 foot ye other." It was "to be lined back high with board and lathed and plastered the other part." It was probably completed in a few months. At Newton in the Eleventh Month, the meeting adjourned to the new meeting-house near John Kay's mill. The next record begins, "At a Monthly Meeting held at our new Meeting House at Haddonfield, in ye township of Newton, in Gloucester County in Province of New Jersey ye 12th day of ye 12th month 1721." This is the first time the name Haddonfield is given to the meeting, and for ninety-seven years the Friends' Meeting-house was the only place of worship in Haddonfield. With business-like sagacity Elizabeth Estaugh had journeyed to her father's home in England and obtained his signature to a deed for the carefully surveyed meeting-house lot, which was duly placed on record.

Shortly before the death of Elizabeth Estaugh a brick house was built on the same site and the old structure was moved to the opposite side of the road and used as a shelter for horses. This brick meeting-house remained in use until 1852, when the present building was erected on land purchased for the purpose.

At one time First-day meetings were held alternately at Haddonfield and Newton. In 1728 they were "parted to be single at each house from first of Tenth to last of First Month." The next year it was decided for four months to hold meetings at Haddonfield on First as well as week-days, while "at the request of Friends about the riverside Newton Meeting was to be held at the school house near Joseph Cooper's, and after that according to their former and usual manner."

In colonial days the real or apparent difference between the usual crowd of voters and a gathering of worshippers must have been less than now, for both Haddonfield and Newton Meeting-houses were used for election purposes. After the school house was built at Haddonfield in 1786, it was used for elections and town-meetings instead of the meeting-house. Why should this shock our modern ideas of propriety? Surely the man or woman who exercises the privilege of the franchise need not stand on any lower plane in manners or morals than those who gather in religious assemblies.

As we glance through the quaintly worded records of these old meetings, interesting glimpses are revealed of the religious life of the members, the loving care and concern for individuals, as well as occasional happenings somewhat at variance with modern ways.

When Mary Gill, wife of John Gill, received her first payment for the care of the new meeting-house, it was less than £1 per year, gradually advancing for nearly seventeen years to £3. Apparently the increased cost of living began more than two centuries ago! A little further we read that Ebenezer Hopkins, by order of men Friends, is to be paid £5 4s that he had advanced for one year's board of Sarah Heritage, a poor Friend. A modest sum for the purpose, but placed on public record without regard to the feelings of the Friend in necessitous circumstances.

At a later date Benjamin Hopkins informs the meeting that he desires their advice in reference to the removal of his family to Ohio. A joint committee has a conference with the family and reports that they found nothing to discourage their removal.

Sometimes the care of the meeting was manifested in reproof, as in the case of a woman Friend at one time clerk, but departing from Friendly ways, a testimony of disownment was issued against her stating that "She had had the advantage of a Religious Education beyond many. But for want of Living in subjection to the cross of Christ, her mind became Leavened into the spirit of Liberties of the World and estranged from her friends. Slighting their tender advice and admonitions, as also that of an affectionate and an afflicted Mother until by Degrees her conduct and conversation became a contradiction to her Profession, and after long forbearance and much tender labor to convince her of her great deviation and thinking no prospect of service in further treating with her." In order that friends may not be chargeable with her conduct, it becomes necessary to declare—"that for some time past it hath been such as we cannot have unity with and having thereby Disunited herself. She is not in Religious fellowship with us until she shall manifest a self-denial more consistent with the principles in which she was Educated and give Friends the necessary satisfaction, which that she may through Divine favor Happily Experience, is our earnest and sincere Desire."

Let us not imagine that in the far-away past men were any more or any less fair in their dealings with each other than now. A minute records that James Whitall complains Joseph Collins won't pay £4 10s for work done. The Meeting directs Joseph Collins to pay before next Monthly Meeting or James Whitall is "Left to his Liberty." Joseph Collins heeds the Meeting's decision and the next month records the payment of the debt.

Frequently the minutes mention visits from ministers from Great Britain or elsewhere with comments on the same. Catherine Payton encourages them "to keep strict discipline in church and family," while John Fothergill in his writing says of his first visit to Newtown (as then called), "Truth appeared in mercy and good will to revive and build up a weak and staggering people."

Yet a record of about this (1721) time indicates that these early Friends were not deceived by a form of Godliness without the substance. It states that "John Lawson, a preaching Friend from South Britain having preached several times in the Newton Monthly Meeting limits, and not producing a certificate from England as requested, a long letter is recorded on the Monthly Meeting minutes, which was ordered sent him. In this he is reminded of the London Epistle of 1720 warning American Meetings of 'Cheats and Counterfeit Ministers', and that the only remedy for such was proper certificates from their home meetings. He is therefore requested to 'be Silent until friends are better Perswaded Concerning thee.' That this was a reasonable request is shown by later minutes of the Yearly and Quarterly Meetings.

when a paper was received from English Friends regarding Lawson, of whom it is related that he "by his fine Words and fair Speeches Did sometimes Deceive Simple Spirits And a Sower of Discord Amongst friends."

Ministering Friends who from time to time dwelt within the limits of Haddonfield, traveled with the approval of their meetings by slow and laborious routes as messengers of the Gospel to New England, to the north or the south and sometimes westward or across the seas. One certificate issued for John Estauagh when about to make a religious visit to foreign lands says his meeting "found his Conversation agreeable to his Testimony." A worthy tribute indeed! It was while on a religious visit to the West Indies that his death occurred. Just here it may be noted that in the Minutes of Women's Monthly Meeting, carefully kept by his wife, appears a blank page between the entries of Tenth Month, 1742, and Eleventh Month of the same year. Outside records show that between these two meetings she received word of his death and burial at Tortola. Apparently this blank page was left to show the condition of her heart and mind when she began to copy the minutes of Eleventh Month. A fitting emblem of her grief and love!

Hannah Cooper was a contemporary of the Estaughs; Sarah Cresson, Richard Jordan, Elizabeth Redman, and Mary Swett were ministers of later date, while names unspoken but of equal lustre, rise at memory's bidding as we look upon these present galleries.

As evidence of the limited education of the masses, including Friends even in the time of Elizabeth Estauagh, we find that on many of the marriage certificates of that period the bride and groom frequently make their mark instead of a signature, especially the bride, and among the witnesses the names of men far outnumber those of women. The Friends of Haddonfield were not indifferent to these needs, and made provision for schools even before the building of the school-house to which reference has been made. But a generation or two must grow up before the full results of an educational movement are apparent. This condition of more or less illiteracy among the masses must be borne in mind even while we recognize the marked ability of those who were leaders intellectually as well as spiritually. This minute of 1721 illustrates the point:

"John Haines signifies that Amariah Ballinger hath been guilty of sundry offenses against the church: To wit—inquiring of a conning man how his Goose came to Dye—(To-day the intelligent Poultryman applies to the State Experiment Station for such information) and allowing Fiddling in his house, and shooting for a Wager, which charges said Amariah being present acknowledged etc." Which is the greatest of the three offenses is left to our imagination, but we suspect it is the last one named. However, no further mention is made of Amariah until a year or so later when he and Elizabeth Garwood passed meeting the first and second time for marriage, without any charge being presented against him.

A few years after the new meeting-house was established at Haddonfield, Friends at Egg Harbour and Cape May requested a Monthly Meeting established among them, while those at Raccoon Creek in Greenwich Township asked to have meetings for worship on First-days. A subordinate meeting had also been set up at Woodbury Creek, Chester Meeting (now Moorestown) and Evesham (now Mt. Laurel) on various occasions presented requests as to the time of holding their meetings. The facts show how large a territory came under the jurisdiction of Haddonfield Friends.

Let us see, after the new meeting-house was built, it was then it becomes, to make an addition to it, although a minute a year or two previous mentions a small attendance "by Reason of the Mortality and Indisposition of the people." A few rods from here on Haddon Avenue near the Town Hall is the old site of the building. Picture the little meeting-house of logs or shingles, unpainted, unadorned, in a small clearing among the tall trees of the primeval forest. Near it, in a rudely fenced enclosure, lie the unmarked graves of the friends and relatives of those who toiled to make the wilderness blossom, but faithfully gathered each week, or oftener, to worship in reverent silence unless perchance the spoken message fell from gifted lips. From scattered homes they came, no rumbling wheels, no chugging motor or clanging trolley broke the stillness, only the sound of footsteps or of hoof-beats through the wooded paths.

In the words of Whittier, we say:

"Clasp, Angel of the backward look
And folded wings of ashen gray
And voice of echoes far away,
The brazen covers of thy book;
Where, closely mingling, pale and glow
The characters of joy and woe;
The monographs of outlived years.
Even while I look, I can but heed
The restless sands incessant fall,
Importunate hours that hours succeed,
Each clamorous with its own sharp need,
And duty keeping pace with all.
Shut down and clasp the heavy lids;
I hear again the voice that bids
The dreamer leave his dream midway
For larger hopes and graver fears:
Life greatens in those later years,
The century's aloe flowers to-day!"

What is the measure of the love we owe to others? It is the measure of what we think is owing to ourselves. "Love him as thyself." Observe, if I may use such a word, the equity of this Divine rule. It makes us the judge of what we ought to do; it imposes upon us no duty that we have not already acknowledged to ourselves.—DEAN STANLEY.

BEAUTIFUL thoughts make beautiful lives,
For every word and deed.
Lies in the thought that prompted it,
As the flowers lie in the seed.

For "THE FRIEND."

SARAH A. HOLMES.

OBITUARY.—On Seventh Mo. 28th, 1913, SARAH A. HOLMES, widow of Josiah Holmes, in the eighty-sixth year of her age. She was a daughter of Fothergill and Sarah Owen Osborn, and was born in Germantown, Pa., in the year 1828. In 1856 she came to Cayuga Co., N. Y., as the bride of Abraham M. Underhill, a valued Friend of Scipio Monthly Meeting. Their pleasant farm-house at the side of a beautiful ravine became a centre of attraction. Her graceful hospitality, remarkable beauty and decided Christian character won many friends. In obedience to the inward call, she spoke often and acceptably in meetings, and was recorded a minister. After a few years of happy married life, she became a widow and went for a time to Union Springs, where her services were useful in the meetings and community, and where she taught the Bible to little children. She resided afterwards in New York City, where her sympathies were much enlisted on behalf of the erring and the afflicted, and her labors were abundant in prison and hospital. She became the wife of Josiah Holmes, a minister of New England Yearly Meeting, and removed to Mattapisset, a seaport town in Massachusetts, where her husband had a large and prosperous business in ship-building, but afterwards lived in New Bedford. Of their three children, but one survives her parents, the wife of W. H. P. Walker, of East Orange, N. J., with whom Sarah A. Holmes made her home during her second widowhood. Through much physical infirmity she frequently attended the meeting at Rahway, of which she was a member, and, about the year 1907, was present at Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, so dear to her heart. In the seclusion of her long illness she was a reader of THE FRIEND; prized the Holy Scriptures; and reverently acknowledged the blessings she had in previous visitations from the Comforter. She esteemed all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity; but her strongest attachment was for the faith of her fathers, and any deviation from it, in belief or practice, was a trial to her spirit. She desired to protect her family from false teaching, and had no affiliation with those who deny the fundamental doctrines of the New Testament. Her honesty, sincerity and faithfulness were admirable; her nature was affectionate, sociable, refined and kind. A wide circle grieves to see the face of this beloved Friend no more, but rejoice for the happiness secured to her forever by the blood of the everlasting Covenant.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

The meeting of ministers and elders convened at Emporia, Kansas, Tenth Month 23rd, at 2 P. M., and the other sessions of Yearly Meeting at 11 A. M., Sixth-day the twenty-fourth.

The first business of the meeting was to read the Minutes of those present from other Yearly Meetings, attending this in the course of religious service. One for Eva Irene Smith, of Dover, Colo., and one for Russel Z. Taber, of Whittier, Iowa, both members of Springville Monthly Meeting, Iowa. Also one for Joshua P. Smith, from Coal Creek Meeting, Iowa, all endorsed by Hickory Grove Quarterly Meeting. Those present without minutes were Thomas Blackburn and wife, Thomas Stanley and wife, and Morris Smith and wife, all members of before-mentioned Meetings. The latter came as companion for those present with Minutes. These dear Friends were all very acceptably with us, and when seated in our small Meeting constituted a large part of its weight and numbers. Death, removal and declension have combined to reduce Kansas Yearly Meeting until it is probably as small as any within the circle of correspondence. Two of the ministers with their companions visited Spring River Meeting before Yearly Meeting. Besides attending our regular meetings, one of the ministers felt a concern to have a meeting appointed in Galena. The court-room was secured and notice distributed by printed bills for a meeting on First-day evening. The day was inelement, and though it had ceased to rain by evening, a strong wind blew and it was quite cool. The six visitors with seven Friends of the neighborhood drove to the place of meeting in three vehicles. Arriving they found two individuals present, one a member of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting and the other a frequent attender of Friends' Meetings. They sat down and in a few moments two young girls entered, but they could not endure the silence more than three minutes and so left the room. A minister soon arose with a message of encouragement to some in trouble either struggling for spiritual existence, or in financial difficulties. Another communication, and a fervent prayer and the meeting closed. Satisfaction was expressed with the meeting before leaving, and as we sat around the fireside at a late hour none regretted the effort and were not curious as to results.

Our regular meeting at Spring River was held on Fourth-day, and a goodly number gathered in the rain. That and one appointed in the evening were both favored meetings, and seemed to close the service of our visitors who were ready to take the train the next morning for Emporia, arriving there in time for select meeting. Kansas Yearly Meeting is composed of two Quarterly Meetings, and each of those of one Monthly Meeting. Each Quarterly Meeting had four representatives, all of whom were present at the first sitting, except one who came later. The epistles from other Yearly Meetings followed the reading of the visitors' Minutes. The evidence of Divine favor during the reading, and the preciousness of the fellowship revealed in the epistles, were so manifest that it was felt that no privilege could be taken from our small meeting that would so impair their weight and usefulness as to drop this practice of correspondence while it is kept up in the true life and spirit of Gospel fellowship. On Seventh-day morning the representatives proposed the reappointment of Levi Bowles for Clerk and Alva J. Smith for Assistant. The meeting convened each day except Third-day with open shutters, as has been the practice of Kansas Yearly Meeting for some years. Many of these joint sessions are precious seasons and have a salutary effect upon the following business session. Two meetings were held on First-day, which were well attended by Friends and a considerable number of the towns-people, though the day was rainy. By convening the meeting with closed shutters on Third-day the business was concluded, but Kansas Yearly Meeting is never considered over until after the meeting for worship on Fourth-day. Some of us felt that our home duties were pressing, and the meeting on Third-day closed in time for the return train, but not one left and the closing hour was as precious to visitors and visited as any preceding it. The meeting concluded with the feeling of thankfulness in every heart that we had again been visited in a signal manner by our Heavenly Father. By working a little overtime and depriving ourselves of some social enjoyment, the Minutes of both Men's and Women's Meetings were ready for the press and the contract let in two hours after the meeting closed. Then we were free and ready to think of the homeward journey. A light snow had fallen and it was a beautiful sight to see fields of green alfalfa sticking up through the snow as if begging for a little more time to make amends for a tardy growth during the extreme drought. Noting but true vigorous fellowship as the fruit of our common Father's love can make these gatherings so precious to the burden-bearers in the church, and as this account is closed the desire comes that we may so carry the burdens of our small meetings that when our Yearly Meeting comes again we may enjoy the same blessings as in the one just past.

LEVI BOWLES.

FRIENDLY NEWS.

During the Tenth Month in company with Henry H. Albertson, of Burlington, Max I. Reich made a visit to central New York. In addition to family visits, seven meetings were attended as follows: two at Jacksonville, one at Oakwood Seminary, two at Poplar Ridge, one at the George Junior Republic, one at Barnes' Hall, Cornell University. It is understood that Max I. Reich has since been in Chicago.

A QUAKER SOLICITOR GENERAL.—Jonathan Pim, K. C., recently appointed Solicitor General for Ireland, is a member of the Society of Friends and the first of that body to fill the position of a law officer to the crown in Ireland. He is a son of the late Thomas Pim and grandson of Jonathan Pim, who represented Dublin in Parliament in the sixties.

He was educated at Oliver's Mount School, Scarborough, and afterwards at Trinity College, Dublin; and was called to the bar in 1886. He was at one time Hon. Secretary to the Statistical and Social Enquiry Society of Ireland and took part in its proceedings.

The Pim family came to Ireland in 1655 and settled in the midland counties.—From Journal of Friends' Historical Society.

JOSEPH JAMES NEAVE, whose death occurred last Ninth Month 14th, at his home in Australia, expressed a wish that a memorial card should be sent to many of his friends. He had at various times jotted down names of these, and also a suggestion for the wording to appear upon it. After fearing that some friends had been overlooked, he concluded by writing the following:—

"I go to life, and not to death, and hope, through the mercy of God in Christ Jesus, to meet them all in a better country, where the 'glass darkly' through which we now see shall no longer impede or distort our vision, but where 'we shall know even as also we are known.' May none slight this day of their soul's visitation, but turning with full purpose of heart to the Lord Jesus Christ, receive the salvation of their souls, and enjoy the 'Peace of God which passeth all understanding' that comes to us through Him."

CONCORD QUARTERLY MEETING.—The Ministers and Elders met on Second-day, Eleventh Month 10th, for the first time in the afternoon, at three o'clock. The new Electric Short Line to Media from Sixty-ninth and Market makes it easy for Friends having business in Philadelphia to reach the meeting. In the sweet and solemn silence of the first meeting there arose a remarkable unity of exercise which led to five communications much on the same line. The theme of the first was to have our house in order to welcome the heavenly Guest. The second was the quotation, "They that are wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." The third referred to the Apostle John's desire "that we also may have fellowship with us; yea, and our fellowship is with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ," with the reminder that it is only as we have our house in order and welcome the heavenly Guest as He stands at the door and knocks that we can bring others to righteousness by inviting them to share our fellowship with the Father. The fourth reminded us of the importance of being in an expectant frame of mind, listening for the knocking, that we may thus be enabled to have our house in order. The last urged us to "forget not to show love unto strangers; for thereby some have entertained angels unwares."

While considering the second query, "Are ministers sound in word and doctrine and careful to minister in the ability that God giveth," we were cautioned against unfaithfulness in withholding any word that should be communicated whether in public or private.

A concern was brought forward from Birmingham for a joint meeting of ministers, elders and overseers, for united seeking after strength for the service to which they are called both toward our neighbors and our neighbors. There was full expression of unity, and a meeting was appointed to be held at Media, Seventh-day, Eleventh Month 22nd, at two P. M.

The general session on Third-day was favored with the company of five visiting ministers. The vocal services began early and were continued with but short periods of silence, but the meeting was felt to be solemn and favored with the Master's presence. Among those engaged in the ministry of the Word were Daniel Oliver, of Syria, who spoke on the privilege and conditions of being endowed with power from on high; Rufus P. King, of North Carolina, in whose touching appeal for the life in God was illustrated this power and demonstration of the Spirit; and John B. Garrett, who dwelt on our need of knowing Christ Jesus as our Saviour and our life.

The second meeting in joint session listened to a heart-searching memorial prepared by Birmingham Monthly Meeting, setting forth the faithful and steadfast testimony of Josiah W. Leeds against corrupting posters, periodicals and other evils. Single-handed he carried on a warfare which after much opposition and set-back, produced results of great moral value. Much appreciation of his character was expressed and the memorial was forwarded to the Representative Meeting.

In separate session both Men's and Women's Meeting adopted the nomination by committee of two Friends to help manage the proposed building at 304 Arch Street, and of a larger number to collect funds toward the erection of it.

A most interesting item of business was a report forwarded under a feeling of concern by Lansdowne Monthly Meeting setting forth the work of their Bible Classes, as managed by a committee of the Monthly Meeting. It elicited some expression of concern and much of unity, which brought out the edifying and unifying fruits of united Bible study, if only done with the Holy Spirit as our principal Teacher. The meeting was to many a season of encouragement and refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

J. R.

WESTOWN NOTES.

This has been the week for the Committee to visit the School and all under appointment attended meeting on First-day, except Jonathan E. Rhoads, whose health was not equal to the effort. The Friends present were Samuel L. Allen, John L. Bablerston, Henry Hall, George Forsythe, Arthur R. Pennell, Samuel L. Smedley, Susan R. Williams, Susanna S. Kite, Eliza Ann Hall, Deborah C. Passmore, Mary R. Williams and Mary S. Cowperthwaite. In our morning meeting Arthur R. Pennell and Mary S. Cowperthwaite had acceptable vocal service. The collections in the evening were addressed, the boys' by William V. Dennis of Friends' Select School, Philadelphia, and the girls' by Susanna S. Kite. Wm. V. Dennis made a strong appeal to the boys that while opportunity favored them on every hand they should strive to develop in themselves that power which would win them success. His remarks took a very practical form when he emphasized the fact that in the creation of bodily power of the first order they must slun these three elements of evil: tobacco, alcohol and impure thoughts. The address was not committed to paper or we would gladly give it word for word to THE FRIEND. It sent every Westown boy to bed with five thoughts burning within him and not a few it is hoped with fresh resolves made for the morrow. Susanna Kite read a very interesting paper on the two prophets Jeremiah and Ezekiel, this we hope to band to THE FRIEND shortly for a wider audience.

During the middle of the week we had a visit from J. Henry Bartlett, and on Sixth-day evening Mary M. Vaux gave an illustrated lecture on the Canadian Rockies. Though this was the fourth or fifth time she had spoken on this topic before the Westown audience her lecture last week had all the elements of novelty; most of her pictures we had never seen including many beautiful photographs of flowers and wild animals, and her descriptive parts were largely experiences of last summer.

Our form of freshest interest with us just now is the orchard project. The conditions imposed by the Westown Committee have been met, and $15,000.00 subscribed. This money is to be judiciously expended during the next five or more years when there is a reasonable expectation that the return from the peach orchard will more than meet expenses. James Wallow, a recent graduate of Westown, who has spent four years at the Ohio State Agricultural College and is due soon to graduate therefrom, has been appointed to the position of director. He will probably enter upon his duties next spring and will give a few hours each week to instruction in the School to such boys as may elect certain studies in agriculture.

In this connection it will be of interest to note a wide-awake club now at work among the boys. There are about thirty boys, with Chas. W. Palmer associated with them, who call themselves the Rustics. They meet for a forty-five-minute period in the evening once a week, and discuss all manner of farm interests and read aloud short papers selected from some of the farm journals taken by the school library.

Arerops of the present interest in the farm and orchard movement the Westonian has the promise of a series of papers on the orchard question written by ex-students, all of whom have at least met some of the perplexities and disappointments incident to the first stages of orcharding. These papers may be looked for in one of the early issues of the Westonian 1914.

On last Third-day about twenty students attended Concord Quarterly Meeting at Media. These were all members of some one of the Monthly Meetings embraced in that Quarter, the place being so easy of access is the reason for granting the permission and withholding it from those of other quarterly Meetings. The members of our Senior Class are interested in making up their answers to the series of questions formulated by the Round Table Committee; these answers with others are to form part of the program for the meeting scheduled for the afternoon and evening of the fifth of next month, at Fourth and Arch Sts. It is hoped that the Senior Class can number fifty of the audience on that occasion.

CORRESPONDENCE.

In a recent number of THE FRIEND appeared the "Letter of Advice" issued last Ninth Month by the Quarterly Meeting of Friends held in Belfast, Ireland. We in this favored land scarcely realize a tithé of the anxiety that presses at this time upon Friends and other Protestants in Ireland. Their position on the Home Rule question receives scant sympathy from their brothers on the other side of the Irish sea, who are warm advocates of Ireland for the Irish and who in many cases are less easily able than we are to see all round the question. The following is taken in part from a letter, not intended for publication, written Eleventh Month 2nd, by an aged Friend in Ireland to one but two years his senior in Philadelphia. He says, "It is perfectly awful that Protestants of England and Scotland who call themselves 'Liberals' should for purely party political reasons, league themselves together as they are doing to drive the Protestants and other peaceably-disposed people in Ireland from under the Imperial parliament. . . . They tell us there are safeguards in the bill for our protection, but we know by sad experience the Romanist Irish Parliament would utterly disregard them, and if we appealed against it, the English and Scotch Liberals would not interfere because it might lose votes to their party. . . . The saintly archbishop Usher prophesied about three hundred years ago that Romanism would gradually attain such power that it would seem just going to overrule everything, but that then Almighty God would cast it down utterly."

Alluding to the address issued by Irish Friends the letter continues: "I managed to get the most important paragraphs of the address into the leading London newspapers." Here he enumerates five or more prominent London dailies as well as several papers published in other large English cities and towns. A Roman Catholic paper in North Ireland highly commended the address and placed at the top of the column these words for a head line: "Quiet Quakers, true to their principles, remain non-militant." Again quoting from the letter: "For more than one and a-half years there have been weekly prayer meetings of all Protestant denominations held at the Y. M. C. A., in Belfast, to supplicate the Almighty that He might be pleased to interfere and save us in the present crisis. They have generally been hallowed seasons and are increasingly so. We increasingly feel prayer is our only sure defence and if we have but sufficient faith we believe we shall succeed in obtaining the answer to our prayers."

It seems difficult even when our sympathies strongly touched for all those who have most to lose in the expected change of policy, to accept the views that follow, also quoted from the same letter. May God grant that these fears may never be realized. "In a great crisis like the present, everyone should do something on the right side. Protestants of all denominations except Friends are joining the volunteers of whom about one hundred thousand have been enrolled and are spending a great deal of their time after business hours in being drilled, so that if the bill becomes law they will be ready to fight. It is all arranged to commence a Provisional government for Ulster the day the bill passes. About 1860, when controversy between North and South began, you in the North did not expect fighting, yet it did come with the most awful and desolating results. We fear the same."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—It is stated that the corn crop in this country for 1912 is valued by the Department of Agriculture at $1,741,353,019, the most valuable ever produced in the history of the world.

A despatch from Washington, of the 10th inst., says: "W. W. Finley, president of the Southern Railway, gave statistics to-day to prove that travel by rail in the United States was much safer than by automobile, street car or some other means of conveyance." He also says: "As bearing on the comparative safety of different ways of travel, it may be noted that, as compared with 318 deaths of passengers from railway accidents in the entire United States, there were, in the registration area, 1883 deaths from street car accidents, 1291 from automobile accidents and 2237 from accidents in connection with other vehicles."

At a convention lately meeting at Manchester, N. H., the U. S. Secretary of Agriculture Houston said that less than forty per cent. of the cultivated land in the United States is reasonably well cultivated and less than twelve per cent. is yielding maximum returns. He also said: "I do not entertain the thought for a second that we have approximated the limit of our output from the soil. We have not even reached the end of the pioneering stage. We had better frankly face the fact that we are relatively inefficient, take stock of our shortcomings and earnestly seek the remedy. That we have practically reached the stage where we have ceased to be an exporting nation of food products and are becoming dependent on foreign nations for the necessities of life is a sad commentary upon our use of the opportunities bestowed upon us." He urged co-ordination of Federal and State agricultural agencies. In the field of marketing, he said, there was danger that pressure would be brought to bear to force the department to act everywhere before it was intelligently prepared to act anywhere.

It was stated from Harrisburg, on the 14th inst.: "The Attorney General's Department to-day gave an opinion to the Department of Labor and Industry that it would be a violation of the women's employment act to require female cooks to work in restaurants seven days a week. It was contended in a case submitted to the Department of Labor and Industry that a woman employed in a restaurant could work seven days a week if the aggregate did not exceed fifty-four hours. The opinion says: 'This department cannot acquiesce in this construction. If the Legislature meant to limit the working hours to fifty-four in any one week it was not necessary to limit the number of days. In order to give effect to all of the language used, the provision must be construed to prohibit working more than six days in any one week.'"

The head of the U. S. Bureau of Animal Industry reports: "It is now plain that the rise in meat prices in recent years is the natural result of an actual shortage in production. It is evident, also, that the country is facing an era of short production of meat, and that some means must be adopted if the American appetite for this class of food is to be supplied." The new tariff puts meat on the free list, so that it can be imported freely, without tax.

It was stated from New York City on the 10th inst.: "The Board of Arbitration appointed to settle the differences between the Eastern railroads and their conductors and trainmen filed its award this afternoon in the United States District Court. Wages were increased approximately seven per cent., as against about twenty-one per cent. asked by the men. The payrolls of the forty-one roads concerned will be increased about $6,000,000, as against $18,000,000, which the granting of the entire demands would have cost. The new scale is to take effect as of Tenth Month 1, 1913, involving considerable back pay to the men."

FOREIGN.—A despatch from Lima, Peru, of the 11th inst., mentions that an earthquake occurred on the 7th inst., by which the city of Abancay, in Peru, was wrecked and that more than 200 persons were killed, and thousands of persons are homeless. Later accounts state that ten towns, including Challhuana, with a population of nearly 4000, were destroyed by the earthquake. Official dispatches report a continuance of the shocks.

A despatch from London of the 12th says: "The International Conference on Safety at Sea held its opening meeting to-day at the British Foreign Office. Twelve nations are represented at the conference: the United States, Great Britain, Belgium, France, the Netherlands, Russia, Denmark, Germany, Norway, Spain, Canada and New Zealand. While the aims of the conference were simple, the means by which they were to be obtained were far from easy. Many of them could be dealt with only by men of long experience and expert knowledge."

NOTICES.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA., will be open from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from 2 to 5 P. M.—Sundays from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. only.

FRIENDS' RELIGIOUS AND MORAL ALMANAC for 1914 is now on sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street. Price, 1 cent each; by mail, 5 cents; per dozen, 30 cents; by mail, 38 cents. The same with paper covers, 5 cents each; by mail, 6 cents; per dozen, 40 cents; by mail, 49 cents. The Friends' Card Calendar for 1914 is also ready. Price, 5 cents each; by mail, 10 cents; per dozen, by mail, 90 cents.

The Committee for Visitation and other religious service, under appointment of Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting, have arranged for the holding of a second appointed meeting at Army's Mount, about two-and-a-half miles east of Mount Holly, on First-day, the 23rd inst., at 2.30 o'clock. Friends desiring to attend and who desire conveyance thereto, may apply to William E. Darnell, Moorestown, N. J.

FRIENDS' EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION.—The first meeting for the year of the Educational Association will come on Sixth-day, the twenty-first of Eleventh Month, at Friends' Select School. Supper (25 and 35 cents). 5.30-7.00 P. M. Meeting 7.15 P. M.

PROGRAM.

The Responsibilities of a Friends' School.

1. The Religious Aspect of Education—Rufus M. Jones
2. The School and the Community—Stanley R. Yarnall
3. The Yearly Meeting School—Thomas K. Brown.

Please notify Bertha M. Fry, 140 N. Sixteenth Street, if she expects to come to supper.

FRANCES C. FERBUS,
Secretary.

The Visitation Committee of Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting, in furtherance of the concern of one of their number, a Minister, has appointed two meetings for Worship, to be held First-day, Eleventh Month 30th, one at Tuckerton, at 10.30 A. M., the other at Barneget, on the afternoon of that day, at 3 o'clock. Those desiring information with regard to reaching either or both these meetings, may communicate with J. Henry Bartlett, Tuckerton, N. J., not later than the 27th inst.

WALTER L. MOORE.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.—The following books have recently been added to the Library:—

- Allen—Missionary Methods.
- Fitch—Critic in the Occident.
- Fitch—Critic in the Orient.
- Grayson—Friendly Road.
- Montessori—Pedagogical Anthropology.
- Ross—Changing Chinese.
- Pumphrey—Stories of the Pilgrims.

LINDA A. MOORE,
Librarian.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK (Eleventh Month 23rd to 29th):

- Burlington and Bucks Quarterly Meeting, at Burlington, Third-day, Eleventh Month 25th, at 10.30 A. M.

MONTHLY MEETINGS:

- Philadelphia, Fourth and Arch Streets, Fifth-day, Eleventh Month 27th, at 10.30 A. M.
- Philadelphia, for Northern District, at Sixth and Noble Streets, Third-day, Eleventh Month 25th, at 10.30 A. M.
- Abington, Fourth-day, Eleventh Month 26th, at 10.15 A. M.
- Chester, at Media, Pa., Second-day, Eleventh Month 24th, at 7.30 P. M.
- Goshen, at Malvern, Fifth-day, Eleventh Month 27th, at 10 A. M.
- Concord, at Concordville, Third-day, Eleventh Month 25th, at 9.30 A. M.
- Birmingham, at West Chester, Fourth-day, Eleventh Month 26th, at 10 A. M.
- Lansdowne, Fifth-day, Eleventh Month 27th, at 7.45 P. M.
- Woodbury, Third-day, Eleventh Month 25th, at 8 P. M.
- Salem, Fourth-day, Eleventh Month 26th, at 10.30 A. M.

W. B. WEAVER Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN
TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT
OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL
ACCOMMODATIONS FOR
FUNERALS. : : : :

BELL 'PHONE ESTABLISHED 1880

For Rich Milk

For Clean Milk

For Safe Milk

Call Philadelphia Locust 209

ABBOTTS ALDERNEY DAIRIES

31st and Chestnut Streets

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PATENT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

ENGLISH FRIENDS' PERIODICALS

The Friend (London), Weekly, $2.11
The British Friend, Monthly, $1.60
Friends' Quarterly Examiner, $1.66

SUBSCRIPTIONS NOW DUE FOR 1914
NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS SOLICITED

GRACE W. BLAIR, - Media, Pa.
AMERICAN AGENT

School Children's EYES Tested

We test children's eyes and furnish glasses which remove all strain.

Satisfaction Guaranteed
C. A. LONGSTRETH
Specialist in Eye Testing
222 Market Street Philadelphia, Pa.

WM. H. FIE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

ELKINS MORRIS & CO. BANKERS

MEMBERS OF

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA
STOCK EXCHANGES

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 56 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

OWING TO THE CLOSING OF A LARGE MILL near his home, the undersigned has been thrown out of employment. He desires a position and much prefers to be among Friends.
J. ALBERT BAILEY,
West Grove, Pa.

PLAIN MILLINERY—FOR A LIMITED TIME I will see customers at 508 North Marshall Street on Seventh Day, and other times by appointment.
RACHEL G. HALL.

ROOM AND BOARD ON MODERATE TERMS IN a quiet Friend's family in New York City may be secured on application in advance.
"K." Office of THE FRIEND.

WANTED—A YOUNG WOMAN TO ASSIST WITH housework and care of one child.
ANNA B. HAMILTON,
Malvern, Pa.

THE ESTAUGH HADDONFIELD, N. J.

A pleasant home for Friends. One vacant room on second floor. Apply to

ANNA A. MICKLE, MOORESTOWN, N. J.
OR ANNA EASTBURN WILLITS,
CHAIRMAN ADMISSION COMMITTEE,
HADDONFIELD, N. J.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER
S. W. COR. 16th & RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE BRUCE 6648

NO MATTER

WHAT YOUR BUSINESS IS, IT NEEDS GOOD PRINTING TO PROPERLY REPRESENT IT.

THE BIDDLE PRESS, Printers,

EDWARD T. BIDDLE,
210 W. Washington Square (210 S. Seventh St.)
PHILADELPHIA

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Aves., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD EQUIPMENT TRUST 4½%, TO YIELD 5%

FULL PARTICULARS UPON APPLICATION.

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY PAUL W. BROWN JAMES P. MAGILL

POCONO MANOR

Resort for Friends and those of like tastes. Open all the year.

Elevation 1800 feet, commanding extensive mountain and valley scenery. Address

J. W. HURLEY, Manager,
POCONO MANOR, PA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
(Marcellus Balderston)

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. 618 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL 'PHONE PHILADELPHIA

JOS. B. SCATTERGOOD HOUSE, SIGN AND DECORATIVE PAINTING

Orders Solicited Bell 'Phone
275 S. FOURTH STREET

WILLIAM S. YARNALL MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

Redlands--California

Wissahickon Inn

A comfortable family hotel
in the residence section of beautiful Redlands.

SEND FOR FOLDERS & RATES

Subscribers patronizing our advertisers will assist THE FRIEND, especially by mentioning our paper in correspondence.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 27, 1913.

No. 22.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVID H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to
EDWIN P. SELLEW OR THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

him and queried on this wise: If outward means are not essential, why do not Friends go one step further and carry on their devotions in private, and fulfil in their individual measures our Lord's admonition, that "thou when thou prayest enter into thy closet and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father who is in secret." The preacher's answer was confined to an audience of one, but it may have followed along a line somewhat after this order.

Some of the most evident facts of nature, so evident as even to have been called common, which are in daily display all the time about us are the least understood by us. We know them by their operations, but we do not comprehend them. With equal positiveness we know that when few or many are gathered together in the spirit of worship, there that spiritual life we crave will abound in proportion to the individual richness of each one's spiritual exercise.

A Friend was driving to meeting, and the thought pressed upon him that a message for the meeting that day should be of a certain kind, he could not see that it was to come through him, but as the meeting waited in silence his faith in his intimation grew all the while, and he prayed that the right message might be given, so he was not surprised when the Friend near him rose and ministered powerfully along the very lines that he had had presented to him; later he was not in the least unprepared in thought when a woman Friend offered her testimony on the same topic, and this was followed by an earnest prayer that the seed sown that morning might find a place in soil prepared, and that it might from time to time be watered by the life-giving principle from above.

Who will question that the faithfulness of this dear elder was not the very life of the meeting that day, and who will question that his meeting did not begin before ever he came in sight of the meeting-house? Such incidents are of daily occurrence, yet who is so wise as to explain them even to his own satisfaction, much less to ours? Who dare question that a meeting held as this was held, had for its leader any other than He who is the head of every rightly gathered assembly? And who could be so rash as to desire any different human intervention than that which actually took place? True, this may have approached nearer to the ideal than many meetings we have had a part in, but have we ever known a meeting in which we have striven to do our full duty that has been an utterly hopeless one?

Ever since we were children, and possibly long before, the case of the Friend in North Carolina has been told. He went regularly to a meeting-house twice each week and sat alone and even sometimes rose and ministered to a congregation of empty benches; some have translated the scene and placed it elsewhere. That it is a fact, and that a beautiful lesson is taught by it are excuses abundant, if excuses were called for, why the story should be kept alive. But we should not confuse this with what we have just now under review. A congregation we are told in time gathered about the faithful

WHY WORSHIP TOGETHER?

There was an appointed Friends' Meeting for Worship not long since to which many non-church members came, and after the meeting had settled into silence, one who occupied a forward seat in the assembly rose to his feet and gave a brief, forceful explanation of Friends' attitude toward worship. In substance he said that the most ritualistic worshipper and the Friend who was farthest removed of all from outward forms had the one and same object in view—namely, to commune in spirit with the Father of Spirits, and so to beget a worshipful state of mind, wherein the soul could be refreshed by the Divine outpourings.

Some of you, he continued, were taught at your mother's knee to believe that there was much in the outward forms that developed this attitude of mind: as one branch of the Christian church has placed an emphasis here, and another has placed it there, they have grown distinctly different. We, as a small body of believers, have felt that the emphasis should be placed on none of these, but that the spiritual life in us is best ministered unto by shutting out as far as possible all that belongs to the world outside us, and this we find by experience that cannot be contradicted is promoted by periods of silence.

We may have other reasons to support our form of silent waiting, but this seemed to be all the preacher had to deliver on this particular occasion, and it seemed to meet the need that some felt. After the meeting one of his auditors approached preacher and the lives of many were enriched by his little act of faithfulness. The North Carolina Friend went to meeting primarily because the Spirit led him, he could not understand why; there was no fuller association with others there than had he been at home, for he would have been more likely of company at home than there. Probably the testimony he was called on to hold forth was the duty, as Paul puts it, for his neighbors "not to neglect the assembling of themselves together."

But our case is a different one. Who has not often heard the expression, "a sweet covering overspread us at meeting to-day," or "in our family worship this morning the covering under which we sat was too precious for words?" Can we give any truer explanation than this? As our thoughts are directed toward the Source of that power which we crave to receive, and as those about us honestly endeavor to possess the same with us there is begotten a feeling in the assembly as real as anything that is more material in its nature. That we cannot define it does not relegate it to the realm of the unreal, if so then many things in the world of matter will have to go to the same place, for our knowledge of them is more of their properties, than it is of them themselves.

Some sore trial has overtaken us, our friends heap kindnesses little and big upon us, but among them all there stands out one particular kindness that has touched us more tenderly than all the rest, it comes from some one who has been able to enter into a fuller measure of sympathy with us. We cannot define it; we know that real sympathy is not measured by anything that we can take knowledge of, and yet it is so much a reality that our knowledge concerning it cannot be counterfeited. Just so it is in a meeting for worship. The "covering" if really felt cannot be misinterpreted.

A Friends' meeting may be any of many manifestations of this fine feeling. The congregation may be drawn together in part as a matter of habit; to keep away from meeting would result in a feeling of loss, but the actual going from week to week is not fraught with that expectancy that it should know; again there may be the feeling that so much has been done for us by our Heavenly Father, that we owe this as but a slight return, to yield ourselves, body, mind and spirit to his unchecked government and we go to meeting and do all that we can to "feel after" the power that emanates from Him; still again there may be a sense of obligation we are under to our neighbors; closed meeting-houses do not speak loudly in the interests of the Kingdom; none of these, however, measure up to the full richness of a Friends' meeting, that is reached when the body as a worshipping assembly is melted into a oneness of spirit, when the life of my neighbor is quickened by the exercise of my spirit, and mine by his, and we all feel the communion which we were never intended to define, made stronger from the very fact that we are worshipping together.

D. H. F.

Is the second of Luke mention is made of the census as having been taken in the time of Quirinius, Governor of Syria. Tertullian, in referring to this passage, places the taxing in the time of the governorship of Sensus Saturninius, and critics have insisted that Quirinius was a mythical personage, and the Lucan account so far to be discredited. Now we are told by Sir William Ramsay in the Expositor of the discovery, in Antioch in 1912, of an inscription on the base of a statue from which it appears that both Quirinius and Saturninius were governors of Syria at the same time.

GIRLS' SCHOOLS IN JAPAN.

ANNA HARTHORNE.

Put yourselves in the place of the few women in America who wanted and got college education forty years ago and then try to realize that even a smaller proportion of the Japanese women have the equivalent of what is now taught in all our best high-schools. The Japanese Government "high-schools" give as much as is considered possible for a woman to know and remain obedient. This covers about what our finishing schools offered forty years back—minus, of course, the religious teaching. They give a smattering of Chinese instead of Latin, about as much English as would balance the French; the "three R's" up to our high-school requirements; science that is about equivalent to the "Introduction to Science" in our primary or grammar schools; music, including foreign singing; and poetry writing, which has the same place in Japanese families as drawing has in the English. They have no history.

The private schools and country government high-schools are a year behind this even. Below these the primary schools while theoretically compulsory, and free, except for books, etc., have not enough school room for more than eighty per cent. of the children; (the government does not make statistics of this side of the facts but this number is well within the truth), so the left-overs are enrolled waiting their turn. This example of the elasticity of Japanese red-tape sometimes permits parents to have their children work instead of getting any schooling until they are twelve and after that age they may be kept at home legally. The high-schools charge about ten yen ($5.00) a year tuition in addition to the cost of books, and they can accommodate one-fifth of the girls of high-school age; that is, about one-fourth of those who having finished the primary course could enter the high-school.

The mission schools, in addition to their Bible Classes, give naturally more English than the best "public" high-schools and most of them give regularly one year more of work. The "Women's University" is about on a par with the mission schools, with the one added advantage of an excellent domestic science course, of which the Japanese men approve, as it will improve the quality of their wives without lessening the quantity of their obedience.

There are two schools that stand out from among all others as Fujiyama towers above "his" foothills. "The Higher Normal" and the "Home School for Girls," or "Umé Tsuda's School," as we know it, give in mental development, though not an all around education in our sense, more than the American College Preparatory Schools. The Normal is limited in number to two hundred girls who come from all parts of Japan. Two are sent from each district, and are chosen by competitive examination. Coming from different grades of schools as they do the girls are, of course, quite uneven in their actual knowledge, and above all, in their ability to think. Almost all the Japanese have quick memories, while very few girls as yet know what it means to reason. The School offers three three-year courses: a science and mathematics course of about our high-school grade; domestic science, and an arts course in English, Japanese and Chinese, which goes a little farther than a first year in an American college. They get absolutely no history of other countries and none of their own as we understand history. Graduates from the Normal receive a teacher's certificate good for the government high-schools. Although these graduates have as good a reading knowledge of English as we should of German after a two years' course in college, they do not have a sufficient speaking knowledge to make satisfactory teachers. For this reason girls from the mission schools sometimes are given a teacher's certificate after taking examinations.

With this background, imagine a school that in English teaches psychology; practical ethics, approaching what our moral philosophy at Westtown is planned to be; practical physiology; domestic science; Chinese, corresponding to our college course in Latin—except that in language form it would more nearly correspond to Anglo-Saxon, and as much actual English as one can well get of a foreign language in one's own country. Its chief purpose over and above teaching the language is to give these Japanese women an understanding of the ideas current among other nations, particularly aiming at a practical application of Western ideas to Japanese life. We try especially to show how women have progressed and met the changing conditions in conservative and still independent ways, so that they may learn, from seeing the uselessness of destruction, that their new work must be constructive even if it is only a small step towards a desired end. We want them to profit by the mistakes we have made in solving our difficulties in the West, such as much of the undirected charity work; and above all to reason, to work out individually a tentative answer to every least school problem as a foundation. The Japanese nation tends to follow implicitly a leader who has once gained their confidence. So naturally a bureaucratic government has suited the country until the men in the last decade have demanded equal chances to have a turn at being part of the bureau.

As a step in this direction with the girls the teachers here try only to pass on what the girls themselves decide, thus putting the burden of any decision upon them. One way of doing this is by a weekly discussion of current topics which each class has. All they know of their own country is what they have learned from their grandmothers (who are the family story-tellers) of their semi-historical legends. Until philo-sophic histories are written for the Japanese public, we shall have to begin at the modern end of Japan. For instance, they learn (dimly) that the Japanese-California question is but a modified form of what faced Europe in the third and fourth centuries during the period of the migration of tribes, and that England and Germany and America are not getting hysterical and demanding indemnity, and dismissals from a Chinese government that cannot help itself, because such things have happened to their countries before.

With such a discussion the question of self-control becomes personal as well as national. For with Western education the Japanese women are much more emotional and hysterical than formerly, as they open up to our ideas they find it difficult to recognize the accompanying restrictions. With the simplicity and directness of children, they tend to give way to maturer emotions, when they discover that they may rightfully have them, with a child's lack of thoughtfulness.

They are learning this lesson through games, that demand quickness and some giving out of oneself with the possibility of failure, such as various guessing games where you make your trial guesses out loud, and games like Tacety Questions and Work-in-Sight. Their confusion when they are slow is pathetic, and they are afraid to risk questions that may not draw illuminating answers. Consequently on Seventh-day evenings we teachers have fairly hard but most interesting work for a good three hours after our supper a la chop stick in the dormitories.

Every month at a literary society meeting, some of the "students" act out dialogues made from adapted English stories varying in quality from Anna Katharine Greene to Shakespeare. When they begin to interpret thoughts and do not just go through motions and speeches, we know we shall be able to talk to and not at them.

There are voluntary "prayers" every morning and compulsory Bible Classes for the dormitory students on First-days, otherwise there is no direct Christian teaching except at the definite requests of the girls themselves. But all the regular teachers are Christians, and because they do not talk Christianity, they are just so much the more bound to act a Christ-like life, and after all "Deeds are better things than words are," as we Friends have maintained. About half the girls are graduated as Christians and many become so afterwards.

It is exhilarating to be helping in a work of this kind, for one feels that a big sort of history is being made; that it is good to be a small cog in the wheel, which is turning out women ready and determined to do pioneer work, and to do it with a blowing trumpet; for Uncle Sula and an education in Christian thought and thoughtfulness have taught them above their fellow women, to sit out the "good that is in the old" and not to condemn that part when introducing the new. They want to keep their exquisite thoughtfulness and courtesy; while they insist upon independence in thought and action. They have learned to adapt and not to copy.

For "THE FRIEND."

AT THE HAGUE.

WM. C. ALLEN.

We had not been more than one hour at The Hague, and were in the front hall of our hotel, when word went round, "The Queen is coming." So all hands rushed out onto the sidewalk where a great commotion was visible. People stood and looked up the street, and vehicles of all kinds went to one side. Then there came into view a handsome coupé-motor car, quite resplendent with gilt and liveries. Queen Wilhelmina sat on the rear seat and looked quite like her pictures—a fair and kindly-faced woman, some thirty-three years of age. She was dressed most simply and wore a little bonnet without a feather and almost without a ribbon. She constantly bowed to the on-lookers, whilst opposite to her sat the Prince Consort. On the same seat with her was the little Princess Royal. Very soon the royal party was out of sight, and all went back to their interrupted duties.

Our hotel at The Hague was very comfortable. In one way we liked it better than the one at Amsterdam. This was because they did not charge us at dinner for not drinking wine. During our first dinner at Amsterdam we ordered some plain water, instead of wine, and were charged extra fifty-six cents American money for it. That was an unfair tax on our temperance principles, so afterwards we dined out.

Our room overlooked a street where the steam and electric trams intersect each other. When a steam tram laboriously puffed its way to the corner a flagman would stop traffic, although it did not seem half so dangerous as the numerous rapidly-moving motor cars. The flagman's efforts were supplemented by a policeman who, with tense face, would stand at attention and elevate his baton in the air. It was quite a ceremony. Opposite our windows was a lovely park, in the greensward of which browsed numerous beautiful deer. When we wanted to get to this room we were obliged, as is generally the case in Europe, to ring the bell at the "lift" entrance for the boy to leave other duties and take us up. Going up the lifts in Europe and England is apt to be quite a function. "Buttons" would come, solemnly unlock the two doors, open them, wave us in, close and lock the doors, put the key in his pocket, pull on the rope, and slowly, with awesome manner, and with numerous creaks and groans our slow and perilous ascent commenced. It was a voyage we would have avoided except for the fact that the high ceilings of each floor made it a long trip upstairs. When we reached our destination the boy would unlock the doors, step outside, stand at attention, gracefully extend his right arm towards our room, make a low bow, and say something in Dutch. So much for hotels.

The Hague is one of the most attractive of cities. It now has about 300,000 people. Its general appearance is that of most Dutch municipalities, but it has the peculiarity of being surrounded by many woods or trees. These give a distinctive charm to one of the most delightful capitals of Europe. The great highways go out into the ordinary country scenes, under fine trees whose straightness and perfect shelter remind one of some parts of southern California. There are numerous public squares and parks which reveal the generous ideals of the men of centuries ago who planned the city. The private residences of the rich present noble façades, many of them of a type of architecture much more tropical than what is generally seen in the cold and foggy north. Maybe their architects borrowed some of these elevations from the many colonies of Holland, in the far and equatorial East. Plate glass is everywhere; and at the broad windows are seen beautiful lace curtains, such as are observed in few lands. I have partaken of hospitality in the private homes of many countries, but know nothing about the homes of Holland. Yet a glimpse here and there of the interiors through open windows, exhibited rich furnishings and rare good taste, which indicated wealth and refinement. The houses of the people of modest means do not look less attractive to the visitor. Everything is absolutely clean.

The Corporation has of recent years erected handsome school-houses. It has also built numerous model dwellings to be rented at low figures to the poor. Extensive schemes are now being developed on this line. A Commission supervises the exterior and interior of many of the new buildings, whether for public or private use, so as to secure a harmoniously beautiful city. Building societies offer prizes on behalf of good architectural treatment. Many towns in our own country, which flattered themselves on the score of progressiveness, could well take lessons from Holland.

Our primary object in visiting The Hague this year was to attend the International Peace Congress. It was held in the historic and beautifully-furnished Ridderzaal, or Hall of the Knights, which is an ancient structure right in the heart of the city. About nine hundred and fifty delegates registered and were present from all parts of the world. The proceedings were largely transacted in French, and accordingly did not particularly edify one unfamiliar with that language. The conduct of the business of the meetings naturally rested largely with continental people who are conversant with different tongues. The delegates were a fine-looking body of men and women, and among them were a large number who are eminent in professional or commercial life throughout the world. No doubt there were some impractical idealists in attendance, but, on the other hand, there were many whose talents and sincerity are able to offer unanswerable arguments, economic, social and religious, against the impoverishments of militarism. After all is said for, or against such conventions the fact remains that they draw attention to what all thoughtful people admit are much needed reforms and inspire attenders with fresh courage and faith to do their share of work for human betterment, when all shall have returned home.

Much courtesy was shown to the delegates by the Burgomaster of The Hague and adjacent cities, and trips were planned for those who desired to participate in them.

Of course the new Peace Palace is an object of great interest. It is located on the edge of the city and is approached by noble promenades about half-way down to the sea. It is surrounded by charming gardens which are the creation of the past few years. This magnificent edifice is of a style one cannot well designate—probably largely Romanesque—but is most harmonious in design, and combines the ideas of strength and gracefulness. Two great towers spring from it, as is so frequently the case from the Dutch town halls. The rose-colored bricks and white stone trimmings, capped by the blue slate roof, are, as a study in architectural color, most satisfying to the eye. The principal rooms of the interior are the great Court of Justice and the Library, but there are many other apartments connected with the objects of the structure. Many nations have contributed picturesque and symbolical offerings to this intended rendezvous of the world. Thus, Norway has donated granite; the Italian government, marble; Great Britain, stained glass; France, a great painting; Japan, silken cartoons, etc. Our own government has granted $20,000 for statuary to represent "Peace through Justice," which, however, has not yet been placed. Andrew Carnegie's gift of $1,500,000 made this beautiful building possible. May it prove to have been reared to the glory of the Highest and to assist in the development of peace and good-will among men!

The Hague has many museums and Scientific Institutions. There is, "de Gevangenpoort," where are shown hideous instruments of torture used in the past, wherewith to try the impossible task of changing men's convictions by force, in politics or religion. Then there is that delightful picture gallery, the Mauritshuis, which is just large enough to be enjoyable. Two celebrated paintings here impressed me the most. One is "Paul Potter's Bull," which, life-size, is considered the most remarkable animal picture in the world. The creature, with nervous pose of neck, and whisking tail, looks as if he might charge out of the canvas straight at you the next minute. Not least in absorbing interest is Rembrandt's "School of Anatomy," dating from the year 1632. Doubtless many readers of this article are familiar with copies of it—the grave and intellectual group listening to the master physician at the dissecting table.

No brief account of The Hague would be complete without referring to the celebrated seaside resort, Scheveningen. It is said that no one outside of Holland can correctly pronounce the word. Scheveningen is really part of the municipality of The Hague, and is connected with the city by numerous steam and electric trams, which glide through pretty vistas of trees, and flower-encircled homes, to the sea. The principal street is the Boulevard, along the beach front, with its handsome promenades, drives and hotels on one side, and sea on the other. There is little bathing. Small pleasure yachts run in and out of the breakers, and both men and women passengers are taken to and from the sand to the boats by stalwart men who perch their cargoes aloft or between them, as they wade through the surf. In England they have little carts to perform the service. But the great wonderment of Scheveningen is the beach chairs. There seem to be thousands of these tall, upright, hooded, yellow wicker chairs spread over the sand; and sitting in them, sheltered from wind and sun, will for hours be seen the matrons, lovers and excursionists, who seek quiet recreation by the sea.

Holland is a great little country. Like other essentially non-militaristic nations its people are rich, its wealth is well distributed, and its bonds set high. Its people are well educated, happy and progressive. They are splendidly polite to strangers. The night we left for England and sat waiting for our train in the richly furnished and heavily carpeted waiting-room in the railway station, at The Hague, we felt glad it had been our lot to see this fascinating country, which, in art, literature, science, and human ideals, has contributed so much to the progress of civilization and righteousness.

THE SACRAMENT OF MONEY.

"In the world that man has made there is one thing above all others through which the influences of evil seem to work,—the devil's sacrament of money. When one thinks of the hatreds and lusts springing to birth around it, and the curse it so often seems to bring alike to 'him that gives and him that takes,' when one sees wealth, remorseless in its pride of power, worshipped and cringed to by its recipients and its courtiers, it is easy to understand how a simple Christlike man like St. Francis would have no dealings with money, and shunned to touch it as we might some plague-infected garment. And yet how often has this hateful thing been redeemed from its base use to be the minister of right. Even money is not hopelessly lost for good. The sacramental efficacy of the widow's mite has not ceased through all the centuries since she cast it, in her humility, into God's treasury. The sand hides the gold of Pharaoh, and the imperial treasures of Augustus are vanished and forgotten, but that poor woman's gift still goes on! She gave to God, to the best and highest that she knew, and in giving, little thought that through the word of the Master of Masters, her tiny coin could become forever a sacrament to humanity."—F. EDMUND HARVEY, in a Wayfarer's Faith.

"A WEALTHY man who obtains his wealth honestly and uses it rightly is a great blessing to the community."

Is not His will the wisest?
Is not His way the best?
And in perfect acquiescence
Is there not perfect rest?

For "THE FRIEND."

OHIO COWBOYS IN NEW ENGLAND.

DILLWYN STRATTON.

By invitation from my friend, M. L. B., of Salem, Ohio, I joined him in an investigation of some of the Jersey cattle in a few of the States on our way to northern Vermont, where we made some stay, and visited many herds before each of us returned with a carload of our choosing from that section.

Our route going over included stops at some famous herds near Cleveland, Ohio, East Aurora, New York and central Long Island. We spent a night on Lake Erie from Cleveland to Buffalo. The heavy wind with occasional showers of the day before gave us promise of a rough lake. Before retiring the ship lurched about so that the passengers made a sorry sight as they attempted to move about on deck.

We roused in the night with such mixed notions of gravity as we had never experienced. At first it seemed a dream but the fact dispelled the illusion when we found that the resultant of the forces that seemed at play with us would take any new angle not calculated upon. The rocking in a straightforward way was rather pleasing but the new combinations were bewildering, to put the case in moderate terms.

The man at the news stand confirmed our estimate of the night when he said it was the roughest he had known. The next night but one we spent on Long Island Sound on the Fall River boat. Very calm indeed this proved to be. We arrived in the city of Fall River in the gray dawn and exposed our ignorance by asking if the great stone buildings we saw were penitentiary equipment. We were surprised to learn that they were the immense cotton mills. As we wended our way amongst them we fancied that their cold, forbidding exterior might well conduce to the "Cry of the Children." "As the factory wheels go round and round." Our question to each fellow passenger was "Where is North Dartmouth?" Our three days away from home and friends increased our longing for the plain little first-day meeting that we supposed was held at North Dartmouth. They knew of the town by that name but there was no village or city so designated. The conductor thought Spring Mills was in the town of North Dartmouth. By this time we remembered that in New England what we call a township is called a town. We also knew that Friends from New England asking for New Garden Monthly Meeting would fail utterly to find it at the town bearing that name and learn that Winona, full three miles away, was the home of said New Garden Monthly Meeting. But little inquiry set us upon the road to the home of our kind friend, Job S. Gidley. His hearty greeting and good visit till eleven, the hour for meeting, served to compose our minds as the small company settled into a profound silence. The ministry is not so easily passed from in a small company as in the larger congregations where each admires how the message fits another than himself.

It is encouraging to know that their meeting has gained four new members the past year. The afternoon was spent in calls upon friends and a tour to old Aptonagansett Meeting-house, built in 1791 upon the same site as the first house for worship in that section which was built in 1699. Like most houses about it the weatherboards are shingles. These have been kept in a fair condition by renewals as time went on till the building and roof do not seem so old. Once inside we realize the antique in the famous andirons that came from England, the big fire-place and sharp-angled old benches. If the Pilgrims really boiled the peas they wore in their shoes why have not Friends learned to set the backs of their benches in conformity to the comfort of the occupants? We guessed at the seats occupied by the three who still worship there. Would that they might draw closer together! The scattered remnants, even though it may seem a miracle that they have been preserved unto the present day, greatly need the care and fellowship of the living church. With some of their numbers, expression by way of the ministry and otherwise has made them polished vessels; while others, feeling themselves in narrow boundaries have repressed expression or kept their lights well covered. May the Lord of the Harvest till it out in a large place.

Our three hours in Boston were full of interest. For one hour we made a tour of original discovery on foot. We then made ourselves possessors of Boston Common, the old State House, the old North Meeting-house and a lasting impression of Second-day morning's rush on the crowded street in the rain. Then came the hour and a half auto tour to Harvard, classic halls and everything else of interest, so promised at least, but such trips are surfeiting in their voluptuities; yet afterward memory testifies to what we saw.

Of the six days following we cannot go into particular, yet we would commend the railway journey up the Connecticut and White Rivers, the auto trips to the mountain homes, the very many houses connected with the barns by well-tilled woodsheds, and last of all the real homes in America of the persistent, patient and efficient Jersey cow. In other sections they come and go but here they remain to find a living on the rocky steeps, often to shelter themselves behind huge granite ledges from the fall winds, and during the long winter to be the objects of tender care by real dairymen.

We ate with three stuffed moose heads looking down upon our table and were assured that later in the season the very mountains upon which we bought our cows were the homes of the wild deer.

We will long remember the last cow we bought in the mountain section known as Greensboro Bend. Here the railway goes eight miles around to cover one mile across. The party had word we would see his cow. The day had been full. Five o'clock and no supper found the college-bred son of our host with his estimable wife (who by the way had completed a college course) in the Concord wagon to wind about the mountain for five miles to the home of the little Jersey. The sunset was fine behind Mt. Mansfield, the highest of the Green Mountains. The dark green of the evergreen, the lighter shade of the cedar and the rich variation of the ripe maple leaves, half still clinging to their native boughs, with rich carpet beneath made an inspiring scene, and we thought no wonder our New England poets knew, loved and translated nature. Another scene was ushered in with gathering clouds and distant thunder. We had now begun climbing the mountain, the twilight gave place to darkness and the rain was gently pattering upon our big umbrella, when we reached the three-story barn, the home of our cow. The bridge led from the road into the third story where the hay is unloaded. Here our horse and wagon found shelter. The middle story was for cows and horses while the basement was tool shed and shelter for young stock. By the time we had witnessed the milking, investigated her pedigree and record of merit, and agreed upon terms, the moderate rain had become a torrent, soon again slacking to a shower. Our cow went fairly well with its old owner walking behind but when he returned home it was a case of walk and lead her. The darkness seemed almost a wall about the rays of our dash lamp for quite a distance, when the moon broke through the clouds to show us the complex outlines of Walden Heights. The buildings of the late Governor Bell's farm place, and the nicely kept sugar grove with its camp house painted white were located upon this summit from which we descended the long hill to the home where supper and sympathy awaited us. Of the latter we felt no need as nature in her varied moods made amends for our small inconvenience.

The tuberculin test gave our twenty-six kine a clean bill of health, so the nine hundred mile journey began. We provided mangers, racks and water casks and made a loft in the car of the straight cedar telephone poles so abundant in Vermont, upon which the supply of hay and bran were stored.

Notwithstanding these provisions we complied with the humane law calling for five hours' rest for every three or six hours in the car. Life in a caboose afforded a good angle from which to look, not only upon natural scenery, but also those of our fellow-men who are vested with vast responsibilities and tried by many vexations and perplexities. The beautiful animals were sufficient introduction to the many different train crews to make a welcome for their caretaker. Two companies gave their cabins a fresh scrubbing and a third thoroughly cleaned their windows. They asked many questions about the Jersey's instincts, history and habits. They all bore testimony in one way or another to their love of animals. They show great care to avoid accidents and contrary to preconceived ideas their feelings are not callous to the responsibilities of life.

They generally offer one side of the deck or little glass cupola in the top of the cab to the stranger and they visit him there by turns. From this vantage point we discussed one another's problems. They are from the best American, German or Irish blood and mostly use good English. They read the dailies and other literature from the Bible down to the rank Socialist tract. One conductor remarked that if thirty per cent. of the brakemen talked and read Socialism, there were not more than five per cent. of the conductors and engineers so inclined. He said their youth and inexperience sought something thrilling. The worst feature manifest in their work was the attitude toward ownership brought about by some labor leaders and socialist teachings.

It is not uncommon to be eight hours late on a through freight train, to be hungry and generally worried out. Such trains are off schedule and subject to continual misfortune.

Some of the men give way on these occasions to wholesale denunciations in which we can analyze the results of their false teachings. From such occasions we suppose it is said that a brakeman leads a dog's life. True, he is as a cog in a great wheel, but there are very many of these cogs required in the vast machine and our confidence is increased that not a few of these are filling up their measure of usefulness.

If we knew them better we would love them more and avenues would be opened up to spread before them the teachings of our loving Saviour.

THE following is a quotation from a late German paper: "Three thousand artificial legs wanted by the government of a nation at present in war." Of course this refers to one of the Balkan States. In that miserable part of Europe the "Wants" might be indefinitely extended, for example: Wanted, 800,000,000 and the additional property lost in the first war; wanted, 800,000,000 and the additional property lost in the second war; wanted back, the 80,000 dead Bulgarian sons; wanted, the 30,000 dead Servians; wanted, the 10,000 dead Greeks; wanted, the 8,000 dead Montenegrins; wanted, the 100,000 dead Turks—all lost in the first Balkan war. Wanted back, the 60,000 dead Bulgarians; wanted, the 40,000 dead Servians; wanted, the 30,000 dead Greeks—all lost in the second Balkan war. Wanted, some hand to push back the onrushing third war in that area of misery; wanted, something more effective than a "Treaty of Bucharest," which settled nothing, wanted, a cessation of such ghastly human behavior, wanted, by civilization, a civilized conduct of national affairs. "Three thousand artificial legs wanted by the government of a nation at present in war." Indeed!

THE loss to France from the expulsion of the Huguenots extends to the present day and to many lands. A recent illustration is that of the deceased Swedish inventor, Count Carl de Laval. This son of an old Huguenot refugee family settled in Sweden, has made the name of Laval known everywhere by his centrifugal cream separator. After a brilliant career in the polytechnic he devoted himself to scientific invention, devised methods for the practical use of phosphorus and nickel for employing water power in pulverizing ore, for casting zinc electrolytically, and engaged in important studies in the utilization of the turbine. The Huguenots of the seventeenth century were famous for their industries and their technical skill. The economic loss to France from their departure has been incalculable.

HE WILL NOT FAIL THEE.

He will not fail thee—believe it still!
The waters may dry of the singing rill,
The sands of the desert stretch afar
East and west, to the sunset bar
Can He forget who hath never forgot?
The Lord who loveth thee slumbereth not;
Rest on that love, nor fear, nor fret,
Thou shalt see His great deliverance yet.

His promises fail not; day by day
Thou shalt find fresh strength for the onward way,
If only thy glance go up to Him,
As the journey winds through the shadows dim,
The fears that vexed thee shall pass and fade,
And nothing shall make thine heart afraid;
Anxious questionings and doubts shall cease,
For He shall keep thee in perfect peace.

He will not fail thee—nor count it true
'Tis only to trust Him the whole way through.
The prayer we win not, His plan may cross;
The gain we strive for be endless loss;
We cannot judge, and we cannot know,
But 'til we can let the worries go,
And look for the calm that He gives instead—
The trusting heart hath no room for dread.

We toil and struggle for many an aim,
Who are slow to trust in His blessed name,
The waters of earthly comfort fail,
And all things change—'tis the old, old tale;
But summer or winter, heat or cold,
Still doth the love of the Lord unfold.
In the darkest hour, when thine heart doth quail,
Be strong—His compassions never fail.

—MARY GORGES.

For "THE FRIEND."

THE FEAST IN THE UPPER ROOM.

BY WM. C. MEADER.

(Copied by Edith Sharpless.)

To the Christian, how much of tender and touching interest centers around that gathering in the large upper room at Jerusalem, when Jesus for the last time kept the Passover with His disciples before He suffered. This was the last occasion when that ancient ordinance should possess its old time significance. It was now soon to be fulfilled in the Kingdom of God. He whom the Paschal Lamb typified, which was slain, first at the Passover in Egypt and then through all of their generations at every recurring memorial feast, until Christ should come, was now through His death and sufferings to open a way for a far more glorious deliverance for captive souls; and thus abrogate the old dispensation, and usher in the brightness and the fulness of the Gospel day, whose beams should illuminate and cheer a lost and fallen world, and thus unbar a portal for the escape and enlargement of souls held captive in a worse than Egyptian bondage, which was foretold by inspired seers of the olden times, when the bonds of the oppressed should be loosed and the power of the oppressor should be broken, when mourners should be comforted, and the glad tidings thereof should spread from sea to sea and from the rivers to the world's outmost habitable bound.

The Divine Master who was with His disciples in that upper room was the Lamb of God, who came to take away the sins of the world, by and through that sacrifice which was to be so soon consummated. For a few years He had been teaching and preaching through Judea, accompanied by a few chosen ones, whom He first called Disciples, and then made Apostles. He had gathered a little church around Him, but He told them that He could not always be with them in that outward appearance, as their visible companion and friend, but as a loving Saviour, Redeemer and Comforter He would be with them to the end of the world.

As the time drew near when He was to be taken from them, His love and compassion for them did not diminish and His tender and loving discourses were designed to strengthen and prepare them for the trials and provings which awaited them. How instructing and encouraging the thought that He who was and is the Son of the Father in Heaven and who was appointed by that Father as Lord of lords and King of kings, should bestow such a high and holy commission upon His mortal followers, and clothe them with power and authority to build for Him upon the foundation of His eternal Truth, a spiritual structure, where God is known, loved and worshipped, in which burdened and oppressed souls can find a refuge and a sanctuary more glorious and enduring than was Solomon's wonderful temple upon Mount Zion, the city of the Hebrews' love.

Those Disciples and Apostles of His choosing He taught to run on His errands, while He was yet with them, and promised the same loving care and regard for them when He should go home to His Father and leave them as His ambassadors to promote His holy cause, and to this day He sends His children on His missions, instructs them by His Spirit and clothes them with His grace. His light shines upon their pathways and in their fields of labor, and He still beautifies the feet of those who, upon the mountains or beside the sea or wherever human hearts are found, proclaim the glad tidings of good, and call subjects to His Kingdom of love, joy and peace. "Lo, I am with you always," is still the sweet assurance of the Heavenly Guide, who leads safely and surely to the fulness of blessing and at last crowns with the assurance of His salvation. On the occasion of the last Passover He commissioned two of His disciples to go and prepare a place for the feast, but He had another servant, unseen and unknown by them, who was also, with loving hands, preparing for that gathering of the Master's with His flock, which He had so much desired. In answer to the inquiry of Peter and John as to the place, He told them to go into the city and they would meet a man bearing a pitcher of water, and they must follow him to the house he should enter and say to the good man of the house, "Where is the guest chamber where the Master may eat the Passover with His disciples," and He told them that the man would show them a large upper room, furnished, and that they were to prepare the feast. They went and found the water-bearer and their Master's nameless friend, who showed them the upper room, and there they made the necessary preparations and then awaited the coming of their Lord.

Who that friend was who so freely opened his house for his Saviour's use we can never know, neither the name of him who was bringing the water, probably for their use on that occasion. The sweet and loving records from the pens of the evangelists do not reveal their identity. The master of the house might have been one whose heart had been touched and awakened by some words of Jesus' ministry; his eyes might have been illuminated with the brightness of the Truth emanating from the Divine fountain of life and light; he might have been one who had received some benefit of healing from the great Physician, or his mourning spirit might have received some consolation from the holy comforter, or he might have been one who had heard from those blessed lips the sweet language, "thy sins are forgiven thee," but how or when he became interested in the Saviour it matters not that we should know. From some source he had such a sense of the Master's need as to keep his upper room from other guests at that time, when, it has been said, that every Jewish home in Jerusalem was required for the entertainment of the great throng of Hebrews from all Palestine who flocked thither on every recurrence of that great memorial feast.

There is a secret communion between the Saviour and those who accept and prize His love, whereby His will is made known, and it is not incredible that the nameless householder should have felt a strong impulse which prompted him to keep his room apart and furnished for the homeless one, and at just the proper time to go or send to the fountain for the supply of water for the needs of the Master and His little band of followers who were to gather there. We do not learn that he was at the feast himself, probably he was not, for it seems that Jesus earnestly desired that the assembly should be His first chosen disciples with Himself, for it was to be an occasion where joy and grief, innocence and guilt, heart burdening sorrow and kindly cheer should strangely commingle, for with the eleven who loved their Lord and were loyal to Him was to tarry for awhile the dark brooding spirit of the traitor. "At that feast words of fearful import were to denounce the doom of the betrayer," woe unto that man, it would have been good for him if he had never been born," and sentences of the sweetest consolation were to cheer the hearts of those who were dim-sighted and weak, but of guiltless and loving spirits.

At the appointed time Jesus came and sat down in that quiet upper room with His chosen witnesses and standard-bearers, and there He again told them of what awaited Him, and how one of their own number should betray Him into the hands of those who sought His life.

The burden of the sins of the world rested upon His Spirit, the base ingratitude of the traitor He keenly felt: the lonely prayer in the garden, while His friends were asleep, the arrest and unjust trial and condemnation, the scourgings, the buffeting, the mockings and the taunting cries were all foreseen by Him and were deeply impressed upon His mind. Before Him arose the cross, the languishing and the seeming desolation, in all their revolting features; the consciousness of Judas' guilt, and the weakness of him who should deny Him, and of the eleven who should all forsake Him in the fearful hour of His sufferings were present with Him; yet the gentle spirit yearned in love toward them as He said: "I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer." In this hour of the Saviour's humiliation, when so much of sorrow and burden was upon Him, His gentle, tender love embraced the spirits of his own loyal Disciples, whom He owned, though they as yet did not fully understand Him or His teachings, neither could they comprehend the nature and extent of that love that would embrace them as His valiant soldiers in the spiritual warfare. He wished to cheer and comfort them while He was yet with them and prepare them for their ordeal or trial after He should be taken from them; but the free flowing of the fountains of consolation seemed for awhile to be hindered. Shadows fell upon the brightness of that upper room, the season had not yet quite come for that deeper and sweeter communion with His faithful ones, for the traitor was still with them. His communications at that time seemed burdened with thoughts of their parting and of loneliness, proving and sorrow. He took the cup and gave thanks and offered it to them, but told them He would no more drink of it until the kingdom of God should come, and with thanksgiving He took the bread and broke it for them, but His plaintive words revealed to them a mournful truth. "Behold the hand of him who betrayeth me is with me on the table," and then He pronounced a woe upon the betrayer. This startling declaration brought a sadness over them and they began to wonder which of them should do this thing. The Evangelist Mark says, "They began to be sorrowful and say unto Him one by one, 'Is it I? is it I?'" But they were not humbled for they quickly began to strive among themselves, which of them should be considered the greatest, or as some suppose the meaning was, which of them should have the chief seat and most honorable place at that table and that feast. The selfish, praise-loving and ceremonial Hebrews made great account of having the highest places at their feasts and in their synagogues, and those disciples, as yet very much unlearned in the school of Christ, might very naturally have striven about their seats on that occasion. So weak and foolish is human nature, that even when so near the scenes of infinite sorrow, the cross and the grave, they could engage in a petty, unseemly quarrel over their own selfish aspirations. But the Lord in mildness reproved them and told them that he who would be greatest should be as the youngest, and he that would be chief should be as him who served.

Then He called their attention to the fact, that though they with one accord esteemed Him their Lord and Master, yet He was among them as one that served them, and to impress the lesson of humility indelibly upon their minds, He then arose and laid aside His garment, and girded Himself with a towel, poured water into a basin and began to wash their feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith He was girded. It appears that the most of them submitted to that menial service from their Master without protest, but when He came to impulsive Peter, he impetuously declared, "Thou shalt never wash my feet," evidently thinking it would be wrong to allow His Master to perform for him a service so humble, but Jesus gently assured him that if He washed him not he had no part with his dear Master; this brought the bold but now humbled disciple to a sense of what he should lose, for Peter really loved and honored the Lord, and prized His promises and regard.

(To be concluded.)

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

HOW NATURE PROTECTS.—Did it ever occur to you to wonder why, as between animals of much the same general form and size—say as between the zebra, the horse, and the mule—there should exist such marked differences, and differences which are perpetuated, generation after generation?

The problem, which puzzled the early scientists has come, within the last few decades, to be quite well understood. The answer is that these changes are all part and parcel of nature's great scheme for the protection of her children, the promotion of their comfort and, in the case of the wild creatures, for enabling them to avoid their enemies and to gain a livelihood.

For example: There formerly roamed the African deserts a little creature much like the giraffe, but with just a normal neck. Here and there he cantered over the desert, feeding on the succulent leaves of the palms that were within easy reach.

One year a blight fell on the palm-trees; they withered and the leaves died and dropped off, beginning with the lowest and gradually running up to the top. Along with their passing went the food of the short-necked giraffes. By and by there were only the top leaves left to eat. The smaller animals could not reach these and so perished for want of food. Only those giraffes whose necks were long enough to reach the leaves high up survived.

Now as provision for just this thing it is one of nature's inflexible laws that not only does like reproduce like, but individual characteristics are accentuated. Here were only the extra long-necked giraffes left to interbreed. Naturally, only this sort would appear among the young, and so the new breed appeared with necks longer than any giraffe had known before. Throughout nature one finds, therefore, this gradual adaptation to locality and conditions.

Every year on the coasts of Labrador and Newfoundland thousands of near-seal are slaughtered for their hide, which is a substitute for shoe-leather. The baby seal or "pups," as they are called, are snow-white with a mottling that is grayish.

Were these baby seals the dull brown or black of the adults and cavorting here and there on the ice-fields, don't you see, they would stand out in relief. Bears and other foes would see them, make for them and devour them. But against the white ice the white seal pup is almost invisible even at a very close distance.

By and by, though, the ice on which these babies are born has broken loose and, caught in the currents, is drifting southward. It meets the Gulf Stream and melts. The baby seal must then put to sea. If, there, it were a snowy white object such as it was before, to be seen swimming the deep blue waters, its foes would spy it at once and devour it forthwith. But by the time the ice has come so far south as the Gulf Stream the baby's coat has turned to brown and he's safe.

How does this happen? Here is the probable explanation. Once on a time, in a herd of seal, some few were a bit lighter colored than others. Now in the course of time, the seals fell afoul of their foes. The bear, let us suppose, saw the darker-skinned babies and destroyed them, but the lighter had the more chance to escape. So the lighter, only, were left to interbreed, and this seeming "fault" of a white skin at birth became accentuated, perpetuated.

The American buffalo is a notable specimen. See how that great broad forehead is built to withstand the gale that sweeps the prairies. See the shaggy growth just over the eyes, to protect, as he lowers the head, from the sand and dust that drive over the plain. Verily Mother Nature equipped this child to withstand anything save the man-made bullet.

Look at the zebra, and in his mottled coat you see the shadows cast by palm fronds on the sands of his native desert. Set in the edge of the palms the baby and mother are hard to tell from the wavering background of shrubbery. And so nature protects.

Throughout the animal kingdom these adaptations stare one in the face, so to speak. The wonderful coat of the deer, white in winter, making him almost invisible against the snow; the horns, in form and color like the branches of trees—what better cloak could conceal him from unfriendly eyes?

Descend to humbler forms and on our trees you will find, if you look sharp, the walking-stick, a wee bit of an insect that, for all the world, resembles a few twigs thrown together. On the bark, too, there may rest a butterfly or a night-moth, with wings so nearly the color of the wood that only when it proceeds to stir does one recognize it as a thing apart.

In his "Childhood of Animals" P. Chalmers Mitchell says, "There is no quality more generally useful to an animal than that of being inconspicuous. The living world is a very serious game of hide-and-seek, in which nearly every adult animal and those young ones that are not hidden or protected by their parent must join. The penalties are severe; those that are caught are eaten, and those that fail to catch starve. Animals may hunt their prey by scent, but there nearly always comes a critical final moment, when they must be able to see the object on which they are to pounce. Animals may escape by swiftness, but it is extremely useful if they are so invisible that their enemy cannot easily follow them by sight, and still more useful if when they are hard pressed, or when they have reached a favorable spot, they can suddenly fade into the background and become invisible."

Throughout the world this adaptation has led to like seeking like. It's a wonderful system and one full of interest. Keep an eye out for it in the next wild thing you see or seek. You will learn lessons you could never get otherwise, be assured.—Our Dumb Animals.

ELIZABETH MILBANK ANDERSON HAS given $650,000 for social welfare laboratories to be conducted by the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor. Some of the specific ends which this fund has in view are the increase of public comfort stations and public laundries, medical inspection of school children and care of their teeth, provision of sanitary drinking fountains, introduction of public bake-shops, extermination of common disease-carriers, as the house fly and roach.

HERE is a second sample instance of the social activity of Christians which "social talkers" would do well to mark and inwardly digest. The Young Women's Christian Association of Seattle during the past year found employment for 3380 girls,—1426 in business positions and 1954 in domestic work. The number of meals served in its cafeteria reached a total of 124,628, of social gatherings and entertainments 4575; of travelers assisted 5601. This Association has a unique protective department. By means of this, care is taken of girls and women who, for various reasons, cannot be brought into contact with the others of the Association. The number of cases reported, investigated and disposed of amounted to 900. Three hundred and ninety-two married women, widows and deserted wives, were provided with legal aid; thirty-four un-away girls traced and found, two hundred and sixty-four girls from eleven to twenty years protected from absolute crime, two hundred and thirty girls in financial need given temporary aid. And this work, carried on at an expense of $85,550, comes within $10,000 of self-support (from hotel, café, membership fees, fees from employment agency, etc.).

FRIENDLY NEWS.

THE State of Maryland has the unenviable reputation of being one of four states of the Union where "Book Making" is allowed at horse races. Our Representative Meeting has had a Committee under appointment for a year or more with a view of using whatever pressure it could command to stop the unholy practise. A number of meetings have been held, one of them with a prominent Friend from Baltimore, where the matter is also claiming serious attention.

On Sixth-day last week George M. Warner and William B. Harvey, members of the Sub-committee of the Representative Meeting, went to Baltimore to confer with the body of Friends there which corresponds with our Representative Meeting; it is hoped that in the united efforts of the two organizations, effective work may be accomplished, having in view legislation that will at an early date abolish this sort of gambling.

SEVERAL young women of the Yearly Meeting who are closely identified with the interests of the Friends' School in Japan, propose to hold a sale of Japanese articles, etc., at the Friends' Institute on South Twelfth Street, on the sixth of Twelfth Month, at two o'clock.

AN article of considerable length appeared in a recent number of the London Friend under the title of "A Regiment of Quakers."

It seems that an Irish church officer made the statement last month that a regiment of Friends fought in the American War of Independence. He said he was surprised himself that the Friends did not deny the necessity of violence in the extreme case of self-defence, and further he stated that it was authentic history that in the American war of Independence a regiment of them fought against the British because their liberties and rights were being infringed.

Of course such a statement, which as a matter of fact received wide circulation, was not allowed to go unchallenged. It was made clear to the Bishop that he was in error and this is his explanation:

"I have in my common-place book a reference to the 'Letters of John and Abigail Adams' (pp. 60), but I have omitted to note which volume. John was Ambassador in Paris, and Abigail writes to him that she has seen 'in this city' (viz., Philadelphia) 'whole companies of Quakers, in uniform, going through the manual and manœuvres like regular troops.' I must retract whatever difference is implied in 'whole companies' instead of 'regiment,' spoken from memory.

"What I myself count more important is that I have since been informed that their action was repudiated by your authorities, and that they lingered for some years after the war as a separate communion. If I had known this, I should either not have mentioned them at all or have shaped my reference differently. Of course, you are quite entitled to make any use of this."

The facts of history are these and one will find them stated in Isaac Sharpless' books, "A History of the Quaker Government in Pennsylvania" and "The Quakers in the Revolution." Less than five hundred Friends so ardently espoused the American side as to accept positions of one kind or another in the American Army, the number who joined the British side were almost too few to count. There were at this time about 30,000 Friends in Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, and those who actively advocated war were "testified against" as out of harmony with Friends' views concerning war. A few very valuable men were disowned, but most who were testified against were those whose conduct had already disqualified them for membership in the Society.

Care was taken to call the Bishop's attention to the recently-issued letter of advice by Belfast Friends, the attitude of Friends in Pennsylvania toward the Indians during the seventy years of peace that Colony enjoyed, and also the heroic attitude of Friends in the South during the Civil War were brought to the Bishop's notice and he and others were abundantly satisfied that thus far in Quaker history the mixing of the name with the words regiment and military companies is about as unlikely of satisfactory union as that of water and oil.

LITTLE FALLS OF GUNPOWDER MEETING.—While delivering a talk on old meeting-houses recently in the city of York, Pa., I was told of the tradition given of the founding of the meeting now known as Little Falls, Md., formerly known as Little Falls of Gunpowder. It was that a soldier in the Colonial army, not being satisfied with the method of worship in the neighborhood in which he lived betook himself to the woods each First-day morning and with his dog would sit down in quiet meditation on an old log and commune with God. Others, noticing him pined him, and shortly afterwards they discovered that these were people about twenty miles away called Quakers who worshipped this way, so they journeyed over to meet with them and were accepted by the Quakers, even though the spokesman, William Amos, was dressed in full regimentals. Following this a log meeting-house was erected at the Little Falls of the Gunpowder Creek, and meetings here grew to be quite large. William Amos became an acceptable and valuable minister and continued in the ministry for seventy years. Such was the tradition given by one of his descendants.

Mentioning this incident to a Friend in Philadelphia, S. Mason McCollin, he remembered a history of this same meeting given by George Scott, of Deer Creek Monthly Meeting, about twenty-five years ago, the following copy of which seems to bear out in all essential particulars the interesting history of this meeting:

Account taken from manuscript of Daniel Longstreth, of Wormioister, Bucks Co., Pa.

"The following was related to me by B. Fussell, Twelfth Month 21, 1832. William Amos, an officer in the Militia, and a member of the Episcopal Church, feeling his mind uneasy, under their ceremonies, and by attention to that which had opened his understanding, felt drawn to an old School House, and on his way thither, to invite two young men of his acquaintance, Aquilla Thompson and Daniel Treadway to accompany him. Finding their minds quickened, they continued to meet there on First-days, and in six weeks their number had increased to nine persons, when Joseph Jones, a minister from Deer Creek, came and sat with them. William said, this was the first time he had ever known the good of preaching. They continued to meet, until their number increased to thirty, and believing themselves to be what the world called Quakers, they deputed five or six of their number to attend Gunpowder Monthly Meeting and request to be received, which was quickly granted. William Amos appeared in the ministry, and remained an approved minister among them for over seventy years. He died Twelfth Month 2, 1814, and his wife survived him about ten days. She had been a lunatic for forty years and he had desired to outlive her. Bartholomew Fussell called to see William Amos, a short time before his close, and taking him by the hand, Wm. said "Now I am ready to go to my dear and crucified Lord, but my fervent desires continue for the brethren, that when they depart out of this life, they may be prepared to receive the blessed promise. 'Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you', instead of 'depart, ye cursed, into everlasting punishment.' Little Falls Meeting-house stands on the site of the old school-house. Wm. Amos was received into meeting with his regimentals on. Daniel Treadway died in 1811. Aquilla Thompson died the same year, and his wife within six hours of him."

W. G. HEAVOCK.

HARRISBURG, Pa.

CALN QUARTERLY MEETING was held at Coatesville the fourteenth of Eleventh Month. Its small membership was pretty well represented in the attendance, and among these the children were heartily welcomed. The presence of visitors from other meetings added greatly to the sense of Christian fellowship thus realized. The meeting for worship was held to be a solemn and helpful one in the ministry offered, bringing a deep sense of responsibility to many hearts. The business meeting was opened in joint session to hear the report of the nominating Committee for the appointment of Friends to canvass for the proposed new building at Arch Street. Their report was accepted by the meeting.

The lunch served after the meetings brought all together in social opportunities that were enjoyed.

SINCE the article by Walter L. Moore in regard to Bamegat was published to THE FRIEND, the meeting-house there has been so thoroughly in appearance that one would not now recognize it from his description. The roof has been renewed, the weather-boards re-nailed and other needed carpenter-work done. Two coats of paint, from which the roof has not escaped, makes the whole appearance most neat and attractive. A year from the house, the grounds have received careful attention and the fence has been re-built and painted. No longer do the premises suggest neglect and a lost cause. The whole outlay on the improvements has amounted to about $300. Of this amount the Shrewsbury Trust supplied $75, the balance coming from personal contributions.

It is in this meeting-house that the Visitation Committee of Haddonfield and Salem Quarter propose to hold a meeting next First-day, the 30th, at 3 P. M.

A REQUEST has come from the Christiansburg School in Va. for a selected list of about fifty books for the Library. The list is in the hands of Agnes L. Tierney, 118 W. Coulter Street, Germantown. Any Friends interested to contribute books from this list may communicate with her.

ON Seventh-day the 22nd, a meeting of conference was held in Media, those attending it being the Ministers, Elders and Overseers of Concord Quarterly Meeting. Some one has asked what was the result of the meeting? A question about as far off the mark as any question could be.

The call for the meeting originated in Birmingham Select Meeting a month ago, and having gained the sanction and approval of the Select Quarterly Meeting the meeting was held with no expectation that there would be visible and tangible results, but that the cause which all the members felt to be a most precious one, would be advanced.

All who could be present were doubtless in attendance, the company numbering almost one hundred. After a period of silence of unusual solemnity, there were several vocal offerings in the real life that helped to crown the meeting as one of favor, in which the Master's guardianship was rightly owned.

WE believe general interest throughout Philadelphia Yearly Meeting is felt in the approaching Conference to be held at Fourth and Arch Streets, Philadelphia, Twelfth Month 5th, 1913. The programme is here given.

Effort has been made to get notices of invitations to the heads of families throughout the Yearly Meeting, but as the list of families was not complete, a cordial invitation is hereby extended to all our members.

THE DUTIES AND FUNCTIONS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

PROGRAMME:

Afternoon Session, Four O'clock.

EDWARD E. WILDMAN, Chairman.

The Fostering Care of the Meeting for its Members—Rebecca S. Conard, Frances T. Rhoads.

Religious Education—The Need of Religious Education, M. Albert Linton. Mission Study, Elizabeth B. Jones. Bible Teaching in Our Schools, Ediel M. Whitson. Religious Education in Our Social Work, Harold Evans. Denominational Teaching, Richard C. Brown. Round Table Work as a Method, Francis R. Taylor.

The Need of the Spiritual, John B. Garrett.

PLEAS. Supper will be served from 5:45 until 7 o'clock to all who notify Emma Smalley, Media, Pa., before Twelfth Month 1st, of their intention of being present.

PROGRAMME:

Evening Session, 7:30 o'clock.

C. WALTER BORTON, Chairman.

Summary of Replies to the Following Questions as Answered by Many of Our Younger Friends, Ruby Davis.

How Can I Become a Greater Strength to My Meeting?

How Can I Increase Loyalty to the Society of Friends?

What Duty Have I to My Neighbor?

What is There in Quakerism That I Would Like to Share With Others?

The Duty of the Church to the Community, Rufus M. Jones.

What is the Function of the Church, Alfred C. Garrett.

A MEETING for worship at Upper Springfield, N. J., was held under the care of a committee of Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting, on the afternoon of First-day, Eleventh Month 9th. The meeting-house bears the date of 1727, but the Preparative and Particular Meetings held here were laid down in 1841, since which time the house has been occasionally used by both branches of Friends. A few years ago the house was burned, but it was rebuilt by persons in the neighborhood. The older part of the house was restored, and it has been refurnished with old benches from other meeting-houses, so that it continues to have the appearance of an ancient meeting-house. It is the only centre of religious influence within several miles, and a "Friends' First-day School" under the care of a Presbyterian, draws from twenty to forty persons of various denominations, who seem to feel this neutral ground. Behind the meeting-house is a large graveyard, the part near the meeting-house having been used by Friends, and a section beyond by the public generally, as is evidenced by the larger stones.

The meeting-house is east of Mt. Holly, two and one-half miles from Jobstown and rather nearer to Wrightstown, which is on a good road. The house stands on a wooded ridge in the midst of large stock farms, that seem capable of greater development. Very heavy rain had fallen in the morning, and only as we approached the meeting-house did the sun come out and glorify the green fields and the richly colored trees. The roads were still very wet, and this fact, and the uncertain weather were explanations of the absence of neighborhood people, who would otherwise have filled the house, we were told by the few of them who did come to the meeting. There were Friends in good number, however, from Pennsylvania as well as from New Jersey. Four ministers shared the vocal service of the meeting, urging us to the service of our King through service to the least of His, reminding us of the supreme importance of the soul, and exhorting us to perfect surrender to what God requires of us, even at the cost of great self-denial. The loving interest for the neighborhood which had drawn Friends to hold the meeting was also expressed.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—It was stated in the Public Ledger of this city on the 18th inst.: "Hobble skirts and high heels for training school teachers yesterday were barred by Superintendent Brumbaugh, who issued a set of rules to govern the dress of those women who entered the Teachers' Training Class for Playground Instruction of the Board of Education. The first rule governing the athletic activities of the course places the minimum width of the student's dress at the bottom at two and a half yards and the dress must reach to the ankle. No heels more than one inch high will be tolerated. Jewelry, fancy shirtwaists and freak hair-dressing also are prohibited."

Penny breakfasts were served to twenty-five children on the 18th inst., at the Durham School, Sixteenth and Lombard Streets, in this city. The meal consisted of one dish shredded wheat, one-half pint of milk and three dates. The experiment of feeding the children at the school was undertaken by the Home and School League of the Durham School. At present the breakfast is served only to the open-window class. Should it prove successful it will be introduced throughout the school. Breakfast is served at 9:30 in the morning.

It is stated that the recent storm on the Great Lakes resulted in heavy loss of life and shipping, especially on the eastern shore of Lake Huron. The James Caruthers, which was the largest freight steamer on the Lakes, was among the lost. Cleveland, O., had its traffic blocked for some days by a heavy snowstorm. The loss of life in the recent storm on the Great Lakes is now estimated at 200. Never before has Lake Huron been the scene of such destruction.

It is stated from Detroit, Mich., that that city has supplied America and the rest of the world with 10,000,000 stoves. The four big plants in this city are making an average of almost 1500 stoves a day. Their combined output runs about 440,000 stoves this year, and they employ from 5000 to 6000 men.

In a lecture lately delivered by Frederick L. Hoffman, an expert in life insurance statistics, he stated that cancer is on the increase in this country. "We have doubled our death rate from cancer in the last forty years," he said. "Deaths from cancer are increasing rapidly year by year. Last year more than 75,000 persons in the United States died from cancer. In spite of the good work of hospitals and special institutions, using radium, X-rays and surgery, cancer is becoming a greater and greater problem."

It is stated that wireless telegraphy has proved its great value as a life-saver. The Spanish liner Balmes caught fire in mid-Atlantic, about 500 miles southeast of the Bermuda Islands. Its "wireless" calls for help were picked up by the Cunard liner Pannonia, which put on all steam and went to the rescue. All the passengers, 103 in number, were safely taken off.

Almost 5,000,000 acres of corn were abandoned this year, according to an expert report. Owing to dry weather last summer it was not worth harvesting. Still, there were over 103,000,000 acres on which the crop was harvested. The average yield per acre was only twenty-three bushels. In spite of the short crop the farmers are likely to get more money for it than usual, because the price is higher.

Twenty-five physicians in Ardmore, Bryn Mawr and other sections of Lower Merion township, pursuant to a request from the Board of Health, have advised their patients to boil all drinking water until further notice as a precaution against infection. This warning is the result of a report made by the Board of Health, of which Dr. B. K. Wilbur, of Rosemont, is president, by the board's chemist, Dr. David Wilbur Horn, of Bryn Mawr.

A despatch from Chicago of the 13th says that a national campaign against cancer has been inaugurated there. The report of Dr. Thomas S. Cullen, of Baltimore, chairman of the Cancer Campaign Committee of the Clinical Congress, was presented. He said: "Though surgery so far is the best cure that has been discovered for cancer, far more can be accomplished through education. Ignorance is the ally of every disease, and particularly of cancer. When the people know and can be made to realize that to delay in consulting a surgeon is to temporize with death in cancer cases the mortality statistics will tell another story. Magazines and newspapers must assume the task of education and already they have taken it up. But this is not enough. Knowledge of cancer should be spread by lecturers on hygiene in woman's clubs, factories and department stores." Dr. Cullen also made a report on the use of radium in the cure of cancer. "Few surgeons in the United States have enough radium," he said, "to give it a thorough test. In the meantime, surgery affords the most hope."

A recent despatch from Jacksonville, Fla., says: "Several hundred delegates, including Governors, Congressmen and representatives of commercial and marine organizations from practically all the Atlantic States, will gather here for the Sixth Annual Convention of the Atlantic Deepwaterways Association. The association's chief aim is to accomplish the construction of an all-inland water route along the Atlantic coast, from Boston to Key West. It is proposed to do this by completing a consolidation of channels connecting natural protected waterways."

A despatch from Washington of the 20th says: "Retail prices of food were higher on the fifteenth of Eighth Month than they had been at any other time in the last twenty-three years, according to figures of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, issued to-day. Retail prices of the principal articles of food in forty important industrial cities gathered and compiled by experts, show that in the year twelve of the fifteen articles advanced in price, while only three declined."

FOREIGN.—A despatch of the 17th from Montreal says: "A cargo of corn grown in Ireland was brought into port to-day by the steamship Bengora Head, from Belfast. The importation of corn has been necessary by the shortage of the American crop, due to the drought in the Middle West. It has been found cheaper to import corn from Ireland than to bring it to Montreal from Chicago."

It was stated from Panama on the 17th that the controversy between the Government and the Chinese residents of the republic over the registration law reached a crisis to-day when all the Chinese stores, laundries and factories in the republic, numbering more than 1500, closed their doors as a protest. The public is at the mercy of the Chinese, who almost monopolize these lines of trade. Pressure is being brought on the Government to modify the law, but the Government is still firm, as are also the Chinese. Privation is threatened unless there is a speedy adjustment.

A despatch from Panama of the 18th says: "With many prominent canal officials and their wives on board, the small steambark Louise to-day had the honor of being the first boat to pass entirely across the Isthmus of Panama through the Panama Canal. The trip was made possible by the cutting of a channel through the Cucaracha slide, the last obstruction which has delayed the work of connecting the oceans."

A despatch of the 18th from New York City says: "Exceptionally heavy cargoes of potatoes coming from Dutch and Belgian ports are pouring into New York by various lines, including the Holland-American, the Phoenix and the Red Star. Extra tonnage is being employed, the companies being encouraged by high rates they are obtaining. Importers, it is said, are making inquiries for 20,000 tons more, but if they are not granted lower rates they threaten to charter special boats. Baltimore, Philadelphia and New Orleans are all sharing in the benefit of this influx of potatoes."

A despatch from Mexico City of the 18th says: "Foreigners are leaving Mexico City in large numbers, and to-day every train bound to Vera Cruz was loaded to its fullest capacity. The foreign American included, fear they will be prevented from leaving the capital if the rebels, operating between this city and Vera Cruz, succeed in cutting the railroad, which they have threatened at Orizaba."

A despatch from France says: "Forty-five thousand coal miners are on strike in the Pas-de-Calais-Basin. The miners demand a work-day of eight hours."

A despatch from London of the 21st says: "A protest against the alleged ill-treatment of political prisoners in Russia is being published this morning throughout Europe. It bears fifty signatures of politicians, artists and men of letters of European repute. It says: 'Since the Czar's manifesto in 1905, promising liberty to the people of Russia, more than 40,000 persons have been sentenced for political offenses. Of these, more than 3000 have been executed, and more than 10,000 thrown into the horrible "katorga," or hard labor prisons. The prisons are overcrowded to such an extent that it is impossible for them to rest even on the bare floor. Absolute starvation and the most barbarous treatment are their daily portion.'

A despatch from Athens of the 13th says: "A treaty of peace between Greece and Turkey was signed to-night. The peace delegates reached an agreement practically on all points under negotiation and initiated the draft."

NOTICES.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. Sixteenth Street, Phila., will be open from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from 2 to 5 P. M.—Seventh-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. only.

WESTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.—The stage will meet at Westtown Station, trains leaving Broad Street (Penna. R. R.) Phila. at 6.32, 8.21 A. M., 2.48 and 4.30 P. M.; other trains will be met on request. Stage fare twenty-five cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, address West Chester Bell Telephone, 114A.

WM. B. HARVEY,
Superintendent.

FRIENDS' RELIGIOUS AND MORAL ALMANAC for 1914 is now on sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street. Price, 4 cents each; by mail, 5 cents; per dozen, 30 cents; by mail, 38 cents. The same with paper covers, 5 cents each; by mail, 6 cents; per dozen, 40 cents; by mail, 49 cents. The Friends' Card Calendar for 1914 is also ready. Price, 5 cents each; by mail, 10 cents; per dozen, by mail, 90 cents.

THE Visitation Committee of Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting, in furtherance of the concern of one of their number, a Minister, has arranged to attend the meeting at Tuckerton First-day, Eleventh Month 30th, at 10.30, and have appointed a meeting at Barnegat that afternoon at 3 o'clock. Those desiring information with regard to reaching either or both these meetings, may communicate with J. Henry Bartlett, Tuckerton, N. J., not later than the 27th inst.

WALTER L. MOORE.

MONTHLY MEETINGS NEXT WEEK (Eleventh Month 30th to Twelfth Month 6th):

Gwynedd, at Norristown, First-day, Eleventh Month 30th, at 10.30 A. M.

Wilmington, Fifth-day, Twelfth Month 4th, at 10 A. M.

Bradford, at Coatesville, Fourth-day, Twelfth Month 3rd, at 10 A. M.

U'whan, at Downingtown, Fifth-day, Twelfth Month 4th, at 10 A. M.

Kennett, at Kennett Square, Third-day, Twelfth Month 2nd, at 10 A. M.

New Garden, at West Grove, Fourth-day, Twelfth Month 3rd, at 10 A. M.

London Grove, Fifth-day, Twelfth Month 4th, at 10 A. M.

Burlington, Fifth-day, Twelfth Month 4th, at 10 A. M.

Chesterfield, at Crosswicks, Third-day, Twelfth Month 2nd, at 10 A. M.

Upper Springfield, at Mansfield, Fourth-day, Twelfth Month 3rd, at 10 A. M.

Falls, at Fallsington, Fifth-day, Twelfth Month 4th, at 10 A. M.

Haddonfield, Fourth-day, Twelfth Month 3rd, at 7.30 P. M.

Chester, at Moorestown, N. J., Third-day, Twelfth Month 2nd, at 7.30 P. M.

Evesham, at Mt. Laurel, Fifth-day, Twelfth Month 4th, at 10 A. M.

Upper Evesham, at Medford, Seventh-day, Twelfth Month 6th, at 10 A. M.

A WORD ON SERVICE

With Incidental Reference
to Belting and Lace Leather

Leaders of popular thought are urging that it is not how much one can get but how much one can serve that really counts. We find this ideal in commercial life, where Sheldon is teaching that service is the basis of successful business building. We find it even in political life, as variously expressed by Wilson, Bryan and Roosevelt.

It practically underlies Frederick Taylor's message of industrial efficiency. And so Belting and even Lace Leather contribute their part to the service rendered mankind by manifold industries. The belt that runs steadily week in and week out, the lace leather that helps to do this without break-downs, are contributing to the welfare of all users of the goods manufactured.

To do business with this ideal of service lifts one's work above the merely servile. Such an ideal is not new to Friends. Witness the significance attached to the name "Quaker" as a brand. If you hold closely to the ideal, it refutes the libel that business cannot be done according to the Golden Rule. And so it is our endeavor to furnish belts and lacing that shall give such service.

J. E. RHOADS & SONS

PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. Third St.
NEW YORK: 102 Beekman St.
CHICAGO: 322 W. Randolph St.
Factory and Tannery, Wilmington, Del.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
(Marcellus Balderston)

802 SPRING GARDEN ST. 518 NORTH NINTH ST.
BELL' PHONE PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM S. YARNALL

MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

JOS. B. SCATTERGOOD

HOUSE, SIGN AND DECORATIVE

PAINTING

Orders Solicited Bell' Phone

275 S. FOURTH STREET

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

ELKINS MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

MEMBERS OF

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA
STOCK EXCHANGES

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD

EQUIPMENT TRUST 4½%
TO YIELD 4.70%

FULL PARTICULARS UPON APPLICATION.

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY PAUL W. BROWN JAMES P. MAGILL

THE QUAKER CALENDAR FOR 1914 IS READY

*One of the very nicest Christmas Calendars
has always been the Quaker Calendar :*

This year the Calendar consists of 12 leaves (one for each month), size 8x11, is splendidly printed in a dark brown ink and bound with a dark rich brown silk cord. The subjects illustrated are the best we have ever shown and consist of pictures of some of the most interesting moments in the lives of Friendly leaders and also some splendid illustrations of our colleges and schools, etc. They are "George Fox Refusing to Take the Oath," "Swarthmore Hall," (the residence of the Fell family); "Barclay of Ury," "Jordans Meeting House," (the burial place of William Penn and his family); "Thomas Ellwood Reading to Milton," "Interior, Birmingham Meeting House," "Elizabeth Fry Speaking to Convicts Bound for Australia," "Haverford College," "William Penn and Rebecca Wood, of Darby," "Swarthmore College," "John Woolman and the Slave;" "Old Westtown."

We would be glad to send this calendar "on approval." That is, we will send one calendar by mail allowing the privilege of examining it and either returning the calendar or sending us 25 cents, which is the price of the calendar postpaid.

Price only 25 cents, postpaid

THE BIDDLE PRESS, WEST WASHINGTON SQUARE PHILADELPHIA, PA.
(210 South Seventh Street)

ROOM and BOARD ON MODERATE TERMS IN a quiet Friend's family in New York City may be secured on application in advance.

WANTED—A YOUNG WOMAN TO ASSIST WITH housework and care of one child.
ANNA B. HAMILTON,
Malvern, Pa.

W. B. WEAVER Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL ACCOMMODATIONS FOR FUNERALS. :: :: ::

BELL' PHONE ESTABLISHED 1880

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST COMPANY OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.
Accounts Solicited Deposits by Mail
Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET

FOURTH AND CHESTNUT STREETS

For Rich Milk

For Clean Milk

For Safe Milk

Call Philadelphia Locust 209

ABBOTTS ALDERNEY DAIRIES

31st and Chestnut Streets

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER
S. W. COR. 16th & RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL' PHONE SPRUCE 6646

POCONO MANOR

During the Winter and Spring Month

THE MANOR COTTAGE

offers its Friendly hospitality. Being thoroughly heated, and having a bright, sunny exposure, it combines cheery, indoor comfort with a bracing atmosphere, at an elevation of 1800 feet. A few resorts, winter or summer, afford an equal opportunity for those seeking rest and recreation. Pocono Manor Cottage POCONO MANOR, PA.

THE ESTAUGH

HADDONFIELD, N. J.

A pleasant home for Friends. One vacant room on second floor. Apply to

ANNA A. MICKLE, MOORESTOWN, N. J.
OR ANNA EASTBURN WILLIAMS,
CHAIRMAN ADMISSION COMMITTEE,
HADDONFIELD, N. J.

Redlands--California

Wissahickon Inn

A comfortable family hotel
in the residence section of beautiful Redlands.

SEND FOR FOLDERS & RATES

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, TWELFTH MONTH 4, 1913.

No. 23.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
{ DAVID H. FORSYTHE.

Make remittances payable to
EDWIN P. SELLEW OR THE FRIEND,
NO. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

"DUTY BY DEPUTY."

This phrase would be striking in any context, but used by a former warden of Toynbee Hall (T. Edmund Harvey, in a Wayfarer's Faith, p. 95), in a consideration of "Institutions and Inspirations," it seems almost startling in suggestiveness. Some brief quotation of the context may make this more clear. "Life appears almost to become at times to some men one long committee, but, little, after all seems done. And this failure may be seen, to some extent at least, even in recent movements which were originally a protest against the narrowness and superficiality of earlier methods of dealing with the problems of modern society. The first thought of the men who conceived the idea of the university settlement was surely not to found a new institution, so much as to bring life into touch with life, to make centres in which knowledge and experience might be collected, and from which men and ideas might be put at the service of all who had most need of them. . . . Did there ever come before the vision [of the founders of settlements] the picture of a great building raised by some millionaire, maintained by like gifts, manned by a staff of salaried workers, and providing at the expense of far-seeing or enlightened manufacturers, healthy amusement and duly certified religious teaching and secular instruction to the workmen of these subscribers, as well as dispensing, on behalf of Dives basketfuls of crumbs, both of plain and fancy bread, to Lazarus and his fellows at the door?" [Ibid pp. 93 and 94.]

From this point of view evidently "duty by deputy" has defeated its own object, and has put what is called the "dead hand" upon the contact of men with one another in social work. T. Edmund Harvey does not mean to condemn institutions, nor the organized methods of work so necessary to our complex civilization. His plea is for the larger inspirational service of "life in touch with life" as against the mere cold machinery of routine. The point he makes is one of endless specific applications. It contains the very substance of what is life in a Society of Friends if properly cultivated, or death to such a Society if not properly heeded and developed. Christianity upon its own testimony fails unless it is in reality a brotherhood. There is no agency in the world however perfect, there is no machinery so refined that it can play the part of brotherhood for us to the society to which we belong "He that loveth not his brother is not of God." And love of a brother is far too subtle a matter to be discharged by proxy, whether that proxy is an officer of a meeting, a committee, a trained expert or an organized agency of social betterment.

It is often said that this is the age of the second commandment. Millions of money in every direction are dedicated to institutions and to service that realize neighborliness of a high order. But the second commandment was characterized by our Lord as being "like the first." This likeness doubtless refers to a personal quality. We cannot love God by deputy, and our deputized love of our neighbor misses the necessary reflex of love upon our own characters, which makes it an essential complement to the love of God.

It often seems that certain people of our acquaintance have a very special human gift by which they can enter into sympathy with a wide range of character. Such are sometimes called "good mixers," or in terms of Christian association they are said to have "the pastoral gift." Unquestionably there is a wide range of difference in the natural endowment of people along this line. Nor can it be denied that there is a general tendency for those of us not thus gifted to feel ourselves excused from the effort to overcome this defect. We do not hold ourselves responsible for it. We engage the specialist to treat our bodily infirmities with expectation of a better result than we could get from the general practitioner. And this is the very analogy we use to defend the trained social or the gifted religious worker to discharge the duty for which we feel a lack of qualification. Defend such a course as we will, believe in co-operation and well-organized machinery as we must, the vital point of Christianity is lost for us the moment it ceases to be a point of personal contact with our brother "for whom Christ died."

What, then, is the service we can rightly claim of Committees and Boards and trained workers? Evidently they should relieve us by their labor-saving methods for a larger opportunity of both time and strength for the personal contact of Christian fellowship. We are "members one of another" by no other process, and if we are not members one of another the Scripture is unqualified in saying we are "not of God." In pursuing the subject T. Edmund Harvey has these additional striking sentences: "For the only thing worth giving or asking is life; . . . Here surely we may find a hint of the explanation of all successful social work, which is the passing of life from life, the result of the contact of personality with personality. In so far as organization promotes this and makes it possible does it stand justified, and only by this test." Are we prepared to apply the test?

J. H. B.

"THE chief qualification of a guide is that he shall know the way. The Lord never leads His people over any paths which He has not traversed Himself."

THE FEAST IN THE UPPER ROOM.

BY WM. C. MEADER.

(Continued from page 260.)

Jesus then sealed upon their minds the instruction He had given them, and told them it would be happy for them to do by each other as He had done by them. Still the shades of sorrow and depression rested there, and can we wonder? Judas cherishing still his unholy purpose, was in their midst, and the stream which gladdens God's heritage could not flow in its fulness and freedom of love, while such an obstruction was present. And now the spirit of the loving Saviour being troubled, He again told them that one of them should betray Him. The disciples seemed perplexed, the innocent ones doubtless feeling that it could not be they, and the affectionate John, who leaned on Jesus' breast, at Peter's suggestion, asked the Master who it was. He did not directly tell him, but said "It is he to whom I shall give the sop, when I have dipped it." At those feasts the flesh of the Paschal Lamb, and the unleavened cakes, were eaten after being dipped in a kind of sauce made of bitter herbs, and it was fitting that the dark and hard-hearted traitor, who had deliberately covenanted with the Lord's enemies, should have this evidence that the gentle and sinless one knew of his treachery; it was fitting that the token should be of bitter herbs, which was but a faint hint of the bitterness he should know, when, after having betrayed the Lamb to the slaughter, he realized the enormity of his crime, and friendless and torn with remorse, finding that a traitor has no friends, or any claim for consideration or regard, he cast his coveted silver down before those from whom he had received it as the price of his degradation and eternal loss, and then went out and hung himself, and his mangled remains falling in the field "Aceldama" gave it its detested name, "The field of blood."

And now the shadow deepens in that upper room, for the brooding spirit of evil found still deeper place in the heart of Iscariot, and the Master knowing of his settled determination to carry out his base designs said unto him, "What thou doest, do quickly." And then we note the almost incredible want of perception in those dull, but innocent, honest-hearted followers of the Saviour; for after having had the assurance that one of them should betray their loved Master, and having seen the sign designated by which they might know who should do the infamous deed, they could not yet comprehend the Master's meaning in these later words to the traitor. It was so hard for them to realize that he could be so devoid of good; even after they had seen the token of his guilt, they could not grasp the depth of his wickedness, neither could they understand the mystery of what they saw and heard; they did not even fully know their own hearts, they could not fully gauge their own weakness and dimness of vision, but their feelings did revolt from the fearful consequences of the base treachery which the Divine One had told them should befall Him, through the instrumentality of an unnamed one in their own midst. We wonder at the dullness of comprehension, while we deplore the weakness and want of understanding of those followers of the Redeemer who were so often foretold of the very things that shortly came to pass; and perhaps the best way for us to realize their situation, and truly feel for them, is to analyze closely our own heart's experience in the early stages of our religious lives, where I think we shall discern corresponding failures, want of faith, and unthankful behavior. Had it not been for the loving kindness and long forbearance of our tender Saviour and Teacher we should perhaps have proved traitors too, as we often manifested the frailties of the eleven, inasmuch as we too found it hard to receive the truths our Master taught; they were but mortals like ourselves, and if we had been there with them we might not have done any better, and perhaps our records would have been more marred than theirs. Their after experience revealed only a gradual establishment on the Rock unto which they were called, until the promise of the Father came upon them in that other upper room at Jerusalem, where prayers and supplications were made and the full brightness of the day-spring from on high fell upon them, followed by the fulness of the pentecostal blessing which crowned them henceforth as proficients in the heavenly wisdom.

But while they were at the feast of the Passover on the night of the betrayal they were like little children in the school. Thomas was there, who afterwards doubted the testimony of those who had seen the risen Redeemer, and declared he would not believe unless he could see and feel the wounds in His hands and side; yet the thought of being untrue to his Master and ungrateful to his Lord, probably did not enter his mind. Peter was there, who afterwards in the night of temptation, and even after his earnest protestations, and honest they were, too, that he would lay down his life for his Saviour's sake, could three times deny Him; yet he never could have betrayed Him, for his ardent, honest soul could not enter into that dark and moody state in which gross wickedness only could be deliberately planned, determined and bargained for. There were Peter's loyal fellow-disciples, who in their mutual disappointment and sorrow could forsake their suffering Lord, yet not one of them could cherish disloyal feelings towards their Master, much less have sold Him for thirty pieces of silver; that only could Iscariot do; and Jesus knowing the hour had come for the consummation of his base designs, bade him perform quickly what was then his settled purpose to do. True to his dark and treacherous impulse, he rose up and went out into the darkness, for it was night. When the traitor went out, the shadows and darkness went with him, and left light and freedom in that upper room, and peace and joy rested there for the Master was alone with His faithful ones. It is true that He knew the hour of His own sufferings was near, He knew the traitor's unholy errand would be successful, He realized the sorrow, the loneliness and disappointment that so soon must fall upon His companions. He knew they would soon be like sheep without a shepherd, yet there and then the fountains of Divine consolation flowed, comforting and encouraging the little band with a brightness and beauty that were not clouded with the gloom which went out into the night when Judas departed. The sweetness of the Master's discourses, which were replete with infinite mercy, love and heavenly instruction, rested like Hermon's dew upon the spirits of that little flock. Before Iscariot left them the Master was troubled in spirit, and He spoke of ingratitude and betrayal, but when the door was closed behind the lost and fallen one, then He could joyfully tell them that the Son of man was now glorified and that God was glorified in Him, and then with more than mortal sweetness, with more than parental tenderness and compassion, He called them His children, and for their government and help, He gave them a new commandment to "Love one another as He had loved them." Love and compassion were the keynote of His discourses, and more than ten times in the course of that night's communion with them, the Saviour adverted to the subject of love and impressed its beauty and importance upon their minds. And I have no doubt that afterwards, when they remembered His words they were strengthened and consoled by the ministry of that love, manifested in the Spirit in the midst of their provings. He knew their human hearts were frail, and in the conflicts which would inevitably be theirs, they would need to learn, prize and practice that virtue, which should be a seal and evidence of their holy commission and loyalty therein. "Hereby shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one for another."

That Divine teaching bore fruit abundantly in the after lives of those learners in His school, and how sweetly the admonition settled in their hearts and how enduring was the impression there, we may judge from their labors and the record of their sufferings and triumphs, and emphatically from the teachings of that affectionate one, who leaned upon Jesus' breast at supper, whose gentle, inspired hand traced the assurance that "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God," and whose mind, after many years had passed away and his mortal life had extended to extreme old age, still vibrated in unison with the sweet strains of the Master's counsel at the Passover supper, and over and over again he repeated, "Little children love each other."

(To be concluded.)

A MEMORY SYSTEM.

Forget each kindness that you do
As soon as you have done it;
Forget the praise that falls to you
The moment you have won it;
Forget that slander that you hear
Before you can repeat it;
Forget each slight, each spite, each sneer,
Wherever you may meet it.

Remember every kindness done
To you, whatever its measure;
Remember praise by others won,
And pass it on with pleasure;
Remember every promise made,
And keep it to the letter;
Remember those who lend you aid,
And be a grateful debtor.

Remember all the happiness
That comes your way in living;
Forget each worry and distress,
Be hopeful and forgiving;
Remember good, remember truth,
Remember heaven's above you,
And you will find, through age and youth,
True joys, and hearts to love you.

—PRISCILLA LEONARD.

AN OPEN LETTER.

TO ALL WHO ARE ELDERS IN OUR MEETINGS.

As far as I am aware, the gift of eldership has always been considered by Friends to be quite as real a gift as a gift in the ministry, though perhaps something even less tangible. A true elder had the power of discernment. He was gifted with the ability to distinguish not only "sound" and "unsound" doctrine, but, more important even than that, an anointed utterance from that which (though preached with never so much earnestness) still lacked that freshness and power which characterizes all that is spoken, as we term it, in the life.

And many have been the examples of truly gifted elders in our Society's history.

The Discipline provides that "each Monthly Meeting choose two or more Friends to sit with the ministers . . . taking care that the persons chosen for that service be Friends of solid judgment, prudence and experience," but does not expressly determine any more particular qualifications to be looked for. So far as my acquaintance goes, our meetings have been uniformly careful to appoint as elders the type of person specified. But have they all the distinct gift of eldership, or if they have, are they as careful to exercise it as they ought to be?

Of course, we must not expect a person to exercise a gift he has not; and the more "solid," "prudent" and "experienced" he was, the less we should look to him to assume duties which he believed were to be rightly performed only by the exercise of a Divine gift, when he was not at all sure that he was the possessor of such a gift. It has been my experience more than once, after asking some Friend if he were an Elder to receive the reply, "I am in the station of one"—almost implying his own doubt as to whether he had any business to be there at all! And in a letter from a worthy elder of another Yearly Meeting, I find (after an expression of some dissatisfaction with regard to conditions among them) this sentence: "Perhaps some of us are old-fashioned and cannot keep pace with the progress of the present day. I know I am not qualified to sit in judgment over our ministers."

Why, then, was he in the position of elder, whose chief service consists in that very "sitting in judgment" (both favorable and unfavorable) over those who speak in meeting?

But I believe many of our Elders do have that gift of eldership which will enable them to "be as nursing fathers and mothers to those who are young in the ministry; and with all care and diligence advise, encourage, admonish and, if they see occasion, reprove them in a tender and Christian spirit. . . . that so . . . they may witness a growth in their gifts, and be preserved from extending their declarations further than they find the life and power of Truth to bear them up."—(Discipline, p. 25).

But could they not exercise this gift more frequently and less fearfully? Probably the idea uppermost to-day in the minds of our elders, in regard to this matter, is that considerable harm may have been done in the past from too sharp criticising and too severe pruning. It were best, they say, not to interfere more than absolutely necessary. The spiritual life of one "young in the ministry" is indeed a tender plant. But if too severe cutting-back is detrimental to the best growth, neglect may almost prove fatal. Such plants need tending by those who have the gift of caring for them. Weeds may creep in and choke the young life, or they may grow up rankly, with many leaves but no fruit. They may become garbled or be trodden on by some unthinking foot.

To those who from time to time feel it right to speak in meetings for worship such speaking is just about the most serious thing they ever undertake. They desire earnestly that their message should be given forth nearly as purely as they have received it, with just as little tincturing as possible from the earthen vessel. There is not one of them who would not rather be excused from all such service if he might not perform it well. They all are fervent in their desire that their speaking may develop into that ministry that is truly convincing and tendering. But they feel so at a loss sometimes to know certainly if they are proceeding along the right lines. They are afraid they have made mistakes. There may be unfortunate mannerisms which they do not realize. Perhaps they hold back too long when they ought to speak. Perhaps in their sincere zeal they "run before their guide" and speak too frequently or too long, so that the sense of power with which they started is lost.

Perhaps a thousand and one things—but they feel the need of an occasional word of some sort from one whose spiritual experience is deeper. It is not congratulation that they seek—but the tender counsel of those accorded the gift of right counseling.

An example will help to show what I mean. A young Friend had spoken at some length in a large meeting where several acknowledged ministers were present and there had been considerable other service. He had taken his seat feeling he had done the best he knew, but rather under a cloud as to the suitability of what he had said. Directly after meeting a venerable elder came up to him, shook him by the hand, and remarked, "I think thou wert in thy right place." That was all. It was enough. The dark clouds of uncertainty were dispersed as by a west wind.

I know of a meeting where the average attendance is close to three hundred. Regularly present at this meeting are at least four and often five elders. Among those who take part in the meetings are some nine or ten young Friends. Scarcely ever, to my certain knowledge, is anything said by the elders to those who stand in such need of this caring for, and who would be so deeply grateful for any suggestion that might make their ministry more pure and effective.

Will not all who have been appointed Elders by their meetings ask themselves if they are performing their full duty in these matters?

A YOUNG FRIEND.

TEMPERANCE.

A department edited by BENJAMIN F. WHITSON, of Moylan, Pa., on behalf of the Friends' Temperance Association of Philadelphia.

STORMING THE ENTRENCHMENTS.—The county of Delaware in the State of Pennsylvania is only a small part of a great commonwealth, and yet a smaller part, relatively, of the vast area of the United States. And yet many of its social problems are the same problems that are testing the citizenship and enlisting the thought and activity of patriotic men and women in many parts of this and other lands. Foremost of these is the question of licensing the sale of intoxicating liquors. It is the world-wide interest in this problem that makes interesting the efforts of those who are endeavoring to close the saloons of Delaware County with its one hundred thousand inhabitants suburban to the city of Philadelphia. The circumstances which make this effort somewhat unique, however, are that the question cannot be settled by popular vote, and that the citizens of the county-seat are powerless to enforce the provisions of their own borough charter.

The law of the State of Pennsylvania (the Brooks High License Law) seems to be one of the most secure entrenchments that ever guarded a corrupt business and its beneficiaries from all ordinary avenues of popular attack. Under the theory of "regulating and restraining" the sale of intoxicants, this law was passed years ago with much acclaim as to its restrictive features and the revenue to be derived from the licenses. The effect, however, has been to give to the liquor business a standing in law and a commercial prestige quite new and unexpected. That which was intended to "restrain and regulate" has been perverted, by the shrewdness of lawyers and merchants, into a means of "facilitating and encouraging" the sale of liquors.

By the provisions of the law, the granting or revoking of licenses is a matter to be passed upon by the Court of the county in which the saloon or distributing centre is located. Provision is made, however, whereby the public may petition for the granting of the license or remonstrate against its being granted. The former is necessary to the securing of a new license and to the renewal of an old one. The applicant must give bond, varying in amount according to the license fee, and endorsed by two property-holders of the district wherein the license is sought. He must be able to show, also, the signatures of at least twelve petitioners who are qualified electors and residents of the district in which the saloon, brewery, bottler, store or licensed house applied for is located. These petitions and accompanying bonds must be filed with the Court each year before a given date, varying according to the county, which is always six weeks or more prior to the convening of the License Court. In Delaware County, the petitions must be filed not later than Eleventh Month 1st. The Court meets for the consideration of the same on Twelfth Month 22nd. They are available to the public at the Office of the Recorder of Deeds and may be inspected by compliance with reasonable rules.

Any who desire to do so may present to the Court, in due course of procedure, a remonstrance against the granting of such petitions. In the case of saloons, however, the remonstrance may be signed only by citizens qualified to petition for such license. They must be residents of the same district. The regulation as to remonstrances against brewers and bottlers is somewhat different, as their petition asks for the privilege of delivering goods over a wide territory.

It is permissible, also, for adult women to present remonstrances separately from the men, but under the same conditions. Furthermore, it is in order for citizens, both men and women separately, to sign a Memorial to the Court "begging that no license at all be granted." Such memorial, however, is classed as having "no legal efficiency." It enables the Court, nevertheless, to form a judgment as to the weight of public opinion, and the work of securing signatures to such papers is a powerful means of agitation and education.

The final authority, however, as has been stated, rests with the Court—the Judge—whoever he may be, and whatever he may be as to integrity and the strength or weakness of humanity. The law leaves to the Court the vital decision as to whether the license sought is "necessary for the accommodation of the public and the entertainment of strangers or travelers." He may refuse to grant a petition even though there be no remonstrance filed against it, if in his judgment the license is unnecessary. But the law says he shall have "due regard to the number and character of the petitioners" both for and against. In the interpretation of such vague provision, and in the exercise of such wide discretion it is not surprising that there should be some diversity of opinion and action in the various Courts. We are told that "a license may be properly refused where the petitioners far exceed in number the remonstrants, or, it may be properly granted where the number of remonstrants far exceed the number of petitioners." This may be "sound law" to the legal mind, but it is not such to all laymen. It may be questioned whether the right to exercise such imperial power is not impinging the integrity of our Courts and establishing a flagrant inconsistency in the midst of democratic institutions. Be it said to the credit of our Courts that the situation is not as a rule to their liking, despite the opportunities it affords to the unscrupulous further to entrench themselves in power. Nor was it sought or brought about by the Courts, but by a legislature subservient to the liquor interests. Possibly these same interests may not have realized at the time the Brooks Law was passed, how completely it gave into their hands the power to pervert justice, and stem the rising tide of opposition to their trade. Illustrations of this are conspicuous every year. The relatives of a powerful political clique are granted a license despite an overwhelming remonstrance, while as a sop to the no-license people another license is refused on the grounds of "preponderance of sentiment" against it, when there was only one more name on the remonstrance than on the petition for the license. However, the no-license people of Pennsylvania have learned to feel "Thank thee" for every recognition they get. With few exceptions, however, our Courts do regard public opinion, and the no-license people are at fault in having wasted so much strength in quarreling amongst themselves and expending so little sacrifice of opinion as to methods in presenting a united front against the foe. The record of Chester County last year illustrates what may be accomplished by the aid of a liberal-minded judge and the odium of some murders and a lynching. In Lawrence County all licenses have been refused in response to a popular uprising, while in some other counties much effort has been expended on the part of the people with but little result as to reducing the number of licenses. In some places the Courts have sustained the contention that "if it appears that a hotel or restaurant as a place where food and lodging may be obtained is necessary, then it follows as a matter of course that a license is necessary." But in other places this contention has not been sustained.

It would seem a very simple and natural solution to a troublesome and often vexatious problem to apply to the question of license or no-license the American principle of majority rule. In some counties of the State the majority would vote, no doubt, to "do wrong" by licensing saloons, but the vote could not make right that which is evil. On the other hand, this principle of "local option" would result in most of the territory of our state exercising a privilege they do not have at present—the privilege of "doing right" by abolishing the saloons. For more than ten years a "rum ridden" legislature has denied this just right to the people in the face of strong protests from practically all the religious and philanthropic organizations in the commonwealth. The same power which has controlled the legislature has adroitly contrived to control the individual votes of a great many good citizens who sincerely desire the overthrow of the liquor traffic while at the same time voting for legislators and other public officials who aid and defend the traffic.

The impotence of the no-license people and the difficulties that confront them in their effort to abolish the saloons by remonstrance is further illustrated by the fact that to carry "legal efficiency" each remonstrance must be specific. There are, at the present time, doing business throughout the county, fourteen stores, five bottlers and one brewery. If then the people of Media, where there is no saloon, desire to protest against these "saloons on wheels" which so successfully defy our borough ordinances, we, in common with other electors throughout the county, must sign twenty separate specific remonstrances. This is the only way by which we may hope to suppress the "beer-wagon nuisance." It is true that the charter of the Borough of Media, granted by the same legislative body that passed the Brooks Sell I license Bill, declares that it shall be unlawful "to vend or sell or cause to be vend or sold any malt, spirituous, vinous or other intoxicating liquors within the limits of the said borough." But by the rulings of superior courts the delivery of such goods and the acceptance of payment for the same does not constitute a "sale" or violate the provisions of the Charter in a manner that can incriminate. Is it surprising that the "sanctity of our Courts" is being ignored? Is there in such decision anything to command the respect of honest men? Certainly not the respect of women?

There are parts of Delaware County in the city of Chester, where, by the process of protest by remonstrance, the elector should sign more than thirty separate papers. Consider for one moment the magnitude and hopelessness of the task of the No-License Campaign. And yet this is exactly what they have undertaken and in which they have enlisted the active, house-to-house work of more than one thousand earnest, hopeful, patriotic citizens.

First, however, the county was divided into four districts and a field marshal appointed over each. Then the work of local organization was carried into each township or borough or other political unit. A fine body of "splendid" men are laboring heroically in this movement, laboring often far into the night under varying conditions of encouragement, apathy and lack of faith—laboring as did our brothers in Chester County less than one year ago—and hoping, aye, praying, for a similar measure of success. Side by side in harmony and hopefulness are working on committees, on the rostrum, on the street and at the ubiquitous telephone, men of differing views.—Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, Catholic and Quaker—the merchant and the mason, the capitalist and the clerk, the pastor and the teamster, the teacher and the engineer; the total abstainer, the "tippler," and the reformed drunkard; the Republican, the Democrat, the Progressive and the Independent (this statement is a literal truth), all united on the one issue, and determined to do all that they can under the law to unload the economic burden of expense, inefficiency and distress heaped upon us by the liquor traffic.

A campaign of this character cannot fail of doing good so long as it be true that

"The hope of the world is kindly living Learned from the joy of God above."

As soon as the organizations had been effected, each group sent circulars to every voter in their district. The leaflets used most were, "Coatesville (Pa.), After Six Months Without Saloons," and "Something's the Matter with Kansas." Following these many public meetings have been held. Simultaneously came the work of sending a personal letter, to be returned if not delivered, to every individual signer to any petition for a license. This letter is a bold, frank statement of the issue, asking the recipient to consider the stand he has taken and not misrepresent himself by his position. It is likely that the names of signers to petitions will later be published, but not before each one shall have had an opportunity to rescind his action. And now the work of gathering evidence of law violation and the greatest task of all—the remonstrance work—has begun. Each group has its legal counsel and the serious effort of "storming the entrenchments" of the saloon in Delaware County is in progress. In the meantime let no one forget that all along the battle-line of reform from Atlantic to Pacific the onslaught is being made with prayerful determined endeavor

JOHN BIDWELL.

A GREAT HEART AND AN OPEN HAND.

DANIEL A. POLING.

The story of John Bidwell, pathfinder, pioneer, soldier, general, reformer and empire builder is one of rare, inspiring romance. Some day I hope that American Adversity may give it, as I have read and heard it, to all the men and women of unswerving faith who follow in his train.

He was in the first wagon caravan that crossed the continent to California—years before gold was discovered there. A youth, not yet out of his teens, he bore with full seasoned men un-speakable hardships.

He was the first American to set eyes on the great trees of California that were before the days of Joseph and the famine in Egypt.

He was the discoverer of California's unrivaled fruit-growing possibilities and as a United States Congressman he won for the "Queen of the Golden West" her crown of statehood.

He refused a governorship, but was willing to be defeated for the same office as the candidate of the Prohibition party. He was the standard-bearer of the largest host that ever rallied at the polls for a Prohibition presidential nominee.

On the broad acres by the clear flowing stream that hurries down from the "High Sierras" still live the "Chicos," for he was a William Penn in his dealings with Indians, their judge when they quarreled, their provider when they suffered, and always a friend.

Through the heart of his mighty estate, he opened a free way for the coast line railroad that connects San Francisco with Portland, and helped that project to success when it trembled on the brink of failure.

In power and wide domain his sway outrivaled that of many an ancient baron, but he was a commoner, a far-eyes prophet of development, a builder and soldier of progress. His was the strength that lifts up, that despises not the weak and his power made strong.

He dreamed great dreams and reading his words to-day, after the lapse of more than two decades, we find that many of his dreams are now facts of history.

When he passed it was as the falling of a giant oak, for he was old only in years.

AMONG MUNICH ROMANISTS.—Pastor Rambaud, who is of Huguenot extraction and has worked many years in the Belgian Missionary Church, has been quietly evangelizing in Munich among Romanists. He finds much hunger for spiritual religion. A restaurant keeper, brother of two nuns, and a priest, tired of ceremonial religion, read diligently in the Bible and gradually formed a circle of twenty-five Romanists in his home, who studied the Scriptures together from week to week. Pastor Rambaud was invited to instruct this group. He mentions many other interesting cases to prove that direct evangelization can be carried on with profit among German Romanists if denominational considerations are not pushed into the foreground. For, in his judgment, it is better in the spring to leave the ice to the sun than to seek to hack it away with iron.

"What shall we say of that priest with whom I spent a whole day and who laid bare his whole heart to me? A noble, transparent soul, who longed for the Gospel of Christ, and suffered under the burden of an external religion. We were in agreement on the weightiest points—especially that the Gospel should be given at any price to those who did not have it. He had presented his housekeeper with a New Testament two years before, when she came to work for him. One should have heard how she said to me, 'But, sir, when I read the Gospel and then see our church! These things are very different.'"

[The name of Joseph James Neave is known to very many of our readers. A few recall the days of the Civil War, when as a young man he spent some time in America, and more perhaps will have fresh in their minds the later visit, 1800-1900. His career was far from the beaten track of most of us, and furnished most interesting material for his autobiography which was published a score of years ago.

Of recent date several letters from his pen have appeared in THE FRIEND, and now that he has gone from among us, it is natural that we should want to know more of his life and his services. A recent issue of THE FRIEND (London) publishes the following sketch of his life, and an appreciation by one who knew him intimately. We print both in full.—Ed.]

JOSEPH JAMES NEAVE.

At no time during the past few years would the intelligence of the decease of Joseph James Neave have taken his friends by surprise. He has consciously lived in the Borderland so long, that one has grown used to the thought that he was quietly awaiting the inevitable summons that has now come. And in that time of waiting he has appeared to live in as close communion with his Lord as is possible to mortal man.

Though his life in the Southern Hemisphere has cut him off from personal touch with his English friends, correspondence, public and private, has kept him as one of ourselves to an unusual degree for one so far removed by actual space. Never daunted by the difficulties of circumstance, his pen has constantly been at work, even during the years when his impaired sight prevented him from reading what he had written. He followed with the eye of a seer events passing in the world around him and saw therein the working of spiritual forces for good or evil, but ever with the conviction of the final triumph of good. To him these unseen forces were intensely real, and he wrote of them as the old Hebrew prophets would have done, or the Jewish enthusiasts of later days. He saw visions and dreamed dreams which, in a matter of fact age, he related with the naive simplicity of an old time mystic. Experience told him, at times, that he was liable to misinterpret what he took to be the Divine voice, but this never shook his faith. To that voice he listened as a child to the words of an earthly parent, ever clear in his conviction that the Most High is over all, ruling in the kingdom of man, giving it to whomsoever He will. And now what he saw in this life dimly he sees; face to face, beyond the veil, and we who are left behind awhile may learn from his faith to follow where he has led. In obedience to the Divine call, he would cheerfully have faced fire or sword, firmly trusting that, whatever befell him, he would feel the everlasting arms underneath.

With a somewhat rigid adherence to the form of faith in which he had been matured, he could not follow all the workings of new and strange forms of thought. But he had that which is above formula, dogma or creed, a deep baptism of the Holy Spirit, that peace of which our Lord spake as given not as the world giveth, a faith which overcometh the world and ever giveth the victory.

The following biographical notes are gleaned from the autobiographical Leaves from the Journal of Joseph James Neave,* in which interesting accounts of his travels may be found.

Joseph James Neave was born at Leiston, Suffolk, the twenty-seventh of Fifth Month, 1836. He was the son of Gundry Neave, of Leiston and Woodbridge (son of James Neave, of Fordin Bythe, and of Susanna Neave (daughter of Joseph Werbe Green of Saffron Walden and Littlebury). He went to boarding-schools at Reading and Hertford, where his schoolmaster Daniel Peirson, exerted upon him a strong influence for good. Leaving school, he entered his father's shop and soon became interested in Temperance effort. The visits of ministering Friends deepened his spiritual experience, and he first opened his mouth in a Friends' meeting for worship in 1857, simply quoting Psalm ciii: 13, 14. Acknowledged by Woodbridge Monthly Meeting as a Minister in 1862, he very soon applied for and received minutes for service in other Monthly and Quarterly Meetings.

In 1857, the brothers Edward and Joseph Neave took over their father's business, and in 1861 Joseph married Eliza Appleton, of Tottenham, who died in 1864. In the latter year, accompanied by William Norton, Joseph Neave visited Friends in the United States and remained among them till the end of the Civil War. In 1867, accompanied by his cousin, Walter Robson, Joseph Neave went for a lengthened visit of Gospel service in Australasia, continued after the return of W. Robson at the end of 1866, till 1872, in which year he returned to England and married his second wife, Helen Grace Davy, of New South Wales, the union lasting thirty-four years.

After about four years at home, Joseph and Helen Neave returned to Australia, which thereafter became his home. In the later years of the century our Friend was on several occasions enabled to unite in service with visiting Friends from England and America, notably with the late Isaac Sharp and Alfred Wright, and with Rufus P. King. In 1892-3, with John Bellows as companion, a visit was paid to Russia, including the Trans-Caucasus, for the religious help and encouragement of the Stundists and other dissenters from the National Church. At Moscow they lunched with Tolstoy, of whom J. J. Neave wrote, "I never met anyone who seemed so deeply baptised into the wrongs and sufferings of humanity, or more intent on rectifying them." In 1899, our Friend was again in England and was granted a certificate for a second visit to America, in which he had the company of John M. Watson, of Kansas. While engaged in this service he had a serious illness, after which, at the beginning of 1901, he returned, in great weakness, to his home in Sydney, where or in the neighborhood of which his remaining days were spent.

AN APPRECIATION.

At short notice I can only attempt a very brief "appreciation" of the life of my late—more than a brother—cousin Joseph James Neave.

One of the greatest treats of my boyhood was to visit his home in the Suffolk village of Leiston, where his father was the principal shopkeeper, the very comfortable dwelling-house adjoining the business premises, as was customary sixty years ago. It was but two miles from the sea, and how well one recalls the delight of a walk with Joseph along the sandy road or over the heath to Sizewell, there to enjoy a bathe or sail our boats. He was always a lively boy, and all through life could enjoy a bit of fun; but under all there was the very tender conscience, the love of what was good and pure, and the recoil from untruthfulness or from anything degrading. His boarding-school life was at Reading and Hertford, and I remember when he left school his master, Daniel Peirson, wrote of him that "he had been a blessing to the whole school."

He worked hard in my uncle Gundry Neave's business, and the next few years of his life were uneventful, but marked by very evident growth in his spiritual life. I do not think he could tell of any definite "conversion," though often alluding to visits from traveling ministers as red-letter days in his experience—perhaps all the more valued as the little meeting at Leiston was usually held in silence. He first spoke as a minister in 1857, an event far more marked than that now. I recollect feeling quite in awe of him the next time we met, till I found him the same very approachable friend to me he had ever been.

My uncle having retired from business, the two sons Edward and Joseph James had taken it on. But the latter was brought under great conflict of spirit, because, like other country "stores," they sold tobacco, and as Leiston is principally populated by Messrs. Garrett's great iron-works, employing over 1,000 men—mostly probably smokers—it was an important article, and to give up its sale involved heavy loss. But with Joseph "a conscience void of offence towards God and men" was far more essential than aught beside; and so the "fragrant weed" was expelled, with the result of most serious diminution of trade, from which the concern never recovered.

Before Joseph was recorded as a Minister, he felt drawn to hold several "public meetings" in neighboring villages; and I know he felt not only much helped in preaching to the villagers, but that his gift grew largely by these acts of devotion, and from the time when in 1862 Friends recognized his ministry he was never long without a minute for religious service.

Of his memorable visit to the United States in 1864 I cannot now speak; it was an act of faith, not only on his part but of the then existing Morning Meeting, to liberate a young man of twenty-eight for such a service. It involved much real physical hardship. He came in contact with the belligerent armies of North and South, while he paid visits of love and sympathy to the suffering Friends in East Tennessee and North Carolina, and he was in Richmond, Virginia, on the day that it fell.

In 1867, he felt constrained to visit Friends and others in Australasia and Polynesia, and it was my great privilege to go as his companion; and during the two years following I was seldom parted from him night or day. No amount of labor or fatigue was spared by him in visiting solitary Friends living in remote parts in the Bush, and many an adventure we had together, very amusing to talk of afterwards, but experiences rather trying at the time—swimming our horses across deep rivers, getting lost in the trackless forests, etc. Once, after walking some twenty-five miles, as we hoped in a straight track, as evening approached, we found ourselves back at the spot from which we started. We visited the Society Islands, the Friendly Islands, Savage Islands, and Samoa in the little barque John Williams, preaching to the islanders and sympathizing with the missionaries in their then very lonely life, sometimes a whole year without seeing a white man. I think we both have felt the five months so spent the most interesting of our lives. We returned from Samoa to Sydney, a voyage of thirty-one days, in a rotten old guano ship, in which my cousin found an open door for his ministry among the sailors, who were having a rough time under an ungody captain.

Joseph J. Neave spent nearly all of 1870 in New Zealand. He returned to England in 1872, and was married at Saffron Walden to his second wife, Helen Grace Davy, a daughter of Abraham and Jane Davy, of Herrington Park, near Sydney. They resided in Leiston nearly four years, and then returned to Sydney.

For some time he suffered from cataract and his writing became nearly illegible; but after one operation he regained almost perfect sight in one eye, and I have received hundreds of letters from him, all telling of his sense of the Lord's presence and love, so that he was "unutterably happy." Yet he was deeply exercised with the sad evidences in the homeland and in Australia that people were "worshipping the three gods Mars, Mammom and Bacchus," rendering homage to them and not to Christ. Latterly he was often deeply distressed with the working of the Defence Acts, and wrote powerfully of them in a letter I received the day he died.

I close this very imperfect sketch with his very favorite text which tells us the secret of his strength for service, "We know that the Son of God is come and hath given us an understanding that we may know Him that is true, and we are in Him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God and eternal life." His standard for life was not that of the world, but of one "who knew the Son of God."

WALTER ROBSON.

"Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others." (Phil. ii. 4.)

We suffer, even in our spiritual life, when we confine our thoughts to the narrow horizon of our individual welfare.

Nothing is more pitiful than a life spent in thinking of nothing but self, yes, even in thinking of nothing but one's own soul.—F. W. FARRAR.

[Our readers are deeply interested in the struggle of Friends and others in Australia under the Defence Act. The following, taken almost in full from a recent issue of the Australian Friend, will give a fair picture of what is before those people. It will make very evident that testimony bearing is in no way obsolete.—E.D.]

A MORNING WITH THE "SHIRKERS."

To realize to some extent the iniquity of the present Defence Act, one has but to visit one of the Courts and witness a "trial" of the "Shirkers." Feeling that we should see for ourselves how this was carried out, we visited the Melbourne District Court one morning recently. Once up at the Law Courts, the Ambulance van waiting outside indicated which door we should enter; and to reach the Court-room we had almost to push our way between policemen, soldiers and waiting boys. Why so many soldiers, we might ask; unless it be to overawe the boys—a show of force to brow-beat them into submission. They do not have such an array when the older lads—the citizen soldiers!—are before the Court.

Inside we saw more soldiers—the prosecuting officer with Area Officers as witnesses, whose evidence is always taken in preference to the boys'. The Magistrate sits above, but he admits he is anxious to give the military all the assistance he can. The boy is practically sentenced before he is tried. A sonorous charge is hurled at him, that he "having been given in charge of" such an officer, "failed to return to custody at" such a time and such a time, etc., etc. "Guilty or not guilty?" It would almost stun a grown man—it quite stuns most of the boys—and they usually plead "guilty," which simplifies matters for all concerned.

A bolder spirit, smarting under the injustice, will plead "not guilty," and he is then allowed to question his Area Officer or make a statement; he may also call witnesses to speak for him, but it avails little save to bring down the magistrate's wrath upon his head. No matter what inconvenience or hardship the boy may have labored under, nothing, nothing, must interfere with the work of this Act. Then the prosecuting officer asks for the boy to be given into custody for so many days, corresponding to the number of drills he has missed, and "whatever further penalty you choose to inflict." In the case of this Magistrate, it was an additional ten days. Then the sentence, "You are committed to the custody of the Officer commanding the Royal Australian Garrison Artillery in the Port Phillip Fortresses for" ten to twenty days as the case may be. The sentence was repeated so often (forty boys were before the Court that one morning), and it rang in one's brain with painful reiteration. Oh! the pity of it! and each day's detention means six hours solid drill. One wonders how the magistrate would deal with a case of genuine conscientious objection,—such has not come before him so far.

The boys are ordinary boys of the working class; there might be a few of the larrikin type, but most were decent, respectable lads. Many gave no reason for their failure to drill; they do not know that, in their inarticulate way, they are protesting against the infringement of their liberty. They are all under eighteen, with but little education; how can they stand up against such force and protest, when they hardly understand themselves? Many of them are extremely nervous and unable to speak, even if they wished; some are careless, and take what comes with an easy nonchalance; others are smarting under the injustice, while faintly hoping to receive some consideration. But it is pitiful, to one who cares for boys, to see the cloud, the look of resentment, or even of bitter anger, that flits across the face as sentence is passed—it is fleeting and they pass out impassively, but it has left its mark. One lad has a caged look, the iron has entered his soul. Oh, the blind wickedness of it all!

I might mention two or three cases. One lad particularly interested me—a fine type of face, straight-forward and intelligent. He pleaded "guilty," and gave no excuse. I do not believe he could have spoken, for one could see by the movement of his throat the nervous tension he was under.

The Magistrate liked his looks, for he told him he "was sorry to see a boy like him there," that he had "watched his demeanor in Court, and judged he was a boy who should be a credit to his corps." None the less, he sent him to the fortress for eighteen days.

As a contrast, a lad of larrikin type, but obviously half-witted, received scant mercy: was bade to "stand at attention," and not smile in Court. The boy's reason for not attending drill was that the non-commissioned officer had pushed him away and told him he was not fit to drill with the others. "So," he said, "I was not going back when he said I was not good enough to drill with them." His officer, on oath, then gave him a bad character for disturbing the corps and causing disorder. Whereupon the Magistrate rated him and said, he could see he would be a "perfect pest," and proceeded to give him extra time as "some extra drill would do him some good." The lad was mentally deficient and needed care. What good could military drill do him? Another boy pleaded "not guilty," as he could not be "in two or three places at once." He was working in Sydney and had come from there (nearly six hundred miles) in answer to the summons, his parents sending for him. As he worked at sea, he did not find it possible to drill. It was an obviously hard case; but the Magistrate said it was his "own fault that he had had to come down from Sydney," as he should have got a transfer from his Area Officer when he went there—"Fortress for twenty days."

A lad, employed in the railway department, said he worked on night-shift, or else in the afternoon from two o'clock; so the time did not fit in with drills. The prosecuting officer stated that they had an arrangement with the Railway Department that such lads could drill on certain afternoons. This the boy did not know; to which the Magistrate replied: "It is well known to you boys; I have heard the same excuse over and over again. There is very little Australian boys don't know. I guarantee you know when the next football match is." A favorite gibe. "You knew all this months ago, and the regulations, too." (Regulations! who could know them? They are legion.) "Twenty days."

Another case, a citizen soldier brought down on warrant from the country, non-attendance at drills and at the continuous camp. A friend gave evidence as to his good character; he said the lad had erred through ignorance, he was a clerk in the Railway Department, and had failed to report to his Area Officer when he was transferred to a country station. He was willing to make up his drills, but feared if he went away to camp it would prejudice his position. The continuous training has to be done, however, and he was sent to Langwarrin Camp for eight days.

We must think what it means to some poor families to be deprived of the boys' wages for from one to three weeks, and perhaps for the boy to find his place filled when he comes out. "It is the law and must be obeyed,"—yes, and a most unrighteous law. If a boy fails to appear, a warrant for his arrest is issued. Many boys have run away from home when the summons has been served. We of the Australian Freedom League hear sad stories from sorrowing mothers. One I must tell which has come to our knowledge since the day of which I am writing. One boy who had been summoned did not appear at the Court, and a warrant for his arrest was issued. He was determined not to drill, for what reason I do not know. Two policemen appeared at the house with the warrant at eight o'clock one morning, one knocked at the front door, while the other went round to the back. The boy was in the house, but his mother, who went to the door, refused to give him up, and the police went away thinking he was not there. The boy then disappeared, and for some days his mother did not know where he was. At last she discovered, to her great distress, that he was hiding with people of bad character, and he was in great fear for him. The lad now steals home at night and sleeps in the house. The mother goes downstairs to talk to him, but dare not take a light as the place is watched; so they meet and talk in the dark. Before it is light the boy steals away again for the day.

To resume our Court experience. Besides the onlookers in Court, are others that come and go—such as young lawyers, clerks and officials. To them it appears to be a comedy; to us how different! And in our hearts we wonder who are the "shirkers"—the men who pass their burden on to the boys, or the boys who object to bear it?

As we passed out of the Court, Leyton Richards, who had been with us, exclaimed to the bystanders at the door, "They are making rebels of the boys! they will never make soldiers of them this way!" and many agreed with him.

A large military ambulance wagon was drawn up at the door full of boys. It was drawn by four horses, a soldier to each pair, and an outrider to go before; three or four soldiers on the front seat, and the same number on the back. As it waited for its last passenger, Leyton Richards talked with the soldiers, some of whom did not seem to relish the work. He wanted to find out what would be done to a boy if he refused to drill when at the fort; but they were uncommunicative. One said in his elegant way, "Oh, they have to drill all right; there is no 'acting the goat' down there." Another of our friends was told in answer to the same question, "Oh, we 'clink' them." Imagination must translate that.

As the heavy vehicle lumbered off, the second that morning, one's indignation rose high. This is the way Australia expects to make boys into patriotic citizens! The fortress to which the boys are condemned may be any one of the Bay Forts. A previous consignment of boys was removed from Queenscliff fort on the mainland to South Channel fort, on an island some distance out in the Bay. As it was callously remarked in the Melbourne Argus at the time, "they would be unlikely to escape, as the waters of the South Channel are deep and infested with sharks."

This sort of thing is going on week after week in most of our capital cities; and the Military Police are hard at work, trying to "round up" all delinquents.

The people have been worse than blind to allow the introduction of such a state of things. It is the poorer class who are being penalized and who feel the pinch; the public-school lads drill as part of their curriculum, and it is easier for them. But the people are waking up, and will yet shake themselves free.

If any are only half convinced of the iniquity of it all, let them be persuaded to attend a "trial" at the Court. They come away not only convinced, but ready to do their utmost to remove a cruel burden from the shoulders of helpless boys.

I. M. ALLEN.

MELBOURNE, Fifth Month, 1913.

OPPORTUNITY.—When Thomas A. Edison was twenty-one years old he was wandering the streets of New York one day, looking for a job, when his attention was attracted by a large crowd gathering in Wall Street, in front of the exchange. Inquiring the cause of the excitement, he learned that something had gone wrong with the telegraphic communications. Here was his opportunity. He volunteered his services, and in a few minutes had things in working order, and within twenty-four hours was engaged as an electrician at a salary of $300.00 a month. These same opportunities are ahead to-day. Some are taken, but too often men are not ready for them or have not energy, pluck or ambition to go after them. Opportunities are always ahead of you, and the man who can overcome an opportunity can bag it. When you go after an opportunity you must travel with a strong heart and make haste, for on the road you will find friends to detain you, enemies who have given up the chase, and the morbid, mangy mortals who will tell you that opportunities are all gone. But don't you believe them. Strike out after opportunity in the field that you are prepared for, with energy and a determination to win and success is yours.

Why do we worry about the years

That our feet have not yet trod?

Who labors with courage, and trusts—not fears,

Has fellowship with God.

FRIENDLY NEWS.

THE WAR TRUST EXPOSED.—(From an Exchange.)—Under this title J. T. W. Newbold, M. A., a Friend, has written a timely pamphlet, embodying much careful and painstaking financial research. The writer shows how most of the armament firms are connected one with the other, and their "patriotism" he exposes with relentless logic and accuracy. Many a firm is shown to possess works in more than one European country; all are prepared to build for any hostile country that is prepared to pay the price. The armaments ring "has merely taken out itself wings, and wheresoever the carcass is, there shall you find the armament vultures gathered together—British side by side with Germans, and Americans sharing the spoil with Italians." Most readers will rub their eyes when they see some of the names which J. T. W. Newbold has obtained from the lists of persons financially interested in these concerns. Liberals and Conservatives, Churchmen and Nonconformists, own large numbers of shares in companies directly or indirectly interested in arms. Till such facts are made more widely known we shall not make that progress which we should like to make.—D. P.

A book of verse, entitled "A Brook by the Way," by Jesse Edgerton, of Damascus, Ohio, has recently come from the press. In his prefatory note the author says that he was "on the point of destroying many of the verses contained in the book, when the partiality of members of the family intervened and saved them from the fate which," he modestly says, "perhaps they deserved."

The range of titles sprinkled through the two hundred and nineteen pages of the book is varied, the last being a poem written for the Centennial last summer, when Ohio Yearly Meeting celebrated her one hundredth birthday. The book contains a few tasteful illustrations and while at this date it has not received more than a cursory glance we are grateful for it. It can be had for one dollar, postpaid, by addressing the author.

The Friends' Quarterly Examiner probably reaches but few of our subscribers; did space permit it might be well for THE FRIEND to review briefly its contents. The last number (Tenth Month) contains a full budget of matter of interest; not least among the papers is one entitled Jenny Harry, which opens with this sentence.—"The name of Jenny Harry will be scarcely known, even to members of the Society of Friends, except to students of Quaker history, and yet her memory justly deserves to be rescued from the dust of the ages, for she was a woman of a thousand." This of itself should arrest the attention of most and call for a reading of the entire twenty-six pages; those failing to be captivated by the opening clause, may be captured by noting the names of Dr. Johnson, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Molly Knowles and Boswell sprinkled not infrequently through the pages. This will surely prompt such to read the paper and they will be well repaid.

We do not often find in the Quarterly a paper from one of our Philadelphia Friends, but the issue under notice contains a very informing and readable essay by Joseph Elkinton on "New Testament and Non-Christian Literature of the Imperial Age," which later may appear in full or in part in our columns.

The Editorial Notes contain numerous allusions to the address delivered before the British Association Meeting at Birmingham by its President last month. The addresses on these annual occasions are well worth attention. They represent as a rule the latest findings along whatever line of thought the speaker is best qualified to discuss and this year coming from Sir Oliver Lodge, the man of all others in England today who can translate the most profound philosophy into language understandable by the relatively simple, all who had any interest at all expected a treat and they were not disappointed. The concluding remarks of his address are these—it carries one back to the teachings of Francis Wayland of Providence, or to the simple statements of George Fox as unfolded in his Journal: "Genuine religion has its roots deep down in the heart of humanity and in the reality of things. It is not surprising that by our methods we fail to grasp it; the actions of the Deity make no appeal to any special sense, only a universal appeal, and our methods are, as we know, incompetent to detect complete uniformity. . . . We are deaf and blind, therefore, to the imminent grandeur around us, unless we have insight enough to recognize in the woven fabric of existence, flowing steadily from the loom in an infinite progress towards perfection, the ever-growing garment of a transcendent God."

Another paper of value in the Quarterly is a sketch of John Everard, who antedated George Fox, and whose sermon "on the necessity of thought" is reflected in Fox's, as a matter of fact, George Fox's "Address to the Imprisonment in Derby Jail when these sermons were first published." Another paper is on the popular topic of Eugenics and, both the one and the other, advances a strong reason for the position that many of our English social problems rest upon biological facts and call for scientific knowledge for their best treatment.

The number also contains a beautiful tribute to a friend, to the printer and first editor of the Quarterly. The words are expressed in a manner to many others whom we all have loved and honored, and the inevitable change of pronouns could be adapted to meet some of our needs, and we intend to print them shortly.

On Sixth-day the twenty-first ult., with weather overcast, the day rendered even a light overcoat almost a burden. We so arranged for a meeting net at West Grove. The attendance was fully up to the average, a number of visitors being present.

A reverential silence covered the assembly for a period, after which Rufus King of North Carolina delivered a message of comfort and cheer to any who were under discouragement.

John B. Garrett spoke forcibly concerning the Deity of our Saviour; he also dwelt on the significance of Christ feeling the multitude; there appeared to be nothing but the few leaves and fishes for the multitude.

A supplication from Zebulon Haines further baptized the meeting; Charles Kirsch's sermon on the Kingship of Jesus Christ was rich and true, with the expressed exercise which preceded it; it would surely be a well-loused soul who could not say that it had been good to have been at this meeting. After about one and a half hours of worship, the business session was opened, men and women Friends together, to hear the report of the joint Committee appointed in the Eighth Month last to nominate Friends for work in connection with the proposed new building at Fourth and Arch Streets, Philadelphia; there was some discussion as to the advisability of proceeding with the enterprise.

A man and a woman were appointed to act as our Quarterly Meeting representatives on the Management Committee, and a larger number set apart to solicit funds.

In the separate sessions, there was an unusually small amount of routine business to claim the attention of the meeting. A prayer and three other communications in the Men's Meeting, added to the solemnity of the occasion. The social period of the meeting, when families which have been scattered can meet, and friends renew intimacies, is a most pleasant feature.

We will remember in years gone by when a homestead might be frequented by a score or more guests to partake of Quarterly Meeting dinner, three months later, with full preparation as before, perhaps one carrying food of guests would complete the list.

Very few, if any, we are persuaded, would desire to return to the old custom, though visits from Quarterly Meeting Friends were bright spots long to be remembered by many in our younger years.

REPRESENTATIVE MEETING.—An adjourned session of the Representative Meeting was held in Philadelphia last Sixth-day, the 28th ult.

A Friend suggested that it might be timely to send a telegram to President Wilson to encourage him in his efforts to avert war with Mexico. After weighty deliberation this was done and the message was sent, while the session of the meeting continued.

A letter from Jonathan E. Rhoads, whose health has been confined to his home for some time, called attention to a bill introduced in the House of Congress to levy a special tax, a super tax, on incomes of $2,000 and over, this tax to be especially applied to the navy. The bill, it was stated, was informed, is not likely to come out of committee, but the sentiment of our absent Friend was spread upon the minutes and the committee of the Representative Meeting on Legislation was specially charged to report on the bill.

In the line of unfinished business, information was given on the distribution of the letter, approved at last meeting, to the managers and masters of ocean steamships on the question of gambling by passengers. Several replies to the letter had been received, and in one of them it appeared that a wholesome order on the subject by the United States Government had followed the receipt of the letter.

Two members of the Committee on the Haymarket case, were in consultation with the Representative Meeting at West Grove, with effect. This Committee presented an appeal against the conviction of and other ends of the track addressed to the members of the Maryland League. The appeal was adopted by the meeting.

They met under the time of the meeting was devoted to the consideration of an address to our members on the subject of gambling. The officers and dignitaries of the evil in its connection with business and recreation were felt to require very wise treatment and the address was heard with interest by the Committee for presentation at the next meeting.

The prospect of the Visitation Committee of Hadlowfield and Salem Quakers was fulfilled last First-day (the 30th ult.) in well-attended meetings in Tuckerton and Barnegat, N. J. The attendance at Tuckerton was about 50. Of these 30 were visiting Friends, perhaps a dozen were interested town people, and the balance resident members of our Society.

Four favored communications seemed in harmony with the solemnity of the united worship in silence. One minister repeated the record of the account of the dealings of the Lord with Edward Andrews and our selfishness the meeting was established on that spot in 1702. His newspaper journal of this worthy Friend is on deposit at Friends' Library. As often in the case, the concrete presentation appealed forcibly to the meeting and had the effect of focusing the attention upon the essentials of the Christian life.

At Barnegat visitors had an opportunity to observe the improvements recently made in the meeting-house and grounds. An old resident of the Society said that there was general rejoicing in Barnegat to see the property improved and that Friends' meetings were much appreciated in their midst. This was evidenced by a full attendance, more than one hundred people being present. As in Tuckerton, the meeting here was a favored one. The appeal of Friends to the "inner light" was shown to be in unison with the revelation of God in "the face of Jesus Christ" and the invitation went forth to "come and follow Him," not necessarily in any great sense of public notice but "in simple, practical, every-day life."

Both these meetings seemed to produce the feeling that the Committee and individual Friends had been out under the captaincy of the great Head of the Church.

WESTTOWN NOTES.

There was no lecture on the 21st ult. on account of the Educational meeting in Philadelphia.

Dr. Sina Stratton has begun a series of talks to the girls on practical hygiene that are being given at the time of the usual evening collection.

On First-day, 23rd ult., we had an unusual number of visitors at meeting. These who had vocal service therein were: John B. Garrett, George Alden, Rayner Kelsey, Emily Oliver and George du Vol.

The last named person spoke in the library to the boys and girls concerning China from a medical missionary's standpoint, he being about thirteen years' service as such in that far away country.

The Orchard project is now fairly under way. A contract has been made for the erection of a neat cottage and a combined barn and packing house on the edge of woodland, north of and overlooking the lake.

On the 25th ult. a number of the special committee on orchard, on being present, approximately 1500 trees, leading varieties of apples to be used were planted; they were secured from a nearby prominent grower, weather permitting, it is hoped that some 2000 additional trees will be set out before this issue is in the hands of its readers.

The Westtown dairy is finding itself placed by the Philadelphia P. M. Sales Society among the best recognized as being the best in this part of Pennsylvania. Recent counts in the milk were as low as 963, and the cream 16.4 per cent. Month as shown by the chemist's cards at E. W. Washburn, who handles our certified product in Philadelphia, is 2120.

It is a pleasure to the public contractor are allowed by this assurance of the healthfulness of the milk, veterinarians and bacteriologists, who, by their analyses, have proved that the milk is pure and wholesome. The School of the Philadelphia Episcopal Seminary is now producing by the care given the object lesson of the healthfulness of the plant is not without its marked effect.

The Westtown Dairy has recently measured itself with two Haverhill dairies, and has won in one case, though allowing the College of Agriculture to be better than is natural, as the visitors were not so numerous and the dairies of longer or more experience in the sport.

A 100 per cent. of heads for over the Senior girls and others of the School appears of the interesting events of the past week.

SOME seventy-five pupils are availing themselves of the privilege of week-end visits to their homes, or to those of their friends; this will naturally be the last large exodus of pupils until the twenty-third inst., when the holiday vacation is scheduled to begin.

The lecture on Eleventh Month 28th, was by our friend, Daniel Oliver, on Syria and its people. It was illustrated by pictures, many of which were in connection with his work in that country. His lively delivery and apt description kept the audience very much awake throughout the one and a-quarter hour's entertainment.

LAST First-day evening, Samuel H. Brown addressed the boys in evening collection; he recited the poem, "St. Augustine's Ladder," and "A Quaker of the Olden Time," and with these as a framework, spoke regarding "Will Power." Katharine Jones gave a talk to the girls on "Life at Hampton Institute, Va."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—A recent despatch from Washington says: "More than one billion menhaden were caught off the coasts of New Jersey, New York, Delaware, Virginia and North Carolina in 1912, the United States Bureau of Fisheries reported in reciting the prosperity that attended the business of catching the fish and transforming them into oil and guano. The season was one of the most successful of the last half century."

On the 19th ult. it was stated from New York City that the Equitable Life Assurance Society issued to-day a statement calling attention to the extraordinary increase in the death rate from cancer, which is said to have assumed the proportion of a great plague. In the last ten years, it says, the indicated death rate from cancer has increased 30 per cent. among men and 22 per cent. among women in the United States registration area. The mortality from external cancer has increased 55 per cent. in ten years.

Superintendent Brumbaugh and Director Porter began a crusade against cigarette smoking in the public schools of this city by notifying teachers and dealers of the law prohibiting sale to minors. Copies of the law regulating the sale and use of tobacco were distributed to all the school teachers with special instructions to caution the children against the harmful effect of the narcotic. Director Porter distributed more than 10,000 circulars to dealers in the city warning them that the law prohibits the sale of tobacco to minors and asking for their cooperation.

It is stated that a shipment of corned beef aggregating 36,000 pounds has reached this city from Queensland, Australia, and will be released shortly for local consumption. In conformity with the regulations governing foreign imports, samples of the goods were forwarded to Washington where they will be examined in the Government food laboratory before the consignment is turned over to the buyer, a well-known local packing house. The beef was shipped from Queensland to London and then was transhipped to this port, arriving here on the steamship Maine of the Atlantic Transport Line.

It is stated that twenty double model houses, all of concrete, have been built at what is known as Concrete City, near Nanticoke. Even the stairways, sinks and wash basins are concrete. Each house has seven rooms and modern improvements. In the concrete floors wooden strips are imbedded, so that carpets may be tacked down.

It was stated from San Bernardino, Cal., on the 19th ult., that Southern California, with its memory of a frozen orange crop, is preparing to "heat up all outdoors." Five million orchard heaters are to be put beneath trees at the approach of frost. It is the intention of the growers to start the fires when the thermometer reaches 32 degrees. Oranges can stand 28 degrees without danger. If heaters keep the temperature 12 to 18 degrees higher than that of the normal atmosphere, the thermometer could drop to 16 degrees without danger.

A despatch from Pittsburgh of the 29th ult., says: "New Zealand creamery butter, 33 cents a pound," is a placard displayed by a downtown Pittsburgh dealer.

A despatch from Washington of the 21st says: "Three weeks of patient experiments culminated in success last night, when the United States Naval Observatory here heard the beats of the Paris observatory clock, as transmitted by radio signals from the Eiffel Tower to the great radio station at Arlington. The beats were compared with those of the Washington clock for some minutes. The American and French commissioners conducting these experiments to determine the difference in longitude between Paris and Washington and the velocity of radio signals through space were greatly encouraged. They announced to-day that the season when atmospheric conditions are best for radio work is now coming on, and that their work will proceed as planned."

It is stated in reference to Philadelphia: "The city's birth rate is steadily increasing. Last year it equaled or exceeded that of any other large city in the country, with a general average of 28 births per 1000 of population."

A despatch from New York City of the 19th ult. says: "One hundred and fifty thousand clothing workers in New York City face idleness within 48 hours because of the strike of a single union of 350 men, who demand a 15 per cent. increase in pay. Unless the strike is broken the entire garment-working industry of the city will be tied up. The striking organization is the Cloth Examiners' and Spungers' Union. It is said the supply of cloth is scant, and a serious condition is feared."

It is stated from Washington that Postmaster General Burleson has authorized a new issue of stamps of the 7, 9, 12, 20 and 30-cent denominations to meet the needs of the parcel post business. With these new stamps and smaller denominations already in use nearly every amount from 1 cent to 60 cents can be made up with not more than two stamps, thus saving the annoyance of so many stamps on a parcel.

It is said that the Pennsylvania Railroad and the State Agricultural Colleges of Delaware and Maryland have organized a joint movement for spreading a knowledge of intensive farming in Delaware and the peninsula formed by the eastern counties of Maryland and Virginia. A party of teachers will stop at 31 stations to give instruction, theoretical and practical, to the farmers on farming subjects.

It is stated from New York City that for some years William C. Brown, president of the New York Central Railroad Company, has been giving careful study to the problem involved in the greatly increased cost of food products. His investigations have convinced him that one of the causes, if not the chief cause, of this increase, is the surrender of the soil by those who used to cultivate it so that they might take up vocations in cities and, in addition to that, the disinclination of the younger generation to make agriculture a vocation. President Brown established great farms in New York State so that he might thereby teach a lesson of intensive farming, demonstrate what reasonable profits may be expected from that kind of soil cultivation.

The Director of Public Safety in this city, George D. Porter, has lately stated that 75 per cent. of the boys sent to the House of Correction in this city, all less than twenty-one years old, were users of cigarettes.

He has called attention of parents to the importance of having children who complain of sore throat immediately examined by the family physician in order to make sure that it is not caused by scarlet fever.

FOREIGN.—Eggs brought from Germany have lately been sold in this country at the rate of 40 cents per dozen. These eggs are brought from Germany in about ten days. Fresh eggs from the western part of the United States take virtually the same length of time to reach this city. The cost of shipment from Germany is about the same as from Kansas.

A despatch of the 28th from Sarnia, Ontario, says: "Last night the wireless station on the shores of Lake Huron above Point Edward picked up signals from the wireless station at Darwin, near Palmerston, South Australia, which was calling the wireless station at Sydney. The signals received were quite clear, although the distance they were transmitted was almost half way around the world. This is said to be a record distance in wireless telegraphy."

It is stated from Winnipeg that "United States scientists will not be permitted to export fossils from Canada in the future, according to an announcement made by Government officials here. In recent years scientists from the United States have made several remarkable discoveries of the remains of prehistoric animals in Alberta, particularly dinosaurs."

It is stated that Great Britain has launched at Deception the most formidable battle-ship in the world, the War job, costing $14,000,000. Perhaps the most interesting feature of the War job is the provision of oil for fuel. Her tanks, built to hold 4000 tons, would enable her to circumnavigate the globe without pausing for replenishment.

It was stated from Paris on the 25th ult.: "Prof. Charles Rebet announces that tuberculosis can be cured with raw meat juice." The treatment is difficult to follow," he said, "but I have proved it effective." Every day the patient must go to a slaughter-house and obtain ten pounds of fresh meat, then extract the recaying juice from it. This is a long and tedious task. Ten pounds of meat yield about a half a pint of juice, which should be conserved on ice. My patients who were suffering from tuberculosis of the lungs were cured by this treatment although it had to be followed faithfully for three years."

NOTICES.

MEETING at LLANERCH.—Under authority of a committee appointed by Concord Quarterly Meeting, a meeting for Divine Worship will be held in Paiste Hall, Llanerch, Pa., on First-day afternoon, Twelfth Month 7th, at three o'clock. All interested are invited.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.—The following books have recently been added to Friends' Library:—
Cowan—Education of Women in India.
Dopp—Story of the Early Sea People.
Faupee—What Does Christianity Mean?
Grinnell—Blackfoot Indian Stories.
Haskin—The Immigrant.
Jordan—Self-Control.
Marden—Training for Efficiency.

LINDA A. MOORE,
Librarian.

The Visitation Committee of Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting, has appointed a public meeting for Divine Worship, to be held in the Meeting-house at Woodbury, N. J., on First-day, the seventh of Twelfth Month, at four o'clock in the afternoon. The meeting may be conveniently reached by electric train leaving Market Street Ferries, Camden, at 2:42 p. m.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, Phila., will be open from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from 2 to 5 P. M.—Seventh-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. only.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.—The stage will meet at Westtown Station, trains leaving Broad Street (Penna. R. R.) Phila. at 6:32, 8:21 A. M., 2:48 and 4:30 P. M.; other trains will be met on request. Stage fare twenty-five cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, address West Chester Bell Telephone, 114A.

WM. B. HARVEY,
Superintendent.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK (Twelfth Month 7th to 13th):

Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting, at MOONSTOWN, Fifth-day, Twelfth Month 11th, at 10 A. M.

Trolley leaves Market Street Ferry, Camden, 8:38 and 9:08.

MARRIED.—At Friends' Meeting, Reigate, Surrey, England, on eighth of Eleventh Month, 1913, MURRAY GORON, Bookseller, of Montreal and Caydon, and ELIZABETH COPE WISTAR, daughter of John W. M. and Margaret C. Wistar of Philadelphia.

DIED.—At North Dartmouth, on the tenth of Eleventh Month, 1913, SARAH F. WILBUR, in the fifty-seventh year of her age; a member of Dartmouth Monthly Meeting of Friends' Mass.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

ENGLISH FRIENDS' PERIODICALS

The Friend (London) Weekly . . . $2.11
Friends' Quarterly Examiner . . . $1.00

SUBSCRIPTIONS NOW DUE FOR 1914
NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS SOLICITED

GRACE W. BLAIR, - Media, Pa.
AMERICAN AGENT

Subscribers patronizing our advertisers will assist THE FRIEND, especially by mentioning our paper in correspondence.

Helpful Book For Every Day Life

A Wayfarer's Faith

By Edward Haines, M. A.

Author of "The Rise of The Quakers"

Cloth, 156 Pages. Price, Postage Paid, 60c.

For sale by

Friends' Book and Tract Committee
144 East Twentieth Street
New York

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER

Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

(Marcellus Balderston)

802 SPRING GARDEN ST.

618 NORTH NINTH ST.

BELL 'PHONE

PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM S. YARNALL

MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

JOS. B. SCATTERGOOD

HOUSE, SIGN AND DECORATIVE

PAINTING

Orders Solicited

Bell 'Phone

275 S. FOURTH STREET

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator.

Write for sample and particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For Rich Milk

For Clean Milk

For Safe Milk

Call Philadelphia Locust 209

ABBOTTS ALDERNEY DAIRIES

31st and Chestnut Streets

ELKINS MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

MEMBERS OF

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA
STOCK EXCHANGES

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

NEW YORK CENTRAL

(BOSTON & ALBANY)

EQUIPMENT TRUST 4½%.
DUE 1923. TO YIELD 5%.

FULL PARTICULARS UPON APPLICATION.

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY PAUL W. BROWN JAMES P. MAGILL

THE QUAKER CALENDAR FOR 1914 IS READY

*One of the very nicest Christmas Calendars
has always been the Quaker Calendar :*

This year the Calendar consists of 12 leaves (one for each month), size 8x11, is splendidly printed in a dark brown ink and bound with a dark rich brown silk cord. The subjects illustrated are the best we have ever shown and consist of pictures of some of the most interesting moments in the lives of Friendly leaders and also some splendid illustrations of our colleges and schools, etc. They are "George Fox Refusing to Take the Oath;" "Swarthmore Hall," (the residence of the Fell family); "Barclay of Ury;" "Jordans Meeting House," (the burial place of William Penn and his family); "Thomas Ellwood Reading to Milton;" "Interior, Birmingham Meeting House;" "Elizabeth Fry Speaking to Convicts Bound for Australia;" "Haverford College;" "William Penn and Rebecca Wood, of Darby;" "Swarthmore College;" "John Woolman and the Slave;" "Old Westtown."

We would be glad to send this calendar "on approval." That is, we will send one calendar by mail allowing the privilege of examining it and either returning the calendar or sending us 25 cents, which is the price of the calendar postpaid.

Price only 25 cents, postpaid

THE BIDDLE PRESS, WEST WASHINGTON SQUARE PHILADELPHIA, PA.
(210 South Seventh Street)

OWING TO THE CLOSING OF A LARGE MILL near his home, the undersigned has been thrown out of employment. He desires a position and much prefers to be among Friends.
J. ALBERT BAILEY,
West Grove, Pa.

"A BROOK BY THE WAY"

A VOLUME OF POEMS

BY JESSE EDGERTON

(ILLUSTRATED)

FOR SALE AT FRIENDS' BOOK STORE

304 ARCH ST., PHILA., PA.

OR BY THE AUTHOR DAMASCUS, OHIO

PRICE, $1.00 PER COPY

W. B. WEAVER Undertaker & Embalmer

550-52 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN
TO FUNERALS IN AND OUT
OF THE CITY. ALSO CHAPEL
ACCOMMODATIONS FOR
FUNERALS. :: :: ::

BELL 'PHONE

ESTABLISHED 1880

School Children's EYES Tested

We test children's eyes and furnish glasses which remove all strain.

Satisfaction Guaranteed

C. A. LONGSTRETH

Specialist in Eye Testing

722 Market Street Philadelphia, Pa.

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

JOSEPH G. FOGG

FUNERAL DIRECTOR & EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16th & RACE STREETS

Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals

BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 8045

POCONO MANOR

During the Winter and Spring Months

THE MANOR COTTAGE

offers its Friendly hospitality. Being thoroughly heated, and having a bright, sunny exposure, it combines cheery, indoor comfort with a bracing atmosphere, at an elevation of 1800 feet. Few resorts, winter or summer, afford an equal opportunity for those seeking rest and recreation. Pocono Manor Cottage POCONO MANOR, PA.

Redlands--California

Wissahickon Inn

A comfortable family hotel in the residence section of beautiful Redlands.

SEND FOR FOLDERS & RATES

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 87.

FIFTH-DAY, TWELFTH MONTH 11, 1913.

No. 24.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price, $2.00 a year in advance.

Editor and Publisher, EDWIN P. SELLEW.

Associate Editors, { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSTHE.

Make remittances payable to
EDWIN P. SELLEW or THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

THE ONE ESSENTIAL OF SERVICE.

Friends have never held that the Scriptures are the alone and sure guide to the Christian disciple; on the contrary, they have taught very positively a different doctrine, but none the less they have held and always must hold, if they remain true to their fundamental teachings, that all phases of experience have been anticipated for us in the Scriptures, and that in the perfect pattern shown us in the life of our Lord nothing has been omitted that it is essential for us to know. His life covered all that can come to us.

We believe with Paul that the Scriptures were given for our help, "that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." Patience, comfort, hope: what a world of possibility is wrapped up in these three words! A waiting to know our call should beget the needed patience, a comfort granted us through no effort on our part except a simple yielding to an influence from above, and these two working out for us a hope whereby as Paul elsewhere puts it we are enabled to lay hold of the promises He has made to us.

No promises can be more rich than the promises contained in the Scriptures, and no promises will ever be more faithfully fulfilled than these. They fail of their fulfilment in our special cases, not because the circumstances surrounding us are unfavorable, but because we do not live up to the conditions imposed. We confound too often the measure of our endeavors with what we seem to accomplish, forgetting too often the goal we should strive to reach is not attainment so much as it is obedience. This statement arrested my attention some weeks ago and it has revolved over and over again in my thoughts since then. "Apparent success is not always the measure of real success, and besides God has not enjoined success upon us, but only labor. To look at our success is to walk by sight; to look unto Jesus and to persevere in following and serving Him despite all discouragements is to walk by faith."

The promises of Scripture do not hold forth crowns of material glory, they give us rather a mind content with God's law and satisfied with His revelations. In this day when the practical in religion has come so decidedly to the fore it is essential that we do not lose sight of the principles just stated. Some one has said that the slogan of the Christian church to-day is service, and who can find a better field for the church to work in? She has always worked in this field you may say when her life has been most effective, but to-day more than ever before is she not more earnestly engaged in real whole-hearted service, not the kind that phil sophizes about doctrines and beliefs, but that which accepts the promises and commands of the Master as He gave them to us to live them out?

She, the church, we know has weaknesses on every hand; worldliness, wealth and power with kindred others are the false gods with which she must contend and contend to the very finish if she means to maintain her ground, much less advance her borders, but philosophy and the splitting of hairs over doctrine have for the present lost their grip, and the Christian church faces to-day as probably never before the great lessons taught by our Lord in his second commandment, which He declared was like unto the first.

Whatever the field of service may be that opens up to this particular group or to this particular individual, the exhortation of Paul should be the watchword. God's Will inwardly revealed will enlighten all, but there is in addition to this the common boon, which admits all alike to its wisdom, and which we have been earnestly exhorted to consult, the written record of His will concerning our actions. The patience Paul enjoins in his letter to the Romans is not a thing very difficult of attainment. It does not come as the result of a simple waiting any more than a good Friends' meeting necessarily follows the sitting down in silence with a congregation of fellow-members. It must be striven for, and effort is needed, but the patience will beget expectancy and this will call forth God's blessing, which at first may be so gentle as scarcely to be known, comparable to the light dew which a gentle wind or a beam of sunshine will cause to vanish, but the feeling grows, and the comfort which came at first in such little measure expands, and finally possesses you, and the natural attitude of mind and soul then becomes not one of fear and misgiving but just the reverse; hope crowns your effort, and you have fulfilled in your own experience the very declaration of Paul. Your patience has called God's blessing upon your effort and hope has sprung up in your heart and that is your sure and sufficient return for all that you have tried to do.

It matters not, I think, what channel you are called to follow, so that it be a channel of live service. It may be to speak a word for the Master, as the Apostle says, "in the congregation of the people," or to carry the message of life to some dark corner of your home town, or to go far from what you most cherish among people whose ways you do not know, or it may be and most likely will be to pass on the word of comfort or of caution as you go about your daily calling, the same Hand will guide you that guided Paul, if you are watchful to heed its beckonings.

Do not question about fruits. It is natural to worry if you see no visible results of your efforts, and you are justified in putting the question, am I fulfilling the conditions imposed or am I failing in an essential particular? You have no weaknesses that cannot be crowned with greater successes than any you dream of if you wholly consecrate yourself to the service. But the very questioning that springs up to check you may be the voice of the Evil One, and not a check sent by your Master to caution you. Hence the need for further patience, that it may have its perfect work. Paul's infirmities as he tabulates them could not have been less pronounced in his eyes, than are your imperfections in yours, weakness and fear and much trembling and others he includes in his catalogue. He was beset with temptations not unlike those that vex you, and he fought with no other weapons than those that must be yours.

Christ is declared to be the power and the wisdom of God, and countless numbers have testified to this. The wisdom must not be foolishness to you as it is to many or you cannot know the power, and the power is essential that you serve with acceptance. Whatever our message and whatever our work, our service never rises to the level it is intended to reach unless we yield a full faith to His directing leadership. The efforts of others who have left Christ out of their reckonings may seem to surpass those who have striven to follow Him, but we need to remember that the end is not yet; there may be long seasons of seemingly hopeless endeavor, but if patience is maintained, comfort will attend, and hope will spring up and a rich harvest be assured.

There are plant seeds that must lie dormant a full twelve months before the life within them stirs, but the blossoms are none the less lovely for this long delay out of sight, so there are often periods with us when no action on our part may denote the times of most advancement in best things. It should be enough for us to feel, not necessarily to explain that our Guide is before us and that we are close behind. Our service will be different from that which our fathers rendered, because we live in a different world, controlled by different influences, but it will be quite as true and helpful a service if we know the pointings of the Divine finger and follow them, abiding patiently under His chastenings, not cast down by the difficulties that surround us, buoyed up in our spirits by the blessed promises of Scripture until comfort begotten of them gives place to hope, the Christian's anchor, which will hold when other means that have left Christ out have yielded to the strain of outward things.

D. H. F.

"THEY OF ITALY."—A bureau for the religious welfare of Italian Protestant emigrants and immigrants was started in the summer of 1912 and has been in successful operation since then. These Protestants are both Waldenian and New Protestants (converts in the United States from Romanism), whom the Bureau aims at reattaching, in the country to which they travel, to organized Christianity. This enterprise has been called into existence as a consequence of the tremendous ebb and flow of population between Italy and the United States—a movement which may have fateful consequences for both countries; for Protestantism and, above all, for the Papacy, if American Christianity rises to the opportunity presented. Colporteurs stationed at Genoa, Naples and Palermo under the Bureau's direction have begun the distribution of the Scriptures.

"Our wish," affirms the Bureau's prospectus, "is to give a guide to America and a copy of the Gospel (the colporteurs call this 'The Guide to Heaven') to every man, woman and child leaving Italy, who can read."

[At the Friends' Educational Association Meeting, held at Select School on the evening of the twenty-first of last month, three addresses were given, which we would gladly reproduce in THE FRIEND, had some one present furnished us the notes. The first address by Rufus M. Jones, was taken down in part, and is here given.—Ed.]

ABSTRACT OF ADDRESS ON "THE RELIGIOUS CONCEPTION OF EDUCATION."

BY RUFUS M. JONES.

We Friends have always felt the religious education of the child to be one of the most subtle and delicate tasks in life. We never held it could be properly achieved by learning words by rote or a catechism by heart. We have always believed that it requires something vastly different from the method by which we teach geography or the multiplication table. An obedient child will consent as easily to say "God is infinite, omniscient and omnipotent," as to say that Popocatepetl is a volcano in Mexico, but we may still be far from having made him religious.

A little boy who was asked to define Canada, answered that it was very "pink", because that was its color on the map. He was not more remote from a knowledge of Canada than is that child remote from a knowledge of religion who has simply learned religious phrases.

You may have heard the story of the boy in Massachusetts who was asked by a traveler who met him in the road, how far it was to Taunton. "Twenty-five thousand miles the way you are going," said the boy, "It is only five miles if you turn around." The rote and phrase method of teaching religion is "twenty-five thousand miles" from the right method.

Although Friends have shunned this, they have by their system of a guarded religious education often missed the full richness and adequacy of a genuine religious teaching in the past. A guarded education has many admirable features, but it has its decided limitations and pedagogical defects. There are many things from which we want our children guarded. But it is serious to have the environment of a boy made too artificial, and to have him pass from school without a virile and robust moral and religious fibre, gained through experience with actual problems.

We have too nearly assumed that religious education consisted in passing on a certain fixed and defined form of religion, a definite set of views and practices already decided upon, in trying to transmit unchanged an inherited faith and truth. The pupil is too much regarded as a receptacle into which we must put things. This is what Plato called "the bird-cage theory of education," and my main criticism of it is that the truth put in was won by some one else and not by the boy himself.

Too little attention has been given to the formation of the child's own autonomous and original and creative personality, and also to the way truth is psychologically apprehended and digested. There is danger that it be passed on uncriticized and unexamined, and not put to test. There has not been enough discussion of the doubts and questions that almost always arise in the mind of the sincere seeker after truth. The child was taught to hold truth without knowing why it was true and without knowing how it was historically grounded. This is a reason why it is difficult to get an answer from Friends when we are asked just what we believe. Many a one has found himself at sea when met by life and its problems, because he has not been trained by fearless discussion. A further fundamental difficulty in our religious education has been that the man has not been trained to make his independent contribution to the spiritual thought of the world, he has not formed a creative mind that can carry truth forward. He is consequently inadequate as a spiritual leader. Finally, he has found it difficult to give progressive gains to the splendid movement his fathers had started. He was not enough trained as a spiritual athlete.

What should be the central lines of a constructive religious education? First, we should have a child's religious education begin at least ten years before he is born, if possible much further back. The best thing for a child is to be born in a home which is religious. Our great regret about the modern world is that it has made so few of these homes possible. Then when he begins school the religious inculcation should begin with the cultivation of feelings and attitudes rather than with a set of views. First, cultivate wonder. All children have more or less wonder, and it should be developed by all the subjects of study, by our treatment of mathematics, of stars and flowers, and everything. Make a child wonder and you are building one of the best approaches to religion.

Secondly, cultivate the sense of the infinite. Every child has this. George MacDonald wrote:

"I am a little child and I
Am ignorant and weak;
I gaze into the starry sky
And then I cannot speak:

"For all behind the starry sky,
Behind the world so broad,
Behind men's hearts and souls doth lie
The Infinite of God."

Don't let the child grow away from this and "ichor o'er the spot," as Browning says. The child lives in a natural atmosphere of the Infinite, but he needs to have this native spiritual hunger and interior sense of God cultivated.

Third, impress upon the child the beauty of self-sacrifice, and the supreme beauty of loyalty, long before you need to deal with the definite ideas of religion. Loyalty is the basis of a good team, of a good school. It is one of the best foundations for a genuine religious life.

Fourth, create a vision of the ideal. Use the story material of saints and heroes who have done great deeds for the love of goodness. Here let the child learn loyalty to Christ in a vision of Him as the supreme ideal, until he loves Him above life.

Fifth, through the spiritual value of literature and the moral and spiritual value of history, train the child in the deeper value of religion. Make him feel the plumb-line of God all through history. History is the supreme judgment-day. Literature cultivates the ideals of life, the beauties of goodness. All great classic writers, whatever their theme, have been showing mighty things about the soul.

I feel that one of the most important things about teaching science is that we should always make the student realize that the scientific method is a limited way of approach to reality. If he thinks the only way to get truth settled is by scientific description he becomes an agnostic, and it takes years to overcome the results of his mistake.

Finally, I have felt for thirty years that the most important thing, religiously, in any school or college, is to have some one there who embodies religion in its noblest form, and whom boys and girls love for his goodness.

I have been having a visit lately from a college friend, Augustus Murray, and we were discussing what had been the greatest thing in our education, and we decided it was the influence of Pliny Chase. He smote our souls with loyalty to goodness.

Dr. Herbert Goddard while studying abroad heard some lectures by Professor Wundt, in whom we psychologists are much interested. When Dr. Goddard returned I asked him, "What about Wundt?" "Wundt?" he said; "his face was the greatest argument for God I've ever had in my life."

To be in the presence of a life that makes one feel that way is the supreme thing for religious education in school or college.

Eleventh Month 21, 1913.

THE FEAST IN THE UPPER ROOM.

BY WM. J. MEADLIG.

(Continued from page 267.)

Jesus knew the trial and sorrows awaiting them in the fields of conflict for His sake, and how sweetly, how assuredly must His further discourses have fallen upon their tender spirits. "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me, in My Father's house are many mansions, if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you," and "I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." "Ye are they who have continued with me in my temptations, and I appoint you unto a kingdom, even as my Father has appointed unto me." "Oh, what Divine companionship! What enduring love they were assured of! What heavenly consolations animated them in their passage here, in this present scene! and what unutterable felicities awaited them in the eternal world! How fitting to cheer their faithful souls in all the proving ordeals in paths which led them, with one exception, to the Father's house through gates of martyrdom, which for them were gates of praise! To further strengthen and encourage them in their high and holy, yet toil-strewn calling. He also told them of the present fruits of their obedience. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do, shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do, because I go to my Father." And then came the promise, full of assurance and blessing. "Whosoever ye shall ask in my name that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." Touching again the sweet chords of love, to which the gentle heart of John responded when recording the discourses crowning that Passover feast. "If ye love me, keep my commandments," and to assure them that they should not be forgotten or forsaken in their heavenward way. He continued, "I will pray the Father and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you forever; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him; but ye know Him, for He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless. I will come to you." Then to show them how endearing are the ties which bind the flock and family of Christ to Him and to each other, He continued, "Yet a little while and the world seeth Me no more; but ye see me, because I live, ye shall live also. At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father and ye in Me, and I in you." To impress their tender, awakening minds with a sense of a necessity for constant and loyal obedience to the precepts of the Holy Spirit. He told them, "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me, and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him." Their understandings, though evidently expanding under the influence of Divine Wisdom contained in these words, could not yet comprehend how He could perform these promises, and manifest Himself unto them, and not unto the world, until, in answer to their question, Jesus said, still keeping love—the brightest jewel in the Christian's diadem in view, "If a man love Me he will keep My words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him," and then came that sweet benediction, which has solaced untold thousands of Christian souls since then. "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. Arise, let us go hence."

As they went out from the brightness and quiet seclusion of that upper room, and walked together towards the further side of the brook Cedron, where the betrayer and the emissaries of the chief priests and Pharisees were waiting with a band of Roman soldiers to arrest the Master, His unbounded love and tender regard toward them did not cease, for He continued to discourse with them, in the same tender and even sweeter strains, and under the similitude of the vine and its branches He taught them of their mission, and where they would find the life, strength and virtue that would enable them to bear the fruits of the spirit to the glory of the Father, and then He reiterated and discoursed upon the doctrine of love, its source, its blessings and its rewards; and over and over again impressed it upon their minds. He reminded them that they, His servants, must not expect to have better fare than their Lord from the unbelieving world, and assured them that they as His witnesses and called by His name, should meet the same bitter persecution from the world, that He had had to suffer; and when sorrow began to fill their hearts He renewed the promise of the Comforter, and sweetly added, "Ye now, therefore, have sorrow, but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you." After more counsel and consoling assurances, He lifted up His eyes to Heaven, and poured out His soul in that pleading and touching prayer, than which none more sweet, loving and tender, are found in the records of the Holy Book, in which He not only interceded for their own temporal and eternal blessings, but for those also who through their instrumentality should believe on Him; and that they all might be bound in eternal loving unity to the Father and the Son in words which indicated the infinite tenderness of His compassion. He prayed not for the world on that occasion, but for the dear ones there, whom His Father had given Him, "that," said He, "they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they all may be one in us, that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me, and the glory which Thou gavest me, I have given them, that they may be one, even as we are one, that the world may know that Thou hast sent me and hast loved them as Thou hast loved Me." When His prayer was finished, He went with His disciples over the brook Cedron, and entered a garden, and there He was betrayed with an unholy kiss, by him who had but a little while before partaken of the Paschal feast with that suffering Master, and His true-hearted followers in the upper room, and who was soon to be a rejected, friendless outcast, and then a suicide.

THE more we help others to bear their burdens the lighter our own will be.

It is well for us who follow the same Divine Master in His spiritual appearance in these later days, to ponder well the lessons taught by the records of the Evangelists concerning that memorable feast, and what transpired there and after. The tragic scene in the garden by the banks of Cedron was not for the disciples of that day alone, nor yet for those exclusively who should soon follow them into the Gospel fields; but they have a sweet significance for us and for our children for generations yet to come. In the Christian ranks the Paschal feast is not kept by the Master and His disciples as it was at that day in Jerusalem; but there are still upper rooms in many hearts, which if opened, furnished and kept for the Master's use, will be graced with His presence—memorial suppers, feasts of love, the holy, spiritual communion, of which that in the nameless stranger's upper room was but the type and emblem. "Behold I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in and sup with him and he with Me." His love is not less to-day than in former times. He knows our frame and remembers that we are dust. He has borne our griefs and carried our sorrows, and is waiting near us to counsel, console and strengthen us in our conflicts and trials.

He still enjoins us to heed the Christian's superscription, "Love one another, as I have loved you." He still sends the blessing of the Father upon us. All those beautiful precepts of the Master in the upper room and while going to the garden to betrayal and arrest, are still given unto us, and it is essential that we should obey them. He is still the vine and we are the branches, and our Heavenly Father is the Husbandman, and if we bear the true fruits of the spirit, the Father is still glorified through His disciples' constancy and their devotion to His cause. The badge and bond of Christian union is still Love—perfect love to God, and good will to man. Then beautiful lessons of humility are still set before us by the great Teacher: we still have sorrow of heart, but He increases our joy, we have to meet with temptations, but the Helper of the weak will be with us there, and He still appoints a kingdom for those who endure unto the end. He still intercedes for us, that our faith may not fail, and that we may be kept in every conflict and danger as under the shadow of His wings of love, until the Heavenly crown is worn.

We may learn wisdom and receive serious warnings from the accounts of the temptations, the fall and the fate of Judas, who had been one with the disciples, and had received a portion of their ministry; but with him the seed had fallen on stony ground, and the plant soon withered and the harvest was worse than a failure. While pondering these lessons let us remember and profit by the Saviour's words still spoken in our hearts, "What I say unto one, I say unto all, watch, watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation," that so while we are in the world we may be kept from the evil, as faithful and prayerful followers of the Redeemer, and when we are called to come up higher, we may be welcomed into those mansions, more glorious than aught of earth can be, where no betrayer can obstruct the stream of heavenly felicity or bring a shade of gloom over the light and brightness there, but where we may meet and forever be with Him who was with His flock in the guest chamber at Jerusalem and went forth from thence to the right hand of His Father and our Father, along the paths of sorrow, humiliation, the cross and the tomb.

TUNESASSA NOTES.

The three thousand trees alluded to in our last report have been planted and as far as we can tell are growing nicely. They will make a valuable as well as an attractive little forest.

Ann Fry spent about a week with us and enjoyed, we hope, some of our family life.

Joseph Elkinton was here also. He stayed but a short time, but we were greatly encouraged and cheered by his short sojourn. He had an appointed religious meeting at the Indians' W. M. C. A., which was attended by the children of the School and by many other Indians. The weather was stormy or a larger gathering would have been expected. His heart overflowed with love and sympathy for the Redman. The kindly advice which he offered them we hope will be felt and accepted.

Our superintendent, W. Milfin Hall, has been ill for three weeks or more, which has caused much worry on the part of his wife and the School family; at the present writing he shows encouraging signs of improvement.

